B) Every witness shall, before giving evidence, make the following solemn declaration:

"I solemnly declare that I will speak the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

C) A child who, in the opinion of the Chamber, does not understand the nature of a solemn declaration, may be permitted to testify without that formality, if the Chamber is of the opinion that the child is sufficiently mature to be able to report the facts of which the child had knowledge and understands the duty to tell the truth. A judgement, however, cannot be based on such testimony alone.

D) A witness, other than an expert, who has not yet testified, shall not be present when the testimony of another witness is given. However, a witness who has heard the testimony of another witness shall not for that reason alone be disqualified from testifying.

E) A witness may refuse to make any statement which might tend to incriminate him. The Chamber may, however, compel the witness to answer the question. Testimony compelled in this way shall not be used as evidence in a subsequent prosecution against the witness for any offence other than perjury.

i) Make the interrogation and presentation effective for the ascertainment of the truth; and
ii) Avoid needless consumption of time.

D) The Registry shall ensure the proper conduct of the transfer, including the supervision of the witness in the Detention Unit of the Tribunal; it shall remain abreast of any changes which might occur regarding the conditions of detention provided for by the requested State and which may possibly affect the length of the detention of the witness in the Detention Unit and, as promptly as possible, shall inform the relevant Judge or Chamber.

E) On expiration of the period decided by the Tribunal for the temporary transfer, the detained witness shall be remanded to the authorities of the requested State, unless the State, within that period, has transmitted an order of release of the witness, which shall take effect immediately.

F) If, by the end of the period decided by the Tribunal, the presence of the detained witness continues to be necessary, a Judge or a Chamber may extend the period, on the same conditions stated in the Sub-Rule (B).

i) direct the Prosecutor to investigate the matter with a view to the preparation and submission of an indictment for false testimony; or back to the Chamber as to whether there are sufficient grounds for instigating proceedings for false testimony.

C) If the Chamber considers that there are sufficient grounds to proceed against a person for giving false testimony, the Chamber may:

i) in circumstances described in paragraph (B) (i), direct the Prosecutor to prosecute the matter; or

b) a party objecting can demonstrate that its nature and source renders it unreliable, or that its prejudicial effect outweighs its probative value; or

c) there are any other factors which make it appropriate for the witness to attend for cross-examination.

B) A written statement under this Rule shall be admissible if it attaches a declaration by the person making the written statement that the contents of the statement are true and correct to the best of that person's knowledge and belief and

i) the declaration is witnessed by:

c) that the person making the statement was informed that if the content of the written statement is not true then he or she may be subject to proceedings for giving false testimony; and

d) the date and place of the declaration.

The declaration shall be attached to the written statement presented to the Trial Chamber.

C) A written statement not in the form prescribed by paragraph (B) may nevertheless be admissible if made by a person who has subsequently died, or by a person who can no longer with reasonable diligence be traced, or by a person who is by reason of bodily or mental condition unable to testify orally, if the Trial Chamber:

i) is so satisfied on a balance of probabilities; and

ii) finds from the circumstances in which the statement was made and recorded that there are satisfactory indicia of its reliability.

D) A Chamber may admit a transcript of evidence given by a witness in proceedings before the Tribunal which goes to proof of a matter other than the acts and conduct of the accused.

E) Subject to any order of the Trial Chamber to the contrary, a party seeking to adduce a written statement or transcript shall give fourteen days notice to the opposing party, who may within seven days object. 2. Les délais exprimés en jours font référence aux jours ordinaires du calendrier, qu'ils soient ouvrables ou non, et qu'il s'agisse d'un samedi, d'un dimanche ou d'un jour férié ou non. Toutefois, lorsque le délai de dépôt expire un samedi, un dimanche ou un jour férié, il est automatiquement prorogé jusqu'au premier jour ouvrable suivant cette date.

Chapitre Deuxième - Primauté Du Tribunal

Demande d'informations

Lorsqu'il apparaît au Procureur qu'une infraction relevant de la compétence du Tribunal fait ou a fait l'objet d'enquêtes ou de poursuites pénales devant une juridiction interne, il peut demander à l'Etat dont relève cette juridiction de lui transmettre toutes les informations pertinentes. L'Etat transmet sans délai au Procureur ces informations, en application de l'article 28 du Statut.

Requête du Procureur aux fins de dessaisissement

S'il apparaît au Procureur que les crimes qui font l'objet d'enquêtes ou de poursuites pénales engagées devant une juridiction interne

i) font l'objet d'une enquête du Procureur;
ii) devraient faire l'objet d'une enquête du Procureur tenant compte, entre autres
a) de la gravité des infractions;
b) de la qualité de l'accusé au moment des infractions alléguées;
c) de l'importance générale des points soulevés par l'affaire;
iii) font l'objet d'un acte d'accusation devant le Tribunal, le Procureur peut prier la Chambre de première instance désignée par le Président de demander officiellement le dessaisissement de cette juridiction en faveur du Tribunal.

Demande officielle de dessaisissement

A) S'il apparaît à la Chambre de première instance saisie d'une telle requête du Procureur, en vertu de l'article 9, que celle-ci satisfait aux dispositions des alinéas (i), (ii) ou (iii) de l'article 9, elle demande officiellement à l'Etat dont relève la juridiction que celle-ci se dessaisisse en faveur du Tribunal.

B) La demande de dessaisissement porte également sur la transmission des éléments d'enquêtes, des copies du dossier d'audience et, le cas échéant, d'une expédition du jugement.

C) L'Etat auquel la demande officielle de dessaisissement est adressée y répond sans retard conformément à l'article 28 du Statut.

Non-respect d'une demande officielle de dessaisissement

Si, dans un délai de soixante jours à compter de la date à laquelle le Greffier a notifié la demande de dessaisissement à l'Etat dont relève la juridiction ayant connu de l'affaire dont il s'agit, l'Etat ne fournit pas à la Chambre de première instance l'assurance qu'il a pris ou qu'il prend les mesures voulues pour se conformer à cette demande, la Chambre peut prier le Président de soumettre la question au Conseil de sécurité.

Renvoi de l'acte d'accusation devant une autre juridiction

A) Après la confirmation d'un acte d'accusation, que l'accusé soit placé ou non sous la garde du Tribunal, le Président peut désigner une Chambre de première instance qui détermine s'il y a lieu de renvoyer l'affaire aux autorités de l'Etat:

i) sur le territoire duquel le crime a été commis;

ii) dans lequel l'accusé a été arrêté; ou

iii) ayant compétence et étant disposé et tout à fait prêt à accepter une telle affaire, afin qu'elles saisissent sans délai la juridiction appropriée pour en juger.

B) La Chambre de première instance peut ordonner ce renvoi d'office ou sur la demande du Procureur, après avoir donné au Procureur et, lorsqu'il est placé sous la garde du Tribunal, à l'accusé, la possibilité d'être entendu.

C) Lorsqu'elle examine s'il convient de renvoyer l'affaire selon les termes du paragraphe A), la Chambre de première instance doit être convaincue que l'accusé recevra un procès équitable devant les juridictions de l'Etat concerné, et qu'il ne sera pas condamné à la peine capitale ni exécuté.

D) Lorsqu'une ordonnance est rendue en application du présent article :

i) L'accusé, s'il a été placé sous la garde du Tribunal, est remis aux autorités de l'Etat concerné ;

ii) La Chambre de première instance peut ordonner que des mesures de protection prises pour certains témoins ou victimes demeurent en vigueur;

iii) Le Procureur doit communiquer aux autorités de l'Etat concerné toutes les informations relatives à l'affaire et qu'il juge appropriées et, notamment, les pièces jointes à l'acte d'accusation;

iv) Le Procureur peut envoyer des observateurs qui suivront, en son nom, l'action devant les juridictions de l'Etat concerné.

E) La Chambre de première instance peut délivrer à l'encontre de l'accusé un mandat d'arrêt, lequel doit spécifier l'Etat vers lequel il sera transféré pour être jugé.

F) A tout moment après qu'une ordonnance soit rendue en application du présent article et avant que l'accusé ne soit déclaré coupable ou acquitté par une juridiction interne, la Chambre de première instance peut, à la demande du Procureur et après avoir donné aux autorités de l'Etat concerné la possibilité d'être entendues, annuler l'ordonnance et demander officiellement le dessaisissement aux termes de l'article 10.

G) Si une ordonnance rendue en vertu du présent article est annulée par la Chambre, celle-ci peut demander officiellement à l'Etat concerné de transférer l'accusé au siège du Tribunal et l'Etat accède à cette demande sans retard, conformément à l'article 28 du Statut. La Chambre de première instance ou un juge peut également émettre un mandat d'arrêt contre l'accusé.

H) L'accusé ou le Procureur peut en droit interjeter appel de la décision de renvoyer ou non une affaire, rendue par la Chambre de première instance. L'acte d'appel doit être déposé dans les quinze jours de la décision à moins que l'accusé n'ait pas été présent ou représenté lors du prononcé de la décision, auquel cas le délai de dépôt court à compter de la notification de ladite décision à l'accusé.

Décisions des juridictions internes

Sous réserve du paragraphe (2) de l'article 9 du Statut, les décisions des juridictions internes ne lient pas le Tribunal.

Non bis in idem

Si le Président est valablement informé de poursuites pénales engagées contre une personne devant une juridiction interne pour des faits constituant de graves violations du droit international humanitaire au sens du Statut pour lesquels l'intéressé a déjà été jugé par le Tribunal, une Chambre de première instance rend conformément à la procédure visée à l'article 10, mutatis mutandis, une ordonnance motivée invitant cette juridiction à mettre fin définitivement aux poursuites. Si cette juridiction s'y refuse, le Président peut soumettre la question au Conseil de sécurité.

Chapitre Troisième - Organisation Du Tribunal

SECTION 1 - Les juges

Article 14
Déclaration solennelle

A) Avant de prendre ses fonctions, chaque juge fait la déclaration solennelle suivante :

B) Le texte de cette déclaration, signé par le juge en présence du Secrétaire général de l'ONU ou de son représentant, est versé aux archives du Tribunal.

Article 14 bis

Les membres du Tribunal continuent d'exercer leurs fonctions jusqu'à ce qu'ils soient remplacés.

Récusation et empêchement de juges

[A) Un juge ne peut connaître d'une affaire dans laquelle il a un intérêt personnel ou avec laquelle il a ou il a eu un lien quelconque de nature à porter atteinte à son impartialité. En ce cas, il doit se dessaisir de cette affaire. Lorsque le juge renonce à siéger au sein d'une Chambre de première instance, le Président désigne un autre juge de première instance pour siéger à sa place. Lorsqu'un juge renonce à siéger au sein de la Chambre d'appel, le Président de la Chambre d'appel désigne un autre juge pour siéger à sa place.

B) Toute partie peut solliciter du Président de la Chambre qu'un juge de cette Chambre soit dessaisi d'une affaire pour les raisons ci-dessus énoncées. Après concertation entre le Président de la Chambre et le juge concerné, le Bureau statue si nécessaire. Si le Bureau donne suite à la demande, le Président désigne un autre juge pour remplacer le juge dessaisi.

C) Le juge qui examine un acte d'accusation conformément à l'article 18 du Statut et aux articles 47 ou 61 du Règlement peut siéger à la Chambre appelée à juger ultérieurement l'accusé.][45]

Article 15 bis

Absence d'un juge

A) Lorsque

i) pour cause de maladie ou d'autres raisons personnelles urgentes, ou d'activités se rapportant au Tribunal et ayant été autorisées, un juge ne peut continuer à siéger dans une affaire en cours pendant une période qui semble devoir être de courte durée et
ii) les autres juges de la Chambre sont convaincus que l'intérêt de la justice le commande, ces derniers peuvent continuer à entendre l'affaire en l'absence du premier juge durant une période n'excédant pas cinq jours de travail.

B) Lorsque

i) pour cause de maladie ou d'autres raisons personnelles urgentes, ou d'activités se rapportant au Tribunal et ayant été autorisées, un juge ne peut continuer à siéger dans une affaire en cours pendant une période qui semble devoir être de courte durée et
ii) les autres juges de la Chambre ne sont pas convaincus que l'intérêt de la justice commande de continuer à entendre l'affaire en l'absence de celui-ci, a) les juges présents peuvent toutefois traiter les questions dont ils sont convaincus que l'intérêt de la justice commande de les trancher même en l'absence de ce juge et

b) le Président de la Chambre peut ajourner la procédure.

C) Si, pour raison de décès, de maladie, de démission, de non-réélection, de non-prolongation du mandat, ou d'autres raisons, un juge ne peut continuer à siéger dans une affaire en cours pendant une période qui semble devoir se prolonger, le Président de la Chambre en informe le Président qui peut désigner un autre juge et ordonner soit que l'affaire soit réentendue soit que la procédure reprenne au point où elle s'est arrêtée. Toutefois, après l'audition des déclarations liminaires visées à l'article 84 ou le début de la présentation des éléments de preuve en application de l'article 85, la continuation de la procédure ne peut être ordonnée qu'avec le consentement de l'accusé, sous réserve des dispositions du paragraphe (D).

D) Si, lorsqu'il se trouve dans les conditions énoncées à la dernière phrase du paragraphe (C), l'accusé refuse de donner son consentement, les juges restants peuvent quand même décider de continuer à entendre l'affaire devant une Chambre de première instance avec un juge suppléant pour autant que, au regard de toutes les circonstances, ils estiment à l'unanimité que leur décision sert mieux l'intérêt de la justice. Les deux parties peuvent interjeter appel de cette décision, directement devant la Chambre d'appel entièrement constituée. Si aucun recours n'est formé, ou si la Chambre d'appel confirme la décision de la Chambre de première instance, le Président désigne un autre juge pour siéger au sein du collège existant, pour autant que ce juge ait d'abord déclaré qu'il s'est familiarisé avec le dossier de l'affaire concernée. Il ne peut être procédé qu'à un seul remplacement de juge en vertu du présent paragraphe.

E) Les appels prévus au paragraphe (D) doivent être interjetés dans les sept jours du dépôt de la décision contestée. Lorsque pareille décision est rendue oralement, ce délai commence à courir à partir de la date du prononcé de cette décision, sauf dans les cas où

i) la partie qui conteste la décision n'était pas présente ou pas représentée lorsque cette décision a été prononcée, circonstance dans laquelle le délai commence à courir à partir de la date où la partie concernée a reçu notification de la décision orale, ou ii) la Chambre de première instance a précisé qu'une décision écrite suivrait, circonstance dans laquelle le délai commence à courir à partir du dépôt de la décision écrite.

F) En cas de maladie, de poste vacant non pourvu ou de toute autre circonstance similaire, le Président peut, s'il est convaincu que l'intérêt de la justice le commande, autoriser une Chambre à traiter les affaires courantes, telles que le prononcé de décisions, en l'absence d'un ou de plusieurs de ses membres.

Démission

Un juge qui décide de démissionner en informe par écrit le Président qui transmet au Secrétaire général de l'ONU.

C) Les juges élus ou nommés à des dates différentes prennent rang selon la date de leur élection ou de leur nomination; les juges élus ou nommés à la même date prennent rang entre eux selon l'ancienneté d'âge.

D) En cas de réélection, il est tenu compte de la durée totale des fonctions déjà exercées par le juge intéressé.

SECTION 2 - La présidence du Tribunal

Les dispositions de l'article 47 (G) et de l'article 53 bis s'appliquent mutatis mutandis à l'acte d'accusation modifié, dès lors que l'autorisation de modifier est donnée.
(ii) Pour décider s'il est opportun d'autoriser la modification de l'acte d'accusation, la Chambre de première instance ou, le cas échéant, le juge compétent suit la procédure définie aux paragraphes (E) et (F) de l'article 47 mutatis mutandis, applique les normes qui y sont fixées et tient compte de tout autre élément d'appréciation pertinent.

B) Lorsque l'acte d'accusation modifié comporte de nouveaux chefs d'accusation et que l'accusé a déjà comparu devant une Chambre de première instance conformément à l'article 62, une nouvelle comparution se tient dès que possible pour permettre à l'accusé de plaider coupable ou non coupable des nouveaux chefs qui lui sont imputés.

C) Un délai supplémentaire de trente jours est accordé à l'accusé pour lui permettre de soulever les exceptions prévues à l'article 72 relativement aux nouveaux chefs qui lui sont imputés et, s'il y a lieu, la date du procès peut être reportée pour accorder à la défense le temps nécessaire à sa préparation.

Retrait de l'acte d'accusation

A) Le Procureur peut, sans autorisation préalable, retirer un acte d'accusation à tout moment avant sa confirmation. Ultérieurement, et jusqu'à la comparution initiale de l'accusé devant une Chambre de première instance conformément à l'article 62, il ne peut le faire qu'avec l'autorisation du juge l'ayant confirmé ou, dans des circonstances exceptionnelles, avec l'autorisation d'un juge désigné par le Président. Lors de cette comparution initiale ou par la suite, l'acte d'accusation ne peut être retiré que sur autorisation d'une Chambre de première instance conformément à l'article 73.

B) Le retrait de l'acte d'accusation est notifié sans délai au suspect ou à l'accusé et à son conseil.

Caractère public de l'acte d'accusation

Après la confirmation par le juge de première instance, et sous réserve de l'article 53, l'acte d'accusation est rendu public.

Non-divulgation au public

A) Lorsque des circonstances exceptionnelles le requièrent, un juge ou une Chambre de première instance peut ordonner dans l'intérêt de la justice la non-divulgation au public de tous documents ou informations, et ce, jusqu'à décision contraire.

B) Lorsqu'il confirme un acte d'accusation, le juge peut, après avis du Procureur, ordonner sa non-divulgation au public jusqu'à sa signification à l'accusé, ou en cas de jonction d'instances, à tous les accusés.

C) Un juge ou une Chambre de première instance peut également, après avis du Procureur, ordonner la non-divulgation au public de tout ou partie de l'acte d'accusation, de toute information et de tout document particuliers, si l'un ou l'autre est convaincu qu'une telle ordonnance est nécessaire pour donner effet à une disposition du Règlement ou pour préserver des informations confidentielles obtenues par le Procureur ou encore que l'intérêt de la justice le commande.

D) Nonobstant les paragraphes (A), (B) et (C) ci-dessus, le Procureur peut divulguer tout ou partie de l'acte d'accusation aux autorités d'un État ou à une autorité compétente ou une institution internationale lorsqu'il l'estime nécessaire pour se ménager une chance d'arrêter un accusé.

Signification de l'acte d'accusation

A) L'acte d'accusation est signifié à l'accusé en personne lorsqu'il est placé sous la garde du Tribunal ou le plus tôt possible ultérieurement.

B) L'acte d'accusation est signifié à l'accusé lorsque copie certifiée, conformément aux dispositions de l'article 47 (G), lui en est donnée.

SECTION 2 - Les ordonnances et les mandats

Disposition générale

A la demande d'une des parties ou de sa propre initiative, un juge ou une Chambre de première instance peut délivrer les ordonnances, citations à comparaître, assignations, injonctions, mandats et ordres de transfert nécessaires aux fins de l'enquête, de la préparation ou de la conduite du procès.

Exécution des mandats d'arrêt

A) Un mandat d'arrêt doit être signé par un juge et revêtu du sceau du Tribunal. Il est accompagné d'une copie de l'acte d'accusation et d'un document rappelant les droits de l'accusé. Au titre de ces droits figurent ceux qui sont énoncés à l'article 20 du Statut et, mutatis mutandis, aux articles 42 et 43 du Règlement, ainsi que le droit de conserver le silence et la mise en garde selon laquelle toute déclaration faite par l'accusé est enregistrée et peut être retenue contre lui.

B) Le Greffier transmet aux autorités nationales de l'Etat sur le territoire ou sous la juridiction ou le contrôle duquel l'accusé réside ou avait sa dernière résidence connue trois jeux de copies certifiées conformes des documents ci-après

i) Le mandat d'arrêt et l'ordonnance de transfèrement au Tribunal;
ii) L'acte d'accusation confirmé;
iii) Le document rappelant les droits de l'accusé auquel est jointe, s'il y a lieu, une traduction dans une langue que celui-ci comprend.

C) Le Greffier donne instructions auxdites autorités

i) D'arrêter l'accusé et de le transférer au Tribunal;
ii) De notifier à l'accusé les documents susmentionnés;
iii) De donner lecture à l'accusé des documents dans une langue qu'il comprend et de l'informer de ses droits dans cette langue; et
iv) De renvoyer au Tribunal un jeu desdits documents en y joignant la preuve qu'ils ont été notifiés à l'accusé.

D) Lorsqu'un mandat d'arrêt émis par le Tribunal est exécuté, un membre du Bureau du Procureur peut être présent à compter du moment de l'arrestation.

Mandat d'arrêt à tous les Etats

A) A la demande du Procureur et s'il est convaincu que cela faciliterait l'arrestation d'un accusé susceptible de passer d'un Etat à un autre, ou que l'on ignore où il se trouve, un juge peut, sans recourir à la procédure décrite à l'article 61, et sous réserve du paragraphe (B), adresser un mandat d'arrêt à tous les Etats.

B) Le Greffier transmet un tel mandat aux autorités nationales des Etats pour lesquels le Procureur le requiert.

Coopération des Etats

L'Etat auquel est transmis un mandat d'arrêt ou un ordre de transfert d'un témoin, agit sans tarder et avec toute la diligence voulue pour assurer sa bonne exécution, conformément à l'article 28 du Statut.

Procédure après l'arrestation

Après l'arrestation de l'accusé, l'Etat concerné détient l'intéressé et en informe sans délai le Greffier. Le transfert de l'accusé au siège du Tribunal ou vers tout autre lieu que le Bureau peut fixer, après consultation du Procureur et du Greffier, est organisé par les autorités nationales intéressées en liaison avec les autorités du pays hôte et le Greffier.

Dispositions de droit interne relatives à l'extradition

Les obligations énoncées à l'article 28 du Statut prévalent sur tous obstacles juridiques que la législation nationale ou les traités d'extradition auxquels l'Etat intéressé est partie pourraient opposer à la remise ou au transfert de l'accusé ou d'un témoin au Tribunal.

Défaut d'exécution d'un mandat d'arrêt ou d'un ordre de transfert

A) Lorsque l'Etat auquel un mandat d'arrêt ou un ordre de transfert a été transmis n'a pu l'exécuter, il en informe sans délai le Greffier et en indique les raisons.

B) Si, dans un délai raisonnable après que le mandat d'arrêt ou l'ordre de transfert a été transmis à l'Etat, il n'est pas rendu compte des mesures prises, l'Etat est réputé ne pas avoir exécuté le mandat d'arrêt ou l'ordre de transfert et le Tribunal, par l'intermédiaire du Président, peut en informer le Conseil de sécurité.

Publication de l'acte d'accusation

A la demande du Procureur, le Greffier transmet aux autorités nationales de l'Etat ou des Etats, aux fins de publication dans des journaux, ou de diffusion par la radio, l'internet ou la télévision, le texte d'une annonce portant publiquement à la connaissance de l'accusé l'existence d'un acte d'accusation établi contre lui, le sommant de se livrer au Tribunal et invitant toute personne qui saurait où l'accusé se trouve à communiquer cette information au Tribunal.

Procédure en cas d'inexécution d'un mandat d'arrêt

A) Si, au terme d'un délai raisonnable, le mandat d'arrêt n'a pas été exécuté et que l'acte d'accusation n'a pas été signifié à personne, le juge qui a confirmé l'acte d'accusation invite le Procureur à rendre compte des mesures qu'il a prises. Dès lors que le juge est convaincu que:

i) Le Greffier et le Procureur ont pris toutes les mesures raisonnables pour faire arrêter l'accusé, notamment en s'adressant aux autorités compétentes de l'Etat sur le territoire ou sous la juridiction ou le contrôle duquel l'accusé visé par la signification réside ou avait sa dernière résidence connue; et

ii) Le Procureur et le Greffier ont pris toutes les mesures raisonnables pour établir le lieu de résidence inconnu de l'accusé, y compris par l'insertion d'annonces dans les journaux, conformément à l'article 60, le juge ordonne que le Procureur présente l'acte d'accusation à la Chambre de première instance à laquelle il est affecté.

B) Dès le prononcé d'une telle ordonnance, le Procureur soumet l'acte d'accusation à la Chambre de première instance en audience publique, en y joignant tous les éléments de preuve présentés au Juge qui a initialement confirmé l'acte d'accusation et tout autre élément de preuve présenté au juge après la confirmation de l'acte d'accusation. Le Procureur peut également citer à comparaître et interroger, devant la Chambre de première instance, tout témoin dont la déclaration a été soumise au Juge ayant confirmé l'acte d'accusation.

C) Si la Chambre de première instance considère, sur la base de ces éléments de preuve ainsi que de tous autres que le Procureur peut produire, qu'il existe des raisons suffisantes de croire que l'accusé a commis une ou toutes les infractions mises à sa charge dans l'acte d'accusation, elle statue en conséquence. La Chambre fait lire par le Procureur les passages pertinents de l'acte d'accusation et lui demande de rendre compte des efforts déployés pour signifier l'acte d'accusation conformément au paragraphe (A).

D) En outre, la Chambre de première instance délivre contre l'accusé un mandat d'arrêt international qui est transmis à tous les Etats. A la demande du Procureur ou de sa propre initiative, le Procureur entendu, la Chambre de première instance peut ordonner à un ou plusieurs Etats d'adopter des mesures conservatoires à l'effet de geler les avoirs de l'accusé, sans préjudice des droits des tiers.

E) Si le Procureur établit à l'audience devant la Chambre de première instance que le défaut de signification à personne de l'acte d'accusation est imputable en tout ou en partie à l'absence ou au refus de coopération d'un Etat avec le Tribunal contrairement à l'article 28 du Statut, la Chambre de première instance en dresse le constat. Le Président en informe le Conseil de sécurité selon les modalités les plus opportunes, après consultation des deux Présidents de Chambre.

Comparution initiale de l'accusé

A) Après son transfert au Tribunal, l'accusé comparaît sans délai devant une Chambre de première instance ou devant un juge désigné parmi ses membres et est officiellement mis en accusation. La Chambre de première instance ou le juge désigné:

i) s'assure que le droit de l'accusé à l'assistance d'un conseil est respecté, ii) donne lecture ou fait donner lecture de l'acte d'accusation à l'accusé, dans une langue qu'il comprend, et s'assure qu'il comprend cet acte d'accusation;
iii) invite l'accusé à plaider coupable ou non coupable sur chaque chef d'accusation et, à défaut pour l'accusé de plaider, inscrit en son nom au dossier qu'il a plaidé non coupable, iv) donne instruction au Greffier de fixer la date du procès au cas où l'accusé plaide non coupable,
v) lorsque l'accusé plaide coupable,
a) devant un juge, communique cet aveu de culpabilité à la Chambre de première instance,
b) une Chambre de première instance agit conformément au paragraphe (B), B) Si un accusé plaide coupable conformément au paragraphe (A) (v) ou demande à revenir sur son plaidoyer de non culpabilité, la Chambre doit s'assurer que l'aveu de culpabilité :

i) est fait librement et volontairement,
ii) est fait en connaissance de cause,
iii) est sans équivoque, et

iv) repose sur des faits suffisants pour établir le crime et la participation de l'accusé à sa commission, compte tenu soit d'indices objectifs, soit de l'absence de tout sérieux désaccord entre le Procureur et l'accusé sur les faits de la cause, la Chambre peut déclarer l'accusé coupable et donner instruction au Greffier de fixer la date de l'audience pour le prononcé de la peine.

Procédure en cas d'accord sur le plaidoyer

A) Le Procureur et la défense peuvent convenir que, après que l'accusé aura plaidé coupable de l'ensemble des chefs d'accusation, de l'un ou de plusieurs de ces chefs, le Procureur prendra tout ou partie des dispositions suivantes devant la Chambre de première instance :

i) demandera l'autorisation de modifier l'acte d'accusation en conséquence ;
ii) proposera une peine déterminée ou une fourchette de peines qu'il estime appropriées ;
ii) ne s'opposera pas à la demande par l'accusé d'une peine déterminée ou d'une fourchette de peines.

B) La Chambre de première instance n'est pas tenue par l'accord visé au paragraphe (A).

C) Si les parties ont conclu un accord sur le plaidoyer, la Chambre de première instance demande la divulgation de l'accord en question, soit en audience publique soit, si des motifs convaincants ont été présentés, à huis clos, au moment où l'accusé plaide coupable conformément à l'article 62 (A) (v), ou demande à revenir sur son plaidoyer de non-culpabilité.

Interrogatoire de l'accusé

A) L'interrogatoire d'un accusé par le Procureur, y compris après la comparution initiale, ne peut avoir lieu qu'en présence de son conseil, à moins que l'accusé n'ait volontairement et expressément renoncé à la présence de celui-ci. Si l'accusé exprime ultérieurement le désir de bénéficier de l'assistance d'un conseil, l'interrogatoire est immédiatement suspendu et ne reprendra qu'en présence du conseil.

B) L'interrogatoire ainsi que la renonciation à l'assistance d'un conseil sont enregistrés sur bande magnétique ou sur cassette vidéo conformément à la procédure prévue à l'article 43. Préalablement à l'interrogatoire, le Procureur informe l'accusé de ses droits conformément à l'article 42 (A) (iii).

Détention provisoire

Après son transfert au Tribunal, l'accusé est détenu dans les locaux mis à disposition par le pays hôte ou par un autre pays. Le Président peut, à la requête d'une des parties, demander de revoir les conditions de détention de l'accusé.

Mise en liberté provisoire

A) Une fois détenu, l'accusé ne peut être mis en liberté que sur ordonnance d'une Chambre.

B) La mise en liberté provisoire ne peut être ordonnée par la Chambre de première instance qu'après avoir donné au pays hôte, et au pays où l'accusé demande à être libéré la possibilité d'être entendus, et pour autant qu'elle ait la certitude que l'accusé comparaîtra et, s'il est libéré, ne mettra pas en danger une victime, un témoin ou toute autre personne.

C) La Chambre de première instance peut subordonner la mise en liberté provisoire aux conditions qu'elle juge appropriées, y compris le versement d'une caution et, le cas échéant, l'observation des conditions nécessaires pour garantir la présence de l'accusé au procès et la protection d'autrui.

[D) Toute décision rendue par une Chambre de première instance aux termes de cet article sera susceptible d'appel. Sous réserve du paragraphe (F) ci-après, l'appel doit être déposé dans les sept jours du dépôt de la décision contestée. Lorsque cette décision est rendue oralement, l'appel doit être déposé dans les sept jours de ladite décision, à moins que:][49]

i) La partie attaquant la décision n'ait pas été présente ou représentée lors du prononcé de la décision, auquel cas le délai court à compter du jour où la partie reçoit notification de la décision orale qu'elle entend attaquer; ou
ii) La Chambre de première instance ait indiqué qu'une décision écrite suivrait, auquel cas le délai court à compter du dépôt de la décision écrite.

E) Le Procureur peut demander à ce que la Chambre de première instance sursoie à l'exécution de sa décision de libérer un accusé au motif qu'il a l'intention d'interjeter appel de la décision; il présente cette demande en même temps qu'il dépose sa réponse à la requête initiale de l'accusé aux fins de mise en liberté provisoire.

F) Lorsque la Chambre de première instance fait droit au sursis à l'exécution de sa décision de mettre en liberté un accusé, le Procureur dépose son acte d'appel au plus tard le lendemain du prononcé de la décision.

G) Lorsque la Chambre de première instance ordonne le sursis à l'exécution de sa décision de mise en liberté de l'accusé en attendant l'arrêt relatif à l'appel interjeté par le Procureur, l'accusé n'est pas remis en liberté sauf dans les cas suivants:

[i) Le délai de dépôt de l'appel de l'Accusation est écoulé et aucun appel n'a été déposé;
ii) La Chambre d'appel rejette le recours, ou
iii) La Chambre d'appel en décide autrement.][50]

H) Si elle l'estime nécessaire, la Chambre de première instance peut délivrer un mandat d'arrêt aux fins de garantir la comparution d'un accusé mis en liberté provisoire ou laissé en liberté pour toute autre raison. Les dispositions de la section 2 du chapitre V s'appliquent dans ce cas mutatis mutandis.

I) Sans préjudice des dispositions de l'article 107 du Règlement, la Chambre d'appel peut accorder la mise en liberté provisoire de condamnés dans l'attente de leur jugement en appel ou pendant une période donnée pour autant qu'elle ait la certitude que:

i) s'il est libéré, l'appelant comparaîtra à l'audience en appel ou, le cas échéant, il se présentera aux fins de détention à l'expiration de la période donnée;
ii) s'il est libéré, l'appelant ne mettra pas en danger une victime, un témoin ou toute autre personne;
iii) des circonstances particulières justifient cette mise en liberté.

Conférence de mise en état

A) Une conférence de mise en état peut être convoquée par une Chambre de première instance ou par un juge à l'effet d'organiser, entre les parties, des échanges de vues propres à assurer un déroulement rapide de l'instance.

B) La Chambre d'appel ou un juge de la Chambre d'appel peut convoquer une conférence de mise en état.

C) Lorsqu'une conférence de mise en état se tient en application du paragraphe (B) du présent article, les représentants du Bureau du Procureur et les conseils de la défense peuvent y participer par voie d'audioconférence ou de vidéoconférence.

SECTION 3 - La production des moyens de preuve

Communication des pièces par le Procureur

Sous réserve des dispositions des articles 53 et 69

A) Le Procureur communique à la défense

i) Dans les trente jours suivant la comparution initiale de l'accusé, copie de toutes les pièces justificatives jointes à l'acte d'accusation lors de la demande de confirmation ainsi que de toutes les déclarations antérieures de l'accusé recueillies par le Procureur;
ii) Au plus tard soixante jours avant la date fixée pour le début du procès, copie des déclarations de tous les témoins que le Procureur entend appeler à la barre. Une Chambre de première instance peut, à condition que le bien-fondé d'une telle mesure lui soit démontré, ordonner que des copies de déclarations de témoins à charge supplémentaires soient remises à la défense dans un délai fixé par la Chambre.

B) A la demande de la défense, le Procureur doit, sous réserve du paragraphe (C), permettre à celle-ci d'examiner tous livres, documents, photographies et autres objets se trouvant en sa possession ou sous son contrôle qui sont nécessaires à la défense de l'accusé, ou seront utilisés par le Procureur comme moyens de preuve au procès, ou ont été obtenus de l'accusé ou lui appartiennent.

C) Dans le cas où la communication d'informations ou de pièces se trouvant en la possession du Procureur pourrait nuire à de nouvelles enquêtes ou à des enquêtes en cours, ou pour toute autre raison pourrait être contraire à l'intérêt public ou porter atteinte à la sécurité d'un Etat, le Procureur peut demander à la Chambre de première instance siégeant à huis clos d'être dispensé de l'obligation de communication visée aux paragraphes (A) et (B). En formulant sa demande le Procureur fournit à la Chambre de première instance, et à elle seule, les informations ou les pièces dont la confidentialité est recherchée.

Echange des moyens de preuve

Sous réserve des dispositions des articles 53 et 69:

[A) Dès que possible, et en toute hypothèse avant le début du procès:

i) Le Procureur notifie à la défense les noms des témoins à charge qu'il a l'intention d'appeler pour établir la culpabilité de l'accusé et réfuter tout moyen de défense dont le Procureur a été notifié conformément au paragraphe (ii) ci-dessous;
ii) La défense notifie au Procureur son intention d'invoquer:

a) Un alibi, auquel cas la notification spécifie le ou les lieux où l'accusé prétend s'être trouvé au moment des faits incriminés, les noms et adresses des témoins ainsi que tous autres éléments de preuve sur lesquels l'accusé a l'intention de se fonder pour établir son alibi;

b) Un moyen de défense spécial, notamment la déficience mentale ou la diminution des capacités mentales avec indication des nom et adresse des témoins ainsi que de tous autres éléments de preuve sur lesquels l'accusé a l'intention de se fonder pour établir ce moyen de défense.

B) Le défaut d'une telle notification par la défense, selon le présent article, ne limite pas le droit de l'accusé d'invoquer les moyens de défense susvisés.

C) Si la défense introduit la requête prévue au paragraphe (B) de l'article 66, le Procureur est à son tour autorisé à examiner tous livres, documents, photographies et autres objets se trouvant en la possession ou sous le contrôle de la défense et qu'elle entend produire au procès.

D) Si l'une ou l'autre des parties découvre des éléments de preuve, informations ou documents supplémentaires qui auraient dû être produits plus tôt conformément au Règlement, elle en informe aussitôt l'autre partie et la Chambre de première instance.][51]

Communication des éléments de preuve à décharge et autres éléments pertinents

A) Le Procureur communique aussitôt que possible à la défense tous les éléments dont il sait effectivement qu'ils sont de nature à disculper en tout ou en partie l'accusé ou à porter atteinte à la crédibilité des éléments de preuve à charge.

B) Dans la mesure du possible et avec l'accord de la défense, sous réserve du paragraphe (A), le Procureur met à la disposition de la défense, sous forme électronique, les collections de documents pertinents qu'il détient et les logiciels qui permettent à la défense de les passer au crible électroniquement.

C) Si le Procureur obtient des informations confidentielles d'une personne ou entité donnée dans les conditions prévues à l'article 70 et si ces informations contiennent des éléments entrant dans le cadre du paragraphe (A) ci-dessus, il prend les mesures raisonnables pour obtenir le consentement de cette personne ou entité avant de les communiquer à l'accusé ou de l'informer de leur existence.

D) Si le Procureur détient des informations dont la communication pourrait hypothéquer des enquêtes en cours ou ultérieures, ou pourrait, pour toute autre raison, être contraire à l'intérêt public ou porter atteinte à la sécurité d'un État, il peut demander à la Chambre de première instance, siégeant à huis clos, de le dispenser de les communiquer. Ce faisant, le Procureur fournira à la Chambre de première instance (mais uniquement à elle) les informations dont la confidentialité est demandée.

E) À l'issue du procès et de tout appel ultérieur, le Procureur communique à la partie adverse tous les éléments visés au paragraphe (A) ci-dessus.

Article 69
Protection des victimes et des témoins

A) Dans des cas exceptionnels, chacune des deux parties peut demander à la Chambre de première instance d'ordonner la non-divulgation de l'identité d'une victime ou d'un témoin pour empêcher qu'ils ne courent un danger ou des risques, et ce, jusqu'au moment où la Chambre en décidera autrement.

[51] Tel que modifié le 10 novembre 2006.

B) Lorsqu'elle arrête des mesures de protection des victimes ou des témoins, la Chambre de première instance peut consulter la Section d'aide aux victimes et aux témoins.

C) Sous réserve de l'article 75, l'identité des victimes ou des témoins doit être divulguée dans des délais prescrits par la Chambre de première instance, pour accorder au Procureur et à la défense le temps nécessaire à leur préparation.

Exception à l'obligation de communication

A) Nonobstant les dispositions des articles 66 et 67, les rapports, mémoires ou autres documents internes établis par une partie, ses assistants ou ses représentants dans le cadre de l'enquête ou de la préparation du dossier n'ont pas à être communiqués ou échangés en vertu des dispositions susmentionnées.

B) Si le Procureur possède des informations qui lui ont été communiquées à titre confidentiel et dans la mesure où ces informations n'ont été utilisées que dans le seul but de recueillir des éléments de preuve nouveaux, le Procureur ne peut divulguer ces informations initiales et leur source qu'avec le consentement de la personne ou de l'entité les ayant fournies. Ces informations et leur source ne seront en aucun cas utilisées comme moyens de preuve avant d'avoir été communiquées à l'accusé.

C) Si, après avoir obtenu le consentement de la personne ou de l'organe fournissant des informations au titre du présent article, le Procureur décide de présenter comme éléments de preuve tout témoignage, document ou autres pièces ainsi fournis, la Chambre de première instance ne peut pas, nonobstant les dispositions de l'article 98, ordonner aux parties de produire des éléments de preuve additionnels reçus de la personne ou de l'organe fournissant les informations originelles. Elle ne peut pas non plus, aux fins d'obtenir ces éléments de preuve additionnels, citer cette personne ou un représentant de cet organe comme témoin ou ordonner sa comparution.

D) Si le Procureur cite comme témoin la personne ou un représentant de l'organe fournissant les informations au titre du présent article, la Chambre de première instance ne peut contraindre ledit témoin à répondre aux questions auxquelles il refuse de répondre en raison du caractère confidentiel de ces informations.

E) Le droit de l'accusé de contester les éléments de preuve présentés par le ministère public reste inchangé, sous réserve uniquement des limites figurant aux paragraphes (C) et (D).

F) Les paragraphes (C) et (D) n'empiètent en rien sur le pouvoir qu'a la Chambre de première instance en vertu de l'article 89 (C) d'exclure un élément de preuve dont la valeur probante est nettement inférieure à l'exigence d'un procès équitable.

SECTION 4 - Les dépositions

Dépositions

[A) A la requête de l'une des parties, la Chambre peut, dans des circonstances exceptionnelles et dans l'intérêt de la justice, ordonner qu'une déposition soit recueillie en vue du procès, et nommer à cet effet un officier instrumentaire.

B) La requête visant à faire recueillir une déposition est présentée par écrit. Elle mentionne le nom et l'adresse du témoin dont la déposition est requise, la date, le lieu où la déposition sera recueillie, une déclaration contenant les sujets sur lesquels la personne va être interrogée ainsi que les circonstances exceptionnelles qui justifient la déposition.

C) S'il est fait droit à la requête, la partie ayant demandé la déposition en avise en temps utile l'autre partie, qui a le droit d'assister à la déposition et de contre-interroger le témoin.

D) La déposition peut aussi être recueillie par voie de vidéoconférence.

E) L'officier instrumentaire s'assure que la déposition est recueillie selon les formes prévues au Règlement et qu'un enregistrement est fait de la déposition, incluant le contre-interrogatoire et les objections soulevées par l'une ou l'autre partie en vue de la décision de la Chambre de première instance. Il transmet le dossier à la Chambre de première instance.][52]

SECTION 5 - Les exceptions préjudicielles

Article 72
Exceptions préjudicielles

A) Les exceptions préjudicielles, à savoir :

i) l'exception d'incompétence ;
ii) l'exception fondée sur un vice de forme de l'acte d'accusation ;
iii) l'exception aux fins de disjonction de chefs d'accusation joints conformément à l'article 49 ci-dessus ou aux fins de disjonction d'instances conformément au paragraphe (B) de l'article 82 ci-après ; ou iv) l'exception fondée sur le rejet d'une demande de commission d'office d'un conseil formulée aux termes de l'article 45 (C) ; doivent être enregistrées par écrit et au plus tard trente jours après que le Procureur a communiqué à la défense toutes les pièces jointes et déclarations visées à l'article 66 (A) (i). La Chambre se prononce sur ces exceptions préjudicielles dans les soixante jours suivant leur dépôt et avant le début des déclarations liminaires visées à l'article 84. La Chambre de première instance peut statuer sur ces requêtes sur la seule base des mémoires des parties, à moins qu'il ne soit décidé d'entendre la requête en audience publique.

B) Les décisions ainsi rendues ne sont pas susceptibles d'appel en cours de procès à l'exclusion :

i) des exceptions d'incompétence, auquel cas l'appel est de droit ;
ii) des cas où la Chambre de première instance a certifié l'appel, après avoir vérifié que la décision touche une question susceptible de compromettre sensiblement l'équité et la rapidité du procès, ou son issue, et que son règlement immédiat par la Chambre d'appel pourrait concrètement faire progresser la procédure.

C) Les appels visés au paragraphe (B) (i) et les demandes de certification visées au paragraphe (B) (ii) sont déposées respectivement dans les quinze jours et les sept jours de la décision contestée. Lorsque cette décision est rendue oralement, ce délai court à compter du jour du prononcé de ladite décision, à moins que :

i) la partie attaquant la décision n'ait pas été présente ou représentée lors du prononcé de la décision, auquel cas le délai court à compter du jour où la partie reçoit notification de la décision orale qu'elle entend attaquer ; ou que

[52] Tel que modifié le 10 novembre 2006.

ii) la Chambre de première instance ait indiqué qu'une décision écrite suivrait, auquel cas le délai court à compter du dépôt de la décision écrite.

Dès lors qu'il est fait droit à la demande de certification, la partie concernée dispose de sept jours pour former un recours auprès de la Chambre d'appel.

D) Aux fins des paragraphes (A) (i) et (B) (i) supra, l'exception d'incompétence s'entend exclusivement d'une objection selon laquelle l'acte d'accusation ne se rapporte pas :

i) à l'une des personnes mentionnées aux articles 1, 5, 6, et 8 du Statut ;
ii) aux territoires mentionnés aux articles 1, 7 et 8 du Statut ;
iii) à la période mentionnée aux articles 1, 7 et 8 du Statut ;
iv) à l'une des violations définies aux articles 2, 3, 4 et 6 du Statut.

F) Le défaut de l'accusé de soulever les exceptions préjudicielles dans les délais prescrits par le présent article vaut renonciation de sa part. La Chambre de première instance peut néanmoins déroger à ces délais pour des raisons jugées valables.][53]

Chapitre Sixième - Le Procès En Première Instance

SECTION 1 - Dispositions générales

Requêtes

A) Sous réserve de l'article 72, l'une ou l'autre des parties peut présenter à une Chambre de première instance une ou plusieurs requêtes après la comparution initiale de l'accusé. La Chambre de première instance, ou un juge désigné en son sein par cette dernière, peut rendre une décision sur de telles requêtes sur la seule base des mémoires déposés par les parties, à moins qu'il n'ait été décidé d'entendre la requête en audience publique.

B) Les décisions concernant de telles requêtes ne sont pas susceptibles d'appel interlocutoire, à l'exclusion des cas où la Chambre de première instance a certifié l'appel après avoir vérifié que la décision touche une question susceptible de compromettre sensiblement l'équité et la rapidité du procès, ou son issue, et que son règlement immédiat par la Chambre d'appel pourrait concrètement faire progresser la procédure.

C) Les requêtes aux fins d'autorisation d'interjeter appel doivent être enregistrées dans les sept jours suivant le dépôt de la décision contestée. Lorsque cette décision est rendue oralement, la requête doit être déposée dans les sept jours suivant ladite décision, à moins que :

i) la partie attaquante n'ait pas été présente ou représentée lors du prononcé de la décision, auquel cas le délai court à compter du jour où la partie reçoit notification de la décision orale qu'elle entend attaquer ; ou
ii) la Chambre de première instance ait indiqué qu'une décision écrite suivrait, auquel cas, le délai court à compter du dépôt de la décision écrite.

[53] Tel que modifié le 10 novembre 2006.

Dès lors qu'il est fait droit à la demande de certification, la partie concernée dispose de sept jours pour former un recours auprès de la Chambre d'appel.

D) Lorsque la date d'audition d'une requête a été fixée, y compris pour une requête soulevant une exception préjudicielle, toute requête supplémentaire et tout document soumis à l'appui desdites requêtes doit être déposé au plus tard dix jours avant la date prévue pour l'audition pour être également entendu à cette date. Toute requête supplémentaire qui n'est pas déposée dans les délais prescrits ne sera pas entendue à la date prévue pour l'audition et il ne sera pas fait droit à une demande de report de l'audition de la requête originale sur la base du dépôt de requêtes ultérieures, sauf dans des circonstances exceptionnelles.

E) La partie défenderesse dépose sa réponse au plus tard cinq jours après la date à laquelle elle a reçu la requête.

F) Outre les sanctions envisagées à l'article 46, une Chambre peut sanctionner un conseil si ce dernier dépose une requête, y compris une exception préjudicielle, qui, de l'avis de la Chambre, est fantaisiste, ou constitue un abus de procédure. La Chambre peut demander qu'il soit sursis au paiement d'une partie ou de la totalité des honoraires qui sont dus au titre de la requête déposée, et/ou des frais y relatifs.

G) Nonobstant les délais prescrits à l'article 72 (A), ceux prescrits au présent article s'appliquent.

C) La Chambre de première instance, ou le juge désigné, peut inviter le Procureur à écourter l'interrogatoire principal de certains témoins.

D) Si la Chambre de première instance, ou le juge désigné, considère qu'un nombre excessif de témoins sont appelés à la barre pour établir les mêmes faits, elle peut inviter le Procureur à réduire ce nombre.

E) Après l'ouverture du procès, le Procureur peut, s'il estime que l'intérêt de la justice le commande, saisir la Chambre de première instance d'une requête aux fins d'être autorisé à revenir à sa liste de témoins initiale ou à revoir la composition de sa liste.

F) Durant la conférence préalable au procès, la Chambre de première instance, ou le juge désigné, peut ordonner à la défense de déposer, sept jours au moins avant la date d'ouverture du procès, une liste des points de fait et de droit reconnus ainsi qu'un mémoire préalable au procès traitant des questions de fait et de droit.

C) La Chambre de première instance, ou le juge désigné, peut inviter la défense à écourter la durée prévue de l'interrogatoire principal de certains témoins.

D) La Chambre de première instance, ou le juge désigné, peut inviter la défense à réduire le nombre de témoins, si elle considère qu'un nombre excessif de témoins sont appelés à la barre pour établir les mêmes faits.

Une Chambre de première instance peut, d'office ou à la demande d'une partie, ordonner un examen médical, y compris psychiatrique, ou un examen psychologique de l'accusé. Dans ce cas, le

Mesures destinées à assurer la protection des victimes et des témoins

A) Un juge ou une Chambre peut, d'office ou à la demande d'une des parties, de la victime, du témoin intéressé, ou de la Section d'aide aux victimes et aux témoins, ordonner des mesures appropriées pour protéger la vie privée et la sécurité des victimes ou des témoins, à condition toutefois que lesdites mesures ne portent pas atteinte aux droits de l'accusé.

B) Une Chambre peut tenir une audience à huis clos pour déterminer s'il y a lieu d'ordonner :

i) des mesures de nature à empêcher la divulgation au public ou aux médias de l'identité d'une victime ou d'un témoin, d'une personne qui leur est apparentée ou associée, ou du lieu où ils se trouvent, telles que :

F) Une fois que des mesures de protection ont été ordonnées en faveur d'une victime ou d'un témoin dans le cadre d'une affaire portée devant le Tribunal (la « première affaire »), ces mesures

i) continuent de s'appliquer mutatis mutandis dans toute autre affaire portée devant le Tribunal (la « deuxième affaire ») et ce, jusqu'à ce qu'elles soient annulées, modifiées ou renforcées selon la procédure exposée dans le présent article, mais
ii) n'empêchent pas le Procureur de s'acquitter des obligations de communication que lui impose le Règlement dans la deuxième affaire, sous réserve qu'il informe de la nature des mesures de protection ordonnées dans la première affaire les conseils de la défense auxquels il communique les éléments en question.

iii) méconnaît, sans excuse valable, une ordonnance aux fins de comparaître devant une Chambre ou aux fins de produire des documents devant une Chambre ;

i) demander au Procureur d'instruire l'affaire en vue de préparer et de soumettre un acte d'accusation pour outrage ;
ii) si elle estime que le Procureur a un conflit d'intérêts pour ce qui est du comportement en cause, enjoindre au Greffier de désigner un amicus curiae qui instruira l'affaire et indiquera à la Chambre s'il existe des motifs suffisants pour engager une procédure pour outrage ; ou
iii) engager une procédure elle-même.

D) Si la Chambre considère qu'il existe des motifs suffisants pour poursuivre une personne pour outrage, elle peut :

i) dans les circonstances décrites au paragraphe (C) (i), demander au Procureur d'engager une procédure, ou

ii) dans les circonstances décrites au paragraphe (C) (ii) ou (iii), rendre une ordonnance au lieu de délivrer un acte d'accusation et soit demander à l'amicus curiae d'engager une procédure, soit engager une procédure elle-même.

E) Les règles de procédure et de preuve énoncées aux chapitres quatre à huit du Règlement s'appliquent, mutatis mutandis, aux procédures visées au présent article.

F) Toute personne accusée ou inculpée d'outrage se verra commettre d'office un conseil, en application de l'article 45 si elle satisfait aux critères fixés par le Greffier pour être déclarée indigente.

G) La peine maximum qu'encourt une personne convaincue d'outrage au Tribunal est de cinq ans d'emprisonnement ou une amende de 10 000 dollars E.-U., ou les deux.

H) L'amende est payée au Greffier qui la verse sur un compte distinct.

I) Si le Tribunal reconnaît un conseil coupable d'outrage en application du présent article, la Chambre ayant rendu cette conclusion peut également décider que le conseil n'est plus habilité à représenter le suspect ou l'accusé devant le Tribunal et conclure que son comportement constitue une atteinte à la discipline en application de l'article 46, ou des deux.

J) Toute décision rendue par une Chambre de première instance en vertu du présent article est susceptible d'appel. ii) la Chambre de première instance n'ait indiqué qu'une décision écrite suivrait, auquel cas le délai court à compter du dépôt de la décision écrite.

K) Lorsque, statuant en premier ressort, la Chambre d'appel rend une décision en application du présent article, cette décision peut être attaquée dans les quinze jours de son dépôt, au moyen d'un acte d'appel présenté au Président. Cinq juges désignés par le Président statuent sur cet appel. Lorsque la décision contestée est rendue oralement, l'acte d'appel doit être déposé dans les quinze jours qui suivent, à moins que :

i) la partie attaquant la décision n'ait pas été présente ou représentée lors du prononcé de la décision, auquel cas le délai court à compter du jour où la partie reçoit notification de la décision orale qu'elle entend attaquer ; ou ii) la Chambre d'appel n'ait indiqué qu'une décision écrite suivrait, auquel cas le délai court à compter du dépôt de la décision écrite.

D) La Chambre de première instance décide si des photographies, ou des enregistrements vidéo ou sonores peuvent être pris lors de l'audience autrement que par les soins du Greffe.

SECTION 2 - Déroulement du procès

Article 82
Jonction et disjonction d'instances

A) En cas d'instances jointes, chaque accusé a les mêmes droits que s'il était jugé séparément.

B) La Chambre de première instance peut ordonner un procès séparé pour des accusés dont les instances avaient été jointes en application de l'article 48, pour éviter tout conflit d'intérêts de nature à causer un préjudice grave à un accusé, ou pour sauvegarder l'intérêt de la justice.

Article 82 bis

ii) le Greffier a dûment notifié à l'accusé que sa présence est requise pour le procès;
iii) les intérêts de l'accusé sont représentés par un conseil.

Instruments de contrainte

Les instruments de contrainte, tels que les menottes, ne sont utilisés que pour éviter un risque d'évasion au cours du transfert ou pour des raisons de sécurité; elles sont retirées lorsque l'accusé comparaît devant la Chambre.

Déclarations liminaires

Avant la présentation par le Procureur de ses moyens de preuve, chacune des parties peut faire une déclaration liminaire. Toutefois, la défense peut décider de faire sa déclaration après que le Procureur a présenté ses moyens de preuve et avant de présenter elle-même ses propres moyens de preuve.

Présentation des moyens de preuve

A) Chacune des parties peut appeler des témoins à la barre et présenter des moyens de preuve. A moins que la Chambre n'en décide autrement dans l'intérêt de la justice, les moyens de preuve sont présentés dans l'ordre suivant:

B) Chaque témoin peut, après son interrogatoire principal, faire l'objet d'un contre-interrogatoire et d'un interrogatoire supplémentaire. Le témoin est d'abord interrogé par la partie qui le présente, mais un juge peut également poser toute question au témoin à quelque stade que se soit.

C) L'accusé peut, s'il le souhaite, comparaître en qualité de témoin pour sa propre défense.

Réquisitions et plaidoiries

A) Après présentation de tous les moyens de preuve, le Procureur peut prendre ses réquisitions et, qu'il le fasse ou non, la défense peut plaider. S'il le souhaite, le Procureur peut répliquer et la défense présenter une duplique.

B) Les dernières conclusions des parties sont déposées auprès de la Chambre de première instance au plus tard cinq jours avant l'audience consacrée aux réquisitions et aux plaidoiries.

C) Dans leurs réquisitions et plaidoiries, les parties abordent également les questions relatives à la sentence.

Délibéré

A) Après les réquisitions et les plaidoiries, le Président de la Chambre de première instance déclare clos les débats et la Chambre se retire pour délibérer à huis clos. L'accusé n'est déclaré coupable que lorsque la majorité de la Chambre considère que la culpabilité a été prouvée au-delà de tout doute raisonnable.

B) La Chambre de première instance vote séparément sur chaque chef visé dans l'acte d'accusation. Si deux ou plusieurs accusés sont jugés ensemble, en application de l'article 48, la Chambre statue séparément sur le cas de chacun d'eux.

C) Si la Chambre de première instance déclare l'accusé coupable d'un ou de plusieurs des chefs visés dans l'acte d'accusation, elle fixe la peine à infliger pour chaque déclaration de culpabilité.

Article 88

B) Si elle juge l'accusé coupable d'un crime et si à l'examen des preuves il est établi que l'infraction a donné lieu à l'acquisition illicite d'un bien, la Chambre de première instance le constate spécifiquement dans son jugement et peut ordonner la restitution de ce bien conformément à l'article 105.

C) Le Jugement est adopté à la majorité des juges. Une motivation écrite y est jointe ou bien le suit dans les meilleurs délais. Des opinions individuelles ou dissidentes peuvent être jointes.

SECTION 3 - De la preuve

Dispositions générales

A) En matière de preuve, les règles énoncées dans la présente section s'appliquent à toute procédure devant les Chambres. Celles-ci ne sont pas liées par les règles de droit interne régissant l'administration de la preuve.

B) Dans les cas où le Règlement est muet, la Chambre saisie applique les règles d'administration de la preuve propres à permettre, dans l'esprit du Statut et des principes généraux du droit, un règlement équitable de la cause.

C) La Chambre peut recevoir tout élément de preuve pertinent dont elle estime qu'il a valeur probante.

D) La Chambre peut demander à vérifier l'authenticité de tout élément de preuve obtenu hors audience.

Article 90
Témoignages

A) En principe, les Chambres entendent les témoins en personne, à moins qu'une Chambre n'ordonne qu'un témoin dépose selon les modalités prévues à l'article 71.

B) Avant de déposer, tout témoin fait la déclaration suivante:

« Je déclare solennellement que je dirai la vérité, toute la vérité et rien que la vérité ».

[C) Un enfant qui, de l'avis de la Chambre ne comprend pas la nature d'une déclaration solennelle, peut être autorisé à témoigner sans cette formalité, si la Chambre estime qu'il est suffisamment mûr pour être en mesure de relater les faits dont il a eu connaissance et qu'il comprend ce que signifie le devoir de dire la vérité. Un jugement ne peut cependant être fondé exclusivement sur ce seul témoignage.

D) Un témoin, autre qu'un expert, qui n'a pas encore témoigné ne peut être présent lors de la déposition d'un autre témoin. Toutefois s'il a entendu cet autre témoignage, le sien n'est pas pour autant irrecevable.

E) Un témoin peut refuser de faire toute déclaration qui risquerait de l'incriminer. La Chambre peut toutefois obliger le témoin à répondre. Aucun témoignage obtenu de la sorte ne peut être utilisé par la suite comme élément de preuve dans une poursuite contre le témoin, hormis le cas de poursuite pour faux témoignage.

F) La Chambre de première instance exerce un contrôle sur les modalités et l'ordre de l'interrogatoire des témoins ainsi que la présentation des éléments de preuve, de manière à:

i) Rendre l'interrogatoire et la présentation des éléments de preuve efficaces pour l'établissement de la vérité; et
ii) Éviter toute perte de temps injustifiée.

G) i) Le contre-interrogatoire se limite aux points évoqués dans l'interrogatoire principal, aux points ayant trait à la crédibilité du témoin et à ceux ayant trait à la cause de la partie procédant au contre-interrogatoire sur lesquels le témoin est en mesure de déposer.
ii) Lorsqu'un conseil procède au contre-interrogatoire d'un témoin qui est en mesure de déposer sur un point portant sur la cause qu'il défend, il doit le confronter aux éléments dont il dispose qui contredisent les dépositions dudit témoin.
iii) La Chambre de première instance peut, dans l'exercice de son pouvoir discrétionnaire, autoriser des questions sur d'autres sujets.][54]

Article 90 bis
Transfert d'un témoin détenu

A) Toute personne détenue dont la comparution personnelle en qualité de témoin est ordonnée par le Tribunal sera transférée temporairement au centre de détention relevant du Tribunal, sous condition de son retour au terme du délai fixé par le Tribunal.

B) L'ordre de transfert ne peut être délivré par un juge ou une Chambre qu'après vérification préalable de la réunion des conditions suivantes:

i) La présence du témoin détenu n'est pas nécessaire dans une procédure pénale en cours sur le territoire de l'Etat requis pour la période durant laquelle elle est sollicitée par le Tribunal;
ii) Son transfert n'est pas susceptible de prolonger la durée de sa détention telle que prévue par l'Etat requis;

C) Le Greffe transmet l'ordre de transfert aux autorités nationales de l'Etat sur le territoire ou sous la juridiction ou le contrôle duquel le témoin est détenu. Le transfert est organisé par les autorités nationales intéressées en liaison avec les autorités du pays hôte et le Greffier.

[54] Tel que modifié le 10 novembre 2006.

D) Il incombe au Greffe de s'assurer du bon déroulement dudit transfert, y compris le suivi de la détention du témoin au centre de détention relevant du Tribunal, de s'informer de toutes modifications pouvant intervenir dans les modalités de la détention telles que prévues par l'Etat requis et pouvant affecter la durée de détention du témoin audit centre de détention, et d'en faire part, dans les plus brefs délais, au juge ou à la Chambre concerné.

E) A l'expiration du délai fixé par le Tribunal pour le transfert temporaire, le témoin détenu sera remis aux autorités de l'Etat requis, à moins que l'Etat n'ait transmis, pendant cette même période, un ordre de mise en liberté du témoin auquel il devra être immédiatement fait suite.

F) Si, au cours du délai fixé par le Tribunal, la présence du témoin détenu demeure nécessaire, un juge ou une Chambre peut proroger le délai, dans le respect des conditions fixées au paragraphe (B).

Article 91
Faux témoignage sous déclaration solennelle

A) D'office ou à la demande d'une partie, la Chambre avertit le témoin de son obligation de dire la vérité et des conséquences pouvant résulter d'un faux témoignage.

B) Si la Chambre a de bonnes raisons de croire qu'un témoin a sciemment et volontairement fait un faux témoignage, elle peut:

i) demander au Procureur d'examiner l'affaire en vue de préparer et de soumettre un acte d'accusation pour faux témoignage ; ou
ii) si elle estime que le Procureur a un conflit d'intérêts pour ce qui est du comportement en cause, enjoindre au Greffier de désigner un amicus curiae qui instruira l'affaire et indiquera à la Chambre s'il existe des motifs suffisants pour engager une procédure pour faux témoignage.

C) Si la Chambre considère qu'il existe des motifs suffisants pour poursuivre une personne pour faux témoignage, elle peut:

i) dans les circonstances décrites au paragraphe (B) (i), demander au Procureur d'engager une procédure, ou ii) dans les circonstances décrites au paragraphe (B) (ii), rendre une ordonnance au lieu de délivrer un acte d'accusation et demander à l'amicus curiae d'engager une procédure.

D) Les dispositions de procédure et de preuve prévues aux chapitres quatre à huit du Règlement s'appliquent, mutatis mutandis, aux procédures visées au présent article.

E) Toute personne accusée ou inculpée de faux témoignage se verra commettre d'office un conseil, en application de l'article 45 si elle satisfait aux critères fixés par le Greffier pour être déclarée indigente.

F) Un juge ayant siégé à la Chambre de première instance devant laquelle le témoin a comparu, ne peut connaître des procédures pour faux témoignage dont le témoin est l'objet.

G) Le faux témoignage sous déclaration solennelle est passible d'une amende ne pouvant excéder 10 000 dollars E.-U. ou d'une peine d'emprisonnement de cinq ans maximum, ou des deux. L'amende est payée au Greffier qui la verse sur le compte distinct visé au paragraphe (H) de l'article 77 ci-dessus.

H) Les paragraphes (B) à (G) s'appliquent mutatis mutandis à une personne qui fait sciemment et volontairement un faux témoignage dans une déclaration écrite recueillie en conformité avec l'article 92 bis et dont cette personne sait ou a des raisons de savoir qu'elle peut servir de preuve lors des poursuites devant le Tribunal.

I) Toute décision rendue par une Chambre de première instance en vertu du présent article est susceptible d'appel. L'acte d'appel doit être déposé dans les quinze jours du dépôt de la décision contestée. Lorsque cette décision est rendue oralement, l'acte d'appel doit être déposé dans les quinze jours de la décision contestée, à moins que:

i) la partie attaquant la décision n'ait pas été présente ou représentée lors du prononcé de la décision, auquel cas le délai court à compter du jour où la partie reçoit notification de la décision orale qu'elle entend attaquer ; ou ii) la Chambre de première instance n'ait indiqué qu'une décision écrite suivrait, auquel cas le délai court à compter du dépôt de la décision écrite.

Article 92
Aveu

Sous réserve du respect rigoureux des conditions visées à l'article 63, l'aveu fait par l'accusé lors d'un interrogatoire par le Procureur est présumé libre et volontaire jusqu'à preuve du contraire.

Article 92 bis
Faits prouvés autrement que par l'audition d'un témoin

A) La Chambre de première instance peut admettre, en tout ou en partie, les éléments de preuve présentés par un témoin sous la forme d'une déclaration écrite, en lieu et place d'un témoignage oral, et permettant de démontrer un point autre que les actes et le comportement de l'accusé tels qu'allégués dans l'acte d'accusation.

i) Parmi les facteurs justifiant le versement au dossier d'une déclaration écrite, on compte notamment les cas où lesdits éléments de preuve:

a) Sont cumulatifs, au sens où d'autres témoins déposeront ou ont déjà déposé oralement sur des faits similaires;

b) Se rapportent au contexte historique, politique ou militaire pertinent;

c) Consistent en une analyse générale ou statistique de la composition ethnique de la population dans les lieux mentionnés dans l'acte d'accusation;

d) Se rapportent à l'effet des crimes sur les victimes;

Article 100

Article 102
Statut du condamné

A) Sous réserve des décisions arrêtées par la Chambre de première instance conformément à l'article 101, la sentence est exécutoire dès son prononcé conformément au paragraphe B de l'article 100. Toutefois, dès le dépôt d'un acte d'appel, il est sursis à l'exécution de la sentence jusqu'au prononcé de la décision rendue sur l'appel, le condamné restant néanmoins détenu comme prévu à l'article 64.

B) Si, conformément à une décision antérieure de la Chambre de première instance, le condamné a été mis en liberté provisoire ou est laissé en liberté pour toute autre raison, et s'il n'est pas présent lors du prononcé du jugement, la Chambre émet un mandat d'arrêt à son encontre. La Chambre peut ordonner dans l'intervalle les mesures conservatoires qu'elle juge appropriées pour la préservation et la protection du bien ou du produit de son aliénation.

B) La décision de restitution s'étend au bien ou au produit de l'aliénation du bien lors même qu'il se trouve entre les mains de tiers n'ayant aucun rapport avec le crime dont l'accusé a été reconnu coupable.

C) Les tiers sont cités à comparaître devant la Chambre de première instance et ont la possibilité de justifier leur possession du bien ou du produit de son aliénation.

E) Si la Chambre de première instance ne peut pas déterminer qui est le propriétaire légitime du bien, elle en informe les autorités nationales compétentes et leur demande de le déterminer.

F) Après notification par les autorités nationales qu'elles ont procédé à cette détermination, la Chambre de première instance ordonne la restitution du bien ou du produit de son aliénation, selon le cas, ou prend toute autre mesure qu'elle juge appropriée.

Le Président de la Chambre d'appel, en consultation avec le Président du Tribunal, émet des directives pratiques traitant d'aspects particuliers de la conduite des affaires dont la Chambre d'appel est saisie.

Acte d'appel

Une partie qui entend interjeter appel d'un jugement ou d'une sentence doit, dans les trente jours de son prononcé, déposer un acte d'appel exposant ses moyens d'appel. L'appelant précise également l'ordonnance ou la décision attaquée, la date de son dépôt et/ou la page du compte rendu d'audience, la nature des erreurs relevées et la mesure sollicitée. D) Le juge de la mise en état en appel peut, si nécessaire, dans l'exercice de ses fonctions, entendre d'office les parties. Le Juge de la mise en état en appel peut entendre les parties dans son bureau hors la présence de la personne condamnée ou acquittée, auquel cas un représentant du Greffe dresse un procès-verbal de la réunion.

E) Une requête présentée au cours de la mise en état en appel doit être tranchée avant l'audience, sauf si le juge de la mise en état en appel, pour des motifs valables, ordonne qu'elle soit déférée pour être tranchée par la Chambre d'appel. Le fait pour une partie de ne pas soulever d'objections ou de présenter des requêtes qui peuvent l'être avant l'audience vaut renonciation; le juge de la mise en état en appel peut néanmoins, pour des raisons valables, lever cette renonciation.

F) Le juge de la mise en état en appel tient la Chambre d'appel régulièrement informée, notamment en cas de litiges, et peut lui renvoyer ces derniers.

G) Sur le rapport du juge de la mise en état en appel, la Chambre d'appel décide, le cas échéant, des sanctions appropriées à imposer à la partie qui ne respecte pas ses obligations au titre de la présente Section du Règlement.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal," respectively) is seized of appeals by Samuel Imanishimwe ("Imanishimwe") and by the Prosecution, against the Judgement rendered by Trial Chamber III in the case of The Prosecutor v. André Ntagerura, Emmanuel Bagambiki and Samuel Imanishimwe on 25 February 2004 (the "Trial Judgement").

A. ANDRÉ NTAGERURA, EMMANUEL BAGAMBIKI AND SAMUEL IMANISHIMWE

2. André Ntagerura ("Ntagerura") was born on 2 January 1950 in Cyangugu préfecture, Rwanda. From March 1981 through July 1994 Ntagerura served as a minister in the Rwandan Government, his last appointment being Minister of Transport and Communications in the Interim Government.[1]

3. Emmanuel Bagambiki ("Bagambiki") was born on 8 March 1948 in Cyangugu préfecture, Rwanda. From 4 July 1992 to 17 July 1994, Bagambiki served as the prefect of Cyangugu.[2]

4. Samuel Imanishimwe ("Imanishimwe") was born on 25 October 1961 in Gisenyi préfecture, Rwanda. Imanishimwe, a lieutenant in the Rwandan Armed Forces, served as the acting commander of the Cyangugu military camp, which is also referred to as the Karambo military camp, from October 1993 until he left Rwanda in July 1994.[3]

B. THE TRIAL JUDGEMENT

5. The trial was based on two separate indictments. The first indictment, filed on 9 August 1996 and amended on 29 January 1998, charged Ntagerura with genocide, conspiracy to commit genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, serious violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II and two counts of complicity in genocide, both as an individual pursuant to Article 6 (1) and as a superior under Article 6 (3) of the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute"). Another indictment, filed on 9 October 1997 and amended on 10 August 1999, charged Bagambiki and Imanishimwe with genocide, complicity in genocide, conspiracy to commit genocide, murder, extermination and imprisonment as crimes against humanity and serious violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II. Imanishimwe was, in addition, charged with torture as a crime against humanity.

6. The trial of Ntagerura, Bagambiki and Imanishimwe was based on the following facts:

On the evening of 6 April 1994, after receiving notification of President Habyarimana's death, Imanishiwme addressed the soldiers of the Karambo military camp and immediately placed his camp on alert.[4]

On 7 April, refugees began to arrive at the parishes of Shangi and Mibilizi.[5]

On 8 April, predominantly Tutsi refugees fleeing the violence in their neighbourhoods began gathering at Cyangugu Cathedral and eventually numbered 5,000. The prefectural authorities provided at least two to four gendarmes to protect the refugees at the cathedral.[6] On the same day, Bagambiki sent gendarmes to guard Shangi Parish at the request of parish authorities.[7] Still on the same day, Hutu assailants began attacking Tutsi homes in Gisuma commune and, after several days of clashes, a number of refugees gathered at the Gashirabwoba football field.[8]

Between 9 and 11 April 1994, four gendarmes were posted at Mibilizi Parish.[9]

On 10 April, daily attacks began at Shangi Parish. The sub-prefect went to the the parish to examine the situation.[10]

On 11 April, a group of Interahamwe came to the cathedral shooting into the air, creating disorder and panic among the refugees. Bagambiki came to the cathedral after this attack to speak briefly to the refugees.[11] On the same day, soldiers arrested seven refugees in the vicinity of the cathedral and took them to the Karambo military camp, where they were maltreated in Imanishimwe's presence.[12] Some other refugees who had been arrested were returned to the cathedral after Witness LY asked Bagambiki to intervene.[13] Still on the same day, the gendarmes posted at the cathedral deterred two attacks on the refugees gathered there.[14]

By 11 April 1994, about 500 refugees had gathered at the Gashirabwoba football field. On the morning of this day, they repulsed an attack. During the afternoon, Bagambiki and Imanishimwe arrived at the football field and took away Côme Simugomwa, the local head of the PL party. After the genocide, Côme Simugomwa's body was found by a river in Karengera commune. In the evening, soldiers arrived at the football field.[15]

On 11 and 12 April, local Interahamwe attacked Mibilizi Parish, but the refugees warded off the attacks.[16]

On 11 April, a delegation including a sub-prefect visited Nyamasheke Parish, where a number of Tutsi had sought refuge.[17] On the same day, soldiers killed a number of civilians detained at the Karambo military camp.[18]

On 12 April, Sub-Prefect Munyangabe delivered medicine to Shangi Parish.[19] On the same day, the refugee population at the Gashirabwoba football field had swelled to nearly 3,000. That morning, thousands of assailants began attacking the refugees at the football field. Bagambiki and Nsabimana, the director of the Shagasha tea factory, came to the football field and Bagambiki promised to send soldiers to protect the refugees. An hour later, armed factory guards and soldiers arrived at the football field and started firing and throwing grenades at the refugees. Interahamwe then killed the survivors and looted their personal possessions.[20]

On the same day, Interahamwe attacked Nyamasheke Parish. No one was killed during that attack. The next day, the assailants returned and engaged in a similar attack. During the attack, a gendarme fired and killed three Interahamwe, ending the attack. After Bagambiki had been informed about the attack, he went to Nyamasheke Parish to intervene.[21]

On 13 April 1994, the préfecture made available gendarmes and a vehicle to take a shipment of food to Shangi Parish. Either on the same day or on the next day, there was a massive assault on the parish, which by one estimate resulted in the death of 800 refugees.[22]

Either on the same day or the next day, Bagambiki prevented an attack against the refugees at Cyangugu Cathedral when he personally stopped an armed crowd of assailants heading to the cathedral. On 14 April, the church authorities convened a meeting with Bagambiki and Imanishimwe because the church authorities felt that they could no longer ensure the refugees' safety. Bagambiki determined that the refugees should be transferred to Kamarampaka Stadium.[23] On the same day, a number of refugees tried to seek refuge at Kamarampaka Stadium, but were stopped by soldiers. Some of the soldiers then fetched Bagambiki, who briefly addressed the refugees. After he left the refugees, Interahamwe emerged from the bush and killed some of them.[24]

On 14 April, Bagambiki and others went to Mibilizi Parish to discuss the situation with delegations of local Interahamwe and refugees.[25]

On 15 April 1994, refugees from Cyangugu cathedral were transferred to the Kamarampaka Stadium. Bagambiki and the bishop accompanied the procession of refugees that was protected by gendarmes.[26] The refugees joined between 50 and 100 refugees who had been at the stadium since 9 April 1994. A number of other refugees from various locations throughout the préfecture arrived later.[27] The refugees at the stadium were guarded by gendarmes.[28]

On the same day, there was another clash between the refugees and the local attackers at Mibilizi Parish.[29] Also at Nyamasheke Parish, assailants launched a massive assault against the parish, killing most of the refugees there.[30]

On 16 April, Bagambiki and Imanishimwe received a list of names of people with suspected ties to RPF from assailants who were threatening to attack Kamarampaka Stadium.[31] Bagambiki and Imanishimwe then searched for and took away 17 refugees from the Cyangugu Cathedral and Kamarampaka Stadium. Bagambiki addressed the refugees at the stadium, stating that the authorities were going to remove and question the 17 refugees in order to ensure the safety of the other refugees. Out of the 17 refugees, 16 were killed that evening or during the following night.[32]

On the same day, Nyamasheke Parish was attacked again. Most of the refugees who had survived the attack of 15 April were killed. After the attack, Bagambiki suspended Bourgmestre Kamana because of his involvement in the attack.[33]

On 18 April, Miblizi Parish suffered several attacks. Sub-Prefect Munyangabe was sent there and tried to negotiate with the assailants. He did not succeed in preventing a massive assault in which the assailants killed many refugees.[34] On 20 April, the assailants returned to the parish, removed between 60 and 100 refugees and killed them.[35]

On 26 April, Bagambiki was informed about an imminent massive attack against the refugees at Shangi Parish. At Bagambiki's insistence, Munyangabe went to the parish to try to prevent the attack. Munyangabe negotiated with the attackers and agreed that he would remove about 40 refugees from the parish if the assailants agreed not to attack the remaining refugees there. The selected refugees were taken to the Kamarampaka Stadium. On the way, they were attacked and mistreated, and one of them was killed. The others finally arrived at the stadium.[36]

Around 27 April, a number of refugees were selected and removed from the Kamarampaka Stadium. One of them was killed, while the fate of the others was unknown.[37]

On 28 or 29 April, a massive attack was launched on Shangi Parish, killing most of the refugees there.[38]

On 30 April, gendarmes tried in vain to prevent an attack on Mibilizi Parish. Between 60 and 80 refugees were killed.[39]

In May, the prefectural authorities transferred the refugees from Kamarampaka Stadium to a new camp at Nyarushishi, where the conditions were better. The camp was guarded by gendarmes, who pushed back at least one attempted attack between 11 May 1994 and the arrival of the French Opération Turquoise forces on 23 June 1994.[40] The surviving refugees from Shangi and Mibilizi Parishes were also transferred to this camp.[41]

On 6 June 1994 in Kamembe city, soldiers arrested approximately 300 people in the presence of Bagambiki and Imanishimwe. Some of the arrested persons were killed on Imanshimwe's orders.

Subsequently, a number of detainees were held at the Karambo military camp, where they were questioned and mistreated in Imanishimwe's presence.[42]

7. The Trial Chamber acquitted Ntagerura and Bagambiki on all the counts in the Indictment.[43] Pursuant to Article 98 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal (the "Rules"), the Trial Chamber had already acquitted Imanishimwe of conspiracy to commit genocide during the trial.[44] In the Trial Judgement, Imanishimwe was by majority found guilty of genocide (Count 7), extermination as a crime against humanity (Count 10) and serious violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 13) under Article 6 (3) of the Statute.[45] The Trial Chamber unanimously found him not guilty of complicity in genocide, but guilty of murder (Count 9), imprisonment (Count 11), and torture (Count 12) as crimes against humanity and serious violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 13) under Article 6 (1) of the Statute. Having convicted Imanishimwe on Counts 7 and 10, the Chamber sentenced him to two terms of 15 years' imprisonment, to be served concurrently.[46] For the convictions under Counts 9, 11, 12 and 13 the Trial Chamber imposed sentences of 10, 3, 10 and 12 years' imprisonment respectively, to be served concurrently.[47] The Trial Chamber found that the concurrent sentences for Counts 9, 11, 12, and 13 should be served consecutively to the concurrent sentences for Counts 7 and 10. Accordingly, Imanishimwe's total sentence was 27 years' imprisonment.[48]

C. THE APPEALS

8. The Prosecution raises 11 grounds of appeal, two of which relate exclusively to Imanishimwe. In the other nine grounds of appeal, the Prosecution objects to the Trial Chamber's conclusions on the form of the Indictments. In addition, the Prosecution avers that the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence was erroneous and that Bagambiki should have been held criminally responsible for several crimes that the Trial Chamber found established. The Prosecution further submits that Imanishimwe should have been held criminally responsible under Article 6 (1) for the crimes committed at the Gashirabwoba football field, and that the sentence imposed by the Trial Chamber was too lenient.

9. Imanishimwe has lodged six grounds of appeal. They relate to defects in the form of the Indictment, his conviction under Article 6 (3) of the Statute for the Gashirabwoba events, multiple convictions, the application of Article 4 of the Statute, evidentiary matters and sentencing.

10. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it unanimously dismissed the grounds of appeal raised by the Prosecutor in respect of André Ntagerura and Emmanuel Bagambiki and affirmed their acquittal in the disposition of the Judgement concerning the Prosecutor's appeal against the acquittal of André Ntagerura and Emmanuel Bagambiki, delivered at the close of the hearings on 8 February 2006. The present Judgement now sets on the reasons for the decision and rubs on the grounds of appeal raised by the Prosecutor in relation to Imanishimwe and Imanishimwe's appeal.

D. STANDARDS FOR APPELLATE REVIEW

11. The Appeals Chamber recalls the standards for appellate review pursuant to Article 24 of the Statute, as summarised in the Kamuhanda Appeal Judgement.[49] Article 24 addresses errors of law which invalidate the decision and errors of fact which occasion a miscarriage of justice. A party alleging an error of law must advance arguments in support of the submission and explain how the error invalidates the decision. However, even if the appellant's arguments do not support the contention, the Appeals Chamber may step in and, for other reasons, find in favour of the contention that there is an error of law.[50]

12. As regards errors of fact, it is well established that the Appeals Chamber will not lightly overturn findings of fact made by a Trial Chamber. Where an erroneous finding of fact is alleged, the Appeals Chamber will give deference to the Trial Chamber that received the evidence at trial, as it is best placed to assess the evidence, including the demeanour of witnesses. The Appeals Chamber will only interfere in those findings where no reasonable trier of fact could have reached the same finding or where the finding is wholly erroneous. Furthermore, an erroneous finding of fact will be quashed or revised only if the error occasioned a miscarriage of justice.[51]

13. Arguments of a party which do not have the potential to cause the impugned decision to be reversed or revised may be immediately dismissed by the Appeals Chamber and need not be considered on the merits.[52] The appealing party must provide precise references to relevant transcript pages or paragraphs in the Judgement to which the challenge is being made.[53] Further, "the Appeals Chamber cannot be expected to consider a party's submissions in detail if they are obscure, contradictory, vague or suffer from other formal and obvious insufficiencies".[54]

14. Finally, it should be recalled that the Appeals Chamber has inherent discretion in selecting which submissions merit a detailed reasoned opinion in writing.[55] The Appeals Chamber will dismiss arguments which are evidently unfounded without providing detailed reasoning.[56]

II. GROUNDS OF APPEAL RELATED TO THE INDICTMENT

A. INTRODUCTION

15. The Prosecution submits under its third ground of appeal that the Trial Chamber erred in law in finding that joint criminal enterprise was not pleaded in the Ntagerura Indictment and the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment (the "Indictments") and, as a result, in refusing to allow the Prosecution to rely on this mode of liability as the basis for the individual criminal responsibility of the Accused.[57] Under its fourth ground of appeal, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in (1) refusing to consider whether the Pre-Trial Brief and other disclosures cured any defects in the Indictments;[58] (2) making a post-trial finding that the Indictments were defective, despite its earlier finding that they were not defective;[59] (3) failing to read the Indictments as a consolidated whole, despite their joinder;[60] and (4) reading the paragraphs of the Indictment in isolation to one another, rather than considering them in the context of the counts of the Indictment.[61]

16. Imanishimwe submits under his first ground of appeal that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him for the events at Gashirabwoba football field, which events, he argues, were not pleaded in the Indictment against him.[62]

17. Before examining in detail the grounds of appeal related to the Indictment, the Appeals Chamber wishes to briefly recall the main procedural developments during the pre-trial phase. At the pre-trial stage, the Trial Chamber ruled on a preliminary motion by Imanishimwe, ordering the Prosecution to clarify paragraph 3.14 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Initial Indictment.[63] The amended paragraph 3.14, together with the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Initial Indictment, contained the final version of the charges against Imanishimwe and Bagambiki ("Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment").[64]

18. Upon a preliminary motion by Ntagerura, the Trial Chamber ordered the Prosecution to specify several parts of the Ntagerura Initial Indictment.[65] The amended Indictment contained the final version of the charges against Ntagerura ("Ntagerura Indictment").[66]

19. On 11 October 1999, the Trial Chamber, pursuant to Rule 48, granted the Prosecution's motion for joinder of Ntagerura with Bagambiki and Imanishimwe.[67]

20. The Appeals Chamber will now outline the law governing the form of an indictment.

B. THE LAW APPLICABLE TO INDICTMENTS

21. The jurisprudence of this Tribunal and the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia ("ICTY") on the law applicable to indictments is well established and consistent. Both Tribunals have held that Articles 17 (4), 20 (2), 20 (4) (a) and 20 (4) (b) of the Statute and Rule 47 (C) of the Rules place a clear obligation on the Prosecution to state the material facts underpinning the charges in the indictment, but not the evidence by which such facts are to be proven.[68]

22. If an accused is not properly notified of the material facts of his alleged criminal activity until the Prosecution files its Pre-Trial Brief or until the trial itself, it will be difficult for his Defence to conduct a meaningful investigation prior to the commencement of the trial.[69] The question of whether an indictment is pleaded with sufficient particularity is therefore dependent upon whether it sets out the material facts of the Prosecution case with enough detail to inform an accused clearly of the charges against him so that he may prepare his defence.[70] An indictment which fails to plead material facts in sufficient detail is defective.[71]

23. Whether particular facts are "material" depends on the nature of the Prosecution case. The Prosecution's characterization of the alleged criminal conduct and the proximity of the accused to the underlying crime are decisive factors in determining the degree of specificity with which the Prosecution must plead the material facts of its case in the indictment in order to provide the accused with adequate notice.[72] For example, where the Prosecution alleges that an accused personally committed the criminal acts in question, it must plead the identity of the victim, the place and approximate date of the alleged criminal acts, and the means by which they were committed "with the greatest precision".[73] However, less detail may be acceptable if the "sheer scale of the alleged crimes makes it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity in such matters as the identity of the victims and the dates for the commission of the crimes".[74]

24. Where the Prosecution relies on a theory of joint criminal enterprise, the Prosecution must specifically plead this mode of responsibility in the indictment; failure to do so will result in a defective indictment.[75] Although joint criminal enterprise is a means of "committing", it is insufficient for an indictment to merely make broad reference to Article 6 (1) of the Statute.[76] The Prosecution must also plead the purpose of the enterprise, the identity of the participants, the nature of the accused's participation in the enterprise and the period of the enterprise.[77] In order for an accused charged with joint criminal enterprise to fully understand which acts he is allegedly responsible for, the indictment should clearly indicate which form of joint criminal enterprise is being alleged.[78]

25. Where it is alleged that the accused planned, instigated, ordered, or aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of the alleged crimes, the Prosecution is required to identify the "particular acts" or "the particular course of conduct" on the part of the accused which forms the basis for the charges in question.[79]

The Appeals Chamber recalls that the situation is different, however, when the Prosecution seeks to prove that the accused personally killed or harmed a particular individual. […] [T]he Prosecution cannot simultaneously argue that the accused killed a named individual yet claim that the 'sheer scale' of the crime made it impossible to identify that individual in the Indictment. Quite the contrary: the Prosecution's obligation to provide particulars in the indictment is at its highest when it seeks to prove that the accused killed or harmed a specific individual": Ntakirutimana Appeal Judgement, paras. 73-74.

26. In relation to an allegation of superior responsibility under Article 6 (3) of the Statute, the material facts which must be pleaded in the indictment are: (1) that the accused is the superior of certain persons sufficiently identified, over whom he had effective control – in the sense of a material ability to prevent or punish criminal conduct – and for whose acts he is alleged to be responsible;[80] (2) the criminal acts of such persons, for which he is alleged to be responsible;[81] (3) the conduct of the accused by which he may be found to have known or had reason to know that the crimes were about to be committed or had been committed by his subordinates;[82] and (4) the conduct of the accused by which he may be found to have failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the persons who committed them.[83]

27. An indictment may also be defective when the material facts are pleaded without sufficient specificity, for example, when the times mentioned refer to broad date ranges, the places are only vaguely indicated, and the victims are only generally identified.[84] It is of course possible that material facts are not pleaded with the requisite degree of specificity in an indictment because the necessary information was not in the Prosecution's possession. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber emphasises that the Prosecution is expected to know its case before proceeding to trial and may not rely on the weaknesses of its own investigation in order to mould the case against the accused in the course of the trial depending on how the evidence unfolds.[85] Other defects in an indictment may arise at a later stage of the proceedings because the evidence turns out differently than expected. In such circumstances, the Trial Chamber must consider whether a fair trial requires an amendment of the indictment, an adjournment, or the exclusion of evidence outside the scope of the indictment.[86]

28. In reaching its judgement, a Trial Chamber can only convict the accused of crimes which are charged in the indictment.[87] If the indictment is found to be defective because of vagueness or ambiguity, then the Trial Chamber must consider whether the accused was nevertheless accorded a fair trial, or, in other words, whether the defect caused any prejudice to the Defence.[88] In some instances, a defective indictment may be deemed "cured" and a conviction entered if the Prosecution provides the accused with timely, clear and consistent information from the Prosecution detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her.[89] Where the failure to give sufficient notice of the legal and factual reasons for the charges against the accused has violated the right to a fair trial, no conviction may result.[90]

29. When challenges to an indictment are raised on appeal, amendment of the indictment is no longer possible and so the question is whether the error of trying the accused on a defective indictment

"invalidat[ed] the decision" and warrants the Appeals Chamber's intervention.[91] In making this determination, the Appeals Chamber does not exclude the possibility that, in some instances, the prejudicial effect of a defective indictment can be "remedied" if the Prosecution has provided the accused with clear, timely and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her,[92] which compensates for the failure of the indictment to give proper notice of the charges.[93]

30. The questions whether the Prosecution has cured a defect in the indictment and whether the defect has caused any prejudice to the accused are both aimed at assessing whether the trial was rendered unfair.[94] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber reiterates that a vague or an ambiguous indictment, not cured by timely, clear and sufficient notice, constitutes a prejudice to the accused.[95] The defect may only be deemed harmless through demonstrating that the accused's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.[96]

31. When an appellant raises a defect in the indictment for the first time on appeal, then the appellant bears the burden of showing that his ability to prepare his defence was materially impaired.[97] Where, however, an accused had already raised the issue of lack of notice before the Trial Chamber, the burden rests on the Prosecution to demonstrate on appeal that the accused's ability to prepare a defence was not materially impaired.[98] All of this is subject to the inherent jurisdiction of the Appeals Chamber to do justice in the case.[99]

32. The Appeals Chamber emphasizes that the possibility to cure defects in the indictment is not unlimited. A clear distinction has to be drawn between vagueness in the indictment and an indictment omitting certain charges altogether. While it is possible to remedy the vagueness of an indictment by providing the defendant with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underminning the charges, omitted charges can be incorporated into the indictment only by a formal amendment pursuant to Rule 50 of the Rules.

C. Alleged Refusal of the Trial Chamber to Consider Joint Criminal Enterprise (Prosecution's 3rd Ground of Appeal)

33. At paragraph 34 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber held:

> If the Prosecutor intends to rely on the theory of joint criminal enterprise to hold the accused criminally responsible as a principal perpetrator of the underlying crimes rather than as an accomplice, the indictment should plead this in an unambiguous manner and specify upon which form of joint criminal enterprise the Prosecutor will rely. In addition to alleging that the accused participated in a joint criminal enterprise, the Prosecutor must also plead the purpose of the enterprise, the identity of the co-participants, and the nature of the accused's participation in the enterprise. For these reasons, the Chamber will not consider the Prosecutor's arguments, which were advanced for the first time during the presentation of closing arguments, to hold the accused criminally responsible based on this theory [footnotes omitted].

34. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in refusing to allow the Prosecution to rely on joint criminal enterprise as a basis for establishing the individual criminal responsibility of the Accused.[100] More specifically, the Prosecution alleges in its Notice of Appeal and Appeal Brief that the Trial Chamber erred in law in finding that the Prosecution had failed to plead joint criminal enterprise in the Indictments.[101] Relying on the jurisprudence of the Tribunal and the ICTY,[102] the Prosecution argues that it was not obliged to expressly plead joint criminal enterprise in the Indictments.[103] However, during the Appeal hearings, the Prosecution clarified that it had abandoned this argument in view of the recent decision issued by the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Kvočka et al.[104] The Prosecution acknowledges that the Indictments did not plead Joint Criminal Enterprise with sufficient specificity, but maintains nonetheless that the Indictments had been cured of this defect. The Prosecution argues, indeed, that the Accused were provided with clear and coherent information of the Prosecution's intention to invoke joint criminal enterprise as a theory of liability.[105]

35. Since the Prosecution has acknowledged that it did not specifically plead joint criminal enterprise in the Indictments, the Appeals Chamber will straightaway focus on the question whether the Accused were nevertheless provided with timely, clear and consistent notice by the Prosecution that this mode of responsibility was being alleged. The Appeals Chamber will limit its examination to the parts of the trial record relied upon by the Prosecution for its argument, namely the Decision on Joinder, the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, its Opening Statement and its Final Trial Brief.

36. In the first place, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber in its Decision on Joinder recognised that the Prosecution had given adequate notice of its intention to rely on the theory of joint criminal enterprise.[106] In this respect, the Prosecution also refers to its oral pleadings on joinder in August 1999 in which it argued that > "there was one genocide in Rwanda, one criminal enterprise, and all of [the Accused] were part of that enterprise and on that basis should be charged and tried in one single proceeding".[107]

37. Ntagerura and Bagambiki submit that the Decision on Joinder made no reference to the Prosecution's intention to rely on the theory of joint criminal enterprise.[108] Bagambiki argues that the Prosecutor's motion for joinder was not likely to inform the Accused of the Prosecution's intention since a motion for joint trials does not pursue the same objective as an indictment.[109]

38. The Decision on Joinder concerned the issue of whether the Accused were charged with crimes "committed in the course of the same transaction", which is a condition under Rule 48 of the While admitting that it did not explicitly plead joint criminal enterprise in the Indictments, the Prosecution argued that it provided adequate notice of its intention to rely on the theory of joint criminal enterprise, and that such information was conveyed to each of the Accused in the charges and facts alleged in the Indictments, in the evidence as set forth in the Prosecution's Pre-Trial Brief, in the Prosecution's Opening Statements, in the arguments presented in the Prosecution's Closing Brief, in the evidence presented at trial and also in the Trial Chamber's Decision to join the Indictments.

Rules for granting a joint trial. The term "transaction" is defined in Rule 2 of the Rules as "[a] number of acts or omissions whether occurring as one event or a number of events, at the same or different locations and being part of a common scheme, strategy or plan". The Trial Chamber's statements in the decision were squarely confined to the legal test set out in Rule 48.[110] As such, it would be incorrect to suggest that the Trial Chamber intended through these statements to recognise the Prosecution's intention to argue joint criminal enterprise as a mode of liability. Similarly, the Decision on Joinder did not serve to put the Accused on notice that that mode of liability was being alleged.

39. Furthermore, it is apparent from the Prosecution's oral arguments on the joinder motion that the said arguments were made in relation to the "same transaction" test, and not to clarify the modes of liability argued in the Indictments. In any event, the broad reference to "one genocide in Rwanda", coupled with the failure to specify the nature of the Accused's participation in such "criminal enterprise", did not provide the Accused with clear and consistent information which might have compensated for the ambiguity in the Indictments relating to joint criminal enterprise.

40. In the second place, the Prosecution submits that its Pre-Trial Brief put the Accused on notice that it would rely on joint criminal enterprise.[111] The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Prosecutor[112] that the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief contained factual allegations that the Accused participated in the recruiting, arming and training of the Interahamwe and that they planned the genocide in Cyangugu préfecture[113] The Accused were also alleged to have participated in meetings, to have been present together during massacres and to have played a part in relation to massacres.[114] However, it is the Appeals Chamber's opinion that the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, particularly in the parts relating to the individual criminal responsibility of the Accused,[115] makes no specific mention of a joint criminal enterprise, a common criminal plan or any other synonym of that mode of criminal liability. It was therefore not obvious that the aforementioned factual allegations were meant to underpin a charge of joint criminal enterprise.

41. The Prosecution further argues that

> "throughout the trial, [it] consistently pursued its theory of joint criminal enterprise against all three of the [Accused]".[116]

In support of this, the Prosecution refers to its Opening Statement, which states that the Accused "acted in concert for the realisation of a single and the same criminal enterprise",[117] and to its Final Trial Brief which mentions the common purpose doctrine – in other words, the joint criminal enterprise doctrine –in relation to Article 6 (1) of the Statute.[118] It further submits that, given that the Accused called 82 witnesses to controvert the Prosecution case, it is inappropriate for them to claim that the preparation of their defence was impaired.[119]

42. The Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's view,[120] the Prosecution did not mention joint criminal enterprise for the first time in its closing arguments. The Prosecution alluded to this mode of liability in its Opening Statement in the following terms:

> Whether they acted severally or jointly depending on the circumstances, André Ntagerura, Emmanuel Bagambiki and Samuel Imanishimwe acted in concert for the realisation of a single and the same criminal enterprise; namely, the elimination of the Tutsi ethnic group from the population map of Rwanda and particularly from the Préfecture of Cyangugu, and all of this in flagrant and deliberate violation of all the duties imposed on them by the laws of Rwanda. It thus appears that to achieve this goal, each of the Accused persons made his active, effective and crucial contribution, the contribution in terms of their intelligence, experience, professional skills, their authority or influence, each and every one of them in their specific roles, and all of them together in exemplary coordination and complementarity [sic]. By the same token, the Prosecutor will be presenting to you each of the Accused and their respective roles in the execution of the massacres in Cyangugu.[121]

43. Then, in its Final Trial Brief the Prosecution clarified its intention to rely upon the theory of joint criminal enterprise under the section on individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (1).[122]

44. The Appeals Chamber however recalls that if the material facts of an accused's alleged criminal activity are not disclosed to the Defence until the trial itself, it will be difficult for the Defence to conduct a meaningful investigation prior to the commencement of the trial.[123] In the present case, the Prosecution waited until the first day of trial, when it gave its Opening Statement, to allude to its intention of relying upon joint criminal enterprise. It then waited until it delivered its Final Trial Brief to develop its arguments on this mode of liability as it directly related to the Accused's individual criminal responsibility. In neither its Opening Statement nor its Final Trial Brief did the Prosecution specify which form of joint criminal enterprise it had relied upon. The Prosecution's argument that the Accused called 82 witnesses during trial[124] is not indicative of the Accused's ability to prepare their defence against the specific allegation of participation in a joint criminal enterprise. As a result, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Accused were not provided with timely, clear and consistent notice that their individual criminal responsibility would be invoked under the theory of joint criminal enterprise.

45. The Trial Chamber thus correctly declined to consider the criminal responsibility of the Accused under the theory of joint criminal enterprise. As a result, it is unnecessary for the Appeals Chamber to deal with the Prosecution's submission that the Accused

> "acted pursuant to a joint criminal enterprise and therefore should have been held individually criminally responsible under Article 6 (1) of the Statute".[125]

46. The Prosecution's third ground of appeal is therefore dismissed.

D. THE TRIAL CHAMBER FINDINGS ON THE INDICTMENTS (PROSECUTION'S 4TH GROUND OF APPEAL)

[125] Ibid., paras. 84-95.

47. Under its fourth ground of appeal, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber committed four errors of law, as follows: (1) refusing to consider whether the Prosecution's post-indictment submissions cured any defects in the Indictments;[126] (2) finding the Indictments defective after the conclusion of the trial, given that it had previously found that they were not defective;[127] (3) failing to read the Indictments as a whole, despite their having been joined;[128] and (4) reading the paragraphs of the Indictments in isolation from one another and without due regard for the counts charged.[129] The Prosecution contends that this ground of appeal impacts on all the verdicts returned in relation to the Accused.[130]

48. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber had, in its Judgement, found that some paragraphs of the two Indictments, namely paragraphs 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 11, 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 and 16 to 19 of the Ntagerura Indictment,[131] and paragraphs 3.12 to 3.28, 3.30 and 3.31 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment[132] were defective. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber nevertheless considered that it would make factual findings with respect to paragraphs 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 17, 18 and 19 of the Ntagerura Indictment and paragraphs 3.16 to 3.28, 3.30 and 3.31 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment.[133]

49. The Appeals Chamber considers that the issue of whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding the Indictments defective after the conclusion of the trial, despite its earlier conclusion that they were not, is a preliminary question.

1. Finding the Indictments defective after the conclusion of the trial

50. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in finding the Indictments defective after the close of the trial after having found in "an earlier decision" that the Indictments were not defective.[134] The Prosecution refers in this regard to the Separate and Concurring Opinion of Judge Williams to the Rule 98 bis Decision to emphasize that the Indictments were found to be adequate at both the confirmation and the preliminary objection stages.[135]

51. In its Decision on the form of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Initial Indictment, the Trial Chamber found that a link was established in paragraph 3.22 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Initial Indictment between the events alleged therein and Imanishimwe, through his authority over the gendarmes.[136] Paragraph 3.22 remained unaltered in the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment. However, in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber found that it failed to allege a connection between the principal perpetrators of the crimes and Bagambiki and Imanishimwe.[137]

52. The Trial Chamber also considered paragraph 3.14, which underpinned the charge of conspiracy (Count 19) and found that Imanishimwe participated in meetings. The Trial Chamber considered that paragraph 3.14 was vague and ordered the Prosecution to:

> clarify […] the meetings referred to in that paragraph, [specifically] the approximate dates, locations and the purpose of these meetings, so far as possible, and also clarify whether the accused persons and others named in the indictment were the only persons present at these meetings or if others, not named in the indictment, were present also.[138]

The Prosecution filed the amended paragraph 3.14 on 10 August 1999 which, together with the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Initial Indictment, contained the final version of the charges against Bagambiki and Imanishimwe.[139] In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber found that the amended paragraph 3.14 failed to:

> allege facts that would constitute material elements of the crime of conspiracy [and] also d[id] not particularise the nature of Bagambiki's and Imanishimwe's participation in the meetings.[140]

The question therefore is: Why did the Trial Chamber not direct the Prosecution to further clarify paragraph 3.14, particularly with respect to the material elements of the crime that paragraph 3.14 was to underpin?

53. In a preliminary motion, Ntagerura submitted that the Ntagerura Initial Indictment was too vague in certain respects.[141] Ruling on this preliminary motion in its Decision on the form of the Ntagerura Initial Indictment, the Trial Chamber ordered the Prosecution to specify certain allegations in the Indictment, for example, with respect to the time-frames in paragraphs 9 to 16 and dismissed Ntagerura's preliminary motion on all other points.[142] It subsequently confirmed that the amendments filed by the Prosecution complied with the said order.[143]

54. In the Trial Judgement, however, imprecise date ranges were enumerated as one of the defects in the Ntagerura Indictment.[144] Moreover, having dismissed Ntagerura's preliminary motion with regard to the lack of specificity concerning the locations and the description of the alleged events, his personal participation in the events, as well as the identity of his subordinates and his mens rea under Article 6 (3) of the Statute, the Trial Chamber nevertheless found in the Trial Judgement that the Ntagerura Indictment was defective in these respects.[145]

55. It is apparent from the foregoing that the Trial Chamber reconsidered in the Trial Judgement some of the findings it had made in certain pre-trial decisions on the form of the Indictments. This does not in itself constitute an error, as it is within the discretion of a Trial Chamber to reconsider a decision it has previously made[146] if a clear error of reasoning has been demonstrated or if it is necessary to do so to prevent an injustice.[147] However, the Appeals Chamber emphasises that "where such a decision is changed, there will be a need in every case for the Trial Chamber to consider with great care and to deal with the consequences of the change upon the proceedings which have in the meantime been conducted in accordance with the original decision".[148] In the present case, the Appeals Chamber considers that, once the Trial Chamber decided to reconsider its pre-trial decisions relating to the specificity of the Indictments at the stage of deliberations, it should have interrupted the deliberation process and reopened the hearings. At such an advanced stage of the proceedings, after all the evidence had been heard and the parties had made their final submissions, the Prosecution could not move to amend the Indictment. On the other hand, reopening the hearings would have allowed the Prosecution to try to convince the Trial Chamber of the correctness of its initial pre-trial decisions on the form of the Indictment, or to argue that any defects had since been remedied. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in remaining silent on its decision to find the abovementioned parts of the Indictments defective until the rendering of the Trial Judgement.

56. The question of whether this error invalidated the decision will be examined below, in the light of the Appeals Chamber's conclusions as to the other errors alleged by the Prosecution under this ground of appeal. The Appeals Chamber will first address the question of whether the two Indictments should have been read together.

2. Alleged failure to read the Indictments together as a whole

57. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in not reading the two Indictments together because, as per the Decision on Joinder, the Indictments "became, in law, a single Indictment".[149] It further submits that the Trial Chamber in that Decision "expressly accepted arguments in support of reading the two Indictments as one document".[150] The Prosecution generally contends that each Indictment supported the other in relation to the charges of conspiracy to commit genocide, but restricts its detailed arguments to the Trial Chamber's findings on the Ntagerura Indictment.[151]

58. Imanishimwe responds that the fact that the trials of the Accused were joined did not also cause the charges against them to be joined.[152] Bagambiki for his part responds that the Trial Chamber did not recognise in its Decision on Joinder that the charges in any one of the Indictments could be brought against any one of the Accused, nor did it modify any of the references to the factual allegations underpinning the charges in the Indictments.[153] He argues that it would run contrary to the right of the accused to be informed of the charges brought against him for a Trial Chamber to consider factual allegations in an indictment other than his own.[154] Ntagerura responds that the Trial Chamber and the accused should not have to turn to a second indictment to understand the allegations made in the first indictment.[155]

[150] Ibid., para. 173, citing Decision on Joinder para. 30, where the Trial Chamber cited the Separate and Concurring Opinion of Judge Tieya and Judge Nieto-Navia in the Kanyabashi case: "permission for joint charging under [Rule 48] does not necessarily require the bringing of a new, substitute indictment in lieu of the existing ones because by adding names to one of the existing indictments which concern the same facts or transactions, the case may become a joint trial of several accused on different charges found in one single indictment, subject to, of course, any request for amendment": The Prosecutor v. Kanyabashi, Case N°ICTR-96-15-A, Decision on the Defence Motion for Interlocutory Appeal on the Jurisdictions of Trial Chamber I, 3 June 1999, Separate and Concurring Opinion of Judge Wang Tieya and Judge Nieto-Navia, para. 6.
[151] It argues in this regard that the following paragraphs should have been read together: (i) paragraph 13 of the Ntagerura Indictment with paragraph 3.16 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment; (ii) paragraph 16 of the Ntagerura Indictment with paragraph 3.29 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment; and (iii) paragraphs 17, 18 and 19 of the Ntagerura Indictment with paragraphs 3.16 and 3.23 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment: Prosecution Appeal Brief, paras. 176-178.

[154] Ibid. Response Brief, para. 160.
[155] Ntagerura Response Brief, para. 115.

59. The Prosecution replies that its object is not to "confuse the charges against accused A with those against accused B", but to point to the error committed by the Trial Chamber in disregarding the particulars relating to the charges against Accused A when they appear in the indictment against Accused B.[156]

60. The Appeals Chamber notes that in the Indictments, the Prosecution informed the Accused of the factual allegations which underpinned the charges by listing the relevant paragraphs in the Indictments which corresponded to each Count. However, the Prosecution did not, in this way, cross-reference between the Indictments. Therefore, the factual allegations made in each of the Indictments remained inherently linked to the charges in the respective Indictments. The mere fact that the Accused were joined "for the purposes of a joint trial"[157] (as opposed to having their charges joined) did not serve to notify the Accused that the factual allegations underpinning the charges in one Indictment would also underpin the charges in the other Indictment. Therefore, although Ntagerura was mentioned in the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment, the Appeals Chamber cannot conclude that he was put on notice that the allegations in that Indictment would underpin the charges in the Indictment against him.

61. The Prosecution further argues that reading the Indictments separately with regard to the factual allegations "negates the rationale for creating the joinder in the first place".[158] This argument cannot prosper. It is not self-evident that distinct indictments should be read together as a whole, in case of a joinder. In joint trials, each accused shall be accorded the same rights as if he were being tried separately.[159] The Prosecution thus remains under an obligation to plead, in each indictment brought, the material facts underpinning the charges against each accused.[160] The Prosecution's argument that the Indictment "became, in law, a single indictment" is dismissed. It was up to the Prosecutor to submit a new, joint and single Indictment against the three Accused.

62. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution's argument that the Indictments should have been read together as a whole is without merit. Insofar as the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber did not err by refusing to read the Indictments together, it is not necessary to examine the effect that a combined reading of the two Indictments might have had.

63. Turning to the Prosecution's other grounds of appeal, the Appeals Chamber concedes that it would be logical to now consider whether the Trial Chamber erred in determining that the Indictments were defective. To avoid a double analysis of each contested paragraph – to see whether it was defective and, if it was defective, whether the defect was cured – the Appeals Chamber will first examine whether the Trial Chamber erred in not considering whether the defects identified in the Indictments were cured.[161] Only after this analysis will the Appeals Chamber proceed to examine each Indictment paragraph by paragraph.

3. Curing of defects in the Indictments

(a) Did the Trial Chamber err in not considering whether the defects had been cured?

64. The Trial Chamber concluded that

> "the operative paragraphs underpinning the charges against Ntagerura, Bagambiki and Imanishimwe, as well as the charges themselves, [were] unacceptably vague".

Moreover, the Chamber finds no justifiable reason for the Prosecutor to have pleaded the allegations or charges in such a generic manner.[162] The Trial Chamber took note of the ICTY Appeal Judgement in Kupreskic et al. and the possibility that, in a limited number of cases, a defective indictment may be cured of its defects.[163] The Trial Chamber went on to note that:

> the supporting materials to the Ntagerura and to the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictments, other pre-trial disclosure, and the Pre-Trial Brief provide additional information concerning the possible evidence to be introduced at trial and the theory of the Prosecution's case. However, pre-trial submissions and disclosure are not adequate substitutes for a properly pleaded indictment, which is the only accusatory instrument mentioned in the Statute and the Rules. The indictment must plead all material facts. The Trial Chamber and the accused should not be required to sift through voluminous disclosures, witness statements, and written or oral submissions in order to determine what facts may form the basis of the accused's alleged crimes, in particular, because some of this material is not made available until the eve of trial.[164]

65. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it is well established in the jurisprudence of both this Tribunal and the ICTY that, in a limited number of cases, a defective indictment can be cured if the Prosecution provides the accused with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her.[165] In the present case, it is apparent from the Trial Judgement that the Trial Chamber did not consider whether the defects in the Indictments were cured. The Appeals Chamber recalls that, if an indictment is found to be defective because of vagueness or ambiguity, then the Trial Chamber must determine whether the accused has nevertheless been accorded a fair trial.[166] In view of the Trial Chamber's statement that some of Prosecution's post-indictment submissions

> "provide[d] additional information concerning the possible evidence to be introduced at trial and the theory of the Prosecution's case",[167]

the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber, in fulfilling its obligation to consider whether or not the trial was fair, should have evaluated whether the defects were cured. The Trial Chamber erred in failing to do so. As a result, where applicable, the Appeals Chamber will consider the Prosecution's argument that the defects in the Indictments were cured.

(b) The "Strong Evidence Passage" in the Kupreskic et al. Appeal Judgement

66. After having concluded that the Indictments were defective and declining to consider whether the defects were cured, the Trial Chamber held that:

> "in Kupreskic the Appeals Chamber intimated that it "might understandably be reluctant to allow a defect in the form of the indictment to determine finally the outcome of a case in which there is strong evidence pointing towards the guilt of the accused." The Chamber will thus consider the Prosecutor's evidence against Ntagerura, Bagambiki, and Imanishimwe to see if such strong evidence exists. "[168]

[162] Trial Judgement, para. 64. The Trial Chamber noted that paragraphs 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 11, 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3, 16, 17, 18 and 19 of the Ntagerura Indictment and paragraphs 3.12-3.28, 3.30 and 3.31 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment were defective in one way or the other.

[166] Kvocka et al., Appeal Judgement, para. 33.
[167] Trial Judgement, para. 66.
[168] Ibid., para. 68.

67. The Appeals Chamber considers that the statement made by the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Kupreskic et al. that > "it might understandably be reluctant to allow a defect in the form of the indictment to determine finally the outcome of a case in which there is strong evidence pointing towards the guilt of the accused" does not permit a Trial Chamber to consider material facts of which the accused was not adequately put on notice. The "strong evidence passage" arose in relation to whether, having upheld the appellants' objections that the indictment was too vague, the appropriate remedy on appeal was to remand the matter for retrial.[169] This question does not arise at trial. The Appeals Chamber emphasises that if the indictment is found to be defective at trial, then the Trial Chamber must consider whether the accused was nevertheless accorded a fair trial. No conviction may be pronounced where the accused's right to a fair trial has been violated because of a failure to provide him with sufficient notice of the legal and factual grounds underpinning the charges against him.[170]

4. Reading the paragraphs of the Indictments in isolation from one another and conclusions of the Trial Chamber on the defects affecting certain paragraphs of the Indictments

68. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in reading the paragraphs of each Indictment in isolation from one another mainly relates to the Trial Chamber's finding that several paragraphs of the Indictments failed to describe the criminal conduct of the Accused that was being alleged.[171] With respect to the Trial Chamber's finding that the dates, venues and circumstances of the alleged events were insufficiently pleaded in the Indictments, the Prosecution argues that its post-indictment submissions cured any defects in the Indictments.[172] In order to simplify the analysis, the Appeal Chamber will examine these two arguments together.

69. The Appeals Chamber notes that despite having found defects in some paragraphs of the Indictments, the Trial Chamber continued to make factual findings on the basis of such paragraphs.[173] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber's conclusions on the validity of the Indictments did not have any impact on its final judgement as regards a certain number of allegations. Rather than having been rejected for reasons relating to the form of the Indictments, these allegations were rejected because the Trial Chamber considered them to be unfounded. Although the Prosecution submits that it is not satisfied with the findings the Trial Chamber made in relation to these paragraphs, it does not develop this point. Given that the arguments raised by the Prosecution under its fourth ground of appeal relating to those paragraphs on which the Trial Chamber made factual findings cannot succeed, the Appeals Chamber will limit its discussion to the consideration of Prosecution arguments relating to the paragraphs on which the Trial Chamber did not make any factual findings. These are paragraphs 11, 12.1, 13 and 16 of the Ntagerura Indictment and paragraphs 3.12 through 3.15 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment. The Appeals Chamber will also examine paragraph 3.28 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment which was only partly discussed.

(a) Ntagerura Indictment

70. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber made factual findings in relation to paragraphs 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 and 19 of the Ntagerura Indictment, and will, accordingly, examine only the alleged errors with regard to paragraphs 11, 12.1, 13 and 16.

(i) Paragraph 11

71. Paragraph 11 of the Ntagerura Indictment reads:

> From 1 January to 31 July 1994 and particularly in February, March and April 1994, André Ntagerura allowed and/or authorized the use of government vehicles, specifically buses for the transport of militiamen, armed Interahamwe militiamen and civilians, including Tutsis, as well as for the transport of weapons and ammunition to and throughout Cyangugu préfecture, particularly through Karengera, Bugarama, Nyakabuye and other communes as well as in Butare, Ruhengeri and Kibuye préfectures and elsewhere.

72. The Trial Chamber found that this paragraph failed to allege any instance when Ntagerura allowed or authorised the use of government vehicles or any circumstance in which they were used. It further held that, because the paragraph did not set out the intended purpose of the transports or Ntagerura's knowledge of such a purpose, it failed to allege the elements of a criminal act. The Prosecution particularly sought to use this paragraph in support of Ntagerura's Article 6 (3) superior responsibility as alleged in Count 6.[174] The Trial Chamber found in that respect that paragraph 11, like the Ntagerura Indictment as a whole, failed to identify Ntagerura's subordinates who actually approved the use of the buses and the other material facts necessary to make out an allegation of superior responsibility.[175]

73. The Prosecution submits that the summary of Witness MF's statement included details of Ntagerura's authorisation, on several occasions, for the use of government vehicles for purposes such as the transport of arms, ammunition and Interahamwe, as well as details of the vehicles used, such as the ONATRACOM buses, and the persons to whom the authorisation was given.[176]

74. The summary of Witness MF's statement specified one incident when Ntagerura allegedly ordered the use of a government vehicle, namely vehicle A-7058, which he ordered to be given to the sub-prefect of Busengo in March 1994. However, the summary provides no information regarding the criminal purpose for which this vehicle would subsequently be used or Ntagerura's knowledge of such purpose. Accordingly, this summary did not put Ntagerura on notice of the material facts of his alleged responsibility under Article 6 (3) of the Statute.[177]

(ii) Paragraphs 12.1, 13 and 16

75. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its findings on paragraphs 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 and 16 of the Ntagerura Indictment.[178] Although the Trial Chamber made factual findings on paragraphs 14.1 and 14.3, the Appeals Chamber will consider the arguments related to these paragraphs in order to allow for an analysis of paragraphs 12.1, 14.1 and 14.3 in their context.

76. Paragraphs 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 and 16 of the Ntagerura Indictment read as follows:

[174] Ntagerura Indictment, Count 6.
[175] Trial Judgement, para. 42.
[176] Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 133, citing Appendix 4 to Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, Appendix 4: Summary of Prosecution witness statements, filed on 3 July 2000 ("Appendix 4"), p. 5, N°17 (Witness MF).
[177] Appendix 4, p. 5, N°17 (Witness MF): Witness will state that he knew Ntagerura and alleges that Ntagerura used to avail government vehicles to Interahamwe, for example, vehicle A-7058 which Ntagerura ordered the witness to give the Sous-Prefect of Busengo in March 1994; that Ntagerura did this on several occasions; the witness also saw Onatracom buses transporting arms, ammunition and Interahamwe; that the witness reported these incidents to his chief and Ntagerura but never received any reaction on these reports.
[178] Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 184.

> 12.1 From 1 January to 31 July 1994 as early as 1991, André Ntagerura encouraged and participated in the training of Interahamwe militiamen in Karengera commune and in other communes in Cyangugu préfecture.
>
> 13. From 1 January to 31 July 1994 and as early as January 1993, weapons, ammunition and uniforms were frequently distributed in Cyangugu préfecture. These weapons were sometimes stored in Yussuf Munyakazi's house in Bugarama commune and elsewhere. They were later distributed to the Interahamwe in Cyangugu préfecture.
>
> 14.1 From 1 January to 31 July 1994, André Ntagerura was often seen in the company of, and publicly expressed his support for, Yussuf Munyakazi and the Interahamwe in Cyangugu préfecture, specifically in Bugarama commune.
>
> 14.3 From 1 January to 31 July 1994, André Ntagerura travelled throughout Cyangugu préfecture, often accompanied by Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki and Yussuf Munyakazi, to monitor the activities of the Interahamwe and verify that the orders to kill the Tutsis and all political opponents had been carried out.
> 16. From 1 January to 31 July 1994, Yussuf Munyakazi was an influential member and one of the leaders of the Interahamwe in Cyangugu préfecture. He was one of the people in charge of implementing MRND orders. Many of the orders came from André Ntagerura.

77. The Trial Chamber found that paragraphs 12.1, 13 and 16, in addition to being vague, failed to plead any identifiable criminal conduct on the part of Ntagerura.[179] It further found that paragraphs 14.1 and 14.3 did not sufficiently describe the nature of Ntagerura's criminal participation.[180]

78. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in these findings and argues that

> "the facts stated in those paragraphs are connected to each other in ways that support the allegations in each. The thread that runs through these paragraphs is the association of [Ntagerura] with the Interahamwe and the role of the Interahamwe in the genocide".[181]

It argues that: (i) paragraph 12.1 connects Ntagerura to the training of the Interahamwe; (ii) paragraph 13 connects him to the supply of arms and uniforms to the Interahamwe through Munyakazi; and (iii) paragraphs 14.1 and 14.3 and paragraph 16 connect him to the activities of both Munyakazi and Bagambiki in relation to the Interahamwe, as well as to the Interahamwe directly, and to the activities of the Interahamwe involving the killings of Tutsis and political opponents.[182]

79. The Appeals Chamber notes that paragraphs 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 and 16 allege a certain connection between Ntagerura, Munyakazi and the Interahamwe and indicated that the latter perpetrated criminal acts. However, such a general allegation did not suffice to put Ntagerura on notice of the material facts of his criminal conduct. The Appeals Chamber notes that it is not obvious that those members of the Interahamwe who in paragraph 14.3 were alleged to have carried out acts of killing were the same members who in paragraph 12.1 were alleged to have been trained. In fact, it is not even indicated that the training was undertaken in furtherance of such acts. Moreover, there is no indication in paragraph 14.3 of who allegedly gave and/or executed "[the orders to kill all the Tutsis and political opponents]". Further, the allegations that Ntagerura "was often seen in the company of, and publicly expressed his support for Munyakazi and the Interahamwe", as alleged in paragraph 14.1; that he "monitor[ed] the activities" of the Interahamwe as pleaded in paragraph 14.3; or that he issued MRND orders as stated in paragraph 16, did not sufficiently describe his role, if any, in the distribution of weapons alleged in paragraph 13.

[179] Trial Judgement, para. 69.
[180] Ibid., para. 45.
[181] Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 184.
[182] Ibid., para. 185.

80. Similarly, it was not clear whether the MRND orders that Ntagerura allegedly issued concerned the activities described in paragraphs 12.1, 13, 14.1 or 14.3. In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntagerura is not mentioned in paragraph 13 at all. An objective reader cannot understand in what respect the storing and distribution of arms in the préfecture of Cyangugu was related to Ntagerura. For the same reasons, Ntagerura's alleged participation in the events alleged in paragraphs 14.1 and 14.3 was not clarified by paragraphs 12.1, 13 or 16. Therefore, the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that paragraphs 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 and 16 failed to sufficiently plead Ntagerura's criminal conduct.

81. The Appeals Chamber notes that the summaries of the statements of Witnesses LAB, MF, LAI, LAP and LAR, which the Prosecution refers to in support of its argument that the defects in paragraphs 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 and 16 were cured,[183] do not cure the vagueness with which Ntagerura's criminal conduct was pleaded in those paragraphs.

82. The summary of Witness LAB's statement alleges that Ntagerura addressed a crowd in the Nyamuhunga Sector in April 1994, but makes no link between his statements on that occasion and any underlying crime with which he is charged.[184] Although the summary of Witness LAB's statement alleges that on 18 May 1994 Ntagerura delivered arms to the Shagasha factory, it did not indicate whether those weapons were used in any crime or in the training that took place at the factory. Moreover, that training was alleged to have taken place between January and April 1994, that is, before 18 May 1994.[185] The allegation in the summary of Witness LAP's statement that Ntagerura arrived on 28 January 1994 in Bigogwe with boots and uniforms which were distributed to the Interahamwe also fails to mention any crime in which those supplies were used.[186] The same holds true for the allegation in the summary of Witness LAR's statement that on 28 January 1994 Ntagerura announced to a crowd assembled in Bugarama that he had delivered boots and uniforms.[187] The summary of Witness MF's statement alleges that Ntagerura ordered that government vehicle A-7058 be given to the sub-prefect of Busengo in March 1994, but failed to link the use of that vehicle to a criminal purpose or to specify whether Ntagerura had any knowledge of such a purpose.[188] Finally, although the summary of Witness LAI's statement indicates that Ntagerura faxed an order to Munyakazi to eliminate Tutsi intellectuals "after 7 April 1994", it is not clear whether that order was executed, or when between 7 April 1994 and 31 July 1994[189] he allegedly issued it.[190] Given that Ntagerura is alleged to have been responsible for ordering in this instance, this is not a sufficiently precise time span.

83. Considering that paragraphs 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 and 16 were not cured of defects in respect of the alleged criminal conduct, it is unnecessary for the Appeals Chamber to determine whether these paragraphs were cured of other defects.

(iii) Modes of Responsibility

84. At paragraph 48 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber held that:

> the formulation of the counts in the Ntagerura Indictment is incomprehensible. The phrase "as a result of the acts committed ... in relation to the events described in paragraphs 9-19", which is [184] Appendix 4, p. 11, N°32 (Witness LAB).

[185] Appendix 4, p. 11, N°32 (Witness LAB). Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber has already found that the summary of Witness LAB did not indicate whether Ntagerura participated in the training at the Shagasha factory.
[186] Appendix 4, p. 7, N°22 (Witness LAP).
[187] Appendix 4, p. 9, N°26 (Witness LAR).
[188] Appendix 4, p. 5, N°17 (Witness MF).
[189] Paragraphs 14.1 and 14.2, as well as 16, of the Ntagerura Indictment pertained to the period between 1 January to 31 July 1994.
[190] Appendix 4, p. 6, N°21 (Witness LAI).

contained in each count, refers to the "results" and to "the events" and not to the criminal conduct of Ntagerura. Moreover, the counts do not clearly specify whether Ntagerura is being charged as a principal or as an accomplice, or what particular form of complicity is alleged.

85. The Prosecution submits that this finding > "is erroneous in view of the details supplied in the pre-trial disclosures showing, as described, the nature of Ntagerura's involvement in the crimes with which he is charged as well as his relationship to any other perpetrators".[191]

86. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution does not explain how the pre-trial disclosures served to inform Ntagerura of the mode of responsibility with which he was charged. The Appeals Chamber has already found that certain pre-trial disclosures relied on by the Prosecution did not help to clarify in the least defects in the Indictment relating to Ntagerura's alleged superior responsibility.[192] The Prosecution relies on the pre-trial disclosure of the statements given by Witnesses LAB, LAI, LAR and LAP to show that defects in the Indictment were cured.[193] Having examined these statements, the Appeals Chamber finds that they did not provide Ntagerura with clear and consistent information regarding the mode of responsibility with which he was charged.

(iv) Conclusion on the Ntagerura Indictment

87. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that paragraphs 11, 12.1, 13 and 16 of the Ntagerura Indictment were defective or that those defects were not cured. The Prosecution's argument is therefore dismissed in these respects.

(b) Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment

88. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in reading the following paragraphs of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment in isolation from each other: (i) 3.12, 3.13 and 3.14; (ii) 3.15, 3.16, 3.17 and 3.18; and (iii) 3.19, 3.20, 3.24 and 3.25.[194] It adds that the defects in these paragraphs as well as in paragraphs 3.21, 3.22, 3.23, 3.26, 3.27, 3.28, 3.30 and 3.31 were cured.[195] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber made factual findings on paragraphs 3.16 to 3.31, and that as a result, there is no need examining them further. But for the alleged error in paragraph 3.28, no other error alleged by the Prosecution could have an impact on the outcome of the appeal. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber will examine only paragraphs 3.12 and 3.15 on which no factual findings were made at trial and paragraph 3.28 which was only partly examined.

(i) Paragraphs 3.12, 3.13 and 3.14

89. Paragraphs 3.12, 3.13 and 3.14 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment read as follows:

> 3.12 During the events referred to in this indictment, Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki chaired many of the meetings of the 'restricted security committee' of the préfecture of Cyangugu, the body responsible for the safety of the civilian population of the préfecture, meetings in which Samuel Imanishimwe participated, in his capacity as the Commander of the Cyangugu Barracks, as well as the Commander of the Gendarmerie, the sous-préfets and others. One of these meetings was held on or about 9 April 1994.

[195] Ibid., paras. 150-166.

3.13 Furthermore, on at least two occasions, on or about 11 April 1994 and on or about 18 April 1994, Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki chaired meetings of the 'prefectural committee' of Cyangugu p*réfecture*, where problems relating to the safety of the civilian population of the préfecture were discussed. Members of the 'restricted security committee', particularly Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki and Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, as well as all the bourgmestres, representatives of political parties and different churches, attended these meetings.

3.14 Before and during the events referred to in this indictment, Emmanuel Bagambiki, Préfet of Cyangugu;

André Ntagerura, Minister of Transportation and Communications;

Yussuf Munyakazi, Interahamwe leader;

Christophe Nyandwi, an official in the Ministry of Planning;

Michel Busunyu, MRND Chairman for Karengera commune; and Édouard Bandeste, Interahamwe leader;

all of whom were prominent figures within the MRND in Cyangugu, held a large number of meetings among themselves, or with others, to incite, prepare, organise and commit genocide.

These meetings took place in diverse locations throughout Cyangugu préfecture, in the sous-préfectures and in the communes, including public gathering places such as Kamarampaka stadium, and also in restricted locations, such as bars and private residences, notably:

(a) towards late 1993, in Kirambo commune, with members of the MRND;

(b) towards late 1993 and early 1994, in Augustin Miruho's drinking place in Karangiro, with the participation of Félicien Baligira, a former parliamentarian, Simeon Nteziryayo, the Manager of SONARWA, Kayijamahe, the Manager of STIR, and others;

(c) February 1994, in André Ntagerura's house, Karengera commune, with the participation of Yussuf Munyakazi, an Interahamwe leader, Christophe Nyandwi, a civil servant in the Ministry of Planning, Edouard Bandeste, an Interahamwe leader, and other members of the MRND;

(d) on 7 February 1994, at Bushenge market, with he [sic] participation of André Ntagerura, Daniel Mbangura, Michel Busunyu, Callixte Nsabimana, Félicien Baligira and other members of the MRND and CDR;

(e) during June 1994 at the MRND headquarters, in Cyangugu, organised by President Théodore Sindikubwabo with the participation of André Ntagerura, Daniel Mbangura, a Minister, together with civilians and religious figures;

(f) from 1993 to early 1994, in Gatare commune, with the participation of André Ntagerura, Yussuf Munyakazi, and Emmanuel Bagambiki;

(g) on or about 28 January 1994, in Bugarama, with the participation of André Ntagerura and Yussuf Munyakazi; and

(h) in late June 1994, in Gisuma, with the participation of Emmanuel Bagambiki and Samuel Imanishimwe.

90. The Trial Chamber found that paragraphs 3.12, 3.13 and 3.14

> "fail[ed] to allege facts that would constitute material elements of the crime of conspiracy, which, according to the Prosecutor, [was] the only charge that these paragraphs support[ed]".[196]

In particular, the Trial Chamber found that the actus reus of the crime of conspiracy, "namely that two or more persons agreed to commit the crime of genocide", was not pleaded.[197] With regard to paragraphs 3.12 and 3.13, the Trial Chamber found that they failed to identify the criminal purpose of the alleged meetings or any connection that the meetings might have had with an underlying crime, and thus failed to identify any sort of criminal participation of Bagambiki or Imanishimwe. It also found that the time frames in paragraphs 3.12 and 3.13, save for the enumerated dates of 9, 11 and 18 April 1994, were vague.[198] Finally, the Trial Chamber held that paragraph 3.14 did not particularise the nature of Bagambiki's and Imanishimwe's participation in the meetings.[199]

91. The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber erred in reading these paragraphs in isolation from one another and without taking into account the context of the underlying charge of conspiracy.[200] The Prosecution further contends that the Trial Chamber's findings that the material elements of conspiracy were not pleaded in paragraphs 3.12, 3.13 and 3.14, were

> "unwarranted since [paragraphs 3.12, 3.13 and 3.14] demonstrate that [Bagambiki and Imanishimwe] undertook coordinated actions and were acting within a unified framework as evidenced by the numerous meetings that they attended together[;] these meetings provided the framework in which the conspiracy involving [Bagambiki and Imanishimwe] took place".[201]

The Prosecution relies in this regard on the finding of the Trial Chamber in Nahimana et al. that

> "conspiracy to commit genocide can be inferred from coordinated actions by individuals who have a common purpose and are acting within a unified framework".[202]

92. At the outset, the Appeals Chamber considers that, at a minimum, conspiracy to commit genocide consists of an agreement between two or more persons to commit the crime of genocide.[203] The existence of such an agreement between Bagambiki, Imanishimwe, and potentially other persons, should thus have been pleaded in the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment as a material fact. The fact that paragraphs 3.12, 3.13 and 3.14, as argued by the Prosecution, were intended to describe the "framework in which the conspiracy involving Bagambiki and Imanishimwe took place" or that those paragraphs were referred to in support of the charge of conspiracy, did not exonerate the Prosecution from the obligation to plead this material fact.[204] The Prosecution remained, indeed, obliged to plead the material facts underpinning the charges against Bagambiki and Imanishimwe so as to enable them to prepare their defence.

93. In the absence of any alleged criminal purpose or criminal participation by Bagambiki or Imanishimwe, the mere allegations as formulated in paragraphs 3.12 and 3.13 that they participated in meetings did not set out the material fact of the crime, namely, that they agreed to commit genocide.[205]

94. The Appeals Chamber admits that, even if paragraph 3.14 does not explicitly mention the words that the accused agreed "to commit genocide", the allegation that Bagambiki, Ntagerura and Imanishimwe (and other important members of the MRND in Cyangugu) held a large number of [203] Musema Trial Judgement, para. 191; Ntakirutimana Trial Judgement, paras. 798-799. The Appeals Chamber further recalls that, with regard to the concept of conspiracy in general, the ICTY Appeals Chamber has held that "conspiracy requires a showing that several individuals have agreed to commit a certain crime or set of crimes": Ojdanic Jurisdiction Decision, para. 23.

[204] See Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 221, where the Prosecution itself notes that "the material facts translate the abstract elements of the crime into a specific reality, by establishing who did what to whom, where, when, how, and with what intent".
[205] In fact, the only mentioned purpose of these meetings was "problems relating to the safety of the civilian population of the préfecture", which, as noted by the Trial Chamber, appears to run counter to the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide: Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment, para. 3.13; Trial Judgement, para. 50.

meetings among themselves or with others "to instigate, prepare, and organize the genocide"[206] could be understood to suggest the required purpose for a conspiracy to commit genocide. However, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber refused to consider the allegations in paragraph 3.14 because of the vagueness, finding that the paragraph did "not particularise the nature of Bagambiki's and Imanishimwe's participation in the meetings".[207] The Prosecution appears to accept this characterization of the paragraph but argues that during the pre-trial stage, it provided the Accused with the relevant evidence concerning the meetings and their participation therein.[208]

95. The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Trial Chamber's opinion that paragraph 3.14 is unacceptably vague because it provides no details as to the participation of the two accused in the meetings. According to paragraph 3.14, Bagambiki participated in no more than two meetings, while Imanishimwe would have participated only in one. There was no meeting in which all three Accused would have participated together. As to the purpose of these meetings, the Prosecution limited itself to the generic formula that they served "to incite, prepare, organise and commit" genocide, without indicating the precise nature of the role the Accused might have played in the meetings.

96. According to the Prosecution, the ambiguity in paragraph 3.14 was cured by the pre-trial disclosure of the summaries of witness statements given by Witnesses LAI, LAP, LAG, LAR and LAN.[209] The summaries of the statements given by Witnesses LAI, LAP and LAG allege that Bagambiki and/or Imanishimwe participated in meetings in 1993 and the summary of Witness LAR's statement indicates that they met Ntagerura in Bugarama on 28 January 1994, neither of which offers any specification relating to their participation in these meetings.[210] The summary of Witness LAN's statement alleges that Ntagerura, Bagambiki, Munyakazi and other party dignitaries "presided over" an MRND meeting at Bushenge centre on 7 February 1993 at which the Interahamwe "sang songs inciting ethnic cleansing which were applauded by Ntagerura, Bagambiki and others", but did not mention any agreement reached on that occasion to commit genocide.[211] Furthermore, this meeting was not mentioned in paragraph 3.14, which, with regard to meetings which took place in 1993, merely refers to meetings "towards late 1993" and "from 1993 to early 1994 in Gatare commune".[212] The Appeals Chamber also notes that Bushenge is not located in Gatare commune. The Appeals Chamber therefore concludes that the pre-trial disclosure of the summaries of statements given by Witnesses LAI, LAP, LAG, LAR and LAN did not provide clear and consistent information regarding the nature of Bagambiki's or Imanishimwe's participation in the meetings, or regarding any agreement to commit genocide reached by them.

(ii) Paragraph 3.15

97. For a proper analysis, the Appeals Chamber deems it necessary to place paragraph 3.15 in its context, and then examine it in the light of paragraphs 3.16, 3.17 and 3.18. Paragraphs 3.15, 3.16, 3.17 and 3.18 read as follows:

> 3.15 Also, during this same period, André Ntagerura, Yussuf Munyakazi, and Emmanuel BAGAMBIKI publicly expressed anti-Tutsi sentiments.

[206] The Appeals Chamber notes that the English version of the amended paragraph 3.14 reads "to incite, prepare, organise and commit genocide". The Prosecution filed the English and French versions of the amended paragraph 3.14 on the same day and in the same document, without indicating which language was authoritative. The Appeals Chamber emphasizes that the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Initial Indictment had been originally filed in French, which was accordingly the authoritative language.

[211] Appendix 4, p. 8, N°24.
[212] Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment, para. 3.14(a), (b), (f).

> 3.16 Before and during the events referred to in this indictment, Minister André Ntagerura, Préfet Emmanuel BAGAMBIKI, Yussuf Munyakazi, Christophe NYANDWI, all of whom were influential figures in the MRND in Cyangugu, participated, directly or indirectly, in the training and instructing of, and distributing of weapons to, the MRND militiamen, the Interahamwe, who later committed massacres of the civilian Tutsi population.
> 3.17 During the events referred to in this indictment, Lieutenant Samuel IMANISHIMWE, in his capacity as Commander of the Cyangugu Barracks, participated, with Préfet Emmanuel BAGAMBIKI and other persons, in preparing lists of people to eliminate, mostly Tutsis and some Hutus in the opposition.
> 3.18 These lists were given to the soldiers and militiamen with orders to arrest and kill the persons whose names were listed. The soldiers and the Interahamwe then carried out the orders.

98. The Trial Chamber found that none of these paragraphs pleaded the dates or venues of the alleged activities with sufficient particularity.[213] It further held that paragraph 3.15 failed to specify the nature and approximate content of the alleged statements or their connection to the commission of an underlying crime,[214] and that paragraph 3.16 did not plead Bagambiki's role in the training and weapons distribution nor did it indicate any massacre in which those persons who were trained might have participated.[215] Finally, the Trial Chamber found that paragraphs 3.17 and 3.18 failed to identify any individuals named on the lists as well as Bagambiki's or Imanishimwe's role or knowledge in the issuing or execution of the orders that were alleged to have been given.[216]

99. In the first place, the Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber's assessment of paragraphs 3.15 to 3.18 and its finding on the lack of particularity are unreasonable due to the underlying charge of conspiracy to commit genocide. In addition, it argues that any defects in paragraphs 3.15 to 3.18 were cured.[217]

100. The Appeals Chamber has found that paragraphs 3.12 and 3.13 failed to plead the material fact that Bagambiki, Imanishimwe and others agreed to commit genocide, and that paragraph 3.14 was too vague, because it did not indicate the nature of Bagambiki's and Imanishimwe's participation in the meetings. For the purposes of the crime of conspiracy, it is therefore inconsequential that paragraphs 3.15, 3.16, 3.17 and 3.18 provide information on the background and continuing nature of the acts that culminated in the commission of genocide. The Trial Chamber correctly found that the allegations supporting the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide (Count 19) "could not constitute the material elements of the crime of conspiracy".[218]

101. The Prosecution further submits that the summaries of the statements of Witnesses LAI, LAP, LAG, LAR and LAN provided details of Bagambiki's and Imanishimwe's expressions of anti-Tutsi sentiments alleged in paragraph 3.15.[219]

102. The Appeals Chamber notes that the summary of Witness LAI's statement alleged that "Bagambiki also incited the population to kill [T]utsi", but without specifying date, place or how this statement was connected to an underlying crime.[220] The summary of Witness LAP's statement indicated that Bagambiki attended a meeting at Kamarampaka Stadium in 1993 where the population was "incited against the Tutsi", but does not mention whether Bagambiki expressed any sentiments to that effect.[221] The same holds true for the meeting alleged in the summary of Witness LAG's statement.[222] The summary of Witness LAR's statement contained no information that Bagambiki publicly expressed anti-Tutsi sentiments.[223] The summary of Witness LAN's statement alleged that Ntagerura, Bagambiki and others "presided over" a meeting at Bushenge centre on 7 February 1993, during which "the Interahamwe sang songs inciting ethnic cleansing which were applauded by Ntagerura, Bagambiki and others".[224] However, no mention was made of any agreement made at this meeting to commit genocide, the material fact found to be lacking in paragraph 3.15.

(iii) Paragraph 3.28

103. Paragraph 3.28 reads:

> 3.28 During the events referred to in this Indictment, Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki had the duty of ensuring the protection and safety of the civilian population within his préfecture. On several occasions in April 1994, Préfet Bagambiki failed or refused to assist those whose lives were in danger who asked for his help, particularly in Gatare commune, where those Tutsis were massacred.

104. The Trial Chamber found that paragraph 3.28 did not indicate any occasion by date and specific location or any instance where Bagambiki failed or refused to assist those whose lives were in danger.[225]

105. The Prosecution submits that the summary of Witness LQ's statement stated that Bagambiki, despite repeated warnings given to him of the impending attack on the refugees at Hanika Parish in April 1994 and his repeated promises to intervene, did nothing, and about 2 000 refugees were killed in the attack. It also argues that the summary of Witness MP's statement indicated that Bagambiki failed to stop the assault by the Interahamwe on thousands of refugees at Mbilizi Parish between 12 and 30 April 1994.[226]

106. Although the Trial Chamber made a number of factual findings with respect to the attacks at Gatare Parish alleged in paragraph 3.28,[227] it, however, declined to mention in its Judgement the attack at Hanika Parish testified to by Witness LQ.

107. The summary of Witness LQ's statement states in relevant part that:

> at 0900AM on 11th April, 1994 [I]nterahamwe attackers surrounded the [Hanika] parish; that the witness telephoned Bagambiki seeking his intervention to stave off the attack and that Bagambiki promised to send the burgomaster of Gatare with gendarmes; that the attacks first started with machetes, then with grenades; that around noon the witness called Bagambiki again, who told him to be patient; that meanwhile the assault continued; that the burgomaster arrived at around 4:30PM with only one gendarme and two communal policemen; […] that about 2000 refugees were killed on that day.[228]

108. The summary does not indicate that Bagambiki, whose assistance was sought by Witness LQ, refused to stave off the attack. Rather, it states that Bagambiki told Witness LQ "to be patient" and that the protection promised by Bagambiki, however sparse, did arrive in the afternoon. Therefore, the Appeals Chamber finds that the summary of Witness LQ's statement did not clearly allege that Bagambiki failed or refused to assist the people under attack at the Hanika Parish on 11 April 1994 and that, as such, it remains unclear whether this summary does in fact support the allegations made in paragraph 3.28 at all.

(iv) The Counts in the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment

109. The Trial Chamber found that the formulation of the counts in the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment were "problematic" because they did not clearly identify whether Bagambiki and Imanishimwe were being charged as principals or as accomplices nor did they specify what particular form of complicity was charged.[229] The Prosecution contends that its arguments relating to how the defects in the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment were cured show the "nature of Bagambiki's and Imanishimwe's involvement in the crimes with which they were charged as well as their relationship to any other perpetrators".[230]

110. The Prosecution does not show how the remark made by the Trial Chamber to the effect that the formulation of the counts in the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment was "problematic" impacted on the Trial Judgement. In the preceding section, the Appeals Chamber has already found that the Prosecution's challenges to the Trial Chamber's conclusions, in so far as they are said to impact on the Judgement, are unfounded. The Appeals Chamber therefore declines to further consider the Prosecution's argument on this point.

(v) Conclusion on the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment

111. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to show that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that paragraphs 3.12, 3.13, 3.14, 3.15 and 3.28 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment were defective. Similarly, it failed to show that the defects identified therein had been remedied. Consequently, the Prosecution's arguments as to the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment are also dismissed.

5. Conclusion

112. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution's arguments concerning the paragraphs of the Indictments on which the Trial Chamber made no factual findings (or its findings on a portion of paragraph 3.28 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment) are unfounded. The Prosecution, indeed, failed to demonstrate that the paragraphs were not defective or that they had been cured of their defects.

113. The Appeals Chamber had earlier found that the Trial Chamber erred in reconsidering its pre-trial decisions on the form of the Indictments after the close of the trial, without giving the parties the opportunity to be heard.[231] The Appeals Chamber also finds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider whether the defects in the Indictments were cured.[232] In view of its findings on the other grounds of appeal, the Appeals Chamber, however, considers that these two errors do not invalidate the Trial Chamber's decisions. Accordingly, the Prosecution's 4th ground of appeal is dismissed in its entirety.

114. The Appeals Chamber wishes to express its concern regarding the Prosecution's approach in the present case. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the indictment is the primary accusatory instrument and must plead the Prosecution case with sufficient detail. Although the Appeals Chamber allows that defects in an indictment may be "remedied" under certain circumstances, it emphasizes that this should be limited to exceptional cases.[233] In the present case, the Appeals Chamber is disturbed by the extent to which the Prosecution seeks to rely on this exception. Even if the Prosecution had succeeded in arguing that the defects in the Indictments were remedied in each individual instance, the Appeals Chamber would still have to consider whether the overall effect of the numerous defects would not have rendered the trial unfair in itself.

E. CONVICTION FOR ACTS NOT PLEADED IN THE INDICTMENT (IMANISHIMWE'S 1ST GROUND OF APPEAL)

115. In his first ground of appeal, Imanishimwe contends that the Trial Chamber convicted him for acts not pleaded in the Indictment, and thereby exceeded its jurisdiction.[234] He submits that the Trial Chamber committed an error by convicting him on Counts 7, 10 and 13 for crimes perpetrated at the Gashirabwoba football field, whereas these crimes were not pleaded in the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment.[235]

1. Was the Indictment defective?

116. In support of his contention, Imanishimwe recalls that in several motions he denounced the vagueness of the Indictment.[236] He alleges that paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment did not in any way inform him of the nature of the charges against him as a result of the acts committed at the Gashirabwoba football field, since these paragraphs do not specify the actual perpetrators, the date and place of the alleged massacre, or the nature of his alleged participation therein or that of his subordinates.[237] While conceding that in some situations, the Prosecution does not have to specify the date and place where some events occur, he submits that the particular gravity of the Gashirabwoba massacre required that such information be provided pursuant to Articles 17 (4), 19 (3) and 20 (4) (a) of the Statute and Rule 47 (B) and (C) of the Rules.[238]

117. The Prosecution concedes that the charges in paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment are in outline form only and that the crimes perpetrated at Gashirabwoba were not pleaded in the Indictment.[239] It acknowledges that "[I]f the case went to trial with nothing more than this, the accused might have no basis on which to prepare a proper defence".[240]

118. The Trial Chamber found Imanishimwe guilty of the counts of genocide (Count 7), extermination as a crime against humanity (Count 10) and serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and of Additional Protocol II (Count 13) for his responsibility in the massacre of civilian refugees at the Gashirabwoba football field on 12 April 1994, on the basis of paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment.[241] It found beyond reasonable doubt that, although it was not established that Imanishimwe ordered the attack or that he was present, he was criminally responsible under Article 6 (3) of the Statute for failing to prevent his subordinates from attacking the refugees.[242]

119. Paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30 read as follows:

> 3.25 Between April and July 1994, Tutsis and moderate Hutus were arrested and taken to the Cyangugu Barracks to be tortured and executed. Also, during this period, soldiers, participated on several occasions with MRND militiamen and the Interahamwe in massacres of the civilian Tutsi population.
> 3.30 During the events referred to in this indictment, the militiamen, i.e. the Interahamwe, with the help of the soldiers, participated in the massacres of the civilian Tutsi population and of Hutu political opponents in Cyangugu préfecture.

120. In its Judgement, the Trial Chamber thoroughly examined the preliminary matters pertaining to the Indictments. It thus carefully examined paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30, and noted that:

> The paragraph 3.25 also fails to identify any incident with particularity where soldiers participated in massacres with militiamen and Interahamwe against the Tutsi civilian population or any other material fact that would demonstrate Imanishimwe's responsibility for the crimes.[243]
> (...) paragraphs 3.30 and 3.31 fail to particularise with any specificity the underlying criminal events or the specific role that the accused allegedly played in the massacres.[244] before concluding that:

> For the foregoing reasons, the Chamber finds that the operative paragraphs underpinning the charges against Ntagerura, Bagambiki and Imanishimwe, as well as the charges themselves, are unacceptably vague. Moreover, the Chamber finds no justifiable reason for the Prosecution to have pleaded the allegations or charges in such a generic manner.[245]

121. The Appeals Chamber reaffirms that the Prosecution must not only inform the accused of the nature and cause of the charges against him in the indictment, but must also provide a concise description of the facts underpinning those charges. The Appeals Chamber has already had occasion above to recall the material facts to be pleaded in relation to the accused's responsibility under Article 6 (3) of the Statute.[246]

122. The Appeals Chamber cannot but note that paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment are manifestly vague. By framing the charges in such a vague manner, the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment fails to fulfil the fundamental purpose of providing the accused with a description of the charges against him with sufficient particularity to enable him to prepare his defence. The Appeals Chamber considers the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment defective with regard to the allegations concerning the Gashirabwoba football field.

2. Could the defects in the Indictment be cured?

123. Imanishimwe contends that since the indictment is the only accusatory instrument of the Tribunal, it cannot be supplemented, completed or corrected through the Prosecution's opening address or Pre-Trial Brief, or by witness statements or other documents disclosed to the accused before or during the trial.[247] Invoking a number of decisions of the Tribunal and of ICTY,[248] as well as Judge Dolenc's Dissenting Opinion, Imanishimwe asserts that by convicting an accused of charges not pleaded in the indictment the Trial Chamber exceeds the confines of the matter referred to it, which confines are fixed by the indictment.[249] He thus takes issue with the legal standard enunciated in paragraphs 67 and 68 of the Trial Judgement. He argues that even if it were legally possible to cure the defects in an indictment, the charges relating to Gashirabwoba in the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment are so vague and unacceptable that there is no remedy for the Prosecution's omission.[250]

[242] Trial Judgement, paras. 694, 749, 750 and 802. The Appeals Chamber notes that in paragraphs 691, 744 and 794 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber also mentions the fact that "Imanishimwe did not punish any soldier for this attack". The Appeals Chamber considers this clarification to be incidental, given that the Trial Chamber decided in its legal findings not to find Imanishimwe responsible for failure to prevent his soldiers from committing crimes.

124. The Prosecution concedes that only charges contained in the indictment may be part of the case against the accused. It contends, however, that in the case at hand, the charges pertaining to the Gashirabwoba events are set forth "in outline form" in paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment. The Prosecution submits that Imanishimwe adopts an excessively rigid interpretation of the law relating to pleading[251] and affirms that Judge Dolenc's view that a defective indictment cannot be cured under any circumstances is, by his own admission, not based on applicable law.[252]

125. In his Brief in Reply, Imanishimwe contends that under the principle of legality, whose corollary is the principle of strict interpretation of criminal law, the Trial Chamber could not overlook the provisions governing the indictment – namely Articles 17, 18, 19 and 20 of the Statute and Rules 47 and 50 of the Rules of the Tribunal – pursuant to which a Trial Chamber cannot expand the scope of the case brought before it.[253] As regards the Niyitegeka, Ntakirutimana and Kvocka et al. cases which the Prosecution invokes, Imanishimwe submits that they may not be considered as a source of law since such case-law postdates the Judgement.[254]

126. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that no new charges may be introduced outside the indictment, which is the only accusatory instrument of the Tribunal. Indeed, this is the view held by the Trial Chamber at paragraphs 29, 30 and 66 of the Trial Judgement. Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that an indictment may not be "supplemented, completed or corrected" under any circumstances. There is consistent jurisprudence that a defective indictment due to ambiguity or vagueness can be cured, in some instances, if the Prosecution provides the accused with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her.[255]

127. Contrary to Imanishimwe's assertion, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the principle that an overly ambiguous or vague indictment cannot be cured departs from the provisions of the Statute and the Rules governing indictments. It is by interpreting the said provisions that the Appeals Chamber of ICTY articulated the principle for the first time in those terms. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the principle of legality, or the nullum crimen sine lege doctrine, does not prevent a court from determining an issue through a process of interpretation and clarification of the applicable law; nor does it prevent a court from relying on previous decisions which reflect an interpretation as to the meaning to be ascribed to particular provisions.[256] The Appeals Chamber wishes to clarify that when it interprets certain provisions of the Statute or the Rules, it is merely identifying what the proper interpretation of that provision has always been, even though it was not previously expressed that way. Imanishimwe's argument that the principle of legality precludes consideration of case-law developed subsequent to the Trial Judgement cannot succeed.

128. Having articulated the legal standard to be applied to a defective indictment, the Appeals Chamber should now acknowledge the error that the Trial Chamber committed in the articulation of its own legal standards. Although the Trial Chamber was correct in stating that "in certain circumstances it has discretion to consider evidence supporting a paragraph even if the paragraph is defective",[257] its reasoning stems from an incorrect reading of the Kupreskić et al. jurisprudence when it concludes, at paragraph 68, that it would consider Prosecution evidence to see if there is strong evidence pointing towards the guilt of the accused.[258] The Appeals Chamber refers to its analysis on this point in relation to the Prosecution's fourth ground of appeal.[259] The Appeals Chamber agrees with Imanishimwe's assertion that the Trial Chamber overlooked the provisions governing indictments by recording such findings.

129. However, the Appeals Chamber takes issue with Imanishimwe's assertion that, in view of the circumstances of the instant case, the vagueness of the Indictment cannot be cured. Imanishimwe's arguments derive from confusion regarding the evidence to be pleaded in an indictment, namely the charges per se and the material facts underlying them. The Trial Chamber did not conclude that paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment did not plead charges per se, but that the charges pleaded in those paragraphs were "unacceptably vague".[260] It is worth noting that the principal charge, namely the "massacres of the civilian Tutsi population", is pleaded in the two paragraphs in question. Imanishimwe fails to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred by recording such findings. The events at Gashirabwoba are clearly within the contours of this charge, even though the charge exists in outline form only. The Appeals Chamber further notes that the Prosecution clearly stated in the Indictment that it was relying on paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30 for Counts 7, 10 and 13.[261] The Appeals Chamber reaffirms the Trial Chamber's finding that Imanishimwe was not in the dark about the charges against him, but that he was inadequately informed thereof in the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment.

130. Accordingly, there was no legal basis for the Trial Chamber not to consider the evidence relating to the imprecise charge, as long as the Prosecution provided Imanishimwe with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges, and thereby permitted Imanishimwe to prepare his defence. The Appeals Chamber has already indicated that this information could, inter alia and depending on the circumstances, be supplied in the Prosecution's Pre-Trial Brief or opening statement.[262] The Appeals Chamber considers that the degree of vagueness of the charge is of no import where the proceedings were not rendered unfair. This constitutes an overarching condition, which must be met in entering a finding of guilt. The Appeals Chamber will now examine if Imanishimwe received timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him.

3. Were the defects in the Indictment cured?

131. Imanishimwe affirms that the Trial Chamber glaringly exceeded the scope of the matter referred to it by finding him guilty of the crimes perpetrated at the Gashirabwoba football field.[263] Although the Trial Chamber stated that it is possible in certain circumstances to consider evidence supporting a defective paragraph in the indictment, Imanishimwe alleges that the Trial Chamber did not indicate those circumstances in the Trial Judgement[264] and that the failure to give reasons for its decision shows the Trial Chamber's bias and that it was guided by one concern only, namely to convict Imanishimwe "at all cost".[265] He argues that when placed in their context, the paragraphs of the Kupreskić et al. Appeal Judgement cited by the Trial Chamber[266] highlight the error the Trial Chamber committed by finding him guilty on the basis of allegations that were not pleaded in the Indictment but were improperly introduced in Witness LAC's evidence, given three weeks after commencement of trial, that is more than three years after the filing of the initial Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment.[267] Imanishimwe further contends that neither the Indictment nor the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief informed him of the Prosecution's intention to prosecute him under Article 6 (3) of the Statute. He affirms that the Prosecution limited the prosecutorial framework and, hence, the framework within which the case was brought before the Chamber under Article 6 (1) of the Statute.[268] After recalling some of the arguments advanced by Judge Dolenc in his separate and dissenting opinion,[269] Imanishimwe concludes that the Trial Chamber's error caused him serious prejudice which can be remedied only by reversal of the Trial Judgement.[270]

132. The Prosecution argues that failure to mention the events at Gashirabwoba in the Indictment was cured by disclosure of timely, clear, and consistent information.[271] The Prosecution submits that Imanishimwe was supplied with information pertaining to Gashirabwoba on 26 November 1999 through disclosure of the redacted statements of Witnesses LAC, LAB and LAH.[272] It further submits that it clearly stated its intention to show that Imanishimwe was involved in the massacre at the Gashirabwoba football field in paragraphs 2.29 to 2.40 and in Annexes 3 and 5[273] of its Pre-Trial Brief, which was filed two and a half months prior to the start of trial.[274] It emphasizes that the said paragraphs clearly informed Imanishimwe in detail of the allegations against him in relation to the Gashirabwoba massacre,[275] including: (1) the perpetrators of the crimes,[276] (2) the role played by Imanishimwe,[277] (3) the dates and times of the events,[278] (4) the place of the events,[279] (5) the identity of the soldiers,[280] (6) the acts performed,[281] (7) Imanishimwe's knowledge of the events,[282] and (8) Imanishimwe's failure to prevent or punish the crimes committed by the soldiers and the Interahamwe.[283] The Prosecution concludes that the way Imanishimwe approached and conducted his defence shows that he was provided with timely notice of the charges relating to the Gashirabwoba football field, and, as such, that he suffered no prejudice to his ability to prepare his defence.[284]

133. Imanishimwe submits that the defects in the Indictment were not cured by the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief or the disclosure of the statements of Witnesses LAB, LAC and LAH. He affirms that nothing in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief indicated that the Prosecution intended to prosecute him as a superior for acts allegedly committed by his subordinates at Gashirabwoba. He argues that paragraphs 1.36 to 1.40, to which the Prosecution refers, allege that he personally participated in the massacre, with nothing whatsoever indicating that he incurred responsibility as a superior for acts allegedly committed by his subordinates. The statements of Witnesses LAB, LAC and LAH are, according to him, equally silent on this point.[285] Imanishimwe argues that he thus sought to defend himself only in relation to his alleged personal involvement in the massacre within the meaning of Article 6 (1) of the Statute.[286] In response to the Prosecution's assertion that he failed to raise objections, he points out that he denounced the defects in the Indictment at the appropriate moments, that is "in limine litis" by means of two motions dated 28 January and 17 February 1998[287] and "at the end of the trial" in his final trial brief and closing arguments.[288] Lastly, Imanishimwe submits that the unredacted statements of Witnesses LAB, LAC and LAH were disclosed to him on 31 August 2000, only two weeks prior to the start of trial.[289] He thus reaffirms that he was not able "to prepare his defence in relation to the acts allegedly carried out by the soldiers under his responsibility on 12 April 1994".[290]

134. In its Judgement, under Preliminary Matters Relating to the Indictments, the Trial Chamber sets forth the principles it deems applicable to indictments.[291] The Appeals Chamber has already determined that the Trial Chamber committed some errors in its legal findings. The Appeals Chamber notes, by implication, that the Trial Chamber also erred in the way it applied the law to the facts. Indeed, although the Trial Chamber noted the vagueness of the Indictment with regard to the Gashirabwoba events, it proceeded to make factual findings on the evidence before it, without first determining whether Imanishimwe received timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the allegations in question. At no time did the Trial Chamber show that it considered whether the Accused was adequately informed of the material facts permitting him to defend himself against the charges relating to the acts committed at Gashirabwoba, even though it undertook to examine "to what extent the lack of notice and the ambiguity influenced the evidence".[292] After its analysis, the Trial Chamber made factual and legal findings in respect of these events, without meeting its obligation to consider whether the trial was rendered unfair by the "unacceptably" vague and ambiguous Indictment.[293] The Appeals Chamber considers this to be an error of law stemming directly from the application of the wrong legal standard. Now that the error has been identified, the Appeals Chamber does not deem it necessary to examine Imanishimwe's allegation that there was no reasoned opinion.

135. With regard to the allegation of bias on the part of the Trial Chamber, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it cannot entertain sweeping or abstract allegations that are neither substantiated nor detailed to rebut the presumption of impartiality enjoyed by the Judges of the Tribunal.[294] In the case at bar, the Appeals Chamber notes that Imanishimwe simply stated his allegation without substantiating it in any way. Hence, Imanishimwe's allegation that there was no reasoned opinion cannot be tantamount to a demonstration of bias on the part of the Trial Judges.

136. In order to determine whether the Trial Chamber's error invalidates its decision to convict Imanishimwe for crimes committed at the Gashirabwoba football field, the Appeals Chamber will have to examine if the defects in the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment were cured. In other words, after correcting the legal error by articulating the applicable criteria, the Appeals Chamber will now apply the legal standards to the circumstances of the case at hand and determine if the proceedings were not rendered unfair.

137. The Appeals Chamber can affirm the convictions against Imanishimwe for the Gashirabwoba massacre on the basis of paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment only if it is satisfied that the Prosecution provided Imanishimwe with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the Indictment, and thereby permitted Imanishimwe to prepare his defence.

(a) Burden of proof

138. First and foremost, the Appeals Chamber has to determine on which party lies the burden of proof. The Appeals Chamber recalls that, where the indictment turns out to be defective, an accused person who fails to object on this point at trial has the burden of proving on appeal that his ability to prepare his case was materially impaired. Where, however, the accused person objected at trial, the burden is on the Prosecution to prove on appeal that the accused's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.[295] In the instant case, the Appeals Chamber notes that, in the pre-trial phase, Imanishimwe filed two separate preliminary motions on defects of the Initial Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment, pursuant to Rule 72 (A) (ii) of the Rules. In his 29 January 1998 Motion, Imanishimwe denounced the lack of sufficient evidence to support the charges and the absence of a "concise statement of the charges against the Accused".[296] In the 24 March 1998 Motion, Imanishimwe requested that the Indictment be withdrawn on the grounds that it did not inform him of the exact nature and cause of the charges against him.[297] Imanishimwe reiterated his complaints about the vagueness of the Indictment in his Final Trial Brief and Closing Arguments, thereby denouncing the introduction of new charges related to Gashirabwoba.[298] In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Imanishimwe did not invoke the defects in the Indictment for the first time on appeal. It is therefore for the Prosecution to prove that Imanishimwe's ability to prepare his defence against the allegations pertaining to Gashirabwoba was not seriously impaired by the failure to provide him with information. In other words, the Prosecution has the burden of proving that the proceedings were not rendered unfair.

(b) Disclosure of Material Facts: Place, Date, Identity of the Perpetrators of the Massacre

139. The Prosecution affirms in its written submissions that it provided Imanishimwe with the material facts concerning the charges formulated in paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30 as from 26 November 1999. On that date, the Prosecution filed the redacted statements of Witnesses LAC, LAB and LAH. According to the Prosecution, these statements are the "sources of the particulars pertinent to the Gashirabwoba events". The Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that the mere service of copies of the statements of the witnesses the Prosecution intended to call to testify at trial, required by Rule 66 (A) (ii) of the Rules, was sufficient to provide Imanishimwe with the information necessary to cure the defects of the Indictment.[299]

140. The Appeals Chamber recognises, however, that the Prosecution did state its intention to charge Imanishimwe for the acts perpetrated at the Gashirabwoba football field in his Preliminary Pre-Trial Brief, filed on 24 May 2000.[300] The intention was confirmed in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, which was filed a few months thereafter. In the latter filing, the Prosecution clearly stated its intention to invoke Imanishimwe's participation in the massacres perpetrated at the Gashirabwoba football field on or around Tuesday, 12 April 1994.[301] The Prosecution supports the charge formulated in paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30 by specifying the exact date and place of one of the massacres of Tutsi civilians. The information pertaining to the acts of violence and to its direct perpetrators is contained in paragraphs 2.33 to 2.40 of the Pre-Trial Brief. It is also stated in paragraph 2.39 of the Pre-Trial Brief that soldiers under Imanishimwe's command participated in the acts of violence.

141. It emerges from these factors that the Prosecution did provide Imanishimwe with clear and consistent information regarding the place and dates of the massacre of Tutsi refugees, as well as the identity of the actual direct perpetrators. The Appeals Chamber however reserves its conclusions as to whether disclosure was made in a timely manner until later in the analysis.

(c) Criminal conduct attributed to the Accused

142. With regard to Imanishimwe's role in the commission of the crimes, the Appeals Chamber observes that paragraphs 2.31 to 2.40 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief clearly describe Imanishimwe's direct and personal involvement in the massacres perpetrated at the Gashirabwoba football field on 12 April 1994.[302] The Prosecution alleges that Imanishimwe committed both concrete acts of inciting, encouraging and aiding and abetting, and of giving criminal orders.

[301] Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, para. 2.29.

2.31. […] Imanishimwe encouraged with words the interahamwe to attack and exterminate the Tutsi causing them and others to flee to the football field. […]

2.33. It is alleged that immediately prior to the attack, Emmanuel Bagambiki and Samuel Imanishimwe brought grenades by vehicle to Gisuma commune, which were passed to Ananie Kanyamuhanda for distribution to the Interahamwe.

2.36. On or around 12 April 1994, early in the morning, the Interahamwe attacked the refugees who again successfully resisted. Later that same morning, Emmanuel Bagambiki and Samuel Imanishimwe came to the football field with others, including a group of armed soldiers.

2.38. Samuel Imanishimwe then ordered the Hutus on the field to separate from the Tutsis and that the Hutus should leave the field, which many did; he then ordered the soldiers and the interahamwe to encircle the field.

2.39 Soldiers under the direct command of Samuel Imanishmwe began firing at the crowd. It is alleged that an automatic firing weapon, positioned on the football field, was able to spray the crowd with bullets. It is alleged that the soldiers and Interahamwe threw grenades into the crowd at the same time.

2.40 After the shooting stopped, many people lay dead or fatally wounded. The Interahamwe finished off any survivors by stabbing with knives, hacking with machetes or bludgeoning to death with clubs. The Interahamwe and soldiers looted the belongings of the dead.

143. Imanishimwe contends, however, that he was not convicted of direct individual criminal responsibility under Article 6 (1) of the Statute, but as a superior, under Article 6 (3) of the Statute, for failure to prevent his subordinates from attacking the refugees. Indeed, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber found that it was not established that Imanishimwe ordered the attack or that he was present.[303]

(i) Form of Responsibility Charged Against Samuel Imanishimwe

144. Without necessarily examining further whether the information provided by the Prosecution outside the Indictment did remedy the Prosecution's shortcomings, the Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that Imanishimwe's ground of appeal can be admitted at this stage. Having read the contradictory information contained in the Prosecution's Pre-Trial Brief and in its Final Trial Brief, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Prosecution failed to pursue its allegation that Imanishimwe incurred responsibility for the crimes described in paragraphs 3.25 and 3.30 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment under Article 6 (3) of the Statute, i. e. the form of responsibility under which he was convicted.

145. While the Prosecution states its intention to charge Imanishimwe in Counts 7, 10 and 13 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment under Article 6 (3) of the Statute,[304] a careful reading of the Prosecution's earlier filings reveals a number of contradictions and inconsistencies with regard to Imanishimwe's responsibility for the said crimes as a superior.

146. The first such inconsistencies are found in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief: whereas in the headings of paragraphs 3.33 and 3.35 relating to Counts 7 and 10 against Imanishimwe, the Prosecution reiterates its intention to invoke Articles 6 (1) and 6 (3) of the Statute, which corresponds to the charges as formulated in the Indictment, the Prosecution states without any ambiguity in the body of these paragraphs that it intends to charge the Accused by virtue of his responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (1) only:

> The accused is charged in count seven of the indictment with genocide pursuant to Article 2 (3) (a) of the Statute of the Tribunal by virtue of his responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, for killing, causing of serious bodily or mental harm and deliberate infliction of conditions calculated to bring about the destruction of Tutsis in whole or in part, that occurred in the area of Cyangugu préfecture, Rwanda in April, May and June 1994, and outlined in the indictment. […] [305]
> 3.35 Crimes against Humanity (Murder, Extermination, Imprisonment and Torture), 6 (1) and 6 (3)
>
> At counts nine, ten, eleven and twelve of the indictment, Samuel Imanishimwe is charged with crimes against humanity, of murdering, extermination and imprisoning of civilians, by virtue of his responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute in and around Cyangugu préfecture in April, May and June 1994 as outlined in the indictment.
> In support of the said charge the Prosecution will prove beyond reasonable doubt that:

a. The accused instigated, ordered committed, aided and abetted in the extermination of thousands of Tutsi civilians in Cyangugu préfecture in April, May and June 1994 as outlined in the indictment.[…][306]

The Prosecution does not specify in its Pre-Trial Brief the form of responsibility alleged under Count 13 (serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II thereof).[307]

147. With regard to the allegations pertaining to Gashirabwoba in particular, the Appeals Chamber notes that the only indication given by the Prosecution of its intention to charge Imanishimwe as a superior is the allegations of participation of "soldiers under the direct command of Samuel Imanishimwe".[308] This information is nevertheless given as part of the factual evidence of Imanishimwe's direct participation in the massacre.[309] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber considers that the information that soldiers under Imanishimwe's command allegedly participated in the massacre is not in itself inconsistent with the charge of direct participation, which, in this instance, seems to be the Prosecution case.[310]

148. Similar inconsistencies are found in the Prosecution Final Trial Brief.[311] Whereas it states several times that Samuel Imanishimwe is charged for Counts 7, 10 and 13 pursuant to Articles 6 (1) and 6 (3) of the Statute[312], the Prosecution systematically refers to Imanishimwe's direct participation in the commission of the crimes relating to the material facts underpinning these three counts.[313] The facts that may form the basis for a 6 (3) conviction are systematically omitted.

149. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Prosecution failed to pursue the charges relating to Gashirabwoba under Article 6 (3) of the Statute, but focused solely on criminal responsibility under Article 6 (1) of the Statute, a form of responsibility that the Trial Chamber did not retain for the events in question.

150. The Appeals Chamber considers that for the foregoing reasons, the Trial Chamber could not have entered a finding of guilt under Article 6 (3) of the Statute for Counts 7, 10 and 13. On this basis

1147. Evidentiary basis establishing the Crime of Genocide:
1148. […] Specifically, the following supporting evidence establishes that [Bagambiki and Imanishimwe] committed genocide by directly participating in massacres and attacks with the specific intent to destroy, in whole or in part, ethnic Tutsi.
1149. Direct Participation in Massacres and Attacks:

only, the Appeals Chamber deems it possible to allow the ground of appeal and set aside the guilty verdict against Imanishimwe for the Gashirabwoba events based on Article 6 (3) of the Statute.

151. In any event, the Appeals Chamber finds, having examined the question as to whether Imanishimwe was adequately informed of the material facts underpinning the charges based on Article 6 (3) relating to the Gashirabwoba massacre, that he was not so informed, as will be shown in the following analysis.

(ii) Disclosure of material facts underpinning a charge based on Article 6 (3)

152. The Prosecution charges Samuel Imanishimwe with responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (3) in the Indictment, but omits to plead the material facts relating to this form of responsibility, especially with regard to Gashirabwoba, which is simply omitted. The Appeals Chamber recalls that where an accused is charged with responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute, the material facts which must be pleaded in the indictment are: (1) that the accused is the superior of subordinates sufficiently identified over whom he had effective control – in the sense of a material ability to prevent or punish criminal conduct – and for whose acts he is alleged to be responsible; (2) the criminal conduct of those others for whom he is alleged to be responsible; (3) the conduct of the accused by which he may be found to have known or had reason to know that the crimes were about to be committed or had been committed by his subordinate; and (4) the conduct of the accused by which he may be found to have failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the persons who committed them.[314]

153. First, as to whether Imanishimwe had effective control over subordinates, Imanishimwe could not have been unaware of the Prosecution's intention to establish that he exercised de facto and de jure authority over the soldiers at the Cyangugu military camp as the commander of the camp.[315] Specifically with regard to the Gashirabwoba massacre, the mention "soldier under the direct command of Samuel Imanishimwe" in paragraph 2.39 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief shows that Imanishimwe was informed of this material fact. The same applies to his knowledge of the alleged criminal conduct of his subordinates.[316]

154. Secondly, regarding the Accused's conduct, from which it may be deduced that he knew or had reason to know that his subordinates were about to commit crimes,[317] the Appeals Chamber notes that in its Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution omits to mention this material fact. This omission is easily explained by the fact that the Prosecution alleges that the Accused was physically present and made a direct and substantial contribution on the day of the massacre: the Accused's knowledge is inferred by implication, but as the only inference possible from the criminal conduct with which he is charged. At no moment is Samuel Imanishimwe's absence from the scene of the massacre envisaged. The summary of the statements of Witnesses LAH, LAB and LAC annexed to the Prosecution's Pre-Trial Brief are no more informative in this regard: the summary of Witness LAB's statement indicates that Imanishimwe was present during the attack, with no further details,[318] whereas the summary of [317] The Appeals Chamber has decided not to consider whether Imanishimwe was properly informed that the Prosecution intended to prove that he knew or had reason to know that his subordinates were about to commit crimes, given that Imanishimwe was found guilty for failing to prevent the crimes, a finding which requires prior knowledge of the commission of the crimes.

[318] Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, Annex 4: Summary of Anticipated Evidence, prepared by the Prosecution, p. 1412 (Registry pagination):

[Witness LAB will state that] in January 1994, Imanishimwe and Bagambiki came to Shagasha tea factory and recruited about 30 youths for military training which was conducted till April 1994 […]; that Imanishimwe trained them for a week in the forest on target practice using live ammunition while Bagambiki used to inspect training and brief trainees that they were

Witness LAC's statement says nothing about Imanishimwe's supposed knowledge of the attack.[319] It is mentioned in the summary of Witness LAH's statement that the witness "made daily updates on the progress of the killings to Bagambiki and Imanishimwe".[320] Such indication, which is not specifically related to the Gashirabwoba attack, with regard to which LAH mentions Imanishimwe's presence, is of little weight compared to the abundant information provided by the Prosecution about its intention to prove that Imanishimwe was present, and even ordered the massacre.

155. The Appeals Chamber cannot conclude that the Prosecution provided Imanishimwe with clear and consistent information of this allegation. In fact, it is interesting to note that the Prosecution in its Response Brief simply alleges that Imanishimwe was aware of the facts by relying on the Accused's own admission before the Trial Chamber on 22 January 2003.[321] Nothing in the relevant part of the trial transcript indicates that Imanishimwe was informed of the conduct by which the Prosecution intended to establish that he knew or had reasons to know that his subordinates were about to attack the refugees at Gashirabwoba.[322] Imanishimwe simply affirms that he knew that massacres had occurred at the Gashirabwoba football field. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Accused admits that he knew that a massacre had been perpetrated, and not that a massacre was about to be perpetrated, and his subordinates' participation is not mentioned.

156. Lastly, with regard to the Accused's conduct, from which it may be deduced that he failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the crimes from being committed,[323] the Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief says nothing about it. The Prosecution does not bring any particular information to the attention of the Chamber – by way of a passage in its Pre-Trial Brief, its Opening Statement or summaries of witness statements – to demonstrate it provided Imanishimwe with clear and consistent information regarding this material fact. In paragraph

MR. PRESIDENT:
Mr. Imanishimwe, just before I forget, because sometimes I make a note of these things but later on I forget, maybe you can assist me with something, and I am not sure whether I have the pronunciation right, so if I don't have it right, you can excuse me. Gashirabobwa park, or pitch, or football pitch, were you aware that any killings took place at that place?
THE WITNESS:
Yes, I heard that there were massacres there.
MR. PRESIDENT:
Very well, thank you.

[323] The Appeals Chamber does not deem it necessary to consider whether Imanishimwe was informed of the conduct by which the Prosecution was to make the case that he failed to take necessary and reasonable measures to punish the perpetrators of the crimes, given that he was found guilty of failure to prevent the crimes, and punishing the perpetrators thereof, which requires prior knowledge of the commission of the crimes.

50 (h) of its Response Brief, the Prosecution simply lists the violent acts committed by "the soldiers and the Interahamwe,"[324] as enumerated in the Pre-Trial Brief, without demonstrating to what extent such facts informed Imanishimwe of the reasons for which he was charged for failing to prevent the crimes committed at the Gashirabwoba football field on 12 April 1994. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has the burden of proving that the Indictment was cured of its defects, because Imanishimwe was provided with the necessary details concerning the charges against him.[325]

157. The Appeals Chamber notes that a certain amount of clear and consistent information on the charges relating to the Gashirabwoba massacre was provided by the Prosecution to the Accused in its Pre-Trial Brief, which was filed two months before the start of trial. The Appeals Chamber considers, however, that it does not need to rule on whether the information was provided timely – that is, in time for Imanishimwe to prepare his defence – since it is of the view that not all the necessary information was disclosed.[326] Imanishimwe's criminal conduct, described in sufficient detail by the Prosecution in his Pre-Trial Brief, is limited to his direct participation in the massacre. General reference to Article 6 (3) and to the fact that people "under his direct command" participated in the crimes is not sufficient to find that Imanishimwe was given clear and consistent information regarding the case he had to meet under Article 6 (3) of the Statute in respect of the acts committed by his subordinates in Gashirabwoba.

158. The Appeals Chamber recognises that, prior to the presentation of all of the evidence, the Prosecution cannot determine with certainty which of the charges brought against an accused will be proven. Cumulative charging is therefore allowed.[327] However, this does not relieve the Prosecution of its obligation to state all material facts underpinning each of the charges if it intends to plead several forms of responsibility, cumulatively or alternately. In the instant case, the Prosecution simply invokes Article 6 (3) of the Statute without providing the Accused with all the material facts underpinning the charges under that Article. The Prosecution seems to consider mere mention of Article 6 (3) to be the key to a conviction under this Article. The Appeals Chamber cannot but denounce this approach. It reaffirms that if the Prosecution intends to charge a superior with individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute, it must plead the material facts underpinning the charges in the indictment, and that failure to do so may be remedied only if the missing material facts are provided in a clear, consistent and timely manner.

(d) Unfairnes of the proceedings

159. The Prosecution contends, nonetheless, that the proceedings were not rendered unfair because it can be inferred from the whole trial record that Imanishimwe

"The Appellant's failure to act – besides the active role played by the Appellant, set out in subparagraphs b and f herein, the Appellant was aware of and omitted to prevent or punish soldiers and Interahamwe for committing these acts: they burned houses and killed individuals on the hills around Gashirabwoba (Pre-Trial Brief, paragraph 2.30); soldiers and Interahamwe threw grenades into the crowd at Gashirabwoba on 12 April 1994 (Pre-Trial Brief, paragraph 2.39); Interahamwe finished off the survivors by stabbing with knives, hacking with machetes and bludgeoning to death with clubs (Pre-Trial Brief, paragraph 2.40); Interahamwe and soldiers looted the belongings of the dead (Pre-Trial Brief, paragraph 2.40)."
[325] See supra, para. 138.
[326] In the light of the conclusions regarding Imanishimwe's 10th ground of appeal, the Appeals Chamber does not consider it necessary to discuss whether the material facts which had to be pleaded to allow Imanishimwe's conviction for the events at Gashirabwoba under Article 6 (1) of the Statute were communicated to him in a timely manner. See below, Ch. III, G, paras. 353-377.
[327] Čelebići Appeal Judgement, para 400.

"understood and was ready at trial for the Prosecution case, based on the charges relating to Gashirabwoba".[328]

160. In support of its assertion, the Prosecution argues that Imanishimwe failed to raise a specific objection to any evidence being led on the Gashirabwoba massacre[329] and did not require further time for cross-examination, or to conduct further investigation.[330] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, this does not demonstrate that Imanishimwe was informed of the fact that the Prosecution intended to charge him with responsibility for those acts as a superior. The Appeals Chamber concluded earlier that Imanishimwe was informed of some of the material facts relating to the Gashirabwoba charges. It was therefore normal for him to defend against those facts at trial. The Appeals Chamber notes that none of the evidence adduced by the Prosecution in respect of the events at Gashirabwoba was limited to Imanishimwe's responsibility as a superior, thereby necessitating an objection on his part or the request for additional time for the preparation of his defence.

161. The Prosecution contends that Imanishimwe's attitude at trial shows that he was prepared to meet the charges relating to Gashirabwoba. First, it invokes the fact that Counsel for Imanishimwe cross-examined Witnesses LAC, LAB and LAH in detail on the Gashirabwoba events.[331] Having read the passages of the trial records cited by the Prosecution, the Appeals Chamber cannot consider that the way Counsel for Imanishimwe conducted the cross-examination of Witnesses LAC and LAH[332] supports the Prosecution's position: the cross-examination did not touch on the evidence relating to the form of responsibility for which Imanishimwe was found guilty.

162. The Prosecution also asserts that Imanishimwe adduced further evidence on the Gashirabwoba events.[333] The only example of the additional evidence the Prosecution cites is Exhibit D-IS 2 presented on 10 October 2002. In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, the introduction of this exhibit – a rudimentary sketch of the Gashirabwoba football field and its immediate surroundings – does not in any way demonstrate that Imanishimwe knew that he was to defend himself against charges based on Article 6 (3) of the Statute. The Prosecution further asserts that Defence Witnesss PBA and PKA testified in an attempt to provide an alibi for Imanishimwe for 12 April 1994.[334] The calling of these two witnesses and the strategy adopted by Counsel for Imanishimwe at trial strengthen the Appeals Chamber's conviction that Imanishimwe thought that he was to defend himself against the charge relating to his responsibility for direct participation in the crimes, and not against his responsibility as a superior. Lastly, the Prosecution avers that Imanishimwe himself testified about the Gashirabwoba massacres, "stating that he knew about it, simply denying being involved".[335] Here again, the Appeals Chamber considers that this evidence, which is insufficient to conclude that Imanishimwe was informed of all the material facts underpinning the charges based on Article 6 (3) of the Statute, seems to demonstrate that Imanishimwe was responding to a charge of direct participation in the Gashirabwoba massacre.

163. Lastly, the Prosecution argues that (1) in his Opening Statement, Imanishimwe made specific reference to the events at Gashirabwoba, not in the context of the Appellant's lack of knowledge of these events, but simply in order to state that he had not participated in them;[336] and (2) that the testimony of Witnesses LAC, LAH and LAB was examined closely in Imanishimwe's Final Trial Brief.[337] The Appeals Chamber considers that these arguments do not advance the Prosecution case. Contrary to the purpose for which they are advanced, they end up convincing the Appeals Chamber that Imanishimwe was not informed that he had to defend himself against charges for responsibility as a superior for failure to prevent the massacre. It is, indeed, a matter of concern to note that Imanishimwe's whole strategy in relation to Gashirabwoba is essentially confined to proving that he was not present at the scene on 12 April 1994.

4. Conclusion

164. The Appeals Chamber considers that Imanishimwe's ability to prepare his defence in relation to the Gashirabwoba events was materially impaired. Aside from the fact that Imanishimwe was not provided with timely, clear and coherent information about the material facts underpinning the charges that the Prosecution intended to bring against him under Article 6 (3) of the Statute, the Appeals Chamber finds that Imanishimwe was entitled to infer from the post-indictment filings that the Prosecution had decided not to pursue the Gashirabwoba charges based on Article 6 (3) of the Statute. In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, Imanishimwe was not informed that he had to defend himself against a charge alleging responsibility as a superior for the Gashirabwoba massacre. This set of circumstances rendered the proceedings unfair. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber could not enter a finding of guilt on the basis of Article 6 (3) of the Statute for the acts committed at the Gashirabwoba football field.

165. The Appeals Chamber allows this ground of appeal and sets aside the guilty verdict against Imanishimwe entered under Article 6 (3) of the Statute for the acts committed at the Gashirabwoba football field, that is, for genocide (Count 7 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment), for extermination as a crime against humanity (Count 10 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment) and for serious violations of the Common Article 3 to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 13 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment). The impact, if any, of this decision on the sentence will be addressed later in this Judgement.

III. THE PROSECUTION'S APPEAL

A. STANDARD OF PROOF (5TH GROUND OF APPEAL)

1. The Application of the standard of proof

166. Under the fifth ground of appeal, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber committed an error of law with respect to the application of the criminal standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt. It contends that

> "instead of reserving the application of the criminal standard of proof for the determination of the ultimate issues of guilt or innocence in the case, the Trial Chamber applied it to the assessment of individual items of evidence presented at the trial, treated in isolation from one another".[338]

The Prosecution submits that it was not required to prove each and every individual circumstance alleged against the Accused beyond a reasonable doubt, but that the Trial Chamber should have considered the whole of the evidence in relation to each of the counts.[339] Referring to the jurisprudence of the ICTY, the Prosecution concedes that in order to establish the guilt of the accused it must prove the material facts beyond a reasonable doubt, but it argues that this does not apply to background facts. In the present case, the Prosecution reproaches the Trial Chamber with considering itself bound to establish also these background facts beyond a reasonable doubt.[340] In the view of the Prosecution, "the criminal standard of proof [beyond reasonable doubt] should only apply at the verdict stage, and not at the earlier fact-finding stage".[341] According to the Prosecution, this ground of appeal affects all the verdicts rendered against Ntagerura, Bagambiki and Imanishimwe.[342]

167. Bagambiki and Ntagerura maintain that the material elements of the crimes have to be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[343] Imanishimwe argues that an indictment should not contain "general facts", which implies that each fact contained in an indictment has to be considered as an element of the crime, and therefore has to be proved by the Prosecution.[344] In fact, Imanishimwe submits, each contested element of the charges should be proved.[345]

168. In the understanding of the Appeals Chamber, the Prosecution raises two closely interlinked arguments to support this ground of appeal: first, the standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt should not, as the Trial Chamber did, be applied at the fact-finding stage of the trial, but rather to the "ultimate issues of guilt or innocence in the case";[346] and second, the Trial Chamber erroneously failed to consider the evidence as a whole, but applied the standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt to each individual piece of evidence.[347]

(a) Application of the Standard of Proof at the Fact-Finding Stage

169. As to the first argument, the Prosecution relies on a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, R. v. Morin, to support its position that the standard of proof has to be applied at the verdict stage only, but not to the individual facts of the case.[348] However, this decision does not support the contention that the individual facts of the case do not have to be proven beyond a reasonable doubt:

> During the process of deliberation, the jury must consider the evidence as a whole and determine whether guilt is established by the prosecution beyond a reasonable doubt. This of necessity requires that each element of the offence or issue be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[349]

In fact, Judge Sopinka, speaking for the majority, endorsed the conclusion in another case of the Supreme Court of Canada, Nadeau v. The Queen:

> The jurors cannot accept his [a 'Crown witness'] version, or any part of it, unless they are satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt, having regard to all the evidence, that the events took place in this manner; otherwise, the accused is entitled, unless a fact has been established beyond a reasonable doubt, to the finding of fact the most favourable to him, provided of course that it is based on evidence in the record and not mere speculation.[350]

In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that some of the language used in R. v. Morin, which could be construed to support the Prosecution's position at first view, is due to the fact that the issue in

R. v. Morin was the instruction given to the jury by the trial judge. When considering this case in the context of the Tribunal, it has to be borne in mind that here the trier of fact is not a jury, but a panel of professional judges. In the case of the jury, the one question which has to be answered is the question of guilty or not guilty, and the factual findings supporting this conclusion are neither spelled out nor can they be challenged by one of the parties. The instruction given to the jury concentrates on this "ultimate issue" of the case. In this Tribunal, on the other hand, Trial Chambers cannot restrict themselves to the ultimate issue of guilty or not guilty; they have an obligation pursuant to Article 22 (2) of the Statute, translated into Rule 88 (C) of the Rules, to give a reasoned opinion.[351]

170. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Article 20 (3) of the Statute provides that an accused shall be presumed innocent until proven guilty. This Article embodies a general principle of law, that the Prosecution bears the onus of establishing the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt.[352] With respect to the Trial Chamber's Judgement, Rule 87 (A) of the Rules clearly states that a finding of guilt may be reached only when a majority of the Trial Chamber is satisfied that guilt has been proved beyond reasonable doubt. Although the Rules are silent as to whether the same standard applies at the fact-finding stage, and, if so, with respect to which facts, the ICTY Appeals Chamber has left no doubt that the standard of proof "beyond reasonable doubt" is not limited to the ultimate question of guilt:

> [T]he Prosecution argues that […] the evidence of Witness H '…forms nothing more than a constituent in the entire composition of evidence against the Appellant for count 1 [persecution].' The Appeals Chamber disagrees. The Prosecution's argument reflects the same misconception that the attack on Witness H's house was only evidence of persecution, not a material fact integral to the crime of persecution as identified in the preceding discussion on the defects in the Amended Indictment. The persecution conviction of Zoran and Mirjan Kupreškić hinged upon their participation in the attack on Witness H's house. The Prosecution's argument that the Trial Chamber was at liberty to employ anything other than the standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt in assessing Witness H's evidence implicating Zoran and Mirjan Kupreškić in that attack cannot be sustained.[353]

(b) Piecemeal approach to the evidence

171. To support its argument that the Trial Chamber erroneously adopted a piecemeal approach to the evidence, the Prosecution refers to the Musema Appeal Judgement. There, the Appeals Chamber endorsed the view of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Tadić Judgement on Allegations of Contempt:

> [A] tribunal of fact must never look at the evidence of each witness separately, as if it existed in a hermetically sealed compartment; it is the accumulation of all the evidence in the case which must be considered. The evidence of one witness, when considered by itself, may appear at first to be of poor quality, but it may gain strength from other evidence in the case. The converse also holds true.[354]

172. In the Appeals chamber's view, the case law referred to by the Prosecution does not address the issue of the standard of proof applicable to any particular fact. The duty of the Trial Chamber to consider all the evidence does not relieve it from the duty to apply the required standard of proof to any particular fact.

173. The Prosecution quotes as one of the examples for the alleged error of law by applying the standard of proof to individual items of evidence the Trial Chamber's conclusions in paragraph 118 of the Trial Judgement.[355] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not look at the testimony of the different witnesses in isolation, but considered it in the light of other evidence. It took into account the testimony of a Defence witness (Witness BLB), which created doubts as to the credibility of Witness LAH in general, and also that of Prosecution Witness NL, but found that it did not corroborate the testimony of Witness LAH. The Trial Chamber's approach clearly follows the principle enunciated in the Tadic Judgement on Allegations of Contempt. Only at the end of this analysis does the Trial Chamber apply the standard of proof and determine whether the fact in question was proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

174. It appears to the Appeals Chamber that the Prosecution's argument does not clearly distinguish between the different stages of the fact-finding process which a Trial Chamber undertakes before it can enter a conviction:

- At the first stage, the Trial Chamber has to assess the credibility of the relevant evidence presented. This cannot be undertaken by a piecemeal approach. Individual items of the evidence, such as the testimony of different witnesses, or documents admitted into evidence, have to be analysed in the light of the entire body of evidence adduced. Thus, even if there are some doubts as to the reliability of the testimony of a certain witness, that testimony may be corroborated by other pieces of evidence leading the Trial Chamber to conclude that the witness is credible. Or, on the other hand, a seemingly convincing testimony may be called into question by other evidence which shows that evidence to lack credibility.
- Only after the analysis of all the relevant evidence, can the Trial Chamber determine whether the evidence upon which the Prosecution relies should be accepted as establishing the existence of the facts alleged, notwithstanding the evidence upon which the Defence relies. At this fact-finding stage, the standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt is applied to establish the facts forming the elements of the crime or the form of responsibility alleged against the accused, as well as with respect to the facts which are indispensable for entering a conviction.
- At the final stage, the Trial Chamber has to decide whether all of the constitutive elements of the crime and the form of responsibility alleged against the accused have been proven. Even if some of the material facts pleaded in the indictment are not established beyond reasonable doubt,[356] a Chamber might enter a conviction provided that having applied the law to those material facts it accepted beyond reasonable doubt, all the elements of the crime charged and of the mode of responsibility are established by those facts.

In light of the above analysis, the Appeals Chamber agrees with the Prosecution that "applying the criminal standard of proof piecemeal to individual items of evidence" would amount to an error.[357]

(c) Conclusion

175. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the presumption of innocence requires that each fact on which an accused's conviction is based must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Prosecution's argument that [355] Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 193, fn. 257. Prosecution Witness LAH had testified that he had taken part in a meeting at the Bushenge market, where, according to the witness, Ntagerura had said that in a short time President Habyarimana would no longer be there, "and at that time, the fate of the Tutsi will be sealed". (See Trial Judgement, para. 114, referring to T.10 October 2000, pp. 63, 104, 109-110; T.11 October 2000, pp. 25, 26. The Trial Chamber found that the testimony of another Prosecution witness, Witness NL, did not corroborate Witness LAH's testimony. The Trial Chamber therefore concluded that it was not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that Ntagerura took part in the meeting (Judgement, para. 118).

[356] The Appeals Chamber considers that the "material facts" which have to be pleaded in the indictment to provide the accused with the information necessary to prepare his defence have to be distinguished from the facts which have to be proved beyond reasonable doubt.

"if facts which are essential to a finding of guilt are still doubtful, notwithstanding the support of other facts, this will produce a doubt in the mind of the Trial Chamber that guilt has been proven beyond a reasonable doubt".[358]

Thus, if one of the links is not proved beyond a reasonable doubt, the chain will not support a conviction.

2. Individual Instances of the alleged misapplication of the standard of proof

176. To support its position, the Prosecution identifies a number of instances where the Trial Chamber, in the Prosecution's view, incorrectly applied the standard of proof. The Appeals Chamber will examine each of these instances relied upon by the Prosecution to determine whether the treatment of the evidence reveals a factual error on the part of the Trial Chamber. In addition, the Prosecution refers to an annex to its Brief, containing tables to "illustrate [the Prosecution's] argument visually".[359] The Appeals Chamber accepts them as an illustration and, accordingly, declines to discuss in detail the individual facts contained in the tables.

(a) Bagambiki's Involvement in the Gashirabwoba massacre and the killing of refugees removed from Cyangugu Cathedral and Kamarampaka Stadium

177. The Prosecution submits that one example of the Trial Chamber's erroneous approach is its treatment of Bagambiki's role in the events related to the Gashirabwoba massacre and the murder of refugees removed from Cyangugu Cathedral and Kamarampaka Stadium.[360] The Prosecution argues that the majority of the Trial Chamber looked at these incidents in isolation, rather than viewing them in conjunction with one another, and with other evidence. Viewed this way, the Prosecution argues, they reveal a pattern, implicating Bagambiki unequivocally in the crimes.[361]

178. In response, Bagambiki argues that the Trial Chamber did recognize a pattern in the events, namely, that he tried to help and to protect the refugees.[362]

179. The Trial Chamber found that on 16 April 1997 Bagambiki, Imanishimwe and others selected 12 Tutsi from the refugees assembled at Kamarampaka Stadium, who were subsequently killed together with 4 other Tutsi refugees, who had been selected from Cyangugu Cathedral by the same authorities some time earlier.[363] The majority of the Trial Chamber found that it lacked sufficient evidence to conclude that Bagambiki participated in the killing of the 16 refugees.[364] In paragraph 437 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber found that on 12 April 1994 a large number of refugees had assembled at the Gashirabwoba football field. After they had been attacked in the morning, Bagambiki arrived and tried to reassure them and promised to send soldiers to protect them. An hour later, armed guards and soldiers surrounded the refugees and opened fire on them. The Trial Chamber found that it was not satisfied that Bagambiki participated in the attack.[365]

180. In both instances, the Trial Chamber relied on the evidence of a number of witnesses to support its findings. In the instance of the 16 refugees, there is no direct evidence that Bagambiki participated in their killing. The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber erroneously failed to draw the only reasonable inference from the circumstantial evidence.[366] This, however, is not a question of the alleged piecemeal approach to the evidence. Regarding the findings relating to the Gashirabwoba football field massacre, the Trial Chamber relied mainly on the evidence of one witness (Witness LAC), but rejected the testimony of Witnesses LAH and LAB. Although Witnesses LAH and LAB, the Trial Chamber reasoned, provided some measure of corroboration for their assertions that Bagambiki and Imanishimwe participated in the attack, their accounts contained inconsistencies and were incompatible with Witness LAC's testimony.[367] The reasoning of the Trial Chamber does not reveal an erroneous approach; on the contrary, the Trial Chamber analysed the entire body evidence without isolating any individual item.

181. Also, when viewing the two incidents in conjunction, a reasonable Trial Chamber could still arrive at the conclusion that Bagambiki's participation was not proved. The Trial Chamber's reasoning with respect to the killing of the 16 refugees and the Gashirabwoba football field massacre does not reveal an erroneous application of the standard of proof.

(b) Paragraphs 3.12 through 3.22 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment

182. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber did not consider a number of paragraphs of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment, because they were too vague or did not plead identifiable criminal conduct on the part of the Accused. In the Prosecution's view, the entire Indictment and all of the evidence should have been considered as a whole.[368]

183. The Appeals Chamber notes that most of the Prosecution's argument does not relate to the application of the standard of proof, but to the Trial Chamber's consideration of the Indictments, which has already been discussed in Section II (D) of this Judgement.[369]

184. With regard to paragraph 3.22 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber found that gendarmes guarded the Kamarampaka Stadium, curtailing the movement of the refugees who were staying there. It argues that the Trial Chamber again adopted "a piecemeal approach to the consideration of the evidence",[370] by finding that it lacked

> "sufficient reliable evidence to determine whether the restriction on the refugees' movement was principally to keep them incarcerated or to ensure their protection".[371]

The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber should have been considered all of the available evidence to "determine whether the presence of the gendarmes was benign or sinister".[372]

185. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution does not identify other evidence which would have allowed the Trial Chamber to draw more far-reaching conclusions on the culpability of the Accused. Bagambiki correctly points out that the Trial Chamber found, for instance, that gendarmes guarded the refugees who had assembled at the Cyangugu Cathedral and deterred two attacks on them on 11 April 1994, only a few days before the refugees were transferred to the Kamarampaka Stadium.[373] The Trial Chamber subsequently found that the refugees were transferred from the Kamarampaka Stadium to a camp at Nyarushishi. Both during the transfer and the stay at the camp the refugees were guarded by gendarmes, who pushed back at least one attempted attack on the camp.[374] In the light of these findings, which are not contested by the Prosecution, the Appeals Chamber does not find any error in the Trial Chamber's application of the standard of proof.

(c) The execution of 16 Tutsi in Gataranda

186. The Prosecution challenges the Trial Chamber's conclusion in paragraph 337:

> "The Chamber lacks sufficient evidence to determine if the execution of the sixteen Tutsis occurred at Gataranda".[375]

In this passage, the Prosecutor submits,

> "there is clear misunderstanding of the role and function of the application of the ultimate burden of proof that is to be applied to the evidence as a whole to determine the guilt of the accused, not applied to each individual piece of evidence".[376]

187. The Appeals Chamber disagrees. The killing of 16 refugees is not an individual piece of evidence, but a material fact which had to be established in order to constitute a basis for conviction. As a material fact, it had to be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

(d) Ntagerura's Participation in meetings

(i) Alleged refusal to consider evidence outside the temporal scope of the Indictment

188. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber refused to consider the evidence related to a number of facts, only because these facts did not fall within the temporal scope of paragraphs 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 and 19 of the Ntagerura Indictment.[377] The Prosecution argues that this evidence should have been taken into consideration, because it was relevant to understanding the evidence that did fall into the temporal scope of these paragraphs.[378]

189. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution misread the Trial Judgement. In paragraph 149 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber indeed noted that the facts the Prosecution is referring to "fall outside the temporal scope of paragraphs 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 and 19".[379] However, in a footnote to this observation, the Trial Chamber stated that it had considered these facts in other parts of the Trial Judgement, and gave references to the relevant parts of the Trial Judgement.[380]

(ii) The Meeting at Bushenge Market, February 1993

190. The Prosecution goes on to challenge the Trial Chamber's considerations with respect to the very facts which it alleged only a few paragraphs earlier not to have been taken into consideration at all by the Trial Chamber. For example, the Prosecution takes issue with the Trial Chamber's conclusion regarding a meeting at Bushenge Market in February 1993.[381] The Trial Chamber had analysed the testimony of Witness LAN, who had testified that Ntagerura had addressed the gathering and had made statements about repulsing the "Inkotanyi" and "Inyenzi", terms which had been used, as the witness explained, to describe the entire Tutsi ethnic group.[382] The Trial Chamber found that it could not accept

> "the unsubstantiated interpretation proffered by Witness LAN, namely, that Ntagerura's words suggested a general and indiscriminate attack on Tutsi civilians".[383]

The Prosecution submits that this evidence might have been better assessed in the light of evidence of subsequent events and Ntagerura's involvement in them.[384]

191. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber relied on the testimony of Witnesses LAD, LAN and NG-1, and considered also the hearsay evidence of a Defence witness, Hope. The Trial Chamber compared their testimonies and came to the conclusion that, despite some differences between their accounts, their evidence was largely consistent.[385] This reasoning does not lend support to the Prosecution's view that the Trial Chamber employed a fragmented and "piecemeal" approach towards the evidence. The Prosecution does not identify the "evidence of subsequent events"[386] the Trial Chamber should have taken into consideration. The Appeals Chamber understands that the Prosecution refers to the allegations that Ntagerura participated in meetings at the Hotel Izure, Gatare and the Cyangugu Préfecture Office.[387]

(iii) Meetings at the Hotel Izure, Gatare and the Cyangugu Préfecture Office

192. Regarding the alleged meetings at the Hotel Izure, Gatare and the Cyangugu Préfecture Office, the Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber's treatment of these allegations is a clear demonstration of the effect of the Trial Chamber's method of considering the individual pieces of evidence in isolation.[388] The Trial Chamber, the Prosecution submits, even used its incorrect application of the "ultimate burden of proof" as a reason for its further incorrect application in another instance.[389]

193. Ntagerura responds that the relevance of these meetings to the Prosecution's case was unclear. Either, he argues, the Prosecution tried to prove that Ntagerura instigated genocide during these meetings, or it tried to prove that Ntagerura had the mens rea with regard to genocide. In either case, Ntagerura submits, the meetings were material facts, which had to be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[390]

194. With regard to the alleged meeting at the Hotel Izure, the Trial Chamber analysed the testimony of Witness LAI, the only witness testifying about this meeting, and concluded that his testimony was not credible.[391] Witness LAI was also the only witness who testified about the meetings in Gatare and the Cyangugu Préfecture Office; also in this instance, the Trial Chamber declined to accept his testimony.[392]

195. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence regarding the three meetings does not reveal an erroneous application of the standard of proof. The Prosecution has not identified any other evidence supporting Ntagerura's presence at anyone of these three meetings. The Trial Chamber did not analyse Witness LAI's testimony with regard to each of the meetings in isolation; it rather found that it could not rely on the uncorroborated evidence of a witness whom it had found unreliable in other instances. In particular, the Prosecutions takes issue with the Trial Chamber's argument that it was not convinced of Ntagerura's participation in the Gatare meeting, because this meeting had been planned at the Hotel Izure meeting, where Ntagerura's presence had not been proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[393] Thus, the Prosecution argues, the Trial Chamber used one erroneous conclusion as a reason for another erroneous conclusion.[394] The Appeals Chamber finds that, given the fact that Witness LAI was the only witness to testify about both events, this approach was not unreasonable. Moreover, the Trial Chamber did exactly what, in the Prosecution's view, it failed to do in other instances: it analysed the evidence relevant to one fact in the light of the evidence relevant to other facts. The Prosecution may not be satisfied with the result of this analysis; but this cannot form the basis of a successful appeal.

(iv) Considering the entire body of evidence related to the meetings

196. The Prosecution submits repeatedly that the Trial Chamber should have analysed the evidence in a cumulative way, that is, by taking into account the whole of the Prosecution's case.[395] However, the Appeals Chamber recalls its earlier observation that a factual allegation which is not supported by sufficient evidence cannot be used to support the finding of another fact, for which there is equally insufficient evidence. This applies in particular to Ntagerura's alleged participation in the meetings at Hotel Izure, Gatare and the Cyangugu Préfecture Office: a witness, who is found not to be credible with respect to one fact, does not become more reliable because he gives equally doubtful evidence about another related fact.

3. Conclusion

197. The Appeals Chamber rejects the Prosecution's argument that the Trial Chamber made an erroneous application of the standard of proof. Moreover, the Prosecution has not shown that the Trial Chamber employed a "piecemeal" approach to the evidence, analysing individual items of evidence in isolation from each other. Accordingly, this ground of appeal is dismissed.

B. ASSESSMENT OF ACCOMPLICE EVIDENCE (6TH GROUND OF APPEAL)

198. Under the sixth ground of appeal, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in its approach to accomplice evidence. This error, the Prosecution argues, affected the Trial Chamber's assessment of the testimony of Witnesses LAP, LAI, LAJ, LAH, LAB, LAK and LAM. According to the Prosecution, this ground of appeal affects all the verdicts rendered against Ntagerura, Bagambiki and Imanishimwe.[396] The Prosecution advances four sub-grounds under this ground:

(1) The Trial Chamber applied an incorrect legal test to accomplice evidence;[397]
(2) The Trial Chamber failed to consider evidence in corroboration of the accomplice evidence;[398]
(3) The Trial Chamber did not apply the same caution to accomplice evidence presented by the Defence;[399] and

(4) The Trial Chamber did not allow the Prosecution to cross-examine Defence witnesses about their role as accomplices.[400]

1. The legal standard applied by the Trial Chamber

199. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in presuming that accomplice evidence necessarily had to be viewed with caution, without a closer analysis of the witness' credibility.[401] In fact, the Prosecution argues, the Trial Chamber did not accept the evidence of any of the seven alleged "accomplice witnesses", showing that the Trial Chamber's approach of "automatic suspicion" towards the accomplice witnesses led to a "wholesale dismissal of their evidence".[402]

200. In response, Bagambiki, Imanishimwe and Ntagerura assert that the Trial Chamber's approach was correct. Imanishimwe argues that the Trial Chamber analysed the evidence of the accomplice witnesses before arriving at the conclusion that the witnesses were not credible.[403] Bagambiki adds that the Trial Chamber did not reject the evidence only because it was accomplice evidence.[404] Bagambiki, Imanishimwe and Ntagerura point to the fact that the witnesses in question were detained in the Cyangugu prison and confessed that they participated in crimes in 1994.[405] Ntagerura points out that all of them were awaiting sentence from the Rwandan courts and had an evident interest in giving evidence implicating "[former Rwandan authorities]" in the crimes.[406]

201. The Prosecution replies that the Trial Chamber, by automatically applying "caution" to the testimony, chose a wrong starting point in its assessment, thus tainting its analysis.[407] The argument that the witnesses were motivated by self-serving interests is dismissed by the Prosecution as "unfounded conjecture",[408] adding that it was denied by the witnesses in question.[409]

202. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution mainly takes issue with the formula employed by the Trial Chamber when assessing the evidence of the seven witnesses in question: "[t]he Chamber notes that Witnesses […] are alleged accomplices of the accused and, as such, views their testimonies with caution."[410]

203. In the Niyitegeka Appeal Judgement, the Appeals Chamber stated that the ordinary meaning of the term "accomplice" is "an association in guilt, a partner in crime".[411] In its analysis of the applicable jurisprudence, the Prosecution points to the Čelebići and the Kordić and Čerkez cases of the ICTY. In both cases, the Prosecution submits, the Trial Chamber believed the evidence of witnesses notwithstanding the fact that they could be qualified as accomplices of the accused.[412] However, the Appeals Chambers notes that in both cases the Trial Chamber did not accept the testimony without caution. In Čelebići, the Trial Chamber noted that it had "critically analysed the evidence" of the witness in question,[413] and in Kordić and Čerkez, the Trial Chamber observed that "[i]n common law jurisdictions the evidence of Witness AT would be regarded as that of an accomplice and would be treated with great caution".[414] With regard to this witness, Dario Kordić argued on appeal that the Trial Chamber should have required corroboration of his testimony. The ICTY Appeals Chamber rejected this argument, holding that a Trial Chamber may convict an accused on the basis of the testimony of a single witness, "although such evidence must be assessed with the appropriate caution, and care must be taken to guard against the exercise of an underlying motive on the part of the witness".[415]

204. The Trial Chambers of this Tribunal employ the same cautionary approach when assessing the evidence given by accomplice witnesses. In Niyitegeka, the Trial Chamber noted with respect to the testimony of alleged accomplices "that it has exercised caution in its deliberations on such evidence",[416] and observed later that the evidence of accomplice witnesses "is subject to special caution".[417] On appeal, the Appeals Chamber held that accomplice evidence is not per se unreliable, especially where an accomplice may be thoroughly cross-examined. The Appeals Chamber stated, however, that considering that accomplice witnesses may have motives or incentives to implicate the accused person before the Tribunal, a Chamber, when weighing the probative value of such evidence, is bound to carefully consider the totality of the circumstances in which it was tendered.[418]

205. The Appeals Chamber finds that, contrary to the Prosecution's arguments, nothing in the jurisprudence of both this Tribunal and the ICTY suggest that the adoption of a cautious approach by a Trial Chamber when assessing accomplice evidence is erroneous. The Appeals Chamber further disagrees with the Prosecution's argument that such approach is inconsistent with the fact that national rules requiring corroboration of accomplice evidence have been abolished.[419] Even if national rules do not require corroboration of accomplice evidence, they certainly do not prevent the trial judge from exercising caution when analysing this type of evidence. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses the argument that the Trial Chamber applied an incorrect legal test to accomplice evidence.

206. An analysis of the above-mentioned jurisprudence demonstrates that in assessing the reliability of accomplice evidence the Trial Chamber must consider whether the particular witness has a specific motive to testify as it did and to lie.[420] A reading of the Trial Judgement shows that the Trial Chamber merely stated that the witnesses in question were "alleged accomplices", without elaborating on the nature of this alleged complicity or analysing whether any of these witnesses had a personal motive to give false testimony. However, the fact that the Trial Chamber did not specifically refer to such motives does not mean that it failed to take them into consideration. The Appeals Chamber notes that a Trial Chamber is not obliged to justify every step in its reasoning. In particular, it is within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to evaluate the evidence and to consider whether the evidence as a whole is credible, without explaining its decision in every detail.[421]

207. During the Appeals hearing, Counsel for the Prosecution cited as an example of the alleged error the Trial Chamber's conclusions regarding an event that occurred on 20 January 1994, when Ntagerura allegedly went in a helicopter to Bugarama or Bigogwe to distribute weapons there. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber dismissed the evidence about Ntagerura's presence only because it was given by accomplice witnesses.[422]

208. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber dedicated two entire paragraphs to a careful discussion of the evidence of the three witnesses in question, Witnesses LAI, LAJ and LAP. It noted the contradiction between their account and the testimony of Witness Gratien Kabiligi,[423] and went on to discuss discrepancies between Witness LAJ's testimony and his earlier statement, which it found to be irreconcilable.[424] Only after this analysis did the Trial Chamber "recall" that Witnesses LAI, LAJ and LAP were "alleged accomplices" and that their testimony therefore had to be viewed with caution.[425] Hence, the Appeals Chamber does not agree with the Prosecution that this discussion of Witness LAI's, LAJ's and LAP's credibility "did not proceed along fair lines".[426]

209. In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution misrepresented the Trial Chamber's reasoning. Instead of "finding" that Witness LAI, LAJ and LAP fabricated their evidence, as the Prosecution characterized the Trial Chamber's conclusion,[427] the Trial Chamber "acknowledged" the possibility "that the testimonies […] about this event may have been fabricated"[428] and concluded that > "the Prosecution failed to prove Ntagerura's participation in these events beyond a reasonable doubt".[429]

The Prosecution has not shown that this conclusion was not open to a reasonable trier of fact.

210. As a second example of the alleged error, the Prosecution cited the Trial Chamber's conclusion with regard to Witnesses BLB and JNQ and the letter purportedly written by Witness LAP.[430] This issue is discussed in detail below, when examining the Prosecution's eighth ground of appeal.[431]

2. Corroborated accomplice evidence

211. As its second sub-ground of appeal, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider evidence corroborating the accomplice evidence.[432] The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber required every part of the accomplice evidence to be corroborated by other evidence, without considering whether it could rely also on the uncorroborated parts of the accomplice evidence.[433] The Prosecution argues that once a "suspect witness" is shown to be telling the truth on a number of issues, even if these issues do not implicate the accused, a tribunal of fact may have confidence also in the uncorroborated parts of this witness' testimony.[434]

212. Bagambiki responds that a Trial Chamber may reject the whole testimony of a witness once it found that his credibility was damaged, and that it is within the discretion of a Trial Chamber to accept accomplice evidence only when it is corroborated.[435] Ntagerura adds that the Trial Chamber was not obliged to mention all the corroborative evidence it found unconvincing.[436]

[436] Ntagerura Response Brief, para. 166.

213. The Appeals Chamber will analyse in turn the instances cited by the Prosecution as examples of the "problematic approach" adopted by the Trial Chamber.[437] But first, the Appeals Chamber deems it appropriate to recall that it will not lightly overturn findings of fact made by a Trial Chamber. The Appeals Chamber will give deference to the Trial Chamber that heard the evidence at trial as it is best placed to assess the evidence, including the demeanour of the witnesses. The Appeals Chamber will only interfere in those findings which no reasonable trier of fact could have reached or which are wholly erroneous. Moreover, if the finding of fact is erroneous, it will be quashed or revised only if the error occasioned a miscarriage of justice.[438]

214. In addition, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it is not unreasonable for a trier of fact to accept some, but reject other parts of a witness's testimony.[439] Even if some parts of a witness's testimony are corroborated by other evidence, a Trial Chamber is not bound to accept the whole of the testimony.

(a) Gashirabwoba Football Field

215. With respect to the attack at Gashirabwoba football field, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber rejected the testimony of Witnesses LAB and LAH, despite the fact that their testimony was largely corroborated by the evidence given by Witness LAC, whose testimony was accepted by the Trial Chamber. The Prosecution claims that the only inconsistency between the different accounts was the date of the attack, but this should not have been a significant factor.[440]

216. The Appeals Chamber notes that one of the Trial Chamber's reasons for rejecting Witness LAB's evidence was the fact that it "materially conflicts with other evidence on record".[441] The main contradiction identified by the Trial Chamber concerns the issue whether Bagambiki was present during the attack on the refugees. According to Witness LAC, on the morning of 12 April 1994, a large number of people started attacking the refugees at the Gashirabwoba football field. During this attack, Bagambiki arrived, accompanied by another person, and asked the refugees to explain the situation. Bagambiki then promised to send soldiers to protect the refugees. One hour later, soldiers and armed guards arrived, but, instead of protecting the refugees, attacked them.[442] Witnesses LAH and LAB, on the other hand, testified that Bagambiki and Imanishimwe were present during the attack and organized it.[443]

217. The Appeals Chamber finds that it was not unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to reject Witness LAH's and LAB's evidence about the Gashirabwoba massacre. Even if some details of their testimony were corroborated by Witness LAC's testimony, there was a clear contradiction as to whether Bagambiki and Imanishimwe were present. Witness LAC clearly stated that Bagambiki left after he had promised to send soldiers to protect the refugees, and did not mention the presence of Imanishimwe during the attack at all.[444] Witnesses LAH and LAB both testified that Bagambiki was present when the soldiers arrived and the massacre began.[445] The Trial Chamber had to decide between these two accounts; the Prosecution has not shown that it was unreasonable to accept that of Witness LAC.

(b) Shangi Parish

218. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erroneously disregarded Witness LAK's testimony about the events at Shangi Parish. The Prosecution argues that Witness LAK testified to the very same facts that were accepted by the Trial Chamber, but that the Trial Chamber did not even mention this circumstance. Rather, the Prosecution argues, the Trial Chamber concentrated on those parts of his testimony which were not corroborated, and rejected the whole of it.[446]

219. The Trial Chamber summarized Witness LAK's testimony comprehensively.[447] In its analysis of his testimony, the Trial Chamber stated that it viewed his testimony with suspicion, because he testified that he saw Ntagerura delivering weapons and addressing a crowd between 20 and 25 December 1993, whereas the Trial Chamber found that Ntagerura had been on a mission to Cameroon at that time.[448] The Trial Chamber noted that no other witness had mentioned Bagambiki or Imanishimwe distributing weapons at the Shangi roadblock, and that no other witness had corroborated Witness LAK's testimony about this roadblock.[449]

220. Witness LAK had testified that a roadblock had been set up on the orders of communal authorities near a small shop belonging to a certain Bonaventure Harerimana where Witness LAK worked three days a week. According to Witness LAK, any Tutsi who tried to pass this roadblock was killed.[450] Witness LAK further claimed that Bagambiki and Imanishimwe came to the roadblock and distributed weapons there on 9 April 1994.[451] Witnesses PCG and PCF, on the other hand, testified that there was no roadblock in front of Bonaventure Harerimana's shop. The first roadblock, according to them, was located about one kilometre away.[452] Witness PCG, who had been manning this roadblock, testified that the roadblock was never visited by any official, and that no weapons were distributed there.[453] In addition, Witness PCF testified that he had been drinking beer at the relevant time on 9 April 1994 at Harerimana's shop and did not notice any distribution of weapons.[454]

221. The Appeals Chamber finds that there are clear contradictions between Witness LAK's testimony and the evidence given by Witnesses PCF and PCG as to the Shangi roadblock and Bagambiki's and Imanishimwe's alleged visit to it. As such, a reasonable trier of fact could conclude that Witness LAK's testimony was unreliable in this respect, even if his evidence about other events at Shangi Parish was corroborated by other witnesses.

(c) Mibilizi Parish

222. Another instance which is, in the Prosecution's view, "revealing" of the consequences of the Trial Chamber's approach, is its treatment of Witness LAJ's evidence in relation to the attack at Mibilizi Parish. Although, the Prosecution argues, Witness LAJ's evidence about the attack was amply corroborated by Witnesses MM, MP and Théodore Munyangabe, the Trial Chamber disregarded his evidence completely.[455]

223. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution's contention that Witness LAJ's testimony about the attack on Mibilizi Parish was corroborated by Witnesses MM, MP and Théodore Munyangabe is not supported by the record.[456] The Trial Chamber noted that Witness LAJ's account was "often internally inconsistent and conflict[ed] with other reliable and credible evidence on the record".[457] For example, the Trial Chamber explained, Witness LAJ testified that on 20 April 1994, he participated in a large-scale attack on the parish, and that later that day Munyakazi and his Interahamwe attacked. Later, the Trial Chamber noted, Witness LAJ denied that he had taken part in an attack on 20 April 1994, and the evidence on record indicated that Munyakazi attacked the parish on 30 April.[458] In addition, the Trial Chamber noted that Bagambiki and Imanishimwe had taken part in a prefectural security council meeting on 18 April 1994, thus undermining Witness LAJ's claim that he met them on the same day at the Hotel Ituze and received grenades and money from them.[459] The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not shown that this conclusion was unreasonable.

(d) Nyamasheke Parish

224. Likewise, the Prosecution submits, the Trial Chamber disregarded the evidence of Witness LAM in relation to the events at Nyamasheke Parish, although it was corroborated in numerous instances by the evidence of Witnesses LBI and LAY.[460]

225. The Trial Chamber rejected Witness LAM's evidence about the events at Nyamasheke Parish "because it contradicts other evidence on the record and is not credible or reliable".[461] As an example of such contradictions, the Trial Chamber noted differences between Witness LAM's account of Bagambiki's arrival at the parish and that of Witnesses LAY and LBI: Witness LAM had testified that, after a gendarme had shot three Interahamwe, the attackers retreated and removed their dead; likewise, the gendarmes moved away. According to Witness LAM, Bagambiki arrived at a later time and met the witness at the communal office.[462] The Trial Chamber noted that Witnesses LAY and LBI, on the other hand, had testified that Bagambiki came to the parish and found on his arrival the attackers as well as the dead Interahamwe still there.[463] In addition, the Trial Chamber found it "highly doubtful" if Bagambiki and Imanishimwe could, as Witness LAM had testified, distribute weapons on the afternoon of 15 April 1994, because the Trial Chamber found that they were involved with church authorities in transferring the refugees from Cyangugu Cathedral to Kamarampaka Stadium.[464]

226. A close review of the trial record reveals that the Trial Chamber's reasoning with regard to Witness LAM's testimony is not correct: Witness LBI, in fact, also testified that the attackers left after three of them had been killed, and from Witness LBI's testimony it is not clear whether Bagambiki came first to the parish or to the communal office.[465] Witness LBI's testimony is not inconsistent with Witness LAM's in this respect. On the other hand, a reasonable tribunal of fact could conclude from Witness LAY's testimony that the attackers and the gendarmes were still present when Bagambiki arrived at the parish[466] and thus find that Witness LAM's testimony was contradicted.

227. The Prosecution has not challenged the Trial Chamber's finding about Bagambiki's and Imanishimwe's activities on the afternoon of 15 April 1994 nor has it offered any explanation as to the contradictions between the accounts of Bagambiki's arrival at Nyamasheke Parish. Given the improbability of Bagambiki's and Imanishimwe's presence in this area on the afternoon of 15 April 1994, and Witness LAM's rather confused account of their participation in the distribution of weapons and the subsequent attack,[467] the erroneous interpretation of Witness LBI's testimony does not amount to a miscarriage of justice. The Appeals Chamber finds that, even if some aspects of Witness LAM's evidence in relation to the events at Nyamasheke Parish were consistent with other evidence, a reasonable trier of fact could still arrive at the conclusion that his evidence as to Bagambiki's and Imanishimwe's participation in the attack was unreliable.

(e) Kamarampaka Stadium

228. During the Appeal hearing, the Prosecution cited as another example Witness LAP's evidence about the events at Kamarampaka Stadium. Witness LAP's evidence that Bagambiki ordered the refugees removed from the stadium on 16 April 1994 to be killed was rejected, the Prosecution submits, although it was largely corroborated by other witnesses.[468]

229. As the Prosecution acknowledges, the Trial Chamber "named many reasons for rejecting the testimony of [Witness] LAP".[469] In fact, the Trial Chamber devoted two entire paragraphs to an extensive discussion of the contradictions between Witness LAP's testimony and other evidence on the record, and to the inconsistencies between his testimony before the Trial Chamber and his earlier statements.[470] Most of these contradictions and inconsistencies related precisely to the uncorroborated part of Witness LAP's testimony about Bagambiki's direct participation in the killing of the refugees. The Appeals Chamber finds that, given these contradictions, it was only reasonable for the Trial Chamber to disregard the fact that this witness' testimony was corroborated in some – not all – other aspects by other evidence.

3. Alleged failure to apply caution to Defence accomplice testimony

230. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber aggravated its erroneous treatment of the Prosecution's accomplice witnesses by not applying the same caution to accomplice witnesses testifying for the Defence. The Prosecution enumerates four Defence witnesses (Augustin Ndindiliyimana, Witness BLB, Gratien Kabiligi and Sub-Prefect Théodore Munyangabe) who, in its view, ought to have been characterized as accomplice witnesses. In fact, the Prosecution submits, none of these witnesses were even identified as possible accomplices in the Trial Judgement.[471]

(a) Augustin Ndindiliyimana

231. Augustin Ndindiliyimana, the Prosecution submits, admitted that he was facing charges of genocide and crimes against humanity before the Tribunal, and that he and Bagambiki had served under the same Government in Rwanda in 1994. In addition, the Prosecution submits, Augustin

Ndindiliyimana expressed the clear wish that Bagambiki should be acquitted.[472] The Prosecution argues that Augustin Ndindiliyimana was charged with crimes committed by his troops in Cyangugu and was clearly exculpating himself and Bagambiki from any criminal responsibility.[473]

232. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution gives no details about the charges Augustin Ndindiliyimana is facing before the Tribunal, and that it does not contest Bagambiki's argument that these charges are based on different criminal acts than the charges against the Accused in the present case.[474] The Appeals Chamber will therefore first determine whether Ndindiliyimana can be qualified as an accomplice of Bagambiki in the ordinary meaning of this term.

233. In Niyitegeka, the Defence submitted that one of the witnesses, Witness KJ, was an accomplice and that the Trial Chamber should treat his evidence with suspicion.[475] The Trial Chamber, addressing this submission, noted that, although the witness was detained in a Rwandan military camp, he had not been charged with any crime. The Trial Chamber further stated:

> "Moreover, no evidence has been adduced of criminal involvement on his part in the events giving rise to the charges faced by the Accused".[476]

Thus, the Trial Chamber concluded, the witness was not an accomplice whose uncorroborated testimony was subject to special caution.[477] On appeal, the Appeals Chamber endorsed the Trial Chamber's conclusion.[478] Reviewing the jurisprudence cited in the first section of this chapter,[479] the Appeals Chamber finds that it exclusively relates to accomplices in the "ordinary meaning" of the term. In Čelebići, the witness whom the Trial Chamber considered an accomplice was employed in the same prison camp as the accused and participated in the offences against the detainees.[480] In Kordić and Čerkez, the witness was convicted by the ICTY for his participation in one attack with which the accused was also charged.[481]

234. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the reason for applying "caution" to the testimony of accomplice evidence is that accomplice witnesses may have motives or incentives to implicate the accused person before the Tribunal.[482] Obviously, these motives or incentives are much stronger when the witness is charged with the same criminal acts as the accused. It may be necessary, depending on the circumstances of the case, also to employ a critical approach towards witnesses who are merely charged with crimes of a similar nature. But in most cases, they will not have the same tangible motives for giving false evidence like a witness who was allegedly involved in the same criminal acts as the accused. Therefore, as long as no special circumstances have been identified, it is reasonable not to employ the same cautious approach towards the testimony of witnesses charged with similar crimes as to the testimony of accomplices in the ordinary sense of the word.

235. As the Appeals Chamber has already noted, the Trial Chamber provided no details as to the involvement of the Prosecution "accomplice witnesses". However, the Prosecution does not challenge Bagambiki's contention that they are charged for their participation in the same acts with which the Accused were charged.[483] In fact, Witnesses LAB and LAH testified that they took part in the attack at the Gashirabwoba football field.[484] Witness LAK, despite stating that he did not commit any crimes, is detained in Cyangugu prison because of his involvement in the events at Shangi.[485] Witness LAJ testified that he led the attack at Mibilizi Parish;[486] Witness LAM testified that he participated in the attacks at Nyamasheke Parish,[487] Witness LAP testified that he took part in the killing of Tutsi brought to the Gatandara roadblock by Bagambiki and Imanishimwe,[488] and Witness LAI testified that he took part in several attacks in the Cyangugu préfecture, including the attack at Mibilizi Parish.[489] Thus, the Prosecution's "accomplice witnesses" were in fact accomplices to the very crimes with which Bagambiki, Imanishimwe and Ntagerura are charged.

236. The Appeals Chamber considers that the broad assertion that Augustin Ndindiliyimana "is charged with crimes committed by his troops in Cyangugu"[490] does not justify his qualification as an accomplice in the ordinary sense of the word, that is, as "a partner in crime".[491] In fact, the indictment in his case contains only a very general reference to events in Cyangugu.[492] There is no specific relation between Augustin Ndindiliyimana and these events in Cyangugu, apart from the fact that he was at the relevant period chief of staff of the Gendarmerie nationale.[493] The Appeals Chamber finds therefore that the Trial Chamber did not err in not adopting the same cautionary approach to Augustin Ndindiliyimana's testimony as to the testimony of witnesses who were directly participating in the crimes with which the Accused are charged.

237. In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber referred only two times to the evidence given by Augustin Ndindiliyimana. In both instances, he testified in general terms that the préfet, under Rwandan law, had the legal authority to requisition the gendarmerie (but not the army).[494] The Prosecution has not indicated to what extent this evidence may have been influenced by the fact that Augustin Ndindiliyimana was facing charges of a similar legal nature as the charges raized against the Accused in the present case.

(b) Witness BLB

238. With regard to Witness BLB, the Prosecution submits that he was facing charges in Rwanda for involvement in the same offences. The Prosecution argues that the witness "obviously could have benefited from a finding of not guilty respecting persons who had allegedly committed offences in the same commune".[495] In response, Bagambiki stresses that Witness BLB was acquitted at trial by the

In Cyangugu, as in all the regions of the country throughout this period, members of the Tutsi population sought refuge in locations they thought would be safe, often locations that had been indicated to them by the authorities, such as Kamparampaka Stadium and Nyarushishi Camp. At these locations, despite the promises given by authorities that they would be protected, soldiers and Interahamwe abducted and killed refugees. Rape and other acts of sexual violence were notoriously committed by soldiers and Interahamwe against Tutsi women and young girls. Soldiers and Interahamwe abducted Tutsi women and young girls to isolated locations where they were raped and subjected to various other acts of sexual violence, including degrading and humiliating treatment, such as exposure of sexual organs, nudity and derogatory and sexually abusive language.

Cyangugu court of first instance.[496] The Prosecution mentions this acquittal also, but adds that the Rwandan Prosecution has appealed this decision.[497]

240. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it is within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to evaluate the evidence and to consider whether the evidence as a whole is credible, without explaining its decision in every detail.[500] The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness BLB was acquitted of the charges raised against him, even if this decision was appealed. The Appeals Chamber considers that, contrary to the Prosecution's contention, it is not "obvious" to what extent the witness could have benefited from the acquittal of Bagambiki and Imanishimwe. After all, the witness was acquitted at first instance, before he gave evidence in the trial against Bagambiki and Imanishimwe, and, moreover, neither Bagambiki nor Imanishimwe are mentioned at all in the Rwandan judgement acquitting the witness.[501] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Prosecution has failed to establish that the Trial Chamber erred when it evaluated the evidence of Witness BLB without explicitly stating that it was treating his evidence with caution.

(c) Gratien Kabiligi

241. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber recognized during the cross-examination of Witness Gratien Kabiligi that he was an accused in another case before this Tribunal, and that it was clear that his offences were possibly linked to those of Bagambiki. Nevertheless, the Prosecution argues, the Trial Chamber did not apply any caution to his testimony that he was out of the country on 28 January 1994, but accepted it and used it to discredit the evidence of Witnesses LAI, LAJ and LAP, who had claimed to have seen him on this date. It even disregarded, the Prosecution adds, the fact that it could be demonstrated that Gratien Kabiligi had repeatedly made use of falsified travel documents to leave Rwanda.[502]

242. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution does not provide any details as to the charges raised against Gratien Kabiligi, and observes that the indictment in his case does not mention any criminal acts committed in the Cyangugu préfecture.[503] The references given by the Prosecution to support the argument that Gratien Kabiligi's offences were possibly linked to those of Bagambiki are not helpful: they only show that the witness made use of a false passport at a certain time.[504] The

Appeals Chamber concludes that Gratien Kabiligi is not an "accomplice" of Bagambiki and Ntagerura in the ordinary sense of the word, but merely facing charges with the same legal qualification.

243. The Trial Chamber noted that Witnesses LAP, LAI and LAJ testified that they had seen Ntagerura and Gratien Kabiligi visiting the Bigogwe military camp on 28 January 1994 and distributing weapons.[505] Noting also some inconsistencies in the evidence given by Witness LAJ,[506] the Trial Chamber accepted the corroborated evidence that Gratien Kabiligi had been on mission to Egypt from 27 January to 10 February 1994.[507] The Trial Chamber was aware of the fact that Gratien Kabiligi had admitted that, after he had left Rwanda as a refugee, he had obtained false documents to escape arrest by the Rwandan authorities.[508]

244. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not shown that the Trial Chamber's acceptance of Gratien Kabiligi's evidence was wholly erroneous. The fact that the witness, as a refugee, used false documents to travel and to escape arrest, does not necessarily mean that his testimony relating to his official position and activities before he left the country have to be viewed with suspicion.

(d) Théodore Munyangabe

245. The Prosecution challenges the Trial Chamber's treatment of the testimony of Witness Théodore Munyangabe. This witness, the Prosecution submits, had been charged, convicted at trial and subsequently acquitted on appeal by the Rwandan courts. The Cyangugu Court of Appeal, the Prosecution argues, accepted Théodore Munyangabe's defence that "[other named persons]", including Bagambiki and Imanishimwe, had been responsible for the crimes he was charged with, among them the abduction and murder of 17 Tutsi civilians from the Kamarampaka Stadium.[509] The Prosecution avers that it was clear that the witness changed his story before the Tribunal, but that the Trial Chamber neither mentioned this stark inconsistency nor that the witness may have been an accomplice of Bagambiki and Imanishimwe.[510]

246. Imanishimwe and Bagambiki respond that the judgement of the Cyangugu trial court on which the Prosecution relies to support its argument was subsequently overturned by the Cyangugu Court of Appeal.[511] Imanishimwe points to the appeal judgement, which explicitly states that the transcripts of the trial had been changed and contained statements of witnesses which were never made.[512]

247. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution does not show to what extent the Trial Chamber actually made use of Théodore Munyangabe's testimony; apparently, the Prosecution uses the Trial Chamber's treatment of this evidence more as an illustration of the Trial Chamber's approach. A review of the Trial Judgement, however, reveals that the Trial Chamber's approach towards this evidence was rather cautious, even if the Trial Chamber did not identify the witness as an alleged accomplice.

248. In three instances the Trial Chamber relied on the testimony of Théodore Munyangabe:

[506] Ibid., para. 130.
[507] Ibid., para. 129. The Trial Chamber did not identify the corroborative evidence; the only piece of evidence corroborating Gratien Kabiligi's testimony seems to be a photocopy of his mission report with the pertaining cover letter to the Rwandan President, Exhibit DAN-5.

[512] Imanishimwe Response Brief, para. 125.

- In paragraph 317 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber referred to the evidence given by Théodore Munyangabe and Bagambiki to establish that the refugees leaving the Cyangugu Cathedral joined at the Kamarampaka Stadium 50 to 100 refugees who had been there since 9 April 1994. For the other facts related to the events at the cathedral and the stadium, the Trial Chamber relied on a number of other witnesses, in particular on Witness LY.[513]
- For some details concerning the attacks at Mibilizi Parish, the Trial Chamber referred to the testimony of Théodore Munyangabe. For the principal findings related to these events, the Trial Chamber relied on the testimonies of Witnesses MM and MP.[514]
- Only in relation to the events at Shangi Parish is Théodore Munyangabe's testimony used in a more extensive manner. However, the Trial Chamber never relied on his testimony exclusively; he is only one in a number of several witnesses referred to in this context.[515]

Apart from the findings related to some details of the events at Mibilizi Parish, the Trial Chamber never relied on the uncorroborated testimony of Théodore Munyangabe alone. With regard to the events at Shangi Parish, the Trial Chamber noted that Munyangabe's testimony was "largely consistent" with the evidence given by Prosecution Witnesses NG-1 and LAD and Bagambiki Defence Witness GLB.[516] The Appeals Chamber notes in particular that the Trial Chamber never used Munyangabe's evidence to discredit Prosecution witnesses.

249. The Appeals Chamber further notes that Théodore Munyangabe was acquitted of his alleged participation in the crimes in the Cyangugu préfecture in 1994 when he testified before the Tribunal. His motive to give false testimony, if any, was therefore greatly reduced. With regard to the alleged "stark inconsistency" between Munyangabe's testimony before the Rwandan court and this Tribunal, the Appeals Chamber notes that Munyangabe, when confronted with the Rwandan trial judgement, maintained that his testimony was misstated in the judgement.[517] In addition, the Cyangugu Court of Appeal found that > "the [trial] transcripts were altered by inventing testimony from witnesses and these witnesses never said those things before the court".[518]

In the view of the Appeals Chamber, a reasonable trier of fact could disregard the alleged inconsistency, because it is unclear what Munyangabe had actually said before the Rwandan court.

4. Alleged failure to allow the Prosecution to cross-examine on issues relating to Defence witnesses' roles as accomplices

250. In a related argument, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred on a question of law by refusing to allow the Prosecution to test the credibility of Defence witnesses by improperly limiting their cross-examination.[519] This happened, the Prosecution submits, during the testimony of

Witnesses Augustin Ndindiliyimana, BLB, Gratien Kabiligi and PNA.[520] Thus, the Prosecution concludes, the Trial Chamber did not allow

> "the Prosecution to pursue issues that would relate to the Witness's own involvement in the matters before the Chamber".[521]

(a) Augustin Ndindiliyimana

251. With regard to Augustin Ndindiliyimana, the Prosecution argues that it attempted to test the credibility of the witness "through his participation in the offences", but was prevented from doing so, because the Trial Chamber declined to compel the witness to testify under Rule 90 (E) of the Rules, which would have offered the witness the necessary protection.[522]

252. Rule 90 (E) of the Rules reads:

> A witness may refuse to make any statement which might tend to incriminate him. The Chamber may, however, compel the witness to answer the question. Testimony compelled in this way shall not be used as evidence in a subsequent prosecution against the witness for any offence other than perjury.

The Trial Chamber indeed declined to use this possibility; however, the Appeals Chamber observes that during the testimony of Augustin Ndindiliyimana the Prosecution did not explicitly request the Trial Chamber to compel the witness:

> If the witness doesn't want to respond to the questions, that is his right. The Judges can compel the witness to answer these questions. In the event they don't, I can't push it any further. But it is, first and foremost, the right of the Prosecution to pose these questions.[523]

The question was finally allowed, but the witness declined to answer it.[524] The question related to the transport of Interahamwe by ONATRACOM buses in northern Rwanda;[525] subsequent questions concerned the distribution of arms in and around Kigali[526] and a report about the military situation in Rwanda received by the witness in September 1992.[527] Finally, the Presiding Judge found it necessary to give Prosecution Counsel a warning.[528]

253. The main issue before the Appeals Chamber is whether the Trial Chamber, as the Prosecution contends,[529] abused its discretion under Rule 90 (E) by not compelling the witness to answer the first question. The second and third questions were apparently dropped by the Prosecution after

He's not charged before this Court. He's not the one on trial. It is Imanishimwe and Bagambiki who are on trial here, so all of this time you are spending, it has just been wasted; you are wasting the time of the Court. And I think the time has come when you have to desist from pursuing this line because I am not going to warn you again. We cannot proceed this way. So desist from this line of cross-examination, move on to some other line, or if you have no other line on which to cross-examine, take your seat because we must proceed.
We are not going to go back over what we went over yesterday afternoon when I constantly had to be reminding you, whatever you may be alleging that this witness failed to do or whatever wrong you may be alleging that he may or may not have done is of no relevance to these proceedings. interventions by the Defence and the Presiding Judge.[530] The Appeals Chamber bears in mind that it is the primary responsibility of the Trial Chamber to exercise control over the mode and order of witnesses, and that, in doing so, it has to make the interrogation effective for the ascertainment of the truth and avoid needless consumption of time.[531]

254. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the question about the transport of Interahamwe in northern Rwanda had very little relevance to the facts of the present case, or to the subject-matter of Augustin Ndindiliyimana's testimony.[532] Counsel for the Prosecution argued that the question was necessary to test the witness' credibility.[533] Under Rule 90 (G) (i) of the Rules, questions about matters affecting the credibility of a witness may be asked during cross-examination. However, the possibility to ask questions to test the credibility of a witness is not unlimited.[534] The Appeals Chamber has already observed that Augustin Ndindiliyimana was not an accomplice in the ordinary meaning of the word, but is only charged with similar offences as Bagambiki and Imanishimwe.[535] The question the Prosecution wanted to put to the witness concerned a very specific matter, which was only in the most general way related to the criminal charges against the Accused. Taking into consideration the very limited scope of Augustin Ndindiliyimana's testimony,[536] the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not demonstrated that this particular question was relevant to determining the reliability of Augustin Ndindiliyimana's testimony in the present case. The Appeals Chamber does not find that the Trial Chamber erred in law when it declined to compel the witness under Rule 90 (E) of the Rules to answer the question.

(b) Gratien Kabiligi

255. The Prosecution raises a similar argument with regard to the cross-examination of Gratien Kabiligi. The Prosecution argues it

> "attempted to test the witness's credibility on an issue relating to the witness's whereabouts during the events".[537]

When the witness refused to answer the question, the Prosecution submits, the Trial Chamber should have compelled the witness under Rule 90 (E), but it declined to do so.

> "Thus, the Trial Chamber limited the cross-examination of the Prosecution, not allowing the Prosecution to pursue issues that would relate to the Witness's own involvement in the matters before the Chamber".[538]

256. The Appeals Chamber notes that the question was whether the witness was informed about the RPF attack on Ruhengeri on the 22 of January 1991.[539] The Prosecution has not established how this question related to facts relevant to the present case, or how an eventual answer of the witness would have affected his credibility. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion when it declined to compel the witness to answer.

(c) Witness BLB

257. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber also intervened in an inadmissible manner during the cross-examination of Witness BLB. The Prosecution argues that it asked the Witness

> "whether the purpose of his testimony was 'to absolve both yourself and Bagambiki from responsibility [for] the killings in the commune'", and that the Trial Chamber did not allow the witness to answer this question.[540]

258. Upon reviewing the transcript, the Appeals Chamber finds that, although the Presiding Judge was initially concerned about the admissibility of the question,[541] he finally admitted it, and it was duly answered by the witness.[542] This argument is therefore obviously without merit.

(d) Witness PNA

259. Likewise, the Prosecution argues, the Trial Chamber disallowed the Prosecution to ask Witness PNA questions concerning his identity, which related to his credibility.[543]

260. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness PNA is not mentioned at all in the Trial Judgement. The Prosecution has failed to demonstrate the relevance of his testimony to the case against Bagambiki, Imanishimwe and Ntagerura. The Appeals Chamber therefore declines to discuss the merits of the Prosecution's argument in question.

5. Appearance of unfairness

261. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion in its different treatment of Prosecution and Defence accomplice witnesses, and the greater degree of scrutiny to which it subjected the testimony of Prosecution witnesses, resulted in an appearance of unfairness, which "in itself is a further error on a question of law".[544] The Prosecution stresses that it does not question the independence of the Tribunal or the impartiality of its Judges, but that in the present case the appearance of equality between the parties is in question.[545]

262. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution's contention that the Trial Chamber did not apply the same caution to the accomplices testifying as Defence witnesses, thus creating "a different standard for the Prosecution", is not supported by the Trial Judgement. When assessing the evidence given by five Imanishimwe Defence witnesses, the Trial Chamber took into consideration the fact > "that the Imanishimwe Defence witnesses are biased and self-interested because they previously served as soldiers under Imanishimwe's command and because acknowledging that civilians were brought to the camp would implicate them or their colleagues in the mistreatment".[546]

The Trial Chamber clearly took into account the possible involvement of these Defence witnesses in Imanishimwe's crimes, concluding that it rendered their testimony unreliable.

263. The Appeals Chamber has found that the Prosecution's arguments as to the alleged errors of the Trial Chamber relating to its treatment of Defence "accomplice" witnesses are unfounded. Therefore, there is no basis for the contention that the Trial Chamber imposed a "double standard" in relation to the treatment of accomplice evidence.

6. Conclusion

264. The Prosecution's sixth ground of appeal is accordingly dismissed.

C. REBUTTAL EVIDENCE IN RELATION TO CERTAIN LETTERS (8TH GROUND OF APPEAL)

1. Witness PR3/LAP

265. Under the eighth ground of appeal, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in its Decision of 21 May 2003[547] that denied the Prosecution leave to call rebuttal evidence in relation to certain letters.[548] According to the Prosecutiom, this ground affects all the verdicts rendered against Ntagerura, Bagambiki and Imanishimwe.[549] The Prosecution contends that the Trial Chamber erroneously admitted into the trial record five letters, which were allegedly written by the Prosecution Witnesses LAP, LAB and LAJ.[550] These letters were introduced into evidence, Prosecution argues, through Defence Witness JNQ, who had no knowledge as to the authenticity of the letters. Moreover, the Prosecution adds, the letters were never put to the Prosecution witnesses in cross-examination.[551] The Prosecution further submits that the Trial Chamber denied its motion to present rebuttal evidence as to the authenticity of the letters.

266. Ntagerura and Bagambiki respond that the Trial Chamber did not rely on the letters in question, and that neither their admission nor the refusal to allow evidence in rebuttal had any impact on the final verdict of the Trial Chamber.[552]

267. The Appeals Chamber notes that, although originally five letters were introduced into evidence, the Prosecution's arguments are focused on the two letters purportedly written by Witness LAP. In fact, the letters purportedly written by Witnesses LAB and LAJ are not mentioned at all in the Trial Judgement.

268. With regard to Witness LAP and the two letters introduced by Witness JNQ, the Trial Chamber found:

> Moreover, in the Chamber's opinion, Witness LAP's request for money in exchange for providing evidence leaves the impression that his testimony is for sale, which is further supported by Bagambiki Defence Witnesses GLB and JNQ who testified about Witness LAP's reputation for making false accusations for personal gain. The Chamber further notes that Witness JNQ testified about a series of letters bearing the seal of the Cyangugu Prison in which Witness LAP admitted to falsifying evidence related to other cases. The Prosecution has asserted that these letters are not reliable because they are of questionable provenance. Given > the numerous indicia that Witness LAP lacks credibility and is not reliable, the Chamber need not examine this issue further.[553]

In the view of the Appeals Chamber it is clear that the Trial Chamber did not rely on the letters in question, because other evidence before it was sufficient to establish that Witness LAP's testimony was unreliable. The Prosecution has not shown that this conclusion was unreasonable. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not demonstrated that the alleged error of law invalidated the decision, and accordingly declines to discuss the Prosecution's arguments further.

2. The Letter Purportedly Written by Witness LAH

269. The Prosecution contends that the Trial Chamber's approach to the admission of evidence impugning the credibility of Prosecution witnesses was not isolated, and refers to the admission of a letter purportedly written by Witness LAH, in which he recanted evidence he had allegedly given against Witness BLB before the Rwandan courts. The Prosecution argues that the letter was never put to Witness LAH in cross-examination and that its authenticity was never established.[554] The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law by admitting this letter into the record and subsequently relying on it to discredit Witness LAH.[555]

270. Ntagerura and Bagambiki respond that the Prosecution did not seek to examine the authenticity of the letter, or to adduce rebuttal evidence as to the authenticity of the letter.[556] Ntagerura points out that Witness BLB was acquitted by the Rwandan courts, adding that the letter was only of secondary importance to the Trial Chamber's conclusions.[557]

271. The Trial Chamber admitted the letter in question into evidence as Defence exhibit D-EBA 8, overruling an objection by the Prosecution.[558] There are several references in the Trial Judgement to this exhibit. In paragraphs 118, 141 and 438, the Trial Chamber repeated the same finding:

> The Trial Chamber has considered Witness LAH's testimony in light of the evidence provided by Defence Witness BLB, who testified that Witness LAH made and then recanted false accusations against him in relation to serious charges before the Rwandan courts.

To support this finding, the Trial Chamber referred to the testimony of Witness BLB as well as to Bagambiki Defence exhibits 8 and 9,[559] exhibit 9 being the Rwandan judgement acquitting Witness BLB.[560]

272. Before determining whether the Trial Chamber erred in law by admitting the letter into evidence, the Appeals Chamber recalls that

> [t]he determination of whether the admission of a particular piece of evidence is precluded, under the circumstances, by the need to ensure a fair trial, is one which lies within the discretion of the Trial Chamber. The Appeals Chamber will revise such a determination only where the party challenging it has demonstrated that no reasonable trier of fact could have reached the conclusion.[561]

273. According to Rule 89 (C) of the Rules, a Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value. Under this rule, the reliability of a piece of evidence is relevant to its admissibility. However, the threshold to be met before ruling that evidence is inadmissible is high. Only if the evidence is so lacking in terms of the indicia of reliability as to be devoid of any probative value, can admission be denied.[562] As long as there are sufficient indicia to allow a provisional proof of reliability, the evidence may be admitted.[563]

274. Witness BLB had testified that a copy of the letter written purportedly by, or on behalf of,[564] Witness LAH had been sent to Witness BLB's spouse by the Rwandan Office of the Public Prosecutor. Subsequently, the Witness continued, he had used the letter as exculpatory evidence in his own trial, which resulted in his acquittal.[565] The Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could conclude from this testimony that there were sufficient indicia as to the authenticity of the letter. The admittance of the letter into evidence was, accordingly, not erroneous.

275. In addition, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber committed an error on a question of fact by its use of the letter in assessing the credibility of Witness LAH.[566] The Prosecution argues that Witness BLB was not the author, addressee or recipient of the letter, and could not confirm that Witness LAH wrote it as alleged.[567]

276. In the assessment of Witness LAH's credibility, the Trial Chamber relied on Witness BLB's testimony that Witness LAH at first made, and then later recanted serious accusations against him. Although the letter is referred to in the footnotes, the Trial Chamber clearly attached more importance to the testimony of Witness BLB.[568] Considering that Witness BLB was acquitted by the Rwandan court, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness LAH's credibility did not reflect an assessment by a reasonable trier of fact.

3. Conclusion

277. Accordingly, the Prosecution's eighth ground of appeal is dismissed.

D. ALLEGED ERROR OF LAW RELATING TO NTAGERURA'S SUPPOSED RELATIONS WITH RTLM (7TH GROUND OF APPEAL)

278. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law by preventing him from leading evidence on Ntagerura's relations with RTLM, in his capacity as founding member and shareholder.[569] By so doing, the Prosecution claims, the Trial Chamber failed to consider and assess the relevance and probative value of the evidence for establishing the requisite mens rea on the part of Ntagerura for the crimes charged.[570]

279. The Prosecution further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law by preventing it from cross-examining Ntagerura on his involvement with RTLM[571] so as to test his credibility; yet,

Ntagerura had been allowed to call evidence relating to other media and in disallowing cross-examination, the President Judge merely stated that Ntagerura's credibility was not in issue.[572]

280. Ntagerura contends in response that, even if the Prosecution intended to demonstrate his criminal intent by leading evidence of his involvement with RTLM, mens rea should be considered as a material fact of the crimes charged and, as such, should have been specifically pleaded in the Indictment.[573] Moreover, he contends that evidence of his alleged involvement with RTLM is irrelevant because "[n]one of the charges against [him] was in any way connected to the activities of RTLM".[574]

281. The Appeals Chamber notes that the error alleged under this ground of appeal centres on two issues. First, the Appeals Chamber is requested to determine whether the Trial Chamber erroneously deprived the Prosecution of the possibility of leading evidence of Ntagerura's criminal intent during the examination of Expert Witness Guichaoua. Secondly, the Appeals Chamber is requested to evaluate whether the Trial Chamber's overruling of the line of questioning adopted by the Prosecution during the cross-examination of Ntagerura unduly prevented the Prosecution from testing Ntagerura's credibility.

282. The Appeals Chamber notes that at the hearing of Expert Witness Guichaoua on 19 September 2001, the Trial Chamber, apparently concurring with the assertion by Counsel for Ntagerura that the expert's testimony should focus on allegations contained in the Indictment,[575] decided not to take into account the Prosecution's questions that made reference to RTLM, "[that is,] the association with the RTLM".[576] It clearly transpires from the trial record that it was solely in connection with the counts of conspiracy to commit genocide and complicity in genocide that the Prosecutor referred to Ntagerura's involvement with RTLM for the first time.[577] It was thus with regard to these two counts that the Trial Chamber refused to take into consideration Ntagerura's alleged involvement with RTLM.

283. During the hearing of 1 October 2002, the Prosecution referred to Ntagerura's supposed involvement with RTLM in order to test his credibility.[578] During that hearing the Trial Chamber seems to have admitted, on the basis of the line of argument used by Counsel for Ntagerura,[579] that the Prosecution was in fact using Ntagerura's cross-examination to reintroduce evidence relating to acts not pleaded in the Indictment. The Trial Chamber excluded from cross-examination the Prosecution's questions bearing on Ntagerura's supposed involvement with RTLM.[580] In the Prosecution Appeal Brief, it is in respect of the "various offences charged, including genocide"[581] that the Prosecution refers to Ntagerura's supposed involvement with RTLM.

284. However, it is with regard to the counts of conspiracy to commit genocide and complicity in genocide that the Appeals Chamber will direct its attention, as it was on these two counts that the Prosecution made reference to Ntagerura's involvement with RTLM and in which the Trial Chamber rejected the line of questioning on the grounds of relevance. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Ntagerura Indictment charges in Count 2 the crime of conspiracy to commit genocide in view of the acts described in paragraphs 9, 13, 14.3, 16 and 19. Counts 3 and 6 of the Ntagerura Indictment correspond to the crime of complicity in genocide and are both based on the acts described in paragraphs 9 to 19.[582] For the purpose of ruling on this ground of appeal, the Appeals Chamber will examine below the way in which the Trial Chamber analysed these three counts.

285. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber advanced several findings to dismiss the count of conspiracy to commit genocide. The Trial Chamber first pointed out that paragraph 10 of the Ntagerura Indictment amounted to a "general allegation",[583] which could not, for this reason, sustain a count. With regard to paragraphs 12.2, 14.2, 15.1 and 15.2 of the Ntagerura Indictment, the Chamber considered that no evidence had been adduced to support the allegations contained in these paragraphs.[584] The Chamber further considered, after a careful study,[585] that paragraphs 11, 12.1, 13 and 16 of the Ntagerura Indictment,

> "in addition to being vague, […] fail to plead any identifiable criminal conduct on the part of the accused".[586]

The Chamber thus considered only paragraphs 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 and 19 to make its factual findings.[587] The Trial Chamber consequently dismissed the count of conspiracy to commit genocide > because the allegations supporting these counts, even if proven, could not constitute the material elements of the crime of conspiracy. In particular, the concise statements of the facts of these crimes fail to allege the actus reus of conspiracy, namely that two or more persons agreed to commit the genocide.[588]

286. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber examined the evidence related to paragraphs 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 and 19 of the Ntagerura Indictment, and that it concluded that the facts alleged in these paragraphs had not been proven beyond reasonable doubt.[589] When the Appeals Chamber examined the Prosecution's fourth ground of appeal, it concluded that the Prosecution had not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber had erred in finding paragraphs 11, 12.1, 13 and 16 of the Ntagerura Indictment defective and that those defects had not been cured.[590]

287. Having determined that the Trial Chamber rightly found paragraphs 11, 12.1, 13 and 16 of the Ntagerura Indictment defective, and considering that the Prosecution admitted that there was no evidence to support the allegations in paragraphs 12.2, 14.2, 15.1 and 15.2 of the Ntagerura Indictment, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber acted correctly in dismissing the count of conspiracy to commit genocide, given that this count was based on the acts described in these paragraphs. The Appeals Chamber holds that, insofar as conspiracy to commit genocide was not properly pleaded, the issue of Ntagerura's intent for this crime is without substance.

288. With regard to the count of complicity in genocide, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber dismissed the third and sixth counts on several grounds. Recalling the findings it had made in respect of paragraphs 11, 12.1, 12.2, 13, 14.2, 15.1, 15.2 and 16 of the Ntagerura Indictment,[591] the Trial Chamber, in making its legal findings, considered only paragraphs 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 and 19.[592] The Chamber also found that the charges made in paragraphs 17 and 18 did not allege any criminal conduct on the part of Ntagerura.[593] Furthermore, the Chamber found that the acts alleged in paragraphs 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3 and 19 had not been proven beyond a reasonable doubt.[594]

289. The Appeals Chamber notes that in his fifth ground of appeal, the Prosecution contested, in particular, the way in which the Trial Chamber assessed the evidence adduced to establish the facts as well as Ntagerura's guilt.[595] In this regard, although the Prosecution made reference to many findings,[596] it developed this line of argument only with regard to some specific examples.[597] It specifically contested the Trial Chamber's refusal to examine the allegations made in paragraphs 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 and 19 of the Ntagerura Indictment in view of the evidence relating to the following allegations concerning paragraphs 9.1, 9.2 and 9.3 of the Ntagerura Indictment: the February 1993 meeting in Bushenge market, the June 1993 meeting at Ituze Hotel, the October 1993 meeting in Gatare, the visit to Cimerwa (cement) factory in Bugarama in December 1993 and the visit to Bugarama in January 1994. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution did not challenge certain other findings relating to paragraphs 9.1, 9.2 and 9.3 of the Ntagerura Indictment.

290. The Appeals Chamber has earlier analysed the way in which the Trial Chamber assessed the evidence for each of the specific acts contested by the Prosecution in his fifth ground of appeal. The Appeals Chamber has not discovered any error in the way the Trial Chamber assessed the evidence relating to the facts relevant to paragraphs 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 and 19 of the Ntagerura Indictment.[598] In addition, the Appeals Chamber considers that it is not required to rule on the other findings relating to paragraphs 9.1, 9.2 and 9.3 of the Ntagerura Indictment, insofar as these have not been challenged by the Prosecution.

291. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber was correct in concluding that the acts alleged in paragraphs 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3 and 19 have not been proven beyond reasonable doubt and they can thus not be relied on to find Ntagerura guilty under the Counts (Counts 3 and 6) of complicity in genocide.[599] The Appeals Chamber therefore considers that, since no evidence was called in respect of the material facts of the crime of complicity in genocide, the issue of Ntagerura's intent for this crime is without substance.

292. This finding does not conclude the examination of this ground of appeal. It still remains for the Appeals Chamber to determine whether the overruling of the Prosecution's line of questioning relating to the links between Ntagerura and RTLM during the cross-examination of Ntagerura unduly prevented the Prosecution from testing Ntagerura's credibility.

293. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ntagerura actually caused to be admitted into evidence a series of transcripts of broadcasts by Radio Rwanda and the BBC, establishing, in his view, specific government acts and statements. During the cross-examination of Ntagerura, the Prosecution questioned Ntagerura on his status as founding member and shareholder of RTLM,[600] to which Counsel for Ntagerura objected. When the Trial Chamber allowed this objection, it pointed out the following:

> What the witness did was, he said that government at certain meetings, I believe, had made certain statements and that was given over the press and to the press carried those statements. Now, you can't go off simply to deal with other radio stations or what other radio stations might have done.[601]

294. The Prosecution has not explained in what way the issue of Ntagerura's status as founding member and shareholder in RTLM made it possible to test Ntagerura's credibility regarding the government acts and statements reported by other radio stations. Although the Prosecution was at liberty to show that the acts and statements in question were reported differently depending on each radio station,[602] it, however, did not convince the Trial Chamber that questioning on Ntagerura's status as founding member and shareholder in RTLM would allow it to do so. The Appeals Chamber considers that it was proper for the Trial Chamber to exclude from cross-examination issues linked to Ntagerura's involvement with RTLM.

295. In view of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not commit any error of law by excluding the question on Ntagerura's involvement with RTLM from the examination of expert Witness Guichaoua and from the cross-examination of Ntagerura. Accordingly, this ground of appeal fails.

E. BAGAMBIKI'S PARTICIPATION IN THE CRIMES (1ST AND 2ND GROUNDS OF APPEAL)

296. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and fact when it acquitted Bagambiki; in law, because it placed an impossible burden of proof on the Prosecution (2nd Ground of Appeal);[603] in fact, because it failed to draw the only reasonable inference from the facts it had found to be proven (1st Ground of Appeal).[604]

1. Misapplication of the burden of proof (2nd Ground of Appeal)

297. Under its second ground of appeal, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber placed an impossible burden of proof upon the Prosecution. In the Prosecution's view, the majority of the Trial Chamber "appears" to have insisted upon direct evidence of Bagambiki's participation in the crimes. The Prosecution bases this view on certain observations in the Dissenting Opinion of Judge Williams, the Separate Opinion of Judge Ostrovsky and the language used in the Trial Judgement.[605] The Prosecution argues that circumstantial evidence is sufficient to support a conviction, and, if the Trial Chamber insisted upon direct evidence of Bagambiki's involvement in the crimes, this constituted a misapplication of the criminal standard of proof.[606]

298. Bagambiki notes that the Prosecution does not identify the circumstantial evidence upon which, in its view, the Trial Chamber should have based a conviction.[607] He argues that the Prosecution's arguments are founded on rash misinterpretations of the opinions of Judge Williams and Judge Ostrovsky as well as the Trial Chamber's conclusions.[608] Even if the Trial Chamber rejected certain elements of circumstantial evidence, Bagambiki argues, the language of the Trial Judgement does not show that the Trial Chamber insisted upon direct evidence.[609]

299. The Appeals Chamber notes that Judge Williams considered in his Dissenting Opinion that his conclusions about the Gashirabwoba football field massacre are the only "logical inference"[610] or "reasonable inference"[611] to be drawn from the evidence. In comparison, the separate opinion of Judge Ostrovsky shows that he considered the evidence about Bagambiki's conduct at the Gasirabwoba football field and the Kamarampaka Stadium to raise a "lingering suspicion" not amounting to proof beyond reasonable doubt.[612] The final conclusion of Judge Ostrovsky reads:

> This and other evidence reflect a concern on the part of Bagambiki for the welfare of the refugees and leave me with reasonable doubt that Bagambiki intended or that he was aware and consented to the deaths of refugees in Cyangugu préfecture. […] On the basis of the totality of the reliable and credible evidence presented in this case, I am not convinced that Bagambiki, with the resources available to him, could do more for the protection of refugees in Cyangugu préfecture.[613]

300. The majority reasoned that it "lacked sufficient reliable evidence to determine" whether Bagambiki played any role in the killing of the refugees selected and removed from Kamarampaka Stadium and Cyangugu Cathedral and in the death of Côme Simugomwa.[614] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the Judgement shows that the Judges considered whether the evidence as a whole led to a conclusion beyond reasonable doubt as to the responsibility of Bagambiki for the crimes in question, but that the majority considered that this was not the case.[615]

301. Nothing in the Trial Judgement suggests that the majority, when it found that it "lacked sufficient reliable evidence to determine" whether Bagambiki was involved in the crimes, had in mind that there was not sufficient reliable direct evidence, as the Prosecution contends.[616] There is no instance in the Trial Judgement where the majority rejected evidence only because of its circumstantial nature. In fact, the Prosecution acknowledges that in the case of Imanishimwe the Trial Chamber "relied on evidence of an essentially circumstantial nature to establish his individual criminal responsibility".[617] Under these circumstances, there is simply no room for the "appearance" that the Trial Chamber, generally, erroneously insisted on direct evidence, as the Prosecution claims.[618] Whether the Trial Chamber erred in fact by not drawing the only reasonable inference from the circumstantial evidence will be discussed in the next section.

2. The Trial Chamber failed to draw the only reasonable inference (1st Ground of Appeal)

302. Under its first ground of appeal, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in fact when it failed to draw the conclusion that Bagambiki was criminally responsible for the massacre of Tutsi refugees at the Gashirabwoba football field and the murder of 16 Tutsi refugees, who had been removed from Cyangugu Cathedral and the Kamarampaka Stadium. In the Prosecution's view, this was the only reasonable inference that could be drawn from the facts accepted by the Trial Chamber.[619] The Prosecution then provides an extensive paraphrase of the Trial Chamber's factual findings[620] and finally draws up a list of "culminating facts", which, it says, support "the irresistible conclusion of guilt".[621] The Prosecution adds that, in order to establish Bagambiki's responsibility for aiding and abetting genocide and other crimes, it was sufficient to show that Bagambiki had knowledge of the genocidal intent of the other participants and that he had made a substantial contribution to the commission of the crimes. The Prosecution submits that under the individual circumstances of the case – in particular, Bagambiki's position, his implication in the events and the proximity of his acts and the crimes – the only reasonable conclusion on the basis of the evidence was that he aided and abetted the commission of the crimes.[622]

303. The Prosecution points to the Dissenting Opinion of Judge Williams, according to which Bagambiki should have been convicted, and argues that no reasonable tribunal of fact could have assessed the evidence differently. The doubts of the majority, the Prosecution submits, were neither logically connected to the evidence, nor "based upon reason or common sense".[623]

(a) The Standard of proof applicable to circumstantial evidence

304. In the Čelebići Appeal Judgement, the ICTY Appeals Chamber set out the standard of proof applicable to circumstantial evidence as follows:

> A circumstantial case consists of evidence of a number of different circumstances which, taken in combination, point to the guilt of the accused person because they would usually exist in combination only because the accused did what is alleged against him – here that he participated in the second beating of Gotovac. Such a conclusion must be established beyond reasonable doubt. It is not sufficient that it is a reasonable conclusion available from that evidence. It must be the only reasonable conclusion available. If there is another conclusion which is also reasonably open from that evidence, and which is consistent with the innocence of the accused, he must be acquitted.[624]

The same standard was applied in the Vasiljević, Krstić and Kvocka et al. Appeal Judgements in relation to the establishment of the state of mind of the accused by inference[625] and, more recently, in the Stakić Appeal Judgement.[626]

305. As the ICTY Appeals Chamber made clear in the Kordić and Čerkez Appeal Judgement, the Čelebići standard on circumstantial evidence has to be distinguished from the standard of appellate review.[627] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Tribunal's law on appellate proceedings, namely wheter "no reasonable trier of fact could have reached the conclusion of guilt beyond reasonable doubt", permits a conclusion to be upheld on appeal even where other inferences sustaining guilt could reasonably have been drawn at trial".[628]

306. It is settled jurisprudence that the conclusion of guilt can be inferred from circumstantial evidence only if it is the only reasonable conclusion available on the evidence. Whether a Trial Chamber infers the existence of a particular fact upon which the guilt of the accused depends from direct or circumstantial evidence, it must reach such a conclusion beyond reasonable doubt. If there is another conclusion which is also reasonably open from that evidence, and which is consistent with the non-existence of that fact, the conclusion of guilt beyond reasonable doubt cannot be drawn.

(b) Gashirabwoba Football Field

307. The Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that Bagambiki's position as prefect and his "active involvement in events on the ground"[629] do not unambiguously lend themselves to support a conclusion as to his guilt. The Appeals Chamber notes in particular several instances where the Trial Chamber found that Bagambiki actively intervened to protect refugees.[630] In addition, the Trial Chamber found that on several occasions the prefectural authorities tried to assist refugees by sending gendarmes or supplies.[631] The Appeals Chamber observes that, according to the Trial Chamber's findings, Bagambiki never physically participated in an attack on refugees, nor gave orders to assailants. If Bagambiki had ordered (or consented to) the attack at the Gashirabwoba football field, as the Prosecution contends,[632] this would be the single instance where he actively supported an attack.

308. The Prosecution points to Bagambiki's "close association" with Imanishimwe, who was found criminally responsible for the massacre at the Gashirabwoba football field. Bagambiki, on the other hand, denies this association and argues that no evidence existed supporting such a conclusion[633].

309. The Prosecution does not offer a further explanation as to the meaning of the "close association" between Bagambiki and Imanishimwe. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the fact that Imanishimwe knew about the criminal activities of his soldiers does not necessarily mean that Bagambiki was fully aware of these crimes or Imanishimwe's involvement therein.

310. In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber was not convinced that Bagambiki held de jure or de facto authority over the soldiers stationed at the Karambo military camp. The Trial Chamber accepted that there was no relationship of subordination between the préfecture and the Karambo camp, and found that there was no reliable evidence that Bagambiki ever issued orders to soldiers.[634]

311. Finally, the Prosecution relies on the "close proximity of [Bagambiki's] actions, in time and place, to the crimes" to support its position that the only reasonable conclusion open to the Trial Chamber was a finding of his guilt.[635] In particular, the Prosecution points to the coincidence that Bagambiki was accompanied during his visit to the Gashirabwoba football field by the director of the Shagasha tea factory, whose guards subsequently participated in the attack.[636]

312. However, the Trial Chamber did not find that there were large-scale and indiscriminate attacks by soldiers on refugees prior to the Gashirabwoba football field massacre. In fact, this was the only large-scale attack on refugees in which, according to the Trial Chamber's findings, soldiers participated.[637] On 11 April 1994, one day before the attack, there had been some instances of soldiers maltreating detainees at the Karambo military camp, killing two of them,[638] but there is no specific evidence suggesting that Bagambiki knew about these incidents.

In the notice of appeal, the Prosecution contends that the Trial Chamber erred in law when it found that Bagambiki lacked effective control over the military (Prosecution Notice of Appeal, para. 59). However, the Prosecution Appeal Brief focuses on Bagambiki's position as to the gendarmerie and contains only some passing references to soldiers (Prosecution Appeal Brief, paras. 361, 372-381; the only explicit reference to soldiers is to be found in paragraph 371). The issue is discussed below. See below, para. 340.

313. Considering that in several cases the Trial Chamber found that Bagambiki took action to protect refugees or to prevent attacks on them,[639] the Appeals Chamber finds that it was not unreasonable for the majority of the Trial Chamber to decline to draw the conclusion that Bagambiki ordered the attack at the Gashirabwoba football field on 12 April 1994. Considering further that the Trial Chamber found that this was the only large-scale attack on refugees in the préfecture in which soldiers participated, the Appeals Chamber finds that it was equally open to a reasonable trier of fact not to draw the conclusion that Bagambiki acted with the knowledge and consent that the soldiers would attack the refugees.

(c) The killing of 16 Tutsi refugees

314. With regard to the murder of the 16 Tutsi refugees who had been removed from Cyangugu Cathedral and Kamarampaka Stadium, the Trial Chamber found that:

> on 16 April 1994, Bagambiki, Imanishimwe, and others selected twelve Tutsis and one Hutu from the stadium using a pre-established list. The Chamber finds that the twelve Tutsi refugees were executed along with four other Tutsis who had been selected and removed from Cyangugu Cathedral by the same authorities a short while earlier. The Chamber lacks sufficient reliable evidence to determine if the execution of the sixteen Tutsis occurred at Gatandara. A majority of the Chamber, Judge Williams dissenting, lacks sufficient reliable evidence to determine whether Bagambiki or Imanishimwe participated in the execution of these sixteen refugees by either personally killing them, ordering soldiers to kill them, or giving them to Interahamwe to be killed.[640]

315. Bagambiki testified that on the 16 and 17 of April 1994, a growing number of assailants made several attempts to attack the refugees at the Kamarampaka Stadium.[641] On the 17th, Bagambiki continued, he was informed by the commander of the gendarmerie guarding the stadium that the assailants had given him a list with a number of people, whom they believed to be in contact with RPF.[642] In addition, the commander of the gendarmerie told Bagambiki that he was not sure if he could prevent a massacre of the refugees, given the growing number of assailants and the limited number of gendarmes available.[643]

316. Bagambiki testified that he consulted the available members of the prefectural security council about the situation. The public prosecutor proposed to question the persons on the list under the protection of the gendarmerie to establish that they had no weapons or radios to contact RPF.[644] Bagambiki recalled that he decided that this was the only solution.[645] Bagambiki explained that it was not in his power to request the assistance of the military, as that was the responsibility of the commander of the gendarmerie. Finally, Bagambiki added, he was considering what had happened at Nyamasheke earlier, where the assailants had demanded the removal of one particular priest, and had abandoned their attack after this priest had left the Parish.[646]

317. Bagambiki testified that he was informed the next morning that the persons had been brought to the judicial brigade at Rusizi in order to be questioned the following day, but that the building, which was protected by a few gendarmes, was attacked by a crowd of assailants who killed the detainees.[647] The judicial brigade at Rusizi, Bagambiki explained, was where the inspecteurs de la police judiciaire had their office and their detention cells, and where persons to be questioned by the public prosecutor were detained.[648]

318. On appeal, Bagambiki submits that he did not have any choice: the assailants, who had already launched several attacks against the cathedral, threatened to attack the stadium, if the refugees on the list were not removed from the stadium. He adds that he knew that it was risky to take these persons away, but that it was, in his view, the only way to protect the refugees at the stadium as well as those whose names were on the list.[649]

319. There is no reliable direct evidence showing that Bagambiki was physically present at the killing of the 16 refugees or gave the order to kill them. Witness LAP was the only witness giving such evidence.[650] However, the Trial Chamber found that there were "numerous indicia that Witness LAP lacks credibility and is not reliable", among them several contradictions to evidence given by other witnesses, inconsistencies in the witness' own testimony, and a request for money in exchange for providing evidence.[651] Although the Prosecution takes issue with the Trial Chamber's decision not to admit certain rebuttal evidence related to Witness LAP's evidence,[652] it appears to accept the Trial Chamber's conclusion that there is no reliable evidence showing Bagambiki's direct participation in the killing. Rather, the Prosecution's argument is that he "substantially contributed" to the crime, having knowledge of the genocidal intent of its perpetrators, thus aiding and abetting the crime.[653]

320. In general, the Prosecution relies on the same set of facts to support its conclusion that Bagambiki "at the very least" aided and abetted the killing of the 16 refugees, in particular Bagambiki's position as a prefect and his "active involvement in events on the ground".[654]

321. The Appeals Chamber observes that Bagambiki had acknowledged that the decision to remove the refugees on the list was a "risky" one.[655] This, however, does not necessarily entail criminal responsibility. Bagambiki had testified that he believed at that time that this decision was the only one to ensure the security of both the persons on the list and the remaining refugees at the stadium.[656] The Appeals Chamber considers that to hold Bagambiki criminally responsible for the killing of the 16 refugees, a reasonable Trial Chamber would have to be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that he knew that the refugees were to be killed and that he substantially contributed to their killing by his actions. This scenario is incompatible with the conclusion that, although aware of the risk, he was aiming at protecting the refugees by removing them from the stadium.

322. Witness LCJ, on whose testimony Judge Williams relied in his dissenting opinion, testified:

> [Bagambiki] said that the people whose names he was going to read out were people who were disrupting the security of the Hutu who were outside the stadium; in other words, the Hutu population. He added that, people were saying that those people had weapons as well as military uniforms and therefore they were going to be taken away to be questioned and if necessary their fate be decided.[657]

Given the fact that Bagambiki was apparently merely repeating the assailants' reasons why the refugees on the list should be removed from the stadium, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could conclude that this speech did not necessarily put the refugees in a greater risk than they were already in.

323. The fact that the only Hutu among the 17 selected refugees survived does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that Bagambiki knew or had reason to know about the impending fate of the other refugees. First, it is not clear whether Bagambiki knew that this one person was separated from the 16 Tutsi refugees. Second, Bagambiki testified that he was informed after the events that this refugee had been taken to the home of the commander of the gendarmerie because there were not enough cells at the Rusizi brigade and she was the only woman among the 17 selected persons.[658]

324. There are also some facts which support Bagambiki's defence. Not every observer thought that the selection of the refugees had a sinister meaning. Thus, when four of the refugees on the list were taken from Cyangugu Cathedral, the Church authorities believed that the request to question them was genuine and that they would not be harmed.[659]

325. Bagambiki stressed in his testimony that he was encouraged in his decision to allow the removal of the 17 refugees by the events in Nyamasheke.[660] The Trial Chamber indeed found that Bagambiki intervened at Nyamasheke Parish on 13 April 1994, negotiated with the assailants and removed the priest, Father Ubald, from the Parish. There were no further attacks on Nyamasheke Parish on 13 or 14 April. However, on 15 April, a massive assault was launched against the Parish, during which most of the refugees there were killed.[661] Bagambiki was informed about this attack on the same day, so that, when on 16 April the decision was taken to remove the 17 refugees from Cyangugu Cathedral and Kamarampaka Stadium, it might be argued that it was at least doubtful if this measure could actually prevent an attack at the stadium. However, Bagambiki's hope – if this was the motive for his decision – that the removal of the 17 refugees would prevent further attacks on the stadium apparently turned out to be justified: according to the Trial Chamber, there were no large-scale attacks at the refugees gathered at the Kamarampaka Stadium after 16 April 1994.[662]

326. The Appeals Chamber notes that the events at Shangi Parish show that the selection of some refugees to satisfy the demands of attackers did not necessarily mean that the selected refugees would be killed. According to the Trial Chamber's findings, Bagambiki sent Théodore Munyangabe on 26 April 1994 to Shangi Parish after he was informed about an impending attack. Munyangabe negotiated with the assailants and agreed to remove a number of refugees from the parish, if the assailants agreed not to attack the remaining refugees. The assailants gave Munyangabe a list with names of persons who, in their view, "caused insecurity".[663] Munyangabe then selected around 40 refugees, who were taken to the préfecture and a gendarmerie camp. On the way, one of them was killed during an attack by the local population, and several were mistreated in the gendarmerie camp, but the rest of them arrived safely at the Kamarampaka Stadium.[664]

327. In sum, the Appeals Chamber finds that the evidence is not as unequivocal as the Prosecution claims it to be. Many of the factual findings are open to different interpretations. Even if some of the facts would support the conclusion that Bagambiki knew that his participation in the selection of the refugees would lead to their death, this is far from being the only reasonable inference. The Appeals Chamber concludes that a reasonable trier of fact could find that Bagambiki's defence was not refuted by the evidence and conclude that he was not criminally responsible for the death of the 16 refugees.

3. Conclusion

328. For the foregoing reasons, the Prosecution's first and second grounds of appeal are dismissed in their entirety.

F. EMMANUEL BAGAMBIKI'S CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY (9TH GROUND OF APPEAL)

329. Under its ninth ground of appeal, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law when it absolved Bagambiki of individual criminal responsibility under Articles 6 (1) and 6 (3) of the Statute.[665] Although the Prosecution presents its submission under the heading "misapplication of Rwandan law", the Appeals Chamber understands that it raises in fact several broader issues:

- Contrary to the Trial Chamber's conclusions, Bagambiki was criminally responsible for "omissions or gross criminal negligence" and aiding and abetting crimes by acquiescence or tacit encouragement;[666]
- The Trial Chamber erroneously held that there was no superior-subordinate relationship between Bagambiki and the gendarmes;[667] and
- The Trial Chamber erred in its application of Article 6 (3) of the Statute when it exonerated Bagambiki from responsibility for the massacre of Tutsi by the Kagano communal police.[668]

1. Criminal responsibility for omissions under Article 6 (1) of the Statute

330. With regard to Bagambiki's responsibility under Article 6 (1) of the Statute, the Prosecution submits in its Notice of Appeal that the Trial Chamber committed an error by finding that the Rwandan law only entailed civil, and not criminal sanctions for a prefect's failure to ensure the protection and safety of the civilian population.[669] In its Appeal Brief, the Prosecution expands this argument and submits that Bagambiki was not only responsible for criminal omissions, but that his inaction and silence, despite his knowledge of the massive crimes, amount to conduct that was tantamount to acquiescence in the crimes or their tacit encouragement.[670]

(a) Culpable omission

331. With regard to Bagambiki's criminal liability for omissions or gross criminal negligence, the Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying exclusively on Rwandan law. According to the Tribunal's jurisprudence, the Prosecution argues, it is a well-established principle that an accused can be held liable under Article 6 (1) for culpable omission; a principle, the Prosecution adds, which is also embraced by the Rwandan Penal Code.[671] Therefore, the Prosecution concludes, Bagambiki was criminally responsible, because he failed to "prevent or to punish the perpetrators" of the killings and acts of violence, despite his knowledge of the crimes.[672]

332. Bagambiki responds that the Trial Chamber drew a distinction between his general obligation to ensure the safety of the population of the préfecture, and his obligation to assist individual persons in danger who had explicitly asked for his assistance.[673] The Trial Chamber's reasoning regarding Rwandan law, Bagambiki submits, was relevant only to the first charge that Bagambiki failed to meet his obligations deriving from his position as a prefect.[674] In this respect, Bagambiki argues, the Trial Judgement was consistent with the jurisprudence and the Statute of the Tribunal.[675]

333. The Prosecution takes issue with the Trial Chamber's conclusions in paragraphs 658 through 660 of the Trial Judgement. At the outset, the Trial Chamber defined the requirements for criminal responsibility for an omission as a principal perpetrator:

> (a) the accused must have had a duty to act mandated by a rule of criminal law; (b) the accused must have had the ability to act; (c) the accused failed to act intending the criminally sanctioned consequences or with awareness and consent that the consequences would occur; and (d) the failure to act resulted in the commission of the crime.[676]

The Trial Chamber then found that Bagambiki, under Rwandan domestic law, had an obligation to ensure the protection of the population of his préfecture. The Trial Chamber went on to determine whether Bagambiki had the ability to act. It considered that, as the prefect, he could request the intervention of the Armed Forces, but that he had no authority to determine or control how the Armed Forces executed an operation. In addition, it found that "the evidence d[id] not indicate what other specific means were available to a prefect".[677] The Trial Chamber concluded that "this legal duty was not mandated by a rule of criminal law. Thus, any omission of this legal duty under Rwandan law, even if proven, does not result in criminal liability under Article 6 (1) of the Statute".[678]

334. It is not disputed by the parties that an accused can be held criminally responsible for omissions under Article 6 (1) of the Statute.[679] Neither do they dispute that any criminal responsibility for omissions requires an obligation to act. The issue is rather whether this obligation to act must stem from a rule of criminal law, or, as the Prosecution appears to contend, any legal obligation is sufficient. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Blaskić Appeal Judgement, on which the Prosecution relies in its Reply,[680] does not address this issue.[681]

335. In the context of the present case, it is not necessary to discuss this issue further. The Trial Chamber based its conclusion on two different arguments: The duty of the prefect was not mandated [681] Blaskić Appeal Judgement, fn. 1385 to para. 663, cites Article 86 (1) of Additional Protocol I: "The High Contracting Parties and the Parties to the conflict shall repress grave breaches, and take measures necessary to suppress all other breaches, of the Conventions or of this Protocol which result from a failure to act when under a duty to do so", indicating that not every failure to act gives rise to criminal responsibility. In Blaskić, the duty to act was qualified as one imposed by the "laws and customs of war" (Blaskić Appeal Judgement, para. 668). Cf. also Bagilishema Appeal Judgement, para. 36: "The line between those forms of responsibility which may engage the criminal responsibility of the superior under international law and those which may not can be drawn in the abstract only with difficulty" and A. Cassese, International Criminal Law, p. 202: "It should be noted that serious violations of many of the above positive obligations […] amount to a war crime" (emphasis added).

by a rule of criminal law, and it was not clear what means were available to Bagambiki to fulfil this duty. The Appeals Chamber also notes the Separate Opinion of Judge Ostrovsky:

> In my view, the Prosecutor simply failed to introduce sufficient evidence concerning what additional resources were available to the préfecture to stem the tide of violence and to provide greater protection to the refugees. On the basis of the totality of the reliable and credible evidence presented in this case, I am not convinced that Bagambiki, with the resources available to him, could do more for the protection of refugees in Cyangugu prefecture.[682]

The Prosecution has not indicated which possibilities were open to Bagambiki to fulfil his duties under the Rwandan domestic law. Thus, even if the failure to fulfil the duty of a Rwandan prefect to protect the population of his prefecture could entail responsibility under international criminal law, the Prosecution has not shown that the alleged error of the Trial Chamber invalidated its decision.

336. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution does not identify any particular instances of Bagambiki's alleged failure to fulfil this obligation under this ground of appeal.

(b) Aiding and abetting by tacit approval

337. The Prosecution submits that Bagambiki's

> "knowledge of such massive crimes and his inaction or silence amount to culpable omission or gross negligence or conduct that is tantamount to acquiescence in, tacit approval of, or aiding and abetting the crimes".[683]

Citing the Aleksovski Trial Judgement, the Prosecution argues that when a superior was aware of crimes committed by his subordinates his silence could only be interpreted as a sign of approval, even when he was not present at the crime scene.[684]

338. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, criminal responsibility for an omission, which leads to a conviction as the principal perpetrator of the crime, has to be distinguished from aiding and abetting a crime by encouragement, tacit approval or omission, amounting to a substantial contribution to the crime. In the Notice of Appeal, the Prosecution's arguments are exclusively related to the issue of criminal responsibility for an omission. The issue of Bagambiki's responsibility for aiding and abetting the crimes by his tacit approval is raised only in the Appeal Brief, without the Prosecution having first sought leave to vary its grounds of appeal.[685] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber declines to address this issue further.

2. Superior responsibility under Article 6 (3) of the Statute

(a) Superior-subordinate relationship between Bagambiki and the gendarmes

339. The Prosecution challenges the Trial Chamber's finding that Bagambiki had neither de jure nor de facto authority over the gendarmes. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its definition of a superior under Article 6 (3) of the Statute.[686]

340. In its Notice of Appeal, the Prosecution submitted that the Trial Chamber erred in finding "that Bagambiki lacked effective control over the gendarmes and the military".[687] However, in the Appeal Brief, the Prosecution's arguments are focused on Bagambiki's effective control over the gendarmes, leading to the conclusion that Bagambiki had

> "the necessary material ability required to prevent or punish crimes by the gendarmes he requisitioned".[688]

The Appeals Chamber will therefore concentrate on the issue of Bagambiki's responsibility for the crimes committed by the gendarmes.

341. The Prosecution asserts that the > "Trial Chamber confined the definition of a superior to a military-style structure, where the superior can give orders or punish or prevent transgressions through issuing orders or taking disciplinary actions".[689]

The paragraph of the Trial Judgement, to which the Prosecution refers, reads:

> After reviewing the relevant provisions of Rwandan law, the Chamber is not convinced that Bagambiki's ability to requisition gendarmes gave him de jure authority to give orders to them during the execution of an operation. […] The law contains no provision indicating that a prefect had the legal authority as a superior to prevent a gendarme from committing a crime by giving an order during the execution of an operation or to punish a gendarme who had committed a crime during the execution of an operation.[690]

In the next paragraph, the Trial Chamber went on to determine whether Bagambiki had de facto authority over the gendarmes, and found that

> [w]hile there is ample evidence that Bagambiki requisitioned gendarmes to provide security at a number of sites, there is insufficient evidence that he maintained any control over how these gendarmes carried out their mission upon deployment.[691]

Although the Trial Chamber in this paragraph did not explicitly refer to Bagambiki's ability to prevent the commission of the offence or to punish the offenders, its finding has to be read in the context of the Trial Chamber's general definition of superior responsibility:

> a superior-subordinate relationship is established by showing a formal or informal hierarchical relationship. The superior must have possessed the power or the authority, de jure or de facto, to prevent or punish an offence committed by his subordinates. The superior must have had effective control over the subordinates at the time the offence was committed. Effective control means the material ability to prevent the commission of the offence or to punish the principal offenders.[692]

This definition is consistent with the settled jurisprudence of both this Tribunal and the ICTY.[693] In particular, the Appeals Chamber recalls the conclusion of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Blaškić:

> The indicators of effective control are more a matter of evidence than of substantive law, and those indicators are limited to showing that the accused had the power to prevent, punish, or initiate measures leading to proceedings against the alleged perpetrators where appropriate.[694]

[694] Blaškić Appeal Judgement, para. 69 (footnotes omitted).

342. The Trial Chamber's definition and paragraph 637 of the Trial Judgement clearly show that the Trial Chamber was aware that "effective control" as the prerequisite for superior responsibility is tantamount to the material ability to prevent or punish criminal conduct.[695] Therefore, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in its definition of superior-subordinate relationship.

343. The Appeals Chamber does not agree with the Prosecution's argument that the Trial Chamber, in its analysis of Bagambiki's de jure position "subordinated substantive legislation to ministerial instructions relating to the gendarmerie".[696] The Trial Chamber's analysis encompassed not only the Rwandan Ministerial Instruction on the Maintenance and Re-establishment of Order,[697] but also the Rwandan law on the gendarmerie.[698] The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber should have also considered the Law on the Organisation and Functioning of the Préfecture, which gave the prefect an "extensive obligation to ensure tranquillity, order and security of people and property".[699] The Prosecution does not indicate any particular provisions of this law to support its argument. The Appeals Chamber notes that Article 8 (2) of the Law on Organisation and Functioning of the Préfecture indeed obliges the prefect to "ensure the tranquillity, the public order and the security of persons and property".[700] To fulfil this obligation, the law empowered the prefect to request the intervention of the Armed Forces "in accordance with the Law on the Establishment of the gendarmerie".[701] In other words, the Law on Organisation and Functioning of the Préfecture concretized the prefect's obligation by a reference to the Rwandan law on the gendarmerie, which the Trial Chamber duly took into account.

344. In addition, the Prosecution relies on paragraph 78 of the Aleksovski Trial Judgement, which held that

> [t]he possibility of transmitting reports to the appropriate authorities suffices once the civilian authority, through its position in the hierarchy, is expected to report whenever crimes are committed, and that, in the light of this position, the likelihood that those reports will trigger an investigation or initiate disciplinary or even criminal measures is extant.[702]

In his Response, Bagambiki points to the testimony of Prosecution expert witness, André Guichaoua, that in 1994 in Cyangugu the judiciary and the prosecution were not in a position to carry out their tasks satisfactorily: "These people were never known for having arrested or prevented any murder."[703] And, in addition, Bagambiki argues:

> "Should [Bagambiki] be blamed for not having submitted reports to the Interim Government whose members are currently under trial in this jurisdiction?"[704]

345. It fell to the Prosecution to identify the authorities to which, in its view, Bagambiki should have submitted reports in order to prevent the crimes or to punish their perpetrators. This it failed to do. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the theoretical possibility of submitting reports of crimes committed against Tutsi refugees to the same authorities who, as the Prosecution argues in other cases, were actively organizing and ordering massacres of Tutsi throughout Rwanda is not sufficient to establish Bagambiki's criminal responsibility.

346. The Prosecution itself argues that in April 1994 the monopoly of power lay with the prefects,[705] which is not easily reconcilable with the idea that Bagambiki should have submitted reports of criminal acts to the "appropriate authorities" in order to prevent and punish crimes. Regarding the argument that the prefects held the monopoly of power, the Appeals Chamber observes that general statements of the situation in Rwanda in April 1994 may be illustrative as to the background of the case, but they are not suited to prove the individual guilt of the Accused.

347. To demonstrate that Bagambiki exercised "effective control" over the gendarmes, the Prosecution had to prove that he had the material ability to prevent and punish crimes. This it failed to do. The Appeals Chamber concludes that the Prosecution has not demonstrated any error in the Trial Chamber's reasoning as to Bagambiki's de jure or de facto position of authority vis-à-vis gendarmes.

(b) Bagambiki's responsibility for the crimes of the Kagano communal police

348. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding Bagambiki not liable for the massacre of Tutsi refugees at the Nyamasheke Parish on 15 April 1994, in which members of the Kagano communal police participated.[706] The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber had found that Bagambiki was a superior with effective control over the Kagano communal police, but nevertheless acquitted him, because there was no evidence that he was informed of the attack.[707] This, the Prosecution contends, is "hardly to reconcile" with the Trial Chamber's finding that Bagambiki, due to his position, ought to have known about the various attacks.[708] In addition, the Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber misconstrued the "ought to have known or had reason to know" test required under Article 6 (3) of the Statute.[709]

349. The Appeals Chamber first of all notes that the argument that the Trial Chamber misconstrued the "knew or had reason to know" test set forth in Article 6 (3) of the Statute is raised in the Appeal Brief for the first time, and, in addition, is unrelated to the claim that the Trial Chamber misapplied Rwandan law.[710] The Appeals Chamber further notes that the Prosecution did not seek leave to vary its grounds of appeal in order to include this new allegation.[711] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber declines to address this issue further.

350. With regard to Bagambiki's knowledge about the participation of his subordinates in the Nyamasheke parish massacre, the Trial Chamber noted:

> The Chamber has no evidence that Bagambiki was informed while Bagambiki visiting Nyamasheke parish with Kamana and others on 13 April 1994 that Kagano commune police participated in the attack on that date. There is also no indication in the evidence that Bagambiki was informed of the 15 April 1994 attack at Nyamasheke until after it was completed.[712]

[711] Cf. Practice Directions on Formal Requirements for Appeals from Judgement, 4 July 2005, Article 2.
[712] Trial Judgement, para. 649.

The Trial Chamber went on to conclude that Bagambiki should have known that the bourgmestre of Kagano, Kamana, also participated in the attack. With regard to the Kagano communal police, it found:

> The Chamber lacks sufficient reliable evidence to determine whether Bagambiki should have known about the involvement of Kagano commune police in the 15 April 1994 attack, given the limited testimony about their involvement in the attacks against Nyamasheke parish, the limited number of attacks in which they participated, and the fact that they did not report directly to the prefect unless specially requisitioned by him.[713]

351. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution misreads the Trial Judgement when it argues that the Trial Chamber found that "there was no evidence that [Bagambiki] was informed of the attack".[714] In fact, the Trial Chamber found that Bagambiki was informed about the attack, and as a consequence, suspended Bourgmestre Kamana.[715] The Trial Chamber found Bagambiki not responsible for the attack because it lacked evidence showing that Bagambiki should have known about the involvement of the Kagano communal police in the attack. The Prosecution has not shown that this finding was unreasonable.

3. Conclusion

352. The Prosecution's ninth ground of appeal is dismissed in its entirety.

G. NATURE OF SAMUEL IMANISHIMWE'S CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE EVENTS OF GASHIRABWOBA (10TH GROUND OF APPEAL)

353. The Trial Chamber found Imanishimwe guilty of genocide (Count 7 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment), extermination as a crime against humanity (Count 10) and serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II (Count 13) pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute for the acts committed by his subordinates at the Gashirabwoba football field on 12 April 1994.

354. The Prosecution submits that the finding that Imanishimwe incurs criminal responsibility pursuant only to Article 6 (3) of the Statute

> "fails to capture the true nature of Imanishimwe's role and participation in the massacre at Gashirabwoba football field".[716]

The Prosecution argues that the only finding that a reasonable trier of fact could have made from the established facts was that Imanishimwe was directly responsible for having ordered, or at the very least for having aided and abetted, the crimes committed on 12 April 1994 at Gashirabwoba.[717] The Prosecution also submits that Imanishimwe should have been found guilty for having "participated in a joint criminal enterprise as a co-perpetrator in a position to issue orders".[718] In short, the Prosecution alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in not finding Imanishimwe criminally responsible on the basis of Article 6 (1) of the Statute.

[717] Prosecution Notice of Appeal, para. 63; Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 389.
[718] Prosecution Appeal Brief, sub-heading (ii), p. 145. In this case the Prosecution refers to its arguments under his 3rd ground of appeal.

355. In response to the Prosecution's arguments, Imanishimwe submits that he should not have been convicted of the events that occurred in Gashirabwoba. On the one hand, he contends that the acts allegedly committed by soldiers at Gashirabwoba on 12 April 1994 are not pleaded in the Indictment. On the other, he alleges that the Prosecution adduced no evidence to establish that the soldiers said to have massacred the refugees were his subordinates.[719] Imanishimwe is in fact repeating hence the arguments that he develops to buttress his first and second grounds of appeal. With regard to the finding that he incurred criminal responsibility on the basis of Article 6 (1), Imanishimwe merely states that the arguments advanced by the Prosecution

> "are specious, as they contain no evidence whatsoever that Samuel Imanishimwe was present during the massacre at Gashirabwoba on 12 April 1994".[720]

1. Findings by the Trial Chamber

356. Upon examination of the evidence adduced by the parties on the events at Gashirabwoba, the Trial Chamber made the following factual findings:

> 435. […] A majority of the Chamber, Judge Ostrovsky dissenting, finds that on 11 April 1994 after the refugees had repulsed an attack, Bagambiki, Imanishimwe, and soldiers came to the field [of Gashirabwoba] between 2:30 and 3:00 p.m., and the refugees told Bagambiki that they were being attacked by assailants from Bumazi and Gashirabwoba sectors. [...] At about 7:00 p.m. that evening, soldiers returned to the field and asked the refugees if they were all Tutsis.
> 437. From Witness LAC's testimony, the Chamber further finds that, on 12 April 1994, the refugee population at the field had swelled to nearly 3,000. That morning, thousands of assailants from the surrounding area and the Shagasha tea factory began attacking the refugees at the football field. A majority of the Chamber, Judge Ostrovsky dissenting, finds that Bagambiki and Nsabimana, the director of the Shagasha tea factory, came to the field for about thirty minutes. From Witness LAC's evidence, the majority accepts that Bagambiki promised to send soldiers to protect the refugees. An hour later, armed factory guards and at least fifteen soldiers surrounded the refugees and, after the refugees had raised their hands and asked for peace, fired and threw grenades at them for thirty minutes. The Interahamwe then killed the survivors and looted their personal possessions.
>
> 439. [...] The Chamber notes that Witness LAC, whose testimony the Chamber accepted, did not see Bagambiki or Imanishimwe on the football field immediately prior to the soldiers' attack.

357. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber indicated at paragraph 624 of the Trial Judgement that it would consider Imanishimwe's individual criminal responsibility "as a superior under Article 6 (3) or for 'ordering', under Article 6 (1) [of the Statute]". A few paragraphs later, the Trial Chamber seems to widen the scope of the analysis by stating that it would like to assess the nature and form of criminal responsibility and participation for each of the accused "under Articles 2 (3) and 6 (1)".[721]

358. On the basis of its factual findings, the Trial Chamber made the following legal findings regarding Imanishimwe's criminal responsibility:

[719] Imanishimwe Response Brief, paras. 170-194.
[720] Ibid., para. 195; see also AT. 6 February 2006, pp. 94-95.
[721] Trial Judgement, para. 626.

653. The Chamber has found that, on 12 April 1994, soldiers participated in the attack on the refugees at the Gashirabwoba football field. The Chamber lacks sufficient reliable evidence to find that Imanishimwe ordered his soldiers to participate in the attack within the meaning of Article 6 (1) [emphasis added].

654. The Chamber however finds that Imanishimwe knew or should have known about the participation of his soldiers in the attack at the Gashirabwoba football field. In reaching this conclusion, the Chamber recalls that Imanishimwe was present at the Gashirabwoba football field on 11 April 1994 and thus was fully aware of the presence of refugees and of their plight. His soldiers returned later that evening to determine whether the refugees were entirely Tutsi. On 12 April 1994, at least fifteen soldiers surrounded the refugees and killed them after the refugees asked for peace. Given the relatively small size of the camp, Imanishimwe's control over his soldiers, and the fact that he remained in regular contact with his soldiers stationed away from the camp, the Chamber cannot accept that fifteen or more soldiers would have participated in such a systematic, large-scale attack without the knowledge of their commander. The Chamber notes that there is no evidence that Imanishimwe took any steps to prevent the attack or to punish any soldier at Karambo camp for participating in the massacre. Thus, the Chamber finds that Imanishimwe can be held criminally responsible under Article 6 (3) for the actions of his subordinates at the Gashirabwoba football field. [emphasis added][722]

695. As the majority has determined that Imanishimwe is criminally responsible for genocide as a superior under Article 6 (3), the Chamber finds that Imanishimwe is not guilty on Count 8 of the indictment against him for complicity in genocide, which is based on the same facts as Count 7 and does not charge Imanishimwe with criminal responsibility under Article 6 (3).[723]

359. The Appeals Chamber notes that with regard to Gashirabwoba, the Trial Chamber makes a direct pronouncement only on Imanishimwe's responsibility as superior and for having ordered the crimes. However, it is apparent from its findings on all the allegations made against Imanishimwe that the Trial Chamber did not restrict its examination only to these two forms of criminal responsibility. Note should be taken, for example, of the guilty verdict against Imanishimwe for aiding and abetting acts of torture and cruel treatment perpetrated in Karambo camp.[724] In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, the Trial Chamber's silence over the other forms of criminal responsibility with regard to Gashirabwoba can be explained by the very nature of its factual findings: the Trial Chamber plainly considered that no form of criminal responsibility other than the ones envisaged in the body of the Trial Judgement was capable of describing the criminal conduct of the Accused.

360. It is now left for the Appeals Chamber to determine, in light of the factual findings made by the Trial Chamber, whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding Imanishimwe criminally responsible for the events at Gashirabwoba on the basis of Article 6 (3) of the Statute only.

2. Responsibility for participation in a joint criminal enterprise [722] See also Trial Judgement, para. 691: "the Chamber finds that Imanishimwe is criminally responsible for the acts of his subordinates at the Gashirabwoba football field pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute because he failed to prevent the crime. The Chamber also recalls that Imanishimwe did not punish any soldier for this attack, which additionally shows that he acquiesced in the soldiers' participation in the massacre; para. 694: "The Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that Imanishimwe is criminally responsible under Article 6 (3) of the Statute for genocide because he failed to prevent the killing of members of the Tutsi ethnic group by his subordinates in relation to the events at the Gashirabwoba football field on 12 April 1994 […]".

[723] See also paras. 744, 749 and 794 for the other counts.

[724] Trial Judgement, paras. 763 and 802.

361. The Prosecution argues that Imanishimwe should have been found guilty as a "co-perpetrator in a position to issue orders"[725] for the crimes at Gashirabwoba on the strength of his participation in a joint criminal enterprise.

362. The Appeals Chamber recalls its finding above that the Trial Chamber did not err in deciding not to take into consideration responsibility for participation in a joint criminal enterprise, on the ground that the Prosecution had not pleaded this form of responsibility in the Indictment.[726] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Prosecution has no basis for invoking to this form of responsibility here. The Appeals Chamber will therefore not consider the Prosecution's arguments in this respect any further.

3. Responsibility for ordering the commission of crimes

363. The Prosecution submits that Imanishimwe should have been held criminally responsible under Article 6 (1) of the Statute for ordering the massacre perpetrated at the Gashirabwoba football field. The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber should have inferred from the corpus of evidence that Imanishimwe had not "simply acquiesced in" but rather "ordered"[727] the participation of his soldiers in the massacre. It recalls in support of its argument that "[t]he fact that an order was given can be proved through circumstantial evidence" and that "[p]roof of all forms of criminal responsibility can be given by direct or circumstantial evidence".[728] For the Prosecution, it is clear from the factual findings made by the Trial Chamber that the soldiers would not have participated in the Gashirabwoba massacre "without Imanishimwe's express order or at least, some form of assistance from him",[729] as the Chamber had established inter alia that Imanishimwe exercised effective control over the soldiers of Karambo camp; that he had issued unlawful orders to them resulting in his conviction on the basis of Article 6 (1) for other crimes committed during the same period as the massacre, and that a massacre of that magnitude could not have taken place without his knowledge.[730]

364. On this issue, the Trial Chamber found that it lacked sufficient reliable evidence to find that Imanishimwe ordered his soldiers to participate in the attack within the meaning of Article 6 (1) of the Statute.[731]

365. The Appeals Chamber has on many occasions recalled the constitutive elements of this mode of responsibility:

(1) the material element (or actus reus) is established when a person uses his position of authority to order [732] another person to commit a crime;
(2) the requisite mental element (or mens rea) is established when such person acted with direct intent to give the order.[733]

[733] Kordić and Čerkez Appeal Judgement, para. 29. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in the Blaskić Appeal Judgement, the ICTY Appeals Chamber reached the conclusion that another articulation of mens rea different from direct intent exists, namely the act of ordering "an act or omission with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime will be committed in the execution of that order". (Blaskić Appeal Judgement, para. 42).

366. Applying these legal requirements to the Trial Chamber's factual findings, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the Trial Chamber erred in its legal findings. The evidence presented before the Trial Chamber does not establish that Imanishimwe in one way or another, explicitly or implicitly, gave instructions to his subordinates to attack the Tutsi who had sought refuge at the Gashirabwoba football field. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber correctly found that Imanishimwe could not incur responsibility for "ordering" the crimes committed on 12 April 1994 at Gashirabwoba. This sub-ground of appeal is dismissed.

4. Responsibility for aiding and abetting the commission of crimes

367. Lastly, the Prosecution alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in not considering whether Imanishimwe was criminally responsible under Article 6 (1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting the massacre perpetrated at Gashirabwoba on 12 April 1994.[734] A reasonable tribunal, according to it,

> "would, at the barest minimum, have found that Imanishimwe aided and abetted in the killing of Tutsi refugees at the Gashirabwoba football field on 12 April 2004 by having knowledge that his soldiers would participate in the attack and by allowing them to do so".[735]

The Prosecution submits that the actus reus of aiding and abetting in this instance is established by Imanishimwe's omission to prevent his soldiers from going to Gashirabwoba, and that this omission had a decisive effect on their ability to participate in the attack.[736] It further contends that Imanishimwe possessed the requisite knowledge to be an aider and abettor in the Gashirabwoba massacre,[737] given that the Trial Chamber found that he knew or should have known about the participation of his soldiers in the attack.[738]

368. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not expressly rule on the issue as to whether Imanishimwe could have incurred criminal responsibility for aiding and abetting the crimes committed at the Gashirabwoba football field on 12 April 1994. This notwithstanding, the Appeals Chamber does not conclude that the Trial Chamber failed to consider this form of responsibility. It indeed transpires from the legal findings made by the Trial Chamber that this form of responsibility was considered and even accepted when the facts lent themselves to it. The Appeals Chamber understands the Trial Chamber's silence with respect to aiding and abetting as an indication that it was not established that the Accued's conduct could in this particular instance be characterized as aiding and abetting.[739]

369. Accordingly, the issue is for the Appeals Chamber to inquire into whether this finding is one which a reasonable trier of fact could have made.

370. To establish the material element (or actus reus) of aiding and abetting under Article 6 1) of the Statute, it must be proven that the aider and abettor committed acts specifically aimed at assisting, encouraging, lending moral support[740] for the perpetration of a specific crime, and that the said support

[735] Ibid., para. 407.
[736] Ibid., para. 408. In support of its line of reasoning, the Prosecution cites the Blaškić Trial Judgement, para. 284: "the actus reus of aiding and abetting may be perpetrated through an omission, provided this failure to act had a decisive effect on the commission of the crime and that it was coupled with the requisite mens rea." (footnote omitted).

[739] See supra, para. 359.
[740] The Appeals Chamber notes that the phrase "assist, encourage or lend no support" originally used by the Appeals Chamber in the Tadić (para. 229), Aleksovski (para. 163), Vasiljević (para. 102) and Blaškić (para. 45) Appeal Judgements has been translated as "aider, encourager ou fournir un soutien moral" in the French versions of the said Judgements. The Appeals Chamber considers that this translation may mislead the reader, given that "aided and abetted" is rendered in the French text of the Statute by "aidé et encourage".

had a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crime. The Appeals Chamber adds that the actus reus of aiding and abetting may, in certain circumstances, be perpetrated through an omission.[741] The requisite mens rea is the fact that the aider and abettor knows that his acts assist in the commission of the specific crime of the principal.[742]

371. In the instant case, the Trial Chamber considered that it was not established that the Accused had ordered or was present during the attack launched at Gashirabwoba on 12 April 1994.[743] On the other hand, it found that the soldiers responsible for the attack could not have participated in the attack without their superior, Samuel Imanishimwe, being aware of it.[744] For the Trial Chamber, the fact that Imanishimwe did not punish any of the incriminated soldiers showed that he "acquiesced in the soldiers' participation in the massacre".[745]

372. Firstly, the Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to Imanishimwe's assertion,[746] proof that he was present during the massacre is not necessary here. The ICTY Appeals Chamber has had occasion to point out that an aider and abettor may participate before, during or after the crime has been perpetrated and at a certain distance from the scene of the crime.[747] The Appeals Chamber adopts these findings and holds that Imanishimwe's argument is irrelevant.

373. The Appeals Chamber concludes that the facts as established by the Trial Chamber did not oblige a reasonable trier of fact to find Imanishimwe criminally responsible for aiding and abetting the commission of the crimes of genocide, extermination and murders perpetrated at Gashirabwoba.

374. Although the Trial Chamber finds that Imanishimwe "acquiesced in" the participation of his soldiers in the massacre, it does not establish that such acquiescence was a substantial contribution to the perpetration of the crime. A reasonable trier of fact could not have concluded from the evidence that the soldiers implicated in the massacre were aware of the acquiescence in question, nor have determined the extent to which it might have influenced the said soldiers. In these circumstances, the Trial Chamber cannot be taken to task for not finding Imanishimwe responsible for aiding and abetting the perpetrators of the massacre.

375. The Prosecution submits that the omission by Imanishimwe to prevent his soldiers from going to Gashirabwoba had a decisive effect on their ability to participate in the attack. The Appeals Chamber holds that the findings of the Trial Chamber do not permit it to be established that Imanishimwe's omission was specifically aimed at giving the soldiers the possibility of going to perpetrate the massacre, or that he was aware of the assistance he was lending them. Moreover, the Prosecution does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact would have failed to make the same findings on the basis of the evidence admitted by the Trial Chamber.

376. The Appeals Chamber holds that the Prosecution failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed an error when it refused to conclude that Samuel Imanishimwe acted or omitted to act – for example, by not holding back his soldiers – in the knowledge that his act or omission would assist, encourage or lend moral support[748] to the perpetration of crimes against the persons who had taken refuge at the Gashirabwoba football field. The Appeals Chamber accordingly holds that the Prosecution has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting this form of responsibility when characterizing Imanishimwe's participation in the massacre of 12 April 1994.

5. Conclusion

377. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecutor failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed an error when it refused, on the basis of its factual findings, to hold Samuel Imanishimwe individually responsible pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute for ordering or aiding and abetting the perpetration of the Gashirabwoba massacre. The Appeals Chamber declined to consider Imanishimwe's responsibility for participation in a joint criminal enterprise inasmuch as he was not informed that the Prosecution intended to plead this form of responsibility against him. The Appeals Chamber dismisses this ground of appeal in its entirety.

IV. SAMUEL IMANISHIMWE'S APPEAL

A. SUPERIOR RESPONSIBILITY UNDER ARTICLE 6 (3) OF THE STATUTE (2ND GROUND OF APPEAL)

378. In his second ground of appeal, Imanishimwe alleges that the Trial Chamber erred by finding him responsible as a superior pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute although it had not been established that the soldiers alleged to have massacred refugees at the Gashirabwoba football field were under his authority.[749]

379. As the Appeals Chamber has accepted Imanishimwe's first ground of appeal and consequently decided to set aside his convictions under Article 6 (3) of the Statute for the events at the Gashirabwoba football field, this ground of appeal has become moot, and hence does not need to be considered by the Appeals Chamber.

B. CONVICTION ON THE BASIS OF ARTICLE 4 OF THE STATUTE (4TH GROUND OF APPEAL)

380. The Trial Chamber found Imanishimwe guilty of serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II thereto (Count 13 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment) for acts perpetrated at Karambo camp and at the Gashirabwoba football field. In his fourth ground of appeal, Imanishimwe requests the Appeals Chamber to quash the conviction under Article 4 (a) of the Statute for the acts committed at Gashirabwoba.[750] He submits that the approach of the Trial Chamber "clearly demonstrates its bias and complacency"[751] by basing his "guilt in respect of the Gashirabwoba events on a fragmented account of events".[752] He also submits that the Trial Chamber failed to establish a nexus between the alleged acts and the armed conflict.[753]

381. As the Appeals Chamber has accepted Imanishimwe's first ground of appeal and consequently decided to set aside his convictions under Article 6 (3) of the Statute for the events at the Gashirabwoba football field, this ground of appeal has become moot, and hence does not need to be considered by the Appeals Chamber.

[752] Ibid., part 4.1, p. 43.
[753] Ibid., para. 4.2, p. 44. The Appeals Chamber notes incidently that Imanishimwe puts forward no relevant argument in support of this ground appeal, contenting himself with repeating his arguments regarding the absence of any superior-subordinate relationship between him and the soldiers directly responsible for the Gashirabwoba massacre, the subject of his second ground of appeal.

C. ASSESSMENT OF EVIDENCE IN RESPECT OF KARAMBO MILITARY CAMP (5TH GROUND 5 OF APPEAL)

382. In his fifth ground of appeal, Imanishimwe raises two errors, of law and of fact, with regard to the evidence of the events that took place in Karambo camp. Imanishimwe submits that the Trial Chamber erred by being biased in its assessment of the credibility of the witnesses who appeared before it and by merely relying on speculations and inferences to find him responsible, thus denying him the benefit of presumption of innocence.

1. Credibility of witnesses

383. Imanishimwe complains that the Trial Chamber refused to give any credence to the military witnesses called by the Defence.[754] He denounces the Trial Chamber's insufficient justification for dismissing the testimony of these eyewitnesses whose statements were corroborated by four other witnesses, namely PNF, PBA, PNB and Essono, who were non military.[755] He submits that the Trial Chamber's argument that the military witnesses, as interested parties, were biased should, if valid, also have applied to Witnesses LI, MG, MA, LCJ and LAC who are portrayed by the Prosecution as victims of the acts for which Imanishimwe is held responsible.[756]

384. Imanishimwe concomitantly complains that the Trial Chamber gave undue credence to Witnesses LI and MG.[757] As regards Witness LI, Imanishimwe submits that the improbability of his statement casts doubt on his presence at Karambo camp at the time of the events that he claimed to describe, and blames the Trial Chamber for disregarding the statement by Prosecution Witness Essono, demonstrating, according to him, the "absurdity of Witness LI's account".[758] As regards Witness MG, Imanishimwe submits that several of his allegations were contradicted by Defence Witness PNB and that the Trial Chamber nevertheless wrongly ignored this testimony.[759]

385. In its Response Brief, the Prosecution argues that Imanishimwe's allegations are unfounded and that he has not demonstrated that no reasonable trier of fact could have reached similar conclusions.[760] It adds that Imanishimwe merely proposes alternative conclusions that may have been open to the Trial Chamber.[761] The Prosecution further argues that the Chamber did not reject the testimonies of the Defence witnesses wholesale or because of their status as accomplices but that it carried out a balanced examination of Defence and Prosecution testimonies in an equitable and rational manner.[762] The Prosecution alleges, moreover, that Imanishimwe fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber did not take into account the evidence of Witnesses PFN, PBA, PGN and Essono;[763] it submits that, on the contrary, the Trial Chamber took into account all the evidence explicitly[764] even though it is not required to refer to evidence adduced or to detail why it accepted or rejected a particular testimony.[765]

386. In reply, Imanishimwe alleges that the Trial Chamber treated Prosecution witnesses more favourably than Defence witnesses (i) by not finding Witnesses LI, MA and MG "self-interested"

because of their Tutsi origin and "the need to take revenge on the Accused, who are of Hutu origin",[766] and (ii) by wrongly rejecting the Defence testimonies, in particular that of Essono, as lacking in credibility owing to the time lapse.[767]

387. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the admissibility of evidence is governed by Rule 89 (C) of the Rules, which provides that "[a] Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value". Moreover, ICTR and ICTY case-law has, over the years, developed a number of guidelines for the assessment of evidence, depending on its nature.

388. Concerning direct evidence in form of statements made by witnesses in court, it must be presumed to be credible at the time it is admitted. That these statements are taken under oath and that witnesses can be cross-examined constitute at that stage satisfactory indicia of reliability. The decision to admit them does not in any way prejudice the weight and credibility that the Trial Chamber will, in its own discretionary assessment, accord to the evidence. In this regard, the Appeals Chamber of ICTY recently had the opportunity to recall that:

> Determinations as to the credibility of witnesses are bound up in the weight afforded to their evidence, as is readily apparent from any Trial Judgement.[768]

389. The Appeals Chamber notes that in the instant case, the Trial Chamber reviewed all the Prosecution and Defence testimonies about the events that took place in Karambo camp, and that it set out the main points thereof in paragraphs 341 to 385 of the Trial Judgement. In paragraphs 386 to 400, it proceeded to state its factual findings on these events, systematically indicating the evidence on which it relied and the credibility it accorded to that evidence. The Appeals Chamber will now analyse the Trial Chamber's assessment of the credibility of the Defence witnesses on the one hand and of the Prosecution witnesses on the other.

390. A reading of the hearing transcripts shows that the credibility of the Defence military witnesses was tested during their cross-examination by the Prosecution.[769] The Trial Chamber did not assess the credibility of these witnesses piecemeal. Having heard all the Prosecution and Defence witnesses, it accepted certain portions of the testimonies of the military witnesses called by Imanishimwe (in particular, PNC, PNE, PKB, PCE and Essono) with regard to the layout of Karambo camp.[770] It did not, however, find credible certain testimonies of the same witnesses according to which "soldiers were never brought to or mistreated [sic] at the camp".[771] In so doing, it noted that it believed that those witnesses were not "credible or reliable on this point"[772] and set out its justification as follows:

> […] the Imanishimwe Defence witnesses are biased and self-interested because they previously served as soldiers under Imanishimwe's command and because acknowledging that civilians were brought to the camp would implicate them or their colleagues in the mistreatment.[773]

[772] Trial Judgement, para. 399 (emphasis added).
[773] Ibid., para. 399.

391. With specific reference to Imanishimwe's complaint that the Trial Chamber disregarded the testimony by Defence Witness Essono, which, according to him, demonstrated "the absurdity of Witness LI's account", the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber had the opportunity to test Witness LI's credibility.[774] The Trial Chamber nonetheless accepted as credible Witness LI's allegations about the incarceration and the mistreatment of civilians by soldiers in Karambo camp at various times between April and July 1994,[775] as well as his escape.[776] It considered that the version of events given by Witness LI corroborated that of Witnesses MA and MG, who provided "similar first-hand and detailed accounts".[777] It is on the basis of this corroboration that the Trial Chamber found that soldiers had incarcerated and questioned civilians, and mistreated Witnesses LI and MG.

392. As regards Witness PNB, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not fail to take his testimony into consideration; rather it weighed the testimonies of Witnesses MG and PNB and found that Witness MG's testimony was more probative, as clearly shown in the Trial Judgement.[778]

393. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that the Trial Chamber applied the same treatment to the Defence witnesses and to Prosecution Witnesses LI and MG in assessing their credibility. After a balanced consideration of all Prosecution and Defence testimonies, and given that the testimonies of LI and MG corroborated one another,[779] the Trial Chamber accepted their credibility on the specific points of incarceration and mistreatment of civilians at various times between April and July 1994 by soldiers in Karambo camp.

394. For the above reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not treat the witnesses differently when assessing their credibility, and that therefore it did not err in that regard.

2. Violation of the presumption of innocence

395. In his Appeal Brief, Imanishimwe contests the deductive approach adopted by the Trial Chamber, which, according to him, amounts to applying a presumption of guilt to Imanishimwe.[780] In support of this argument, Imanishimwe points to several findings made by the Trial Chamber on the basis of "speculations" and without sufficient evidence or despite evidence to the contrary: (1) Imanishimwe's presence during the raid at Kamembe on 6 June 1994;[781] (2) the order given by Imanishimwe to his soldiers to kill MG and his family[782] and (3) Imanishimwe's responsibility for the alleged murder of Witness LI's brother and a former classmate, as well as Witness MG's sister and her cellmate Mbembe.[783]

396. Imanishimwe denounces "the absurdity" of the two findings made by the Trial Chamber using this inferential approach, to the effect that: (i) the soldiers allegedly tried to have MG and his family killed by the Interahamwe when they could have done it themselves;[784] (ii) soldiers from Karambo camp, who were fewer and less fit, would, under Lieutenant Imanishimwe's command, went and pulled out people from the gendarmerie which was under the command of a Lieutenant-Colonel, and whose soldiers were more physically fit and had better logistical means.[785]

397. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber was > "entitled to rely on circumstantial evidence, or to draw reasonable inferences from given circumstances".[786]

It contends that Imanishimwe failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber made unreasonable findings or in what way its inferences were tantamount to a violation of the principle of presumption of innocence. It adds that Imanishimwe reads the Trial Judgement piecemeal,[787] whereas the Trial Chamber duly applied an approach consistent with the established jurisprudence of the Tribunal. That approach consists in first considering the Prosecution evidence and assessing its reliability, and next considering the Defence evidence, which was not sufficient to cast reasonable doubt on the circumstances of the case.[788]

398. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber has the inherent discretion to decide what approach it deems most appropriate for the assessment of evidence in the circumstances of the case;[789] however,

> "whenever such approach leads to an unreasonable assessment of the facts of the case, it becomes necessary to consider carefully whether the Trial Chamber did not commit an error of fact in its choice of the method of assessment or in its application thereof, which may have occasioned a miscarriage of justice".[790]

399. The Appeals Chamber recalls its findings in respect of the method of assessment of circumstantial evidence.[791] With regard to the inferential approach as a means of assessing circumstantial evidence, it refers to its previous exposition that the required standard of proof – beyond a reasonable doubt – necessitates that the accused can be found guilty on the basis of circumstantial evidence only where this is the sole possible reasonable inference from the available evidence. The same requirement must apply in inferring from the available evidence that there is an act upon which the accused's guilt depends and in inferring a finding upon which the accused's guilt depends from several distinct factual findings.[792]

400. The Appeals Chamber will now consider the specific findings challenged by Imanishimwe.

(a) Imanishimwe's presence during the search at Kamembe market

401. The Trial Chamber found that Imanishimwe was present at the Kamembe search on 6 June 1994 on the basis of MG's testimony,[793] which it held to be credible. The Appeals Chamber notes that in challenging this finding, Imanishimwe argues that the Chamber did not take into account (1) the account given by Defence witnesses, including Bagambiki, according to which the search was organized by the competent civilian authorities with the support of the gendarmerie; (2) the Decree of 23 January 1974[794] establishing the Rwandan National Gendarmerie. On this second point,

Imanishimwe submits that the search on 6 June 1994 took place in accordance with the Decree, that is, according to him, under the authority of the commanding officer of the Cyangugu Gendarmerie.[795]

402. The Appeals Chamber notes in the first place that Imanishimwe mentions only Bagambiki as a Defence witness whose account would invalidate the finding that Imanishimwe was present at the Kamembe market search, without specifying the portion of the testimony that supports his contention. The Appeals Chamber notes further that Imanishimwe does not specify how the Defence witnesses' account could prove that Imanishimwe's presence at the search on 6 June 1994 was not established beyond a reasonable doubt. It notes, moreover, that Imanishimwe does not show, by his abstract, unelaborated reference to the 1974 Decree, that the Trial Chamber could reasonably have made a different finding when it found that Imanishimwe was present at the search on 6 June 1994.

403. The lack of precision and clarity of this submission, and of the references to the parts of the appeal record mentioned by Imanishimwe, do not permit the Appeals Chamber to establish that the Trial Chamber could reasonably have made any finding other than that Imanishimwe was present at the Kamembe market search on 6 June 1994.

(b) Order given by Imanishimwe to his soldiers to kill MG and his family on their way to the gendarmerie

404. In order to assess whether the Trial Chamber's finding that Imanishimwe had ordered his soldiers to kill MG and his family needed to be established beyond a reasonable doubt, it must first be determined whether the order in question is an "an act upon which the Accused's guilt depends". In this regard, the Appeals Chamber notes that in making this submission, Imanishimwe is challenging the guilty verdict against him on the basis of Article 6 (1) of the Statute for murder, torture and imprisonment, as crimes against humanity, and for serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.

405. A careful reading of the portion of the Trial Judgement on the Trial Chamber's legal findings reveals several references to the order which the Trial Chamber inferred was given by Imanishimwe to kill MG and his family on their way to the gendarmerie. The first reference appears in paragraph 656 of the Trial Judgement, in the analysis of Imanishimwe's responsibility. Together with other findings, it played part in the Trial Chamber's finding that

> "the Chamber finds that Imanishimwe can be held criminally responsible under Article 6 (1) for ordering his subordinates to commit these acts".[796]

The second reference appears in paragraph 686 of the Trial Judgement, under the Trial Chamber's consideration of the facts constituting genocide. There is a further reference to the disputed order in paragraphs 735 and 789 of the Trial Judgement, in the analysis of the offences constituting crimes against humanity and serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II respectively.

406. First, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber mentions the order disputed by Imanishimwe in what can be regarded as an introductory summary,[797] before its analysis of the specific acts constituting crimes against humanity.

407. The Appeals Chamber notes that, to find Imanishimwe guilty of murder as a crime against humanity under Article 6 (1) of the Statute, the Trial Chamber relied specifically on the murder of Witness LI's brother and his former classmate, and of Witness MG's sister and her cellmate

Mbembe.[798] It did not rely on the attack on MG and his family when they were taken from Kamembe market to the gendarmerie, and hence the order allegedly given by Imanishimwe did not constitute a fact on which his guilt depended for that count. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber was not required to establish this fact beyond a reasonable doubt.

408. As regards the guilty verdict for imprisonment as a crime against humanity under Article 6 (1) of the Statute, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that an order for incarceration should be distinguished from an order for murder. While the first is clearly prohibited under imprisonment as a crime against humanity, the second cannot be considered in the same light, falling rather under murder as a crime against humanity. The Trial Chamber found Imanishimwe guilty on the count of imprisonment as a crime against humanity, and it noted the > "incarceration of Witness LI and the six refugees arrested with him, Witness MG, his father, and two sisters, and Witness MA".[799]

This finding, which is unrelated to the soldiers' attack on MG and his family just after the Kamembe market search, was not made on the basis of the order disputed by Imanishimwe, and his guilt for the crime of imprisonment was not based on that order.

409. In finding Imanishimwe guilty of torture as a crime against humanity, the Trial Chamber held as established that soldiers under Imanishimwe's effective control and that they "in his presence severely beat Witness MG and another detainee",[801] thus explicitly referring to mistreatment inflicted inside Karambo camp. Furthermore, the mistreatment inflicted is once again a different act from murder. For the count of torture as a crime against humanity and for the two other counts referred to earlier, the Appeals Chamber cannot regard the order given by Imanishimwe to kill MG and his family as an act on which Imanishimwe's guilt was based.

> "partly in his presence mistreated seven refugees in their custody upon arresting them near Cyangugu Cathedral on 11 April 1994"[800]

410. The Appeals Chamber considers that the same reasoning must apply to the guilty verdict against Imanishimwe for serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II. The Trial Chamber makes reference to the order challenged by Imanishimwe in what must be regarded as an introductory summary,[802] before it analysis of the specific acts constituting serious violations under Article 4 (a) of the Statute (murder, torture and cruel treatment). It did not, however, consider the attack on MG and his family when they were being taken from Kamembe market square to the gendarmerie under any of these three headings.

411. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber cannot consider that the order given by Imanishimwe to kill MG and his family when they were being taken to the gendarmerie constitutes an act upon which Imanishimwe's guilt for serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II depended and to which the standard of the only reasonable inference should have been applied. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber rejects this argument and holds that the Trial Chamber was not required to establish this fact beyond a reasonable doubt because the conviction was based on other evidence.

[802] Ibid., paras. 784-791.

412. The Appeals Chamber notes first that Imanishimwe challenges in his Appeal Brief only the Trial Chamber's finding that Imanishimwe gave orders to his soldiers to kill Witness LI's brother and a former classmate, as well as Witness MG's sister and her cellmate Mbembe.[803] He does not challenge the finding that he ordered the incarceration of the above-mentioned persons.

413. The Appeals Chamber must consider whether the disputed order for the murder of Witness LI's brother and a former classmate, as well as Witness MG's sister and her cellmate Mbembe, is an "act upon which the Accused's guilt depends". The Appeals Chamber will analyse below the guilty verdicts against Imanishimwe on the basis of Article 6 (1) of the Statute in order to determine the standard of proof required to establish Imanishimwe's order for the murder of these persons.

414. The Appeals Chamber has already noted that the Trial Chamber explicitly based the convictions for murder as a crime against humanity on the order given to the soldiers by Imanishimwe to kill Witness LI's brother and a former classmate, as well as Witness MG's sister and her cellmate Mbembe.[804] That order must therefore be considered as an act upon which Imanishimwe's guilt depended for this count. Such a conclusion is equally imperative to the extent that, contrary to what was stated earlier about the order to kill MG and his family on their way to the gendarmerie, the order given by Imanishimwe to kill Witness LI's brother and a former classmate, as well as Witness MG's sister and her cellmate Mbembe, appears both in the introductory summary[805] that precedes the analysis of the acts constituting crimes against humanity and in the actual analysis of murder as a crime against humanity.[806]

415. In this respect, the Trial Chamber found that there was an order from Imanishimwe to kill Witness LI's brother and a former classmate, as well as Witness MG's sister and her cellmate Mbembe, on the basis of Witness LI's evidence.[807] It may reasonably be thought that several of the Trial Chamber's factual findings established on the basis of testimonies by several witnesses supported this finding:

- MG, his father and his two sisters were taken by soldiers to Karambo camp on 7 June 1994;[808]
- LI was arrested by soldiers on 11 April 1994 at the same time as his brother and a former classmate;[809]
- They were taken to Karambo camp where they were held together in captivity;[810]
- When they arrived at Karambo camp, Imanishimwe was there while soldiers mistreated them;[811]
- During the mistreatment of LI by the soldiers, they threatened him with death;[812]
- During the mistreatment of LI by the soldiers, soldiers took away some refugees, and these did not return;[813]
- MG's sister was detained at Karambo camp in the same cell as Mbembe;[814]
- The name of MG's sister and that of Mbembe were called out one night during their incarceration at Karambo camp; they were subsequently taken away;[815]

- Since then, MG's sister had not been found, while Mbembe's body was found at Kadasomwa;[816]
- LI's brother and LI's former classmate are dead;[817]
- The soldiers at Karambo camp soldiers were under Imanishimwe's command.[818]

416. Having found that LI's brother and a former classmate,[819] as well as Witness MG's sister and her cellmate Mbembe,[820] had been killed at Karambo camp, the only inference made by the Trial Chamber from the factual findings was to find that the soldiers could not have participated in the murder of those persons "without Imanishimwe's knowledge and consent or orders".[821] Despite the vague – or even equivocal – nature of this formulation, the Appeals Chamber notes that it must be read in the light of paragraph 410 of the Trial Judgement, which clarifies it as follows:

> "the Chamber cannot accept that soldiers at the Karambo camp would have undertaken these activities, particularly on such a large scale, without orders from Imanishimwe."

417. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber stresses that to reach the conclusion that "Imanishimwe issued orders authorizing the arrest, detention, mistreatment, and execution of civilians with suspected ties to the RPF",[822] the Trial Chamber also took into account "the pattern and frequency of civilians being arrested and brought to the camp" and Imanishimwe's presence "during the detention and mistreatment of some of these civilians" as well as "the nature of a military command structure and hierarchy, the relatively small size of the camp, Imanishimwe's presence at the camp, Imanishimwe's testimony that he had control over the Karambo camp soldiers, the absence of any evidence suggesting that he lacked control over the soldiers, and the absence of any evidence of Imanishimwe preventing soldiers from mistreating civilians or punishing them for their abuse".[823]

418. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could conclude that the only reasonable inference in the basis of the evidence was that Imanishimwe ordered the soldiers to kill Witness LI's brother and a former classmate, as well as Witness MG's sister and her cellmate Mbembe.

419. This conclusion in respect of Imanishimwe's conviction for murder as a crime against humanity also applies to the other convictions established on the basis of Article 6 (1) of the Statute and renders moot the question whether the order to kill Witness LI's brother and a former classmate, as well as Witness MG's sister and her cellmate Mbembe, was also a determining factor in finding Imanishimwe guilty of torture and imprisonment as crimes against humanity and of serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.

420. The Appeals Chamber thus considers that a reasonable trier of fact could arrive by inference at the conclusions challenged by Imanishimwe without violating Imanishimwe's presumption of innocence. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Imanishimwe's fifth ground of appeal.

D. CUMULATIVE CONVICTIONS (3RD GROUND OF APPEAL)

421. Imanishimwe submits that the Trial Chamber erred in entering multiple convictions based on Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute.[824] He argues that in order to be concurrent, convictions must bear no relationship to one another: one must not be "special" in relation to the other, nor must it be the means of perpetrating the other or the "logical or natural consequence" of the other.[825]

422. In the first place, Imanishimwe takes issue with the Trial Chamber for convicting him, on the basis of the same facts, both of genocide under Article 2 of the Statute (Count 7) and of extermination as a crime against humanity under Article 3 (b) of the Statute (Count 10). He argues that the two charges are not concurrent*, in that extermination is the means of perpetrating genocide, extermination being the "means crime" and genocide being the "end crime".[826] He further argues that the statutory provisions governing the two crimes defend the one and same value: "the sacred and inviolable nature of life and its protection against extermination".[827] Finally, he contends that the specific crime – genocide reason of its mens rea – should have been retained instead of general crime – extermination.[828] He also contends that the Trial Chamber committed an error by convicting him, on the basis of the same facts, of murder and torture as crimes against humanity under Articles 3 (a) and 3 (f) of the Statute (Counts 9 and 12) and of serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II under Article 4 (a) of the Statute (Count 13). He submits that Articles 3 and 4 of the Statute have the objective of ensuring the protection of the same "human values"[829] but also that the constitutive elements of the offences concerned are basically the same.[830]

423. To illustrate the prejudice he considers he suffered, Imanishimwe relies on the Separate and Dissenting Opinion of Judge Hunt and Judge Bennouna in the Čelebići Appeal Judgement, which refers to the social stigmatization inherent in being convicted of a crime and to the impact of cumulative convictions on the length of the sentence and on measures that may be taken while it is being served, for example early release.[831]

424. In response, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber made no error in applying the principles that govern cumulative convictions.[832] It contends that the reasoning put forward by Imanishimwe stems from misinterpretation of the Appeals Chamber's jurisprudence on cumulative convictions. Relying on the test laid down in the Čelebići Appeal Judgement, the Prosecution affirms that multiple criminal convictions entered under different provisions of the Statute but based on the same conduct are permissible only if each provision involved has a materially distinct element not contained in the other.[833] The Prosecution then recalls that the Appeals Chamber has on several occasions considered that multiple convictions under Articles 2 and 3 (b) of the Statute based on the same facts are possible, as each of the crimes has a materially distinct element not contained in the other, namely specific intent in the case of Article 2 and the existence of a "widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population" in the case of Article 3 (b).[834] With regard to the convictions on the basis of the same facts pursuant to Articles 3 and 4 of the Statute, the Prosecution submits that they may be cumulative, as each of these provisions contains a materially distinct element: while Article 3 requires proof of the existence of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population, Article 4 requires proof of the existence of a nexus between the alleged crimes and the armed conflict.[835]

425. In line with the principles laid down in the Čelebići Appeal Judgement, the Appeals Chamber has already established that cumulative convictions entered under different provisions of the Statute but based on the same facts are permissible only if each of the provisions involved has a materially distinct constitutive element not contained in the other.[836] An element is materially distinct from another if it requires proof of a fact that is not required by the other.[837]

426. The Appeals Chamber emphasizes that, having accepted Imanishimwe's first ground of appeal and accordingly having set aside his convictions under Article 6 (3) of the Statute for the events at the Gashirabwoba football field, the question of cumulative convictions for genocide (Article 2 of the Statute) and extermination as a crime against humanity (Article 3 (b) of the Statute) has become moot. Nevertheless, the Appeals Chamber wishes to recall that it has already established that multiple convictions may be entered for genocide and crime against humanity based on the same facts, as each of these crimes has a materially distinct constitutive element that is not contained in the other: "intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such" for the former, and the existence of a "widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population" for the latter.[838]

427. With regard to the convictions under Articles 3 and 4 of the Statute on the basis of the same facts, the Appeals Chamber observes that each of them requires a materially distinct element not required for the other. Whereas conviction under Article 3 requires proof of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population, conviction under Article 4 requires the existence of a nexus between the acts in question and the armed conflict.[839] The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber committed no error by entering cumulative convictions under Articles 3 (murder and torture) and 4 (murder and cruel treatment) of the Statute based on the same set of facts.

428. Imanishimwe's third ground of appeal is dismissed.

V. GROUNDS RELATING TO THE SENTENCE

A. INTRODUCTION

429. Under Article 24 of the Statute, the Appeals Chamber may "affirm, reverse or revise" a sentence imposed by a Trial Chamber. However, the Appeals Chamber recalls that Trial Chambers exercise a considerable amount of discretion in determining appropriate sentencing. This stems largely from their obligation to individualize a penalty to fit the individual circumstances of the accused and the gravity of the crime.[840] As a general rule, the Appeals Chamber will not revise a sentence unless the Trial Chamber has committed a discernible error in exercising its discretion, or has failed to follow the applicable law.[841]

430. The factors that a Trial Chamber is obliged to take into account in sentencing a convicted person are set forth in Article 23 of the Statute and Rule 101 of the Rules. Under Rule 101 (B) (ii), a Trial Chamber is legally required to take into account any mitigating circumstances. However, what constitutes a mitigating circumstance[842] and the weight to be accorded thereto[843] is a matter for the Trial Chamber to determine in the exercise of its discretion.

431. The Trial Chamber sentenced Imanishimwe to two concurrent terms of 15 years' imprisonment for his convictions pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute[844] for genocide (Count 7) and extermination as a crime against humanity (Count 10) in relation to the killings perpetrated by his subordinates at the Gashirabwoba football field. For the convictions under Counts 9, 11, 12 and 13,[845] it imposed concurrent sentences of 10, 3, 10 and 12 years imprisonment respectively,[846] giving a total term of 27 years' imprisonment.[847] In doing so, the Trial Chamber considered relevant sentencing practices, Rwandan law, as well as Imanishimwe's individual circumstances.[848] It further determined that the command role played by Imanishimwe in Cyangugu prefecture constituted an aggravating factor,[849] and noted the failure by Imanishimwe to present any submissions concerning "significant personal, medical or other relevant circumstances that could influence sentencing" in his favour.[850] The Trial Chamber did not consider his background, as submitted, to constitute a mitigating factor.[851]

B. Increase in sentence imposed for Genocide and Extermination (Prosecution's 11th ground of appeal)

432. The Prosecution submits under its eleventh ground of appeal that the Trial Chamber committed a discernable error in sentencing Imanishimwe to 15 years' imprisonment for Genocide and Extermination.[852]

433. The Appeals Chamber has accepted Imanishimwe's first ground of appeal and set aside his convictions under Article 6 (3) of the Statute for the events at the Gashirabwoba football field. These were his only convictions for genocide and extermination as a crime against humanity. Accordingly, this ground of appeal has become moot, and the Appeals Chamber declines to discuss it further.

C. Consideration given to mitigating factors (Imanishimwe's 6th ground of appeal)

434. Imanishimwe submits under his sixth ground of appeal that the Trial Chamber erred in fact by failing to consider all mitigating factors in Imanishimwe's favour. Imanishimwe contends that the mitigating factors were dismissed because they were not pleaded in his closing argument.[853] He notes that in light of the Trial Chamber's request for brevity, given the detailed written submissions provided by both parties in their Closing Briefs,[854] he decided to address the Prosecution's closing arguments rather than rehash arguments relating to mitigation set out in his written submissions.[855] Imanishimwe makes reference to the relevant paragraphs in his Closing Brief, emphasising that his non-involvement in any previous criminal activity, his young age and his relatively low rank in the Rwandan military hierarchy constitute mitigating circumstances which should have been taken into account in determining his sentence.[856]

435. The Prosecution submits that none of the factors offered in mitigation of sentence could carry any weight given the crimes committed and Imanishimwe's role in their commission.[857] The Prosecution maintains that even if it were accepted that there were mitigating factors in Imanishimwe's favour that were not considered, such omission is inconsequential, in light of "the seriousness of the crimes he perpetrated, his active participation in those crimes, and his position of command and authority that he abused".[858]

436. Although the Trial Chamber has an obligation to take any mitigating circumstances into account in determining the appropriate sentence, the weight to be accorded to such circumstances lies within the discretion of a Trial Chamber, which is under no obligation to set out in detail each and every factor relied upon.[859] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber nonetheless expressly refers to Imanishimwe's Closing Brief in its discussion of mitigating circumstances[860] and that this constitutes prima facie evidence that Imanishimwe's submissions were taken into account.[861]

437. Thus, the Appeals Chamber notes that specific reference is made to paragraphs 31 and 33 of Imanishimwe's Closing Brief in which his educational and professional background is presented. These paragraphs form part of a section of the Closing Brief which seeks to provide an objective presentation of Imanishimwe[862] under the title "Presenting the Accused", and includes other paragraphs describing his allegedly low rank within the Rwandan military,[863] the insignificance of the Karambo camp,[864] his previous lack of a criminal record,[865] and the fact that he was a young officer.[866] These are the factors Imanishimwe contends the Trial Chamber ought to have taken into account in mitigation of his sentence.[867] Although the Trial Chamber does not expressly refer to paragraphs 1203 and 1204 of Imanishimwe's Closing Brief, included under the heading "Mitigating Factors: First Offender", the substance of those paragraphs is subsumed within the section "Presenting the Accused".[868] There is therefore no reason to conclude that these submissions were not duly considered by the Trial Chamber.

438. The Appeals Chamber finds that the wording of paragraph 820 of the Trial Judgement that the "Defence made no sentencing submissions" simply reflects the fact that no oral sentencing submissions were made and not, as submitted by Imanishimwe, that his sentencing submissions were overlooked in their entirety.

439. The fact that the Trial Chamber decided that there were insufficient reasons to conclude that there were any mitigating factors in this case was within its discretion.[869] The factors referred to, namely, Imanishimwe's background, his "young" age at the time the crimes were committed, his lack of a previous criminal record, and his allegedly low rank within the greater Rwandan military hierarchy, are not such as to affect the sentence imposed on Imanishimwe. The lack of a previous criminal record is a common characteristic among many accused persons which is accorded little if any weight in mitigation absent exceptional circumstances.[870] Imanishimwe was 32 years old when he participated in the crimes[871] and it might be considered that the Trial Chamber, in underscoring the principle of gradation in sentencing, would have taken into account his relative position of authority in this connection.[872]

440. The Appeals Chamber finds that Imanishimwe has not shown that the Trial Chamber failed to consider his submissions on individual and mitigating circumstances or that its discretion was improperly exercised, such that his sentence should be reduced.

441. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Imanishimwe's sixth ground of appeal in its entirety.

D. CONSEQUENCES OF THE APPEALS CHAMBER'S CONCLUSIONS

442 The Appeals Chamber recalls having set aside the convictions entered against Imanishimwe on the basis of Article 6 (3) of the Statute for the crimes committed at the Gashirabwoba football field for genocide (Count 7 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment).[873] Therefore, the sentences pronounced by the Trial Chamber under Counts 7 and 10 – two concurrent sentences of 15 years to be served consecutively with the other sentences pronounced under the other counts[874] – must be set aside.

443. Having rejected the grounds of appeal relating thereto,[875] the Appeals Chamber upholds the convictions entered on the basis of Article 6 (1) of the Statute for murder (Count 9 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment), imprisonment (Count 12 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment) and torture (Count 12 of the Bagambiki/Imanishimwe Indictment) as crimes against humanity. The Appeals Chamber therefore upholds the concurrent sentences of 10, 3 and 10 years pronounced respectively for those Counts.[876]

444. It also found that because he did not hold a position of high esteem in the community prior to his position in Omarska, he likely would not have been a role model for the guards and thus his silence would not carry the same degree of complicity in encouraging or condoning crimes. Kvočka et al. sentences pronounced under Counts 9, 11 and 12.[878] The Appeals Chamber recalls having set aside the conviction entered under that Count on the basis of Article 6 (3) of the Statute for the crimes committed at the Gashirabwoba[879] football field, and upheld the sentence pronounced on the basis of Article 6 (1) of the Statute.[880] Given the seriousness of the crimes of which Imanishimwe was found guilty under Article 6 (3) of the Statute, the Appeals Chamber considers that it is needless to reconsider the sentence of 12 years pronounced under Count 13 following the setting aside of the conviction entered on the basis of Article 6 (1) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber is of the unanimous opinion that partial review of the verdict does not affect the 12 years sentence that is to run concurrently with the other sentences pronounced under Counts 9, 11, 12 and imposed by the Trial Chamber under Count 13. By a majority, with Judge Schomburg dissenting, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the total sentence imposed on Imanishimwe is 12 years.

VII. Judge Schomburg's Dissenting Opinion

1. I concur entirely with the decision concerning André Ntagerura and Emmanuel Bagambiki.

2. However, I am of the opinion that not only is the Indictment against André Ntagerura vague, but it must also be declared null and void as none of the crimes with which the Accused is charged is sufficiently pleaded and the scope of the charges is not sufficiently defined. Thus, the Indictment against André Ntagerura does not satisfy the two main functions of any indictment, namely:

- informing the accused of the charges against him or her (information function which enshrines the fundamental right to be heard) and
- limiting the individual and material scope of the charges (limitation function)

The Indictment against Emmanuel Bagambiki and Samuel Imanishimwe satisfies these basic functions only in respect of some counts.

3. Moreover, if these documents are considered to be partly or entirely void, it should be noted that it is not for the Appeals Chamber to determine if the maxim ne bis in idem (a person shall not be tried or punished twice for the same crime)[1] applies to the instant case. It is for the Prosecutor of this Tribunal,[2] first, (cf. Article 8 of the Statute) or any other representative of the public prosecutor's office within a competent jurisdiction, to try the crimes in question, determine the timeliness of commencing fresh criminal proceedings on the basis of a new indictment to the extent that the principle of res judicata does not bar the re-prosecution of André Ntagerura, Emmanuel Bagambiki and Samuel Imanishimwe.[3]

[1] In principle, this maxim is applicable only to the same country/State. See for example Article 14 (7) of the International Convention on Civil and Political Rights and Article 4 of Protocol N°7 of the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (ETS N°17). It became internationally applicable by means, inter alia, of Article 54 of the Convention on the Implementation of the Schengen Agreement of 14 June 1985 between the Governments of the Benelux Economic Union, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Republic of France on the gradual elimination of control on the common borders, signed in Schengen on 19 June 1990 (CISA). Cf. Case N°C. 436/04 (Case of Belgium v. Van Esbroeck) Court of Justice of the European Communities, Judgement of 9 March 2006 (http://www.curia.eu.int), point 2 of the disposition: ["the existence of a body of inextricably linked facts, independently of the legal characterization of such facts or of the protected legal interest …"]

[2] The same supranational court/tribunal by analogy to the "same country/State"?

[3] For a distinction of formal defects (see supra, para. 2, line 2) resulting in acquittal on grounds of procedural defects, and the other defects tainting the indictment, see Meyer-Goßner, Strafprozessordnung, 49th ed., Munich 2006, para. 200, N°26 and 27, referring to the case-law of Federal Court of Germany (Bundesgerichtshof).

4. May I recall that André Ntagurera was acquitted solely – and Emmanuel Bagambiki and Samuel Imanishimwe were mainly acquitted – on procedural grounds, for, to some extent, there was no indictment – the primary accusatory instrument – that could be cured. Absent such indictment, there cannot be a trial or, in any event, a fair trial, for the principle of fairness also takes into account the interests of victims and their families.

Annex A: Procedural Background

1. The main aspects of the appeal proceedings are summarized below.

A. Filing of briefs

2. The Trial Judgement was delivered on 25 February 2004.

1. The Prosecution's Appeal

3. The Prosecution filed its Notice of Appeal on 25 March 2004 and its Appeal Brief on 8 June 2004. After having been granted an extension of time to file their respective Respondent's Briefs on 24 June 2004,[1] Bagambiki and Ntagerura each filed a "Response" to the Prosecution Notice of Appeal on 8 October 2004.[2] Because of substantial translation errors in the French translation of the Trial Judgement, the Pre-Appeal Judge ordered two weeks later the suspension of the time-limits for filing the appeal briefs until a new certified French version of the Trial Judgement was served on the Parties.[3] On 10 November 2004, at the request of the Prosecution,[4] the Pre-Appeal Judge ruled that Bagambiki and Ntagerura's Responses were inadmissible, on the ground that neither the Rules nor the Practice Directions applicable to appeal proceedings provided for a response to a notice of appeal.[5] In the said Decision, the Pre-Appeal Judge reminded Bagambiki and Ntagerura that their Respondent's Briefs should be filed within 20 days of the notification of the new certified French version of the Trial Judgment. Imanishimwe, Bagambiki and Ntagerura subsequently filed their Respondent's Briefs on 14, 16 and 17 February 2005, respectively. The Prosecution filed its Brief in Reply on 3 March 2005.

2. Samuel Imanishimwe's Appeal

4. On 3 March 2004, Imanishimwe filed a motion seeking an extension of time for filing both his Notice of Appeal and Appellant's Brief on the ground that he had not yet received the Trial Judgement in a language that he and his Counsel understood, namely, French.[6] On 24 March 2004, the Pre-Appeal Judge granted the requested extension, ordering Imanishimwe to file his Notice of Appeal no later than 30 days from the day the French version of the Trial Judgement was served on him, and his Appellant's Brief within 75 days of the filing of his Notice of Appeal.[7] Imanishimwe filed his Notice of Appeal on 2 September 2004. On 21 October 2004, because of some substantial translation errors in the French version of the Trial Judgement, the Pre-Appeal Judge ordered the suspension of the time-limits for filing the Appeal Briefs until a new certified French version of the Trial Judgement was served on the Parties.[8] Imanishimwe's Appeal Brief was filed on 25 February 2005 and the Prosecution Response Brief on 5 April 2005. Following a motion seeking an extension of time,[9] Imanishimwe was given 15 days from the day the French version of the Prosecution Response Brief was served on him to file his Brief in Reply.[10] He eventually filed his Brief in Reply on 12 July 2005.

B. Assignment of Judges

5. On 23 March 2004, the following Judges were assigned to hear the appeal of Imanishimwe: Judge Theodor Meron, Presiding Judge; Judge Florence Mumba; Judge Mehmet Güney; Judge Fausto Pocar; and Judge Inés Mónica Weinberg de Roca.[11] Judge Mehmet Güney was designated as the Pre-Appeal Judge.[12] Following the filing of the Prosecution Notice of Appeal, the Presiding Judge of the Appeals Chamber ordered on 29 March 2004 that both appeals be heard as a single case by the same bench.[13] On 25 January 2005, Judge Wolfgang Schomburg was assigned to replace Judge Theodor Meron.[14] On 15 July 2005, Judge Andrésia Vaz was assigned to replace Judge Inés Mónica Weinberg de Roca.[15] Judge Mehmet Güney then became Presiding Judge. Having become Presiding Judge of the Appeals Chamber on 17 November 2005, Judge Fausto Pocar became Presiding Judge in the matter. On 18 November 2005, Judge Theodor Meron was assigned to replace Judge Florence Mumba.[16]

C. Additional Evidence

6. On 10 May 2004, the Prosecution filed a motion pursuant to Rule 115 of the Rules for the admission of two witness statements as additional evidence.[17] In Decisions rendered on 18 and 19 May 2004, the Pre-Appeal Judge granted leave to Bagambiki and Ntagerura to file their Response to said motion within 10 days of their being served with the French translation.[18] On 2 June 2004, the Pre-Appeal Judge issued an order enjoining the Prosecution to file confidentially a new motion appending the unredacted versions of the two witness statements of which it sought admission, and inviting the Prosecution to attach to this new motion the up-to-date details justifying the protective measures requested.[19] Pursuant to this order, the Prosecution filed on 7 June 2004 the unredacted versions of statements by the two witnesses under seal.[20] On the same day, the Prosecution filed a motion in which it renewed its application for protective measures for the two witnesses.[21] On 10 December 2004, the Appeals Chamber denied the motion for additional evidence on the ground that it was not persuaded that, had the evidence of the two witnesses been adduced at trial, it would have changed the outcome of the trial.[22]

D. Hearing of the Appeal

7. The appeal hearing was held in Arusha/Tanzania on 6 and 7 February 2006. On 8 February 2006, after the closing of the appeal hearing, the Appeals Chamber confirmed Ntagerura's and Bagambiki's acquittal.[23] The Appeals Chamber dismissed the Prosecution's grounds of appeal against Ntagerura's and Bagambiki's acquittal, indicating that the reasons for this decision would be delivered at the same time as the Appeal Judgement on the Prosecution's remaining grounds of appeal and on Imanishimwe's appeal.[24]

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Motion to Request the Communication of Closed Sessions Transcripts", etc., filed by the Kabiligi Defence on 14 September 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

The Kabiligi Defence requests disclosure of the closed session testimony of Witness PBB in the trial of Ntagerura et al. This same witness will shortly appear in the present trial on behalf of the Kabiligi Defence, which seeks to review the prior testimony as part of its preparation.

As no Chamber is currently seized of the Ntagerura et al. trial, this request is properly made before this Chamber under Rule 75 (G) (ii) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence.[1] The witness has apparently revealed his protected status to the Defence; accordingly, there is no reason not to order the disclosure of these Tribunal records, on the understanding that the applicable witness protection orders will apply mutatis mutandis to any party in the present case in receipt of the protected information.[2]

ATTENDU qu'au soutien de sa Requête, la Défense invoque les articles 20 (2) et (4) du Statut du Tribunal et 108 bis (B) et (E) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve et fait valoir que la complexité de l'affaire ainsi que le volume de travail engendré par la double procédure d'appel nécessite une augmentation du nombre d'heures allouées au co-conseil afin que celui-ci puisse préparer et présenter la plaidoirie relative à l'appel du Procureur;

CONSIDÉRANT que bien que le Procureur n'ait pas encore déposé de réponse, le fait de statuer sur la présente Requête sans que le Procureur n'ait eu la possibilité d'y répondre ne porte nullement préjudice à ce dernier ;

CONSIDÉRANT de surcroît que les circonstances de l'espèce exigent que la Requête de la Défense soit tranchée dans les meilleurs délais ;

ATTENDU que c'est au Greffier qu'il revient au premier chef de trancher les questions relatives à la rémunération des conseils[3] ;

ATTENDU que la Chambre d'appel n'est compétente pour examiner la décision du Greffe, vu l'obligation que lui impose le Statut de veiller à l'équité du procès, qu'après que le requérant ait épuisé la voie de recours expressément prévue par l'article 30 de la Directive relative à la commission d'office de Conseils de la défense (« Directive »)[4] ;

CONSIDÉRANT que la Défense ne fait pas état dans sa Requête d'un quelconque recours introduit contre la décision contestée du Greffe en vertu de l'article 30 de la Directive ;

CONSIDÉRANT de surcroît que la décision du Greffe n'a pas d'incidence sur l'équité du procès propre à justifier le report des audiences en appel ;

PAR CES MOTIFS,

REJETTE la Requête ;

INVITE la Défense à suivre la procédure applicable au règlement des différends concernant la rémunération des conseils commis d'office par le Tribunal prévue par la Directive ; et

I. Introduction

10. La Chambre d'appel du Tribunal pénal international chargé de juger les personnes présumées responsables d'actes de génocide ou d'autres violations graves du droit international humanitaire commis sur le territoire du Rwanda et les citoyens rwandais présumés responsables de tels actes ou violations commis sur le territoire d'États voisins entre le 1er janvier et le 31 décembre 1994 (« Chambre d'appel » et « Tribunal » respectivement) est saisie des appels interjetés par Samuel Imanishimwe et le Procureur contre le Jugement rendu par la Chambre de première instance III dans l'affaire Le Procureur c. André Ntagerura, Emmanuel Bagambiki et Samuel Imanishimwe le 25 février 2004 (« Jugement » ou « Jugement de première instance »).

A. André Ntagerura, Emmanuel Bagambiki et Samuel Imanishimwe

11. André Ntagerura (« Ntagerura ») est né le 2 janvier 1950 dans la préfecture de Cyangugu, au Rwanda. De mars 1981 à juillet 1994, il a été membre du Gouvernement rwandais, son dernier poste étant celui de Ministre des transports et des communications dans le Gouvernement intérimaire[1].

12. Emmanuel Bagambiki (« Bagambiki ») est né le 8 mars 1948 dans la préfecture de Cyangugu, au Rwanda. Du 4 juillet 1992 au 17 juillet 1994, il a exercé les fonctions de préfet de Cyangugu[2].

13. Samuel Imanishimwe (« Imanishimwe ») est né le 25 octobre 1961 dans la préfecture de Gisenyi, au Rwanda. Lieutenant des Forces armées rwandaises, il a exercé les fonctions de commandant par intérim du camp militaire de Cyangugu (appelé également camp militaire de Karambo) d'octobre 1993 jusqu'à son départ du Rwanda, en juillet 1994[3].

B. Le Jugement

14. Le Jugement de première instance a été rendu sur la base de deux actes d'accusation distincts. Dans un premier acte d'accusation, déposé le 9 août 1996 et modifié le 29 janvier 1998, Ntagerura était accusé de génocide, d'entente en vue de commettre le génocide, d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité, de violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II, de deux chefs de complicité de génocide, à la fois à titre individuel en vertu de l'article 6 (1) et comme supérieur hiérarchique, au sens de l'article 6 (3) du Statut du Tribunal (« Statut »). Dans un acte d'accusation distinct, déposé le 9 octobre 1997 et modifié le 10 août 1999, Bagambiki et Imanishimwe étaient accusés de génocide, de complicité dans le génocide, d'entente en vue de commettre le génocide, d'assassinat, d'extermination et d'emprisonnement constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité et de violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II. Imanishimwe était de surcroît accusé d'actes de torture constitutifs de crime contre l'humanité.

15. Ntagerura, Bagambiki et Imanishimwe étaient jugés par la Chambre de première instance sur la base des faits résumés ci-dessous :

Le soir du 6 avril 1994, après avoir reçu la nouvelle de la mort du Président Habyarimana, Imanishimwe s'est adressé aux soldats du camp militaire de Karambo et a immédiatement placé son camp en état d'alerte[4] ;

Le 7 avril, des réfugiés ont commencé à affluer aux paroisses de Shangi et Mibilizi[5] ;

Le 8 avril, des réfugiés principalement tutsis fuyant la violence qui avait gagné leurs quartiers ont commencé à se rassembler à la cathédrale de Cyangugu pour finalement atteindre le nombre de 5 000.

Les autorités préfectorales ont envoyé de deux à quatre gendarmes au moins pour protéger les réfugiés à la cathédrale[6]. Le même jour, Bagambiki a envoyé des gendarmes garder la paroisse de Shangi à la demande des autorités de la paroisse[7]. Toujours le même jour, des assaillants hutus ont commencé à attaquer des maisons de Tutsis dans la commune de Gisuma et, après plusieurs jours d'affrontement, un certain nombre de réfugiés se sont rassemblés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba[8] ;

Entre le 9 et le 11 avril 1994, quatre gendarmes ont été postés à la paroisse de Mibilizi[9] ;

Le 10 avril, des attaques quotidiennes ont commencé à la paroisse de Shangi. Le sous-préfet s'est rendu sur place pour s'enquérir de la situation[10] ;

Le 11 avril, un groupe d'Interahamwe s'est rendu à la cathédrale et a tiré en l'air, créant désordre et panique parmi les réfugiés. Bagambiki s'est rendu à la cathédrale après cette attaque afin de parler brièvement aux réfugiés[11]. Le même jour, des soldats ont arrêté sept réfugiés qui se trouvaient près de la cathédrale et les ont emmenés au camp militaire de Karambo, où ils ont été maltraités, ce en présence d'Imanishimwe[12]. D'autres réfugiés arrêtés ont été renvoyés à la cathédrale après que le témoin LY eut demandé à Bagambiki d'intervenir[13]. Toujours le même jour, les gendarmes stationnés à la cathédrale ont empêché deux attaques à l'encontre des réfugiés se trouvant là[14] ;

Le 11 avril 1994, on comptait environ 500 réfugiés rassemblés sur le terrain de football de Gashirabwoba. Au matin, les réfugiés ont repoussé une attaque. L'après-midi, Bagambiki et Imanishimwe sont arrivés au terrain de football et ont emmené Côme Simugomwa, le responsable local du PL, dont le corps a été retrouvé le long d'une rivière dans la commune de Karengera après le génocide. Le soir, des soldats sont arrivés au terrain de football[15] ;

Le 11 et le 12 avril, des Interahamwe de la région ont attaqué la paroisse de Mibilizi et les réfugiés ont repoussé les attaques[16] ;

Le 11 avril, une délégation comprenant un sous-préfet s'est rendue à la paroisse de Nyamasheke, où un certain nombre de Tutsis avaient cherché refuge[17]. Le même jour, des soldats ont tué plusieurs des civils détenus au camp militaire de Karambo[18] ;

Le 12 avril, le sous-préfet Munyangabe a fourni des médicaments à la paroisse de Shangi[19]. Le même jour, la population réfugiée sur le terrain de football de Gashirabwoba avait presque atteint 3 000 personnes. Ce matin-là, des milliers d'assaillants ont commencé à attaquer les réfugiés au terrain de football. Bagambiki et Nsabimana, le directeur de l'usine à thé de Shagasha, se sont rendus sur place, et Bagambiki a promis d'envoyer des soldats pour protéger les réfugiés. Une heure plus tard, des soldats et des gardes armés de l'usine à thé sont arrivés au terrain de football et ont commencé à tirer et jeter des grenades sur les réfugiés. Des Interahamwe ont alors achevé les survivants et ont pillé leurs effets personnels[20] ;

Le même jour, des Interahamwe ont attaqué la paroisse de Nyamasheke. Personne n'a été tué au cours de cette attaque. Le lendemain, les assaillants sont revenus à l'assaut et ont lancé une attaque similaire. Au cours de cette attaque, un gendarme a tiré et tué trois Interahamwe, mettant un terme à celle-ci. Bagambiki s'est rendu à la paroisse après avoir été informé de l'attaque[21] ;

Le 13 avril, la préfecture a envoyé des gendarmes et fourni un véhicule pour apporter un chargement de nourriture à la paroisse de Shangi. Le même jour ou le lendemain, une attaque de grande envergure s'est produite, entraînant, selon une estimation, la mort de 800 réfugiés[22] ;

Le même jour ou le lendemain, Bagambiki a empêché une attaque contre les réfugiés rassemblés à la cathédrale de Cyangugu lorsqu'il a personnellement arrêté un groupe d'assaillants armés qui se dirigeaient vers celle-ci. Le 14 avril, les autorités ecclésiastiques ont organisé une réunion avec Bagambiki et Imanishimwe parce que ces dernières estimaient qu'elles ne pouvaient plus assurer la sécurité des réfugiés. Bagambiki a décidé que les réfugiés devaient être transférés au stade Kamarampaka[23]. Le même jour, un groupe de réfugiés qui tentaient de se rendre au stade Kamarampaka ont été arrêtés par des soldats. Certains d'entre eux sont allés chercher Bagambiki ; celui-ci s'est brièvement adressé aux réfugiés. Après son départ, des Interahamwe sont sortis des buissons et ont tué certains d'entre eux[24] ;

Le 14 avril, Bagambiki et d'autres se sont rendus à la paroisse de Mibilizi pour discuter de la situation avec des délégations d'Interahamwe de la région et des réfugiés[25] ;

Le 15 avril, des réfugiés de la cathédrale de Cyangugu ont été transférés au stade Kamarampaka. Bagambiki et l'évêque ont accompagné la colonne des réfugiés, laquelle était protégée par des gendarmes[26]. Les réfugiés ont rejoint les 50 à 100 personnes qui se trouvaient au stade depuis le 9 avril 1994. D'autres réfugiés venant de diverses localités de la préfecture sont arrivés ultérieurement[27]. Par la suite, des gendarmes ont gardé les réfugiés du stade[28] ;

Le même jour, il y a eu un autre affrontement entre les réfugiés et les assaillants locaux à la paroisse de Mibilizi[29]. À la paroisse de Nyamasheke, des assaillants ont lancé une attaque de grande envergure, tuant la plupart des réfugiés qui s'y trouvaient[30] ;

Le 16 avril, des assaillants qui menaçaient d'attaquer le stade Kamarampaka ont communiqué à Bagambiki et Imanishimwe une liste de noms de personnes suspectées d'être liées au FPR[31]. Par la suite, Bagambiki et Imanishimwe ont recherché et emmené 17 réfugiés de la cathédrale de Cyangugu et du stade Kamarampaka. Bagambiki s'est adressé aux autres réfugiés et a déclaré que les autorités allaient emmener et interroger les 17 réfugiés afin d'assurer la sécurité des autres réfugiés au stade. 16 des 17 réfugiés ont été tués le soir même ou la nuit suivante[32] ;

Le même jour, la paroisse de Nyamasheke a été attaquée une nouvelle fois et la plupart des réfugiés qui avaient survécu à l'attaque du 15 avril ont été tués. Par la suite, Bagambiki a suspendu le bourgmestre Kamana à cause de sa participation à l'attaque[33] ;

Le 18 avril, la paroisse de Mibilizi a subi de multiples attaques. Le sous-préfet Munyangabe y a été envoyé et a tenté de négocier avec les assaillants. Il n'est pas arrivé à empêcher une attaque de grande envergure lors de laquelle les assaillants ont tué de nombreux réfugiés[34]. Le 20 avril, les assaillants sont retournés à la paroisse, ont emmené entre 60 et 100 réfugiés et les ont tués[35] ;

Le 26 avril, Bagambiki a été informé de l'imminence d'une attaque de grande envergure contre les réfugiés rassemblés à la paroisse de Shangi. Sur l'insistance de Bagambiki, Munyangabe s'est rendu à la paroisse afin de tenter d'empêcher l'attaque. Munyangabe a négocié avec les assaillants et a accepté d'emmener environ 40 réfugiés de la paroisse si les assaillants s'engageaient à ne pas attaquer les autres réfugiés. Les réfugiés désignés ont été conduits au stade Kamarampaka. Sur le trajet, les réfugiés ont été attaqués et maltraités, et l'un d'entre eux a été tué. Les autres sont enfin arrivés au stade[36] ;

Vers le 27 avril, un certain nombre de réfugiés désignés ont été enlevés du stade Kamarampaka. L'un d'entre eux a été tué sans que le sort des autres n'ait été déterminé[37] ;

Le 28 ou le 29 avril, une attaque de grande envergure a été lancée contre la paroisse de Shangi, tuant la plupart des réfugiés qui s'y trouvaient[38] ;

Le 30 avril, des gendarmes ont tenté, en vain, d'empêcher une attaque contre la paroisse de Mibilizi, qui a fait entre 60 et 80 morts[39] ;

Au mois de mai, les autorités préfectorales ont transféré les réfugiés du stade Kamarampaka à un nouveau camp à Nyarushishi, dans lequel les réfugiés disposaient de meilleures conditions. Le camp était protégé par des gendarmes qui ont repoussé au moins une tentative d'attaque entre le 11 mai et l'arrivée des forces françaises de l'opération Turquoise, le 23 juin[40]. Les survivants des paroisses de Shangi et Mibilizi ont également été transférés dans ce camp[41] ;

Le 6 juin, dans la ville de Kamembe, des soldats ont, en présence de Bagambiki et d'Imanishimwe, arrêté environ 300 personnes. Quelques-unes des personnes arrêtées ont été tuées sur les ordres d'Imanishimwe. Par la suite, un certain nombre des détenus incarcérés au camp militaire de Karambo ont été interrogés et maltraités en présence d'Imanishimwe[42].

16. La Chambre de première instance a acquitté Ntagerura et Bagambiki de tous les chefs d'accusation dont ils devaient répondre[43]. En cours de procès, en application de l'article 98 bis du Règlement de procédure et de preuve du Tribunal (« Règlement »), elle avait déjà acquitté Imanishimwe du chef d'entente en vue de commettre le génocide[44]. Dans le Jugement, Imanishimwe a été déclaré coupable, à la majorité des juges, de génocide (Chef 7), d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité (Chef 10) et de violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II (Chef 13) au titre de l'article 6 (3) du Statut[45]. À l'unanimité, la Chambre de première instance l'a déclaré non coupable de complicité de génocide, mais coupable d'assassinat (Chef 9), d'emprisonnement (Chef 11) et d'actes de torture (Chef 12) constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité et de violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II (Chef 13) en vertu de l'article 6 (1) du Statut. Elle a condamné Imanishimwe à deux peines d'emprisonnement confondues de 15 ans pour l'avoir reconnu coupable des chefs 7 et 10[46]. Pour les déclarations de culpabilité prononcées sur la base des chefs 9, 11, 12 et 13, elle a infligé des peines d'emprisonnement confondues de dix, trois, dix et douze ans respectivement[47]. La Chambre de première instance a décidé que les peines dont la confusion avait été prononcée pour les chefs d'accusation 9, 11, 12 et 13 devaient être purgées consécutivement aux peines dont la confusion avait également été prononcée pour les chefs d'accusation 7 et 10. Imanishimwe a donc été condamné à un total de 27 années d'emprisonnement[48].

C. LES APPELS

17. Le Procureur invoque onze motifs d'appel, dont deux concernent exclusivement Imanishimwe. Dans ses neuf premiers motifs d'appel, le Procureur conteste les conclusions de la Chambre de première instance sur la forme des actes d'accusation, soutient que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur dans la manière dont elle a apprécié la preuve et avance que Bagambiki aurait dû être reconnu coupable de plusieurs crimes jugés établis par la Chambre de première instance. Le Procureur fait ensuite valoir qu'Imanishimwe aurait dû être reconnu coupable en vertu de l'article 6 (1) du Statut pour les crimes commis au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba et que la peine prononcée à son encontre est trop clémente.

18. Imanishimwe invoque six motifs d'appel qui se rapportent à des vices de forme de l'acte d'accusation, à sa condamnation en vertu de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour les événements survenus à Gashirabwoba, aux condamnations multiples prononcées contre lui, à l'application de l'article 4 du Statut, à l'administration de la preuve et à la détermination de la peine.

19. La Chambre d'appel rappelle avoir rejeté à l'unanimité les motifs d'appel soulevés par le Procureur à l'encontre du Jugement s'agissant d'André Ntagerura et Emmanuel Bagambiki et confirmé l'acquittement de ces derniers dans le Dispositif de l'arrêt concernant l'appel du Procureur s'agissant de l'acquittement d'André Ntagerura et Emmanuel Bagambiki prononcé à la suite des audiences en appel le 8 février 2006. Le présent Arrêt s'attache donc à donner les motivations écrites de cette décision tout en disposant des motifs d'appel soulevés par le Procureur s'agissant d'Imanishimwe ainsi que de l'appel de ce dernier.

D. CRITÈRES APPLICABLES À L'EXAMEN EN APPEL

21. En ce qui concerne les erreurs de fait, il est de jurisprudence constante que la Chambre d'appel n'infirme pas à la légère les conclusions de fait dégagées par une Chambre de première instance. Lorsqu'une erreur de fait est alléguée, la Chambre d'appel se doit de porter crédit à l'appréciation de la Chambre de première instance qui a entendu les dépositions, celle-ci étant mieux placée pour apprécier les dépositions, y compris le comportement des témoins. La Chambre d'appel n'infirmera les constatations de la Chambre de première instance que lorsqu'aucun juge des faits raisonnable n'aurait pu parvenir à la même conclusion ou lorsque celle-ci est totalement erronée. Une conclusion de fait erronée ne sera infirmée ou réformée que si l'erreur a entraîné un déni de justice[51].

22. La Chambre d'appel peut d'emblée rejeter, sans avoir à les examiner sur le fond, les arguments présentés par une partie qui n'ont aucune chance d'aboutir à l'annulation ou à la réformation de la décision attaquée[52]. La partie appelante doit fournir les références précises renvoyant aux pages pertinentes du compte rendu d'audience ou aux paragraphes du jugement attaqué[53]. Par ailleurs,

« on ne saurait s'attendre à ce que la Chambre d'appel examine en détail les conclusions des parties si elles sont obscures, contradictoires ou vagues, ou si elles sont entachées d'autres vices de forme flagrants »[54].

23. Enfin, il convient de rappeler que la Chambre d'appel dispose d'un pouvoir discrétionnaire inhérent pour déterminer quels sont les arguments qui méritent une réponse motivée par écrit[55]. Elle rejettera donc sans motivation détaillée les arguments qui sont manifestement mal fondés[56].

II. Motifs d'appel relatifs aux actes d'accusation

A. INTRODUCTION

24. Au titre de son troisième motif d'appel, le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur sur un point de droit en concluant que la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune n'avait pas été plaidée dans les actes d'accusation établis contre Ntagerura, Bagambiki et Imanishimwe (« Actes d'accusation ») et, par voie de conséquence, en refusant au Procureur la possibilité d'invoquer cette forme de responsabilité pour engager la responsabilité pénale individuelle des accusés[57]. En son quatrième motif, il fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a également versé dans l'erreur (1) en refusant d'examiner si le Procureur avait, au moyen de ses écritures postérieures à la mise en accusation, remédié à tout vice entachant les Actes d'accusation[58] ; (2) en concluant, après la clôture des débats, que les Actes d'accusation étaient viciés, bien qu'ayant conclu auparavant qu'ils ne l'étaient pas[59] ; (3) en s'abstenant de lire les Actes d'accusation ensemble, malgré leur jonction[60] ; et (4) en lisant les paragraphes des Actes d'accusation indépendamment les uns des autres, et sans tenir compte des chefs d'accusation[61].

25. En son premier motif d'appel, Imanishimwe soutient que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en le déclarant coupable des faits survenus au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba alors que, selon ses dires, ces faits n'avaient pas été exposés dans l'acte d'accusation établi à son encontre[62].

26. Avant de procéder à l'analyse détaillée des motifs d'appel relatifs aux Actes d'accusation, la Chambre d'appel souhaite brièvement rappeler les développements procéduraux principaux survenus lors de la phase préalable au procès. Statuant sur une exception préjudicielle soulevée par Imanishimwe pendant la phase de mise en état, la Chambre de première instance a ordonné au Procureur de clarifier le paragraphe 3.14 de l'Acte d'accusation initial Bagambiki/Imanishimwe[63]. Le paragraphe 3.14 modifié et l'Acte d'accusation initial Bagambiki/Imanishimwe contenaient la version définitive des accusations portées contre Imanishimwe et Bagambiki (« Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe »)[64].

[64] Voir Jugement, par. 15.

27. Saisie d'une autre exception préjudicielle par Ntagerura, la Chambre de première instance a ordonné au Procureur de préciser plusieurs passages de l'Acte d'accusation initial Ntagerura[65]. L'acte d'accusation modifié contenait la version définitive des accusations portées contre Ntagerura (« Acte d'accusation Ntagerura »)[66].

28. Le 11 octobre 1999, en vertu de l'article 48 du Règlement, la Chambre de première instance a fait droit à la requête formée par le Procureur aux fins de jonction de l'instance de Ntagerura avec celle de Bagambiki et Imanishimwe[67].

29. La Chambre d'appel tient à présent à rappeler le droit régissant la forme d'un acte d'accusation.

B. DROIT APPLICABLE AUX ACTES D'ACCUSATION

30. La jurisprudence du Tribunal de céans et du Tribunal Pénal International pour l'ex-Yougoslavie (« TPIY ») sont constantes et concordantes s'agissant du droit applicable aux actes d'accusation. Les deux tribunaux ont été amenés à préciser que les articles 17 (4), 20 (2), 20 (4) (a) et 20 (4) (b) du Statut et l'article 47 (C) du Règlement imposent au Procureur l'obligation d'énoncer les faits essentiels sur lesquels reposent les accusations portées dans l'acte d'accusation, mais non les éléments de preuve permettant d'établir ces faits[68].

31. Si l'accusé doit attendre que le Procureur dépose son mémoire préalable au procès ou que le procès proprement dit s'ouvre pour être dûment informé des faits essentiels caractérisant l'activité criminelle qui lui est reprochée, il sera difficile à la Défense de mener de réelles enquêtes avant l'ouverture du procès[69]. L'acte d'accusation n'est donc suffisamment précis que s'il expose les faits essentiels retenus par le Procureur d'une manière assez circonstanciée pour informer clairement la personne poursuivie des accusations portées contre elle afin qu'elle puisse préparer sa défense[70]. Tout acte d'accusation qui n'énonce pas dûment les faits essentiels fondant les accusations portées contre l'accusé est entaché de vice[71].

32. C'est la nature de la thèse du Procureur qui permet de savoir si tel ou tel fait est « essentiel ». La qualification que le Procureur donne à la conduite criminelle alléguée et la proximité que l'accusé entretient avec le crime jouent un rôle décisif dans la détermination du degré de précision avec lequel le Procureur doit articuler dans l'acte d'accusation les faits essentiels qu'il invoque pour en informer dûment l'accusé[72]. Par exemple, lorsqu'il reproche à l'accusé d'avoir personnellement commis les actes criminels considérés, le Procureur est tenu d'indiquer avec la plus grande précision l'identité de la victime, le lieu et la date approximative des actes criminels allégués ainsi que leur mode d'exécution[73]. Toutefois, on peut accepter qu'il fournisse moins de détails si

33. Dans les cas où le Procureur invoque la notion d'entreprise criminelle commune, il doit expressément mentionner cette forme de responsabilité dans l'acte d'accusation, faute de quoi l'acte d'accusation serait entaché d'un vice[75]. Bien que l'entreprise criminelle commune soit un moyen de « commettre » une infraction, il n'est pas suffisant de se borner à viser l'article 6 (1) du Statut sans autre précision[76]. Le Procureur doit également indiquer le but de l'entreprise, sa période, l'identité des personnes qui y ont participé et la nature de la participation de l'accusé[77]. En outre, pour permettre à la personne accusée de participation à une entreprise criminelle commune de comprendre pleinement les agissements dont le Procureur l'estime responsable, l'acte d'accusation devrait indiquer clairement la catégorie d'entreprise criminelle commune retenue[78].

34. Lorsqu'il est reproché à l'accusé d'avoir planifié, incité à commettre, ordonné ou aidé et encouragé à planifier, préparer ou exécuter les crimes allégués, le Procureur doit préciser les « agissements » ou la « ligne de conduite » de l'intéressé qui donnent lieu aux accusations portées contre lui[79].

35. Lorsque la responsabilité du supérieur hiérarchique prévue à l'article 6 (3) du Statut est invoquée, les faits essentiels qui doivent être énoncés dans l'acte d'accusation sont les suivants : (1) le fait que l'accusé était le supérieur hiérarchique de certaines personnes suffisamment identifiées sur lesquelles il exerçait un contrôle effectif – en ce sens qu'il avait la capacité matérielle d'empêcher ou de punir leur conduite criminelle – et dont les actes engageraient sa responsabilité[80] ; (2) les actes criminels commis par les personnes dont il aurait eu la responsabilité[81] ; (3) le comportement de l'accusé qui permet de conclure qu'il savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que ses subordonnés s'apprêtaient à commettre les crimes considérés ou les avaient commis[82] ; et (4) le comportement de

[74] Arrêt Kupreškić et consorts, par. 89. Selon la Chambre d'appel:
« The inability to identify victims is reconcilable with the right of the accused to know the material facts of the charges against him because, in such circumstances, the accused's ability to prepare an effective defence to the charges does not depend on knowing the identity of every single alleged victim. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the situation is different, however, when the Prosecution seeks to prove that the accused personally killed or harmed a particular individual. The Prosecution cannot simultaneously argue that the accused killed a named individual yet claim that the "sheer scale" of the crime made it impossible to identify that individual in the indictment. Quite the contrary: the Prosecution's obligation to provide particulars in the indictment is at its highest when it seeks to prove that the accused killed or harmed a specific individual »: Arrêt Ntakirutimana, par. 73 et 74 (note de bas de page non reproduite, non disponible en langue française).

[81] Arrêt Naletilić et Martinović, par. 67.

[82] Arrêt Blaškić, par. 218 (b). La Chambre d'appel relève que « les faits se rapportant aux actes commis par ces personnes dont l'accusé, en sa qualité de supérieur hiérarchique, est présumé responsable seront généralement exposés de façon moins l'accusé qui permet de conclure qu'il n'a pas pris les mesures nécessaires et raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs[83].

36. L'acte d'accusation peut également s'avérer défectueux si les faits essentiels ne sont pas exposés avec suffisamment de précision, lorsqu'il situe, par exemple, ces faits dans de larges espaces de temps, n'indique les lieux que vaguement et ne donne l'identité des victimes qu'en termes généraux[84]. Il est certes possible que le Procureur ne puisse, faute de disposer des informations nécessaires, exposer dans l'acte d'accusation les faits essentiels avec le degré de précision exigé. À cet égard, la Chambre d'appel souligne que le Procureur devrait connaître son dossier avant de se présenter au procès et qu'il n'a pas le droit de s'appuyer sur les faiblesses de ses propres enquêtes pour forger sa thèse lors du procès en fonction de la façon dont se déroule la présentation des éléments de preuve[85]. D'autres vices de l'acte d'accusation peuvent se manifester à un stade ultérieur de la procédure parce que la présentation des éléments de preuve ne se déroule pas comme prévu. Dans ces circonstances, la Chambre de première instance se doit de rechercher s'il faut modifier l'acte d'accusation, suspendre les débats ou exclure les éléments de preuve qui n'entrent pas dans le cadre de l'acte d'accusation pour assurer l'équité du procès[86].

37. En rendant son jugement, une Chambre de première instance ne peut déclarer l'accusé coupable que des crimes exposés dans l'acte d'accusation[87]. Si elle juge l'acte d'accusation vicié parce qu'il est vague ou ambigu, elle doit rechercher si l'accusé a néanmoins bénéficié d'un procès équitable ou, en d'autres termes, si le vice constaté a porté préjudice à la Défense[88]. Dans certains cas, un acte d'accusation vicié peut être réputé « purgé » et une déclaration de culpabilité prononcée si le Procureur a fourni en temps voulu à l'accusé des informations claires et cohérentes présentant de façon détaillée les faits sur lesquels reposent les accusations portées contre lui[89]. Aucune déclaration de culpabilité ne peut être prononcée lorsque le manquement à l'obligation d'informer dûment la personne poursuivie des motifs de droit et de fait sur lesquels reposent les accusations dont elle est l'objet a porté atteinte à son droit à un procès équitable[90].

38. Lorsqu'un acte d'accusation est attaqué en appel, il n'est plus possible de le modifier. La question qui se pose alors est de savoir si l'erreur commise d'avoir jugé l'accusé sur la base d'un acte d'accusation vicié a « invalidé la décision » et autorise la Chambre d'appel à intervenir[91]. En tranchant la question, la Chambre d'appel n'exclut pas que, dans certains cas, l'effet néfaste d'un tel acte d'accusation puisse être dissipé si le Procureur fournit en temps voulu à l'accusé des informations claires et cohérentes concernant les faits sur lesquels reposent les accusations portées contre lui[92], remédiant par là même à son manquement à l'obligation d'informer pleinement l'accusé des accusations portées contre lui dans l'acte d'accusation[93].

39. Lorsqu'on se demande si le Procureur a purgé l'acte d'accusation d'un vice et si l'accusé subit encore le moindre préjudice, c'est, dans les deux cas, pour déterminer si le procès a été rendu précise (même si l'Accusation est toujours tenue de fournir toutes les informations dont elle dispose), parce que le détail de ces actes est souvent inconnu et parce que, souvent, les actes eux-mêmes ne sont pas véritablement contestés » : Arrêt Blaškić, par. 218 et références y relatives. inéquitable[94]. À cet égard, la Chambre d'appel réaffirme qu'un acte d'accusation vague ou ambigu qui n'est pas purgé de ses vices par la communication en temps voulu d'informations claires et cohérentes porte en soi préjudice à l'accusé[95]. Le vice dont il est entaché ne peut être jugé anodin que s'il est établi que celui-ci n'a pas sensiblement compromis la capacité de l'accusé de préparer sa défense[96].

40. C'est à l'appelant qui invoque un vice de l'acte d'accusation pour la première fois en appel qu'incombe la charge de démontrer que sa capacité de préparer sa défense a été sensiblement compromise[97]. Si l'accusé s'était en revanche déjà plaint en première instance de ne pas avoir reçu les informations nécessaires, c'est au Procureur que revient la charge de démontrer en appel que la capacité de l'accusé de préparer sa défense n'a pas été sensiblement compromise[98]. Il en est ainsi sous réserve du pouvoir propre dont la Chambre d'appel est investie pour rendre justice dans l'affaire considérée[99].

41. La Chambre d'appel souligne que la possibilité de purger un acte d'accusation n'est pas illimitée. Un acte d'accusation vague ou ambigu dans les accusations qu'il formule doit nécessairement être distingué de celui qui tait purement et simplement certaines accusations. Alors qu'il est possible de remédier aux imprécisions et ambiguïtés du premier par la communication en temps voulu à l'accusé d'informations claires et cohérentes concernant les faits sur lesquels reposent les accusations, il n'est possible de modifier le second aux fins d'introduire les accusations passées sous silence que par la procédure prévue à l'article 50 du Règlement.

C. REFUS DE LA CHAMBRE DE PREMIÈRE INSTANCE DE CONSIDÉRER L'ENTREPRISE CRIMINELLE COMMUNE (3ÈME MOTIF D'APPEL DU PROCUREUR)

42. Au paragraphe 34 du Jugement, la Chambre de première instance a considéré que :

> « le Procureur entend s'appuyer sur la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune pour retenir la responsabilité pénale de l'accusé comme auteur matériel des crimes principaux plutôt que comme complice, il doit le dire sans équivoque dans l'acte d'accusation et préciser la forme d'entreprise criminelle commune qu'il invoquera. Loin de se contenter d'alléguer que l'accusé a participé à une entreprise criminelle commune, il doit indiquer l'objet de cette entreprise, l'identité des autres parties et la nature de la participation de l'accusé. En conséquence, la Chambre ne retiendra pas les arguments du Procureur, qui n'ont été avancés pour la première fois que lors de la présentation de ses réquisitions, pour conclure à la responsabilité pénale des accusés sur le fondement de cette théorie ». [Notes de bas de page non reproduites].

43. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur sur un point de droit en refusant de lui permettre de s'appuyer sur la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune pour établir la responsabilité pénale individuelle des Accusés[100]. Dans son Acte d'appel et son Mémoire d'appel, le Procureur avançait plus précisément que la Chambre de première instance avait versé dans l'erreur en déclarant qu'il n'avait pas plaidé l'entreprise criminelle commune dans les Actes d'accusation[101]. Il soutenait en effet qu'il n'était pas obligé de plaider expressément ce mode de responsabilité dans les Actes d'accusation[102], ce s'appuyant sur la jurisprudence du Tribunal et du TPIY[103]. Lors des audiences en appel, le Procureur a indiqué abandonner ce moyen d'appel en raison de la décision récente prise par la Chambre d'appel TPIY dans l'affaire Kvočka et consorts[104]. S'il reconnaît désormais que les Actes d'accusation n'invoquaient pas la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune avec suffisamment de spécificité, le Procureur maintient néanmoins que les Actes d'accusation avaient été subséquemment purgés de leurs vices à cet égard. Il prétend en effet avoir fourni en temps voulu aux Accusés des informations claires et cohérentes les informant de son intention d'invoquer la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune[105].

Tout en reconnaissant ne pas avoir explicitement plaidé la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune dans les Actes d'accusation, le Procureur affirmait que chacun des Accusés intimés avait été informé de son intention d'invoquer cette théorie par le truchement des Actes d'accusation, de son Mémoire préalable au procès, de sa Déclaration liminaire, de son Réquisitoire, des moyens de preuve présentés au procès, mais aussi de la Décision aux fins de jonction.

44. Le Procureur concédant l'existence de vices entachant les Actes d'accusation pour ce qui est de l'accusation de participation à une entreprise criminelle commune, la Chambre d'appel va directement se pencher sur la question de savoir si les Accusés ont été informés en temps voulu et de manière claire et cohérente que ce mode de responsabilité était invoqué à leur encontre. La Chambre d'appel limitera son examen aux parties du dossier de première instance invoquées par le Procureur à l'appui de son argument, à savoir la Décision aux fins de jonction, le Mémoire préalable du Procureur, sa Déclaration liminaire et son Réquisitoire.

45. En premier lieu, le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a, dans sa Décision aux fins de jonction, reconnu qu'il avait fait connaître suffisamment à temps son intention d'invoquer la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune[106]. Le Procureur renvoie également à son intervention orale d'août 1999 sur la jonction d'instances selon laquelle

> « il y avait un génocide au Rwanda, une entreprise criminelle, et tous les Accusés faisaient partie de cette entreprise criminelle et … qu'ils devraient, sur cette base, être inculpés et jugés dans le cadre d'un procès unique »[107].

46. Ntagerura et Bagambiki répondent que l'intention du Procureur d'invoquer la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune n'était pas visée dans la Décision aux fins de jonction[108]. Bagambiki affirme aussi que la requête du Procureur en jonction d'instances ne pouvait l'informer de l'intention du Procureur parce qu'elle ne poursuivait pas le même but qu'un acte d'accusation[109].

47. La Décision aux fins de jonction se rapportait à la question de savoir si les Accusés étaient poursuivis pour des crimes « commis à l'occasion de la même opération », condition imposée par l'article 48 du Règlement pour autoriser une jonction d'instances. Le terme « opération » est défini à l'article 2 du Règlement comme « un certain nombre d'actes ou d'omissions survenant à l'occasion d'un seul événement ou de plusieurs événements, en un seul endroit ou en plusieurs endroits, et faisant partie d'un plan, d'une stratégie ou d'un dessein commun ». Les constatations faites par la Chambre de première instance dans cette décision se limitaient incontestablement au critère juridique énoncé à l'article 48 du Règlement[110]. Il serait donc incorrect de laisser entendre qu'à travers ces constatations la Chambre de première instance reconnaissait que le Procureur comptait invoquer l'entreprise criminelle commune comme forme de responsabilité. Ce faisant, la Décision aux fins de jonction n'a pas servi à informer les Accusés que ce mode de responsabilité allait être invoqué.

Au paragraphe 43 de ladite Décision, la Chambre de première instance s'est exprimée comme suit : « [P]our établir l'existence d'une entente […] il suffit d'établir que les accusés poursuivaient un objectif ou un dessein communs, qu'ils avaient fourni le projet de réaliser cet objectif ou ce dessein et qu'ils avaient exécuté ledit projet ».

48. Il ressort de surcroît des arguments oraux développés par le Procureur lors du débat sur sa requête en jonction d'instances que lesdits arguments se rapportaient au critère de la « même opération », et ne visaient pas à clarifier les modes de responsabilité invoqués dans les Actes d'accusation. En tout état de cause, l'allusion de portée générale à « un seul génocide au Rwanda », conjuguée au fait que la nature de la participation des Accusés à cette « entreprise criminelle » n'était pas précisée, n'a pas fourni aux Accusés les informations suffisamment claires et cohérentes qui auraient pu pallier à l'équivoque des Actes d'accusation s'agissant de l'entreprise criminelle commune.

49. En deuxième lieu, le Procureur soutient avoir, dans son Mémoire préalable, informé les Accusés qu'il entendait invoquer la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune[111]. La Chambre d'appel convient avec le Procureur[112] que son Mémoire préalable contenait des allégations factuelles selon lesquelles les Accusés avaient participé au recrutement, à l'armement et à l'entraînement des Interahamwe et planifié le génocide dans la préfecture de Cyangugu[113]. Il y était également allégué qu'ils avaient participé à des réunions, été présents, ensemble, lors de massacres et avaient joué un rôle en rapport avec les massacres[114]. Toutefois, la Chambre d'appel considère que le Mémoire préalable du Procureur, en particulier dans les parties traitant de la responsabilité pénale individuelle des Accusés[115], ne faisait pas expressément mention d'une entreprise criminelle commune, d'un plan criminel commun ou d'un quelconque autre synonyme de cette forme de responsabilité pénale. Dès lors, il n'allait pas de soi que les allégations factuelles susvisées étaient destinées à fonder une accusation de participation à une entreprise criminelle commune.

50. Le Procureur affirme encore que

> « tout au long du procès, il a constamment invoqué la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune à l'encontre des trois accusés »[116].

Au soutien de son affirmation, il renvoie à sa Déclaration liminaire, selon laquelle les Accusés « ont agi de concert, pour la réalisation d'une seule et même entreprise criminelle »[117], et à son Réquisitoire qui mentionnait la doctrine du dessein commun – en d'autres termes la doctrine de l'entreprise criminelle commune – en relation avec l'article 6 (1) du Statut[118]. Il soutient aussi qu'ayant appelé 82 témoins pour réfuter la thèse du Procureur, les Accusés sont malvenus de prétendre que la préparation de leur défense a été compromise[119].

51. La Chambre d'appel relève que le Procureur n'a pas mentionné l'entreprise criminelle commune pour la première fois dans son Réquisitoire comme l'affirmait la Chambre de première instance[120] ; on trouve en effet une allusion à ce mode de responsabilité dans la Déclaration liminaire du Procureur, en ces termes :

52. Le Procureur a précisé son intention d'invoquer la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune dans la partie de son Réquisitoire traitant de la responsabilité pénale individuelle au titre de l'article 6 (1) du Statut[122].

53. La Chambre d'appel rappelle néanmoins que si la Défense se voit refuser la communication des faits essentiels relatifs à l'activité criminelle de l'accusé jusqu'au procès proprement dit, alors il sera difficile à celle-ci de mener de réelles enquêtes avant l'ouverture du procès[123]. Dans la présente affaire, le Procureur a attendu, pour faire allusion à son intention d'invoquer la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune, le premier jour du procès, à l'occasion de sa Déclaration liminaire. Il a attendu, pour développer ce mode de responsabilité en rapport direct avec la responsabilité pénale individuelle des Accusés, le moment de son Réquisitoire. Ni dans sa Déclaration liminaire, ni dans son Réquisitoire il n'a précisé la catégorie d'entreprise criminelle commune invoquée. L'argument du Procureur selon lequel les Accusés avaient cité 82 témoins durant le procès[124] n'est pas révélateur de l'aptitude des Accusés à préparer leur défense contre l'accusation particulière de participation à une entreprise criminelle commune. En conséquence, la Chambre d'appel conclut que les Accusés n'ont pas été informés en temps utile, de manière claire et cohérente, que leur responsabilité pénale individuelle serait invoquée en vertu de la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune.

54. C'est donc à juste titre que la Chambre de première instance s'est refusée à examiner la responsabilité pénale des Accusés sous l'angle de la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune. Partant, il n'est pas nécessaire pour la Chambre d'appel d'examiner l'argument du Procureur selon lequel les Accusés auraient « agi dans le cadre d'une entreprise criminelle commune et auraient par conséquent dû être déclarés pénalement responsables à titre individuel en vertu de l'article 6 (1) du Statut »[125].

55. Le troisième motif d'appel du Procureur est donc rejeté.

D. Conclusions de la Chambre de première instance sur les Actes d'accusation (4ème motif d'appel du Procureur)

56. En son quatrième motif d'appel, le Procureur soutient, dans l'ordre suivant, que la Chambre de première instance a commis quatre erreurs de droit : (1) en refusant d'examiner si le Procureur avait, au moyen de ses écritures postérieures à la mise en accusation, remédié à tout vice entachant les Actes d'accusation[126] ; (2) en concluant, après la clôture des débats, que les Actes d'accusation étaient viciés, bien qu'ayant conclu auparavant qu'ils ne l'étaient pas[127] ; (3) en s'abstenant de lire les Actes d'accusation ensemble, malgré leur jonction[128] ; et (4) en lisant les paragraphes des Actes d'accusation indépendamment les uns des autres, et sans tenir compte des chefs d'accusation[129]. Au dire du Procureur, ce motif d'appel a une incidence sur tous les verdicts prononcés à l'endroit des Accusés[130].

57. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que la Chambre de première instance a, dans son Jugement, déclaré vicié un certain nombre de paragraphes des deux Actes d'accusation, à savoir les paragraphes 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 11, 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 et 16 à 19 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura[131] et les paragraphes 3.12 à 3.28, 3.30 et 3.31 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe[132]. Elle note que la Chambre de première instance s'est néanmoins autorisée à dégager des conclusions factuelles des paragraphes 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 et 19 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura et des paragraphes 3.16 à 3.28, 3.30 et 3.31 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe[133].

58. La Chambre d'appel considère que la question de savoir si la Chambre de première instance pouvait, après la clôture des débats, conclure que les Actes d'accusation étaient entachés de vices, alors qu'elle avait auparavant conclu qu'ils ne l'étaient pas, est une question préliminaire.

1. Actes d'accusation jugés viciés après la clôture des débats

59. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de droit en statuant, après la clôture des débats, que les Actes d'accusation étaient viciés alors qu'elle avait, dans une « décision antérieure », jugé qu'ils ne l'étaient pas[134]. À cet effet, il invoque l'Opinion du Juge Williams attaché à la Décision 98 bis pour souligner que les Actes d'accusation avaient été jugés réguliers aussi bien au stade de la confirmation qu'à celui des exceptions préjudicielles[135]. La Chambre d'appel note être saisie d'un appel contre le Jugement de première instance. Elle ne peut dès lors baser sa décision que sur le Jugement, pas sur une décision prise en vertu de l'article 98 bis ou sur une opinion séparée jointe à ladite décision qui n'ont jamais fait l'objet d'un appel. L'argument du Procureur ne peut en conséquence prospérer.

60. Dans sa Décision relative à l'Acte d'accusation initial Bagambiki/Imanishimwe, la Chambre de première instance déclarait qu'un lien avait été établi au paragraphe 3.22 de l'Acte d'accusation initial Bagambiki/Imanishimwe entre les faits qui y sont allégués et Imanishimwe, du fait de l'autorité que celui-ci exerçait sur les gendarmes[136]. Le paragraphe 3.22 est demeuré inchangé dans l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe. Toutefois, dans le Jugement, la Chambre de première instance a conclu que l'acte d'accusation n'allèguait pas un lien entre les auteurs principaux des crimes et Bagambiki et Imanishimwe[137].

61. La Chambre de première instance se prononçait également sur le paragraphe 3.14 – lequel servait de base au chef d'accusation d'entente en vue de commettre le génocide (Chef 19) – pour affirmer qu'Imanishimwe avait participé à des réunions. La Chambre de première instance a estimé que le paragraphe 3.14 était vague et a ordonné au Procureur de :

préciser […] les réunions visées dans ce paragraphe, [en particulier] les dates approximatives, lieux et objet de ces réunions, autant que faire se peut, et préciser si les personnes accusées et d'autres personnes nommément désignées dans l'acte d'accusation étaient les seules personnes présentes à ces réunions ou si d'autres personnes, non nommément désignées dans l'acte d'accusation, y assistaient également.[138]

Le 10 août 1999, le Procureur a déposé le Paragraphe 3.14 modifié qui, avec l'Acte d'accusation initial Bagambiki/Imanishimwe, contenait la version définitive des accusations retenues contre Bagambiki et Imanishimwe[139]. Dans le Jugement, la Chambre de première instance a estimé que le Paragraphe 3.14 modifié :

ne relate pas de faits susceptibles de constituer des éléments essentiels du crime d'entente […] Qui plus est, ce paragraphe ne précise pas la nature de la participation de Bagambiki et Imanishimwe aux réunions évoquées.[140]

La question se pose alors de savoir pourquoi la Chambre de première instance n'a pas ordonné au Procureur de clarifier le paragraphe 3.14 aussi au regard des faits essentiels du crime étayé par ce paragraphe.

62. Par voie d'exception préjudicielle, Ntagerura a fait valoir que l'acte d'accusation initial établi contre lui était trop vague à certains égards[141]. Statuant sur cette exception préjudicielle dans sa Décision relative à l'Acte d'accusation initial Ntagerura, la Chambre de première instance a ordonné au Procureur d'apporter certaines précisions à l'acte d'accusation, par exemple en ce qui concerne les délais mentionnés dans les paragraphes 9 à 16, rejetant la requête de Ntagerura sur tous les autres points[142]. Par la suite, elle a confirmé que les modifications déposées par le Procureur étaient conformes à son ordonnance[143].

63. Dans le Jugement, cependant, l'imprécision des périodes retenues a été mentionnée parmi les vices affectant l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura[144]. Au demeurant, bien qu'elle ait rejeté l'exception préjudicielle soulevée par Ntagerura quant à la précision des indications concernant les lieux et la description des faits incriminés, sa participation personnelle à ces faits ainsi que l'identité de ses subordonnés et l'intention qui l'animait au sens de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, la Chambre de première instance a néanmoins estimé dans le Jugement que l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura était vicié à ces égards[145].

64. Au vu de ce qui précède, il apparaît clairement que la Chambre de première instance a, dans son Jugement, reconsidéré certaines des décisions préalables au procès qu'elle avait prises sur la forme des Actes d'accusation. Cela ne constitue pas en soi une erreur puisqu'il est loisible à une Chambre de première instance de reconsidérer chacune de ses décisions au titre de son pouvoir discrétionnaire[146] si une erreur manifeste de raisonnement a été mise en évidence ou si la décision reconsidérée a donné lieu à une injustice[147]. La Chambre d'appel précise néanmoins que lorsqu'une Chambre décide de modifier l'une de ses décisions, elle > « doit examiner très attentivement chaque point soulevé, et faire face aux conséquences que cette révision peut avoir eu sur la procédure qui se sera entre-temps déroulée conformément à la décision initiale »[148].

Dans le cas d'espèce, la Chambre d'appel considère que, dès lors que la Chambre de première instance avait décidé de reconsidérer ses décisions préalables au procès sur le degré de précision des Actes d'accusation au stade du délibéré, elle aurait dû interrompre le cours de ses délibérations et procéder à la réouverture des débats. À un stade aussi avancé du procès, après que tous les moyens de preuve aient été présentés et les conclusions finales des parties entendues, le Procureur ne pouvait proposer une modification des Actes d'accusation. La réouverture des débats lui aurait en revanche permis de tenter de convaincre la Chambre de première instance de la justesse de ses premières décisions relatives à la forme de l'acte d'Accusation, ou, le cas échéant, de ce que les vices en question avaient été purgés. La Chambre d'appel considère que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en ne disant mot jusqu'au rendu du Jugement de sa décision de juger les parties susmentionnées des Actes d'accusation viciées.

65. La question de savoir si cette erreur est de nature à invalider le verdict sera examinée plus loin au vu des conclusions de la Chambre d'appel sur les autres erreurs alléguées par le Procureur au titre de ce motif d'appel. La Chambre d'appel examinera tout d'abord la question de la lecture combinée des Actes d'accusation.

2. Défaut de considération des Actes d'accusation comme un tout

> « a expressément accepté des arguments présentés à l'appui d'une lecture des deux actes d'accusation comme s'il s'agissait d'un document unique »[150].

Le Procureur soutient de manière générale que les Actes d'accusation s'étayaient mutuellement pour ce qui est des chefs d'entente en vue de commettre le génocide, mais limite ses arguments détaillés aux conclusions de la Chambre de première instance concernant l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura[151].

Kanyabashi*, affaire n°ICTR-96-15-A, Arrêt relatif à la requête de la Défense déposée aux fins d'appel interlocutoire sur la compétence de la Chambre I, 3 juin 1999, Opinion individuelle et concordante conjointe des Juges Wang Tieya et Rafael Nieto-Navia, par. 6.
[151] Il fait valoir à cet égard que les paragraphes suivants auraient dû être lus ensemble : (i) le paragraphe 13 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura avec le paragraphe 3.16 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe ; (ii) le paragraphe 16 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura avec le paragraphe 3.29 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe ; et (iii) les paragraphes 17, 18 et 19 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura avec les paragraphes 3.16 et 3.23 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe : Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 176 à 178.

67. Imanishimwe répond que la jonction des instances des Accusés n'emportait pas pour autant la jonction des chefs d'accusation[152]. Bagambiki répond quant à lui que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas reconnu dans sa Décision aux fins de jonction qu'il était possible de retenir à l'encontre de l'un quelconque des accusés des charges portées dans l'un quelconque des Actes d'accusation et que cette décision n'emportait pas modification des références aux conclusions factuelles étayant les charges retenues dans les Actes d'accusation[153]. Il fait valoir que ce serait méconnaître le droit de l'accusé d'être informé des charges portées contre lui que de tenir compte de faits l'impliquant contenus dans un acte d'accusation autre que le sien[154]. Ntagerura soutient que la Chambre de première instance, pas plus que l'accusé, ne devrait être dans l'obligation de s'en référer à un deuxième acte d'accusation pour donner un sens aux allégations du premier[155].

68. En réplique, le Procureur avance ne pas vouloir opérer une confusion des « charges retenues contre l'accusé A avec celles retenues contre l'accusé B ». Il prétend plutôt vouloir dénoncer l'erreur commise par la Chambre de première instance consistant à écarter les précisions relatives aux accusations portées contre l'accusé A figurant dans l'acte d'accusation dressé contre l'accusé B[156].

69. Le Procureur énumère dans les Actes d'accusation le ou les paragraphes qui étayent chaque chef d'accusation. De la sorte, il informait les Accusés des allégations fondant chaque chef d'accusation. La Chambre d'appel relève que le Procureur s'est cependant abstenu de faire des références croisées à chacun des Actes d'accusation. Ainsi, les allégations factuelles avancées dans chacun des Actes d'accusation restaient, de l'avis de la Chambre d'appel, strictement cantonnées à leurs chefs respectifs. Le simple fait que les instances des Accusés aient été jointes « aux fins d'un procès commun »[157] (et non d'une jonction des charges) ne visait pas à informer les Accusés de ce que les allégations factuelles étayant les chefs d'accusation portés dans un acte d'accusation étaieraient également les chefs retenus dans un autre. Bien que son nom soit cité dans l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe, la Chambre d'appel ne peut conclure que Ntagerura ait été informé du fait que les allégations avancées dans l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe viendraient étayer les chefs retenus dans l'acte d'accusation dressé contre lui.

70. Au surplus, le Procureur fait valoir que le fait de considérer les Actes d'accusation indépendamment les uns des autres au regard des allégations factuelles allait à « l'encontre de la raison d'être de la jonction d'instances »[158]. Cet argument ne saurait prospérer. En effet, il ne va pas de soi que des actes d'accusation distincts doivent être considérés ensemble en cas de jonction d'instance. Dans ce cas de figure, il n'en demeure pas moins que chaque accusé conserve les mêmes droits que s'il était jugé séparément[159]. Le Procureur est toujours tenu d'articuler, dans l'acte d'accusation dressé contre chaque accusé, les faits essentiels fondant les accusations retenues contre lui[160]. L'argument du Procureur selon lequel les Actes d'accusation « sont devenus, en droit, un seul acte d'accusation » est rejeté. Il appartenait au Procureur de déposer un nouvel acte d'accusation joint et unique contre les trois Accusés.

71. La Chambre d'appel considère en conséquence que l'argument du Procureur selon lequel les Actes d'accusation auraient dû être lus ensemble comme un document unique est mal fondé. Dans la mesure où la Chambre d'appel conclut que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas commis d'erreur en refusant de lire les Actes d'accusation comme un tout, il n'est alors pas nécessaire de se pencher sur l'effet qu'aurait pu avoir une lecture combinée des deux Actes d'accusation.

72. Se tournant vers les autres moyens d'appel du Procureur, la Chambre d'appel concède que la logique voudrait que soit examinée à présent la question de savoir si la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en concluant que les Actes d'accusation étaient entachés de vices. Afin d'éviter d'analyser chacun des paragraphes litigieux à deux reprises – au stade de la détermination de l'existence des vices et, le cas échéant, au stade de l'examen de la question de savoir si les vices en question ont pu être purgés – la Chambre d'appel examinera tout d'abord dans l'abstrait si la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en omettant de rechercher si les Actes d'accusation avaient été purgés des vices identifiés[161]. Ce n'est qu'à l'issue de cette analyse que la Chambre d'appel entreprendra alors d'examiner, paragraphe par paragraphe, si les Actes d'accusation étaient effectivement viciés et, le cas échéant, si les vices ont été purgés.

3. La purge des vices identifiés

La Chambre de première instance a-t-elle versé dans l'erreur en omettant d'examiner si les vices avaient été purgés ?

73. La Chambre de première instance a tenu les conclusions suivantes :

Elle a pris acte de l'Arrêt de la Chambre d'appel du TPIY en l'affaire Kupreškić et consorts et du fait que, dans un nombre limité d'affaires, un acte d'accusation vicié pouvait être purgé de ses vices[163]. Elle a poursuivi en ces termes :

> les pièces produites à l'appui de l'acte d'accusation Ntagerura et de celui de Bagambiki et Imanishimwe, les autres pièces communiquées avant le procès et le mémoire préalable au procès fournissent des informations complémentaires permettant de connaître les éléments de preuve susceptibles d'être produits lors du procès et la thèse du Procureur. Cependant, les conclusions et les pièces communiquées avant le procès ne peuvent pas valablement remplacer un acte d'accusation bien formulé, celui-ci étant le seul instrument de mise en accusation mentionné dans le Statut et le Règlement. L'acte d'accusation doit exposer tous les faits essentiels. La Chambre de première instance et l'accusé ne devraient pas avoir à examiner minutieusement des montagnes d'informations, de déclarations de témoins et de conclusions écrites ou verbales pour déterminer les faits qui pourraient fonder les crimes reprochés à l'accusé, et ce d'autant plus si certaines de ces informations et pièces ne sont communiquées qu'à la veille du procès[164].

74. La Chambre d'appel rappelle qu'il est de jurisprudence constante aussi bien devant le Tribunal de céans que devant le TPIY que, dans un nombre limité d'affaires, un acte d'accusation vicié peut être purgé de ses vices si le Procureur fournit en temps voulu à l'accusé des informations claires et cohérentes, concernant les faits sur lesquels reposent les accusations portées contre lui[165]. En l'espèce, [162] Jugement, par. 64. La Chambre de première instance a souligné que les paragraphes 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 11, 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3, 16, 17, 18 et 19 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura et les paragraphes 3.12 à 3.28, 3.30 et 3.31 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe étaient viciés d'une façon ou d'une autre.

[163] Jugement, par. 65.
[164] Jugement, par. 66 (notes de bas de page non reproduites).
[165] Voir supra, par. 28.

il ressort du Jugement que la Chambre de première instance ne s'est pas demandée si les Actes d'accusation avaient été purgés de leurs vices. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que, si un acte d'accusation est jugé vicié pour cause d'imprécision ou d'ambiguïté, la Chambre de première instance doit déterminer si l'accusé a néanmoins bénéficié d'un procès équitable[166]. Au vu de la déclaration de la Chambre de première instance selon laquelle certaines des pièces communiquées par le Procureur après la mise en accusation avaient fourni la Chambre d'appel estime que la Chambre de première instance, pour s'acquitter de l'obligation qui lui est faite de déterminer si le procès a été équitable, aurait dû chercher à savoir si les vices avaient été corrigés. Elle a commis une erreur de droit faute de l'avoir fait. Il s'agira alors pour la Chambre d'appel d'examiner l'affirmation du Procureur selon laquelle les Actes d'accusation ont été purgés de leurs vices.

Le « passage relatif aux preuves solides » de l'Arrêt Kupreškić et consorts

75. Ayant conclu que les Actes d'accusation étaient viciés et omis de déterminer si les vices avaient été corrigés, la Chambre de première instance a conclu comme suit :

> dans l'affaire Kupreškic, la Chambre d'appel a déclaré qu'elle « pourrait, on le conçoit, hésiter à laisser un vice de forme de l'acte d'accusation modifié décider de l'issue d'une affaire dans laquelle tout porte à croire à la culpabilité des accusés ». La Chambre dès lors examinera les éléments de preuve à charge contre Ntagerura, Bagambiki et Imanishimwe pour voir s'il existe de tels éléments de preuve portant à croire à la culpabilité de l'accusé.[168]

76. La Chambre d'appel estime que la déclaration de la Chambre d'appel du TPIY dans l'affaire Kupreškić et consorts selon laquelle elle n'autorise nullement la Chambre de première instance à prendre en considération des faits essentiels dont l'accusé n'a pas été suffisamment informé. La question du « passage relatif aux preuves solides » s'est posée s'agissant de savoir si, le bien-fondé des objections formulées par les appelants quant à la précision de l'acte d'accusation ayant été reconnu, il convenait de renvoyer l'affaire en vue d'un nouveau procès[169]. En première instance, cette question ne se pose pas. La Chambre d'appel insiste sur le fait que si l'acte d'accusation est jugé défectueux en première instance, la Chambre de première instance doit examiner si l'accusé a néanmoins bénéficié d'un procès équitable. Aucune déclaration de culpabilité ne peut être prononcée lorsque le manquement à l'obligation d'informer dûment la personne poursuivie des motifs de droit et de fait sur lesquels reposent les accusations dont elle est l'objet a porté atteinte à son droit à un procès équitable[170].

4. Lecture des paragraphes des Actes d'accusation de façon isolée et conclusions de la Chambre de première instance sur les vices entachant certains paragraphes des Actes d'accusation

77. La Chambre d'appel note que l'argument du Procureur selon lequel la Chambre de première instance aurait versé dans l'erreur en ne lisant les paragraphes de chaque acte d'accusation que de façon isolée se rapporte principalement au fait que la Chambre ait conclu que plusieurs des paragraphes des Actes d'accusation s'abstenaient d'exposer la conduite criminelle reprochée aux Accusés[171]. Le Procureur prétend avoir remédié aux insuffisances des Actes d'accusation s'agissant des dates, lieux et circonstances des événements allégués dénoncées par la Chambre de première instance par la communication d'informations déposées avant l'ouverture du procès[172]. Aux fins de faciliter l'analyse, la Chambre d'appel examinera ensemble ces deux arguments.

78. La Chambre d'appel note encore que la Chambre de première s'est crue autorisée à dégager des conclusions factuelles de paragraphes des Actes d'accusation qu'elle avait pourtant jugés viciés[173]. En conséquence, les conclusions de la Chambre de première instance sur la validité des Actes d'accusation n'ont, pour un certain nombre d'allégations, pas pesé sur sa décision finale : ces allégations n'ont en effet pas été rejetées pour des motifs liés à la forme des Actes d'accusation mais en raison des faits de la cause. Si le Procureur semble soutenir qu'il n'est pas satisfait des conclusions factuelles que la Chambre de première instance a formées s'agissant des paragraphes qu'elle a jugé viciés, il n'apporte pas d'éléments sur ce point. Partant, considérant que les erreurs invoquées par le Procureur dans son quatrième motif d'appel ne peuvent prospérer s'agissant des paragraphes des Actes d'accusation qui ont fait l'objet d'une analyse factuelle de la Chambre de première instance, la Chambre d'appel limitera son analyse à l'examen du bien fondé des arguments du Procureur relatifs aux paragraphes qui n'ont pas fait l'objet de conclusions factuelles, à savoir les paragraphes 11, 12.1, 13 et 16 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura et les paragraphes 3.12 à 3.15 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe. Elle examinera également le paragraphe 3.28 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe qui n'a fait l'objet que d'une analyse partielle.

Acte d'accusation Ntagerura

79. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que la Chambre de première instance a dégagé des conclusions factuelles relatives aux paragraphes 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 et 19 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura, et que, par conséquent, seules les erreurs concernant les paragraphes 11, 12.1, 13 et 16 seront examinées.

(i) Paragraphe 11

80. Le paragraphe 11 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura est formulé comme suit :

> Du 1er janvier 1994 au 31 juillet 1994 et notamment en février, mars et avril 1994, André Ntagerura a permis et/ou autorisé l'utilisation des véhicules de l'État, notamment des autocars, pour le transport des miliciens, d'Interahamwe armés, des civils y compris des membres de la population tutsie, ainsi que d'armes et de munitions vers et à travers toute la préfecture de Cyangugu, notamment à travers les communes de Karengera, Bugarama, Nyakabuye et autres, ainsi que dans les préfectures de Butare, Ruhengeri et Kibuye et ailleurs.

81. La Chambre de première instance a constaté que ce paragraphe ne donnait aucun exemple précis de cas où Ntagerura aurait permis ou autorisé l'utilisation de véhicules de l'État ni des circonstances dans lesquelles ces véhicules auraient été utilisés. Elle a constaté également que dès lors que ce paragraphe ne précisait pas le but dans lequel étaient effectués ces transports ni la mesure dans laquelle Ntagerura avait connaissance de ce but, il n'énonçait pas les éléments constitutifs d'un acte criminel. Le Procureur entendait surtout se servir de ce paragraphe pour établir la responsabilité pénale de Ntagerura au titre de l'article 6 (3) tel qu'allégué au chef 6[174]. La Chambre de première instance a constaté à cet égard que le paragraphe 11, comme l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura dans son ensemble, n'identifiait pas les subordonnés de Ntagerura qui auraient réellement approuvé l'utilisation des autocars, ni les autres faits essentiels caractérisant une allégation de responsabilité du supérieur hiérarchique[175].

82. Le Procureur soutient que le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin MF comprenait des détails relatifs à l'autorisation donnée par Ntagerura, à plusieurs reprises, pour l'utilisation des véhicules de l'État, notamment dans le but de convoyer des armes, des munitions et des Interahamwe de même que des détails sur les véhicules utilisés, tels que les autocars de l'Onatracom (« Office national des transports en commun »), ainsi que sur les personnes auxquelles cette autorisation avait été donnée[176].

83. Le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin MF évoquait un incident en particulier où Ntagerura aurait ordonné l'utilisation d'un véhicule de l'État, numéro d'immatriculation A-7058, véhicule qu'il avait ordonné de remettre au sous-préfet de Busengo en mars 1994. Toutefois, le résumé ne fournissait aucune information concernant le dessein criminel aux fins desquelles ce véhicule aurait été utilisé ultérieurement ni la connaissance qu'aurait eu Ntagerura d'un tel dessein. De même, ce résumé n'informait pas Ntagerura des faits essentiels de la responsabilité qui lui était imputée en vertu de l'article 6 (3) du Statut[177].

(ii) Paragraphes 12.1, 13 et 16

84. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur dans ses conclusions relatives aux paragraphes 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 et 16 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura[178]. Bien que la Chambre de première instance a dégagé des conclusions factuelles sur la base des paragraphes 14.1 et 14.3, la Chambre d'appel estime devoir examiner les arguments relatifs à ces paragraphes également pour permettre une analyse des paragraphes 12.1, 14.1 et 14.3 dans leur contexte.

85. Les paragraphes 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 et 16 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura sont formulés comme suit :

> 12.1. Du 1er janvier 1994 au 31 juillet 1994 et même depuis 1991, André Ntagerura a encouragé et participé à la formation des miliciens Interahamwe dans la commune de Karengera et dans d'autres communes sur le territoire de la préfecture de Cyangugu.
> 13. Du 1er janvier 1994 au 31 juillet 1994 et même depuis janvier 1993, des armes, des munitions et des uniformes étaient fréquemment distribués dans la préfecture de Cyangugu. Ces armes étaient parfois entreposées chez Yussuf Munyakazi, dans la commune de Bugarama et ailleurs. Elles étaient par la suite distribuées aux Interahamwe dans la préfecture de Cyangugu.
> 14.1. Du 1er janvier 1994 au 31 juillet 1994, André Ntagerura a souvent été vu en compagnie de Yussuf Munyakazi et des Interahamwe dans la préfecture de Cyangugu et plus précisément dans la commune de Bugarama [et il leur a publiquement exprimé son soutien].

[177] Voir Annexe 4, p. 7, n°17 (Témoin MF) :
Le témoin déclarera qu'il connaissait NTAGERURA, et affirme que NTAGERURA avait l'habitude de mettre des véhicules du gouvernement à la disposition des Interahamwe, par exemple le véhicule A-7058 que NTAGERURA avait ordonné au témoin de donner au sous-préfet de Busengo en mars 1994 ; que NTAGERURA l'a fait à plusieurs reprises ; que le témoin a également vu des bus de l'ONATRACOM transporter des armes, des munitions et des Interahamwe ; que le témoin a rapporté ces incidents à son chef et à NTAGERURA, mais qu'il n'y a pas eu de réaction.
[178] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 184.

16. Du 1er janvier 1994 au 31 juillet 1994, Yussuf Munyakazi était un membre influent et un responsable des Interahamwe en préfecture de Cyangugu. Il était l'une des personnalités chargées de l'exécution des ordres du MRND. Un grand nombre de ces ordres provenaient André Ntagerura.

86. La Chambre de première instance a jugé que les paragraphes 12.1, 13 et 16, étaient non seulement vagues, mais ne faisaient état d'aucun comportement criminel identifiable de la part de Ntagerura[179]. Elle a également jugé que les paragraphes 14.1 et 14.3 n'exposaient pas de façon suffisamment précise la nature de la participation criminelle de Ntagerura[180].

87. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur dans ses conclusions et soutient que « les faits figurant dans ces paragraphes sont reliés les uns aux autres d'une manière qui contribue à étayer les allégations de chacun d'entre eux. L'association [de Ntagerura] aux Interahamwe et le rôle de ces derniers dans le génocide constituent le fil conducteur qui relie ces paragraphes »[181]. Il prétend que : (i) le sous-paragraphe 12.1 relie Ntagerura à l'entraînement des Interahamwe ; (ii) le paragraphe 13 le relie à la fourniture d'armes et d'uniformes aux Interahamwe par l'intermédiaire de Munyakazi ; et (iii) les sous-paragraphes 14.1 et 14.3 et le paragraphe 16 le relient aux activités de Munyakazi et de Bagambiki se rapportant aux Interahamwe, ainsi qu'à ces derniers directement, et aux activités des Interahamwe concernant le meurtre de Tutsis et d'opposants politiques[182].

88. La Chambre d'appel relève que les paragraphes 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 et 16 faisaient état d'un certain lien entre Ntagerura, Yussuf Munyakazi et les Interahamwe et indiquaient que ces derniers avaient perpétré des actes criminels. Toutefois, une allégation aussi générale ne suffisait pas à informer Ntagerura des faits essentiels de sa conduite criminelle. La Chambre d'appel relève qu'il n'était pas évident que ceux des membres des Interahamwe visés au paragraphe 14.3 qui auraient perpétré des actes de tuerie étaient les mêmes que ceux visés au paragraphe 12.1 qui auraient suivi un entraînement. En fait, il n'était même pas indiqué que l'entraînement avait été effectué en vue de la perpétration de tels actes. Le paragraphe 14.3 n'indiquait pas davantage qui aurait donné et/ou executé « les ordres de tuer tous les Tutsis et les opposants politiques ». Au demeurant, les allégations selon lesquelles Ntagerura « a souvent été vu en compagnie de, et a publiquement exprimé son soutien envers Yussuf Munyakazi et les Interahamwe » au paragraphe 14.1 ; a « supervis[é] les activités » des Interahamwe, au paragraphe 14.3 ; ou selon lesquelles les ordres du MRND provenaient de Ntagerura, tel qu'il est indiqué au paragraphe 16, ne décrivaient pas suffisamment son rôle, le cas échéant, dans la distribution d'armes alléguée au paragraphe 13.

89. Rien ne permettait davantage de dire clairement si les ordres du MRND, dont il est allégué qu'ils provenaient de Ntagerura, concernaient les faits mentionnés aux paragraphes 12.1, 13, 14.1 ou 14.3. En outre, la Chambre d'appel relève que le nom de Ntagerura n'est pas mentionné du tout au paragraphe 13. Un lecteur objectif ne peut pas comprendre en quoi le fait que des armes ont été entreposées et distribuées dans la préfecture de Cyangugu soit lié à la personne de Ntagerura. Pour les mêmes motifs, les paragraphes 12.1, 13 ou 16 n'ont apporté aucune précision quant à la participation présumée de Ntagerura aux faits allégués aux paragraphes 14.1 et 14.3. En conséquence, la Chambre de première instance n'a pas commis d'erreur en jugeant que les paragraphes 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 et 16 n'exposaient pas suffisamment la conduite criminelle de Ntagerura.

[182] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 185.

90. La Chambre d'appel relève que les résumés des dépositions attendues des Témoins LAB, MF, LAI, LAP et LAR, que le Procureur invoque à l'appui de l'argument selon lequel les paragraphes 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 et 16 avaient été purgés des vices les affectant[183], n'ont pas remédié à l'imprécision de ces paragraphes en ce qui concerne la conduite criminelle de Ntagerura.

91. Le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LAB allègue que Ntagerura s'était adressé à une foule dans le secteur de Nyamuhunga en avril 1994, mais n'établit aucun lien entre les propos qu'il aurait tenus à cette occasion et un quelconque crime sous-jacent à lui imputé[184]. Bien que ce même résumé allègue que, le 18 mai 1994, Ntagerura avait livré des armes à l'usine de Shagasha, il n'indique pas si ces armes auraient servi pour un crime quelconque ou pour l'entraînement à l'usine. Qui plus est, cet entraînement aurait eu lieu entre janvier et avril 1994, c'est-à-dire avant le 18 mai 1994[185]. L'allégation avancée dans le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LAP comme quoi, le 28 janvier 1994, Ntagerura serait arrivé à Bigogwe avec des bottes et des uniformes qui ont été distribués aux Interahamwe ne faisait pas état non plus d'un quelconque crime pour lequel ces effets auraient été utilisés[186]. Il en est de même de l'allégation contenue dans le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LAR affirmant que, le 28 janvier 1994, Ntagerura aurait annoncé à une foule rassemblée à Bugarama avoir livré des bottes et des uniformes[187]. Si le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin MF allègue que Ntagerura aurait ordonné que le véhicule de l'État immatriculé A-7058 soit remis au sous-préfet de Busengo en mars 1994, il ne donne aucune indication permettant de relier l'utilisation de ce véhicule à un éventuel dessein criminel ni ne permet d'établir la connaissance qu'avait Ntagerura d'un tel dessein[188]. Enfin, bien que le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LAI indique qu'« après le 7 avril » Ntagerura aurait envoyé un fax intimant l'ordre à Munyakazi d'éliminer les intellectuels tutsis, il n'indique pas si cet ordre aurait été exécuté, ni à quel moment précis entre le 7 avril et le 31 juillet 1994[189] il l'aurait donné[190]. Dès lors que le Procureur imputait à Ntagerura la responsabilité d'avoir donné cet ordre, la période visée n'était pas suffisamment précise.

92. Les paragraphes 12.1, 13, 14.1, 14.3 et 16 n'ayant pas été purgés des vices les entachant s'agissant de la conduite criminelle alléguée, point n'est alors besoin pour la Chambre d'appel d'examiner si ces derniers avaient été purgés des autres vices les affectant.

(iii) Modes de responsabilité

93. Au paragraphe 48 du Jugement, la Chambre de première instance a jugé que :

[185] Annexe 4, p. 15 et 16, n°32 (Témoin LAB). En outre, la Chambre d'appel a déjà constaté que le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LAB n'indiquait pas si Ntagerura avait participé à l'entraînement à l'usine de Shagasha.

[190] Annexe 4, p. 6, n°21 (Témoin LAI).

94. Le Procureur fait valoir que cette conclusion

> « est erronée au regard des détails fournis lors des communications préalables au procès et qui décrivent la nature de l'implication de Ntagerura dans les crimes dont il est accusé ainsi que ses relations avec les autres auteurs »[191].

95. La Chambre d'appel note que le Procureur n'explique pas comment les communications préalables au procès ont permis d'informer Ntagerura du mode de responsabilité sur la base duquel il était poursuivi. La Chambre d'appel a déjà conclu que certaines communications préalables au procès invoquées par le Procureur n'aidaient en rien à clarifier les défauts de l'Acte d'accusation s'agissant de la prétendue responsabilité de supérieur hiérarchique de Ntagerura[192]. Pour démontrer que les vices de l'acte d'accusation avaient été purgés, le Procureur se réfère de surcroît à la communication avant le procès des déclarations des Témoins LAB, LAI, LAR et LAP[193]. Ayant examiné lesdites déclarations, la Chambre d'appel considère qu'elles n'ont pas permis de fournir à Ntagerura des informations claires et cohérentes concernant le mode de responsabilité retenu contre lui.

(iv) Conclusion sur l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura

96. Au vu de ce qui précède, la Chambre d'appel conclut que le Procureur n'est pas parvenu à démontrer que la Chambre de première instance avait versé dans l'erreur en jugeant vicié les paragraphes 11, 12.1, 13 et 16 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura et en en concluant que les modes de responsabilité retenus contre l'accusé n'étaient pas précisés, pas plus qu'il n'est parvenu à démontrer que les vices identifiés avaient été corrigés. Les arguments du Procureur relatifs à l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura sont par conséquent rejetés.

Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe

97. Le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en lisant indépendamment les uns des autres (i) les paragraphes 3.12, 3.13 et 3.14 ; (ii) les paragraphes 3.15, 3.16, 3.17 et 3.18 ; et (iii) les paragraphes 3.19, 3.20, 3.24 et 3.25[194]. Il ajoute que ces paragraphes, de même que les paragraphes 3.21, 3.22, 3.23, 3.26, 3.27, 3.28, 3.30 et 3.31, ont été purgés des vices les affectant[195]. La Chambre de première instance ayant dégagé des conclusions factuelles des allégations contenues aux paragraphes 3.16 à 3.31, la Chambre d'appel considère que ces paragraphes ne méritent pas examen. À l'exception d'une erreur relative au paragraphe 3.28, aucune des erreurs alléguées ici par le Procureur n'est susceptible d'avoir pesé sur le verdict. La Chambre d'appel limitera par conséquent son examen aux paragraphes 3.12 à 3.15 qui n'ont pas fait l'objet d'analyse factuelle et au paragraphe 3.28 qui n'a fait l'objet que d'une analyse partielle.

(i) Paragraphes 3.12, 3.13 et 3.14

98. Les paragraphes 3.12, 3.13 et 3.14 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe sont formulés comme suit :

> 3.12 Lors des événements auxquels se réfère le présent acte d'accusation, le préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki a présidé plusieurs réunions du « conseil restreint de sécurité » de la préfecture de Cyangugu, organisme responsable de la sécurité de la population civile de la préfecture, auxquelles a participé le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, en sa qualité de commandant du camp militaire de Cyangugu, de même que le commandant de la Gendarmerie, les sous-préfets et d'autres personnes. Une de ces réunions a été tenue le ou vers le 9 avril 1994.

3.13 De plus, le préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki a présidé au moins à deux occasions, le ou vers le 11 avril 1994 et le ou vers le 18 avril 1994, des réunions de la « conférence préfectorale » de Cyangugu, où il fut discuté des problèmes de sécurité de la population civile de la préfecture. Ont pris part à ces réunions, les membres du « conseil restreint de sécurité », notamment le préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki et le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, en plus de tous les bourgmestres et des représentants des partis politiques et des différentes églises.

3.14 Avant et lors des événements visés par le présent acte d'accusation,

Emmanuel Bagambiki, préfet de Cyangugu ;

André Ntagerura, Ministre des transports et des communications ;

Yussuf Munyakazi, leader Interahamwe ;

Christophe Nyandwi, fonctionnaire du Ministère du plan ;

Michel Busunyu, président du MRND pour la commune de Karengera ; et Édouard Bandeste, leader Interahamwe ;

tous des personnalités importantes du MRND à Cyangugu, ont tenu de nombreuses réunions, entre eux ou avec d'autres, pour encourager, préparer et organiser le génocide.

Ces réunions ont eu lieu aussi bien dans la ville de Cyangugu que dans les diverses sous-préfectures et communes de cette préfecture, dans des lieux publics comme le stade Kamarampaka, et aussi dans des lieux [à accès] plus restreint, tels que des bars et [des résidences privées], et notamment :

a) vers la fin de 1993, dans la commune de Kirambo, avec des membres du MRND ;

b) vers la fin de 1993 et au début [de] 1994 à Karangiro, dans le cabaret de Miruho Augustin, avec en outre la participation des nommés Baligira Félicien, ex-député du CND, Nteziryayo Siméon, directeur de la SONARWA, Kayijamahe, directeur de la STIR, et d'autres personnes ;

c) courant février 1994, au domicile de Ntagerura André, dans la commune de Karengera, avec la participation de Yussuf Munyakazi, dirigeant Interahamwe, Christophe Nyandwi, un fonctionnaire au Ministère du plan, Édouard Bandeste, dirigeant Interahamwe, et d'autres membres du MRND ;

d) le 7 février 1994, au marché de Bushenge, avec la participation de Ntagerura André, Mbangura Daniel, Busunyu Michel, Nsabimana Callixte, Baligira Félicien et d'autres participants, membres du MRND et de la CDR ;

e) courant juin 1994 au siège du MRND, à Cyangugu, sous la présidence de Théodore Sindikubwabo, Président de la République, et en présence, notamment, des Ministres André Ntagerura, Daniel Mabngura, et d'autres [personnalités] civiles et religieuses ;

f) pendant l'année 1993 et au début de 1994, dans la commune de Gatare, en présence d'André Ntagerura, Yussuf Munyakazi et Emmanuel Bagambiki ;

g) le ou vers le 28 janvier 1994, à Bugarama, avec la participation d'André Ntagerura et Yussuf Munyakazi ; et

h) à la fin de juin 1994, à Gisuma, avec la participation d'Emmanuel Bagambiki et Samuel Imanishimwe.

99. La Chambre de première instance a constaté que les paragraphes 3.12, 3.13 et 3.14

> « ne relat[aient] pas des faits susceptibles de constituer les éléments essentiels du crime d'entente qui, selon le Procureur, [était] la seule accusation étayée par ces paragraphes »[196].

Elle a constaté en particulier que l'élément matériel de l'entente, « à savoir que deux personnes ou plus se sont entendues en vue de commettre le crime de génocide », n'avait pas été allégué[197]. Ayant souligné que les paragraphes 3.12 et 3.13 ne faisaient état ni du but criminel visé par les réunions évoquées ni du moindre lien que celles-ci auraient eu avec les crimes principaux, la Chambre de première instance a conclu que le Procureur ne reprochait dès lors dans ces paragraphes aucun acte de participation criminelle à Bagambiki ou Imanishimwe. Elle a également constaté que les indications de temps données aux paragraphes 3.12 et 3.13 étaient vagues, sauf en ce qui concerne les dates des 9, 11 et 18 avril 1994[198]. Enfin, elle a constaté que le paragraphe 3.14 ne précisait pas la nature de la participation de Bagambiki et Imanishimwe aux réunions évoquées[199].

100. Le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en lisant ces paragraphes indépendamment les uns des autres et sans tenir compte du contexte du chef d'accusation sous-jacent d'entente[200]. Il ajoute que la conclusion de la Chambre de première instance selon laquelle les paragraphes 3.12, 3.13 et 3.14 n'alléguaient aucun fait qui constituerait les éléments constitutifs de l'entente est

> « sans fondement, dans la mesure où ces [paragraphes] démontrent que [Bagambiki et Imanishimwe] ont entrepris des actions coordonnées et agissaient dans un cadre unifié comme cela ressort des nombreuses réunions auxquelles ils ont assisté ensemble. Ces réunions ont fourni le cadre dans lequel l'entente impliquant [Bagambiki et Imanishimwe] s'est déroulée »[201].

Le Procureur se fonde à cet égard sur la conclusion dégagée par la Chambre de première instance en l'affaire Nahimana et consorts selon laquelle

101. Tout d'abord, la Chambre d'appel estime qu'à tout le moins l'entente en vue de commettre le génocide est une résolution d'agir sur laquelle au moins deux personnes se sont accordées, en vue de commettre un génocide[203]. L'existence d'un tel accord entre Bagambiki, Imanishimwe et, éventuellement, d'autres personnes, aurait dû être alléguée dans l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe comme un fait essentiel. Le fait que les paragraphes 3.12, 3.13 et 3.14, ainsi que le soutient le Procureur, visaient à décrire le « cadre dans lequel l'entente impliquant [Bagambiki et Imanishimwe] s'est déroulée » ou que ces paragraphes étaient invoqués à l'appui du chef d'accusation d'entente, ne libérait pas le Procureur de l'obligation de faire état de ce fait essentiel[204]. Ce dernier demeurait en effet dans l'obligation d'énoncer les faits essentiels fondant les accusations portées dans l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe, de sorte que les deux accusés soient en mesure de préparer leur défense.

[203] Jugement Musema, par. 191 ; Jugement Ntakirutimana, par. 798 et 799. La Chambre d'appel rappelle de surcroît que, relativement à la notion d'entente en général, la Chambre d'appel du TPIY a conclu que « pour établir l'existence de l'association de malfaiteurs, il faut démontrer que plusieurs individus se sont entendus pour commettre un crime ou une série de crimes » : Décision Ojdanić sur la compétence, par. 23.
[204] Ainsi que le fait remarquer le Procureur lui-même, « les faits essentiels traduisent les éléments abstraits du crime en une réalité spécifique, en établissant qui a fait quoi au préjudice de qui, où, quand, comment et avec quelle intention » : Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 221.

102. En l'absence de toute allégation de dessein criminel ou de participation criminelle de la part de Bagambiki ou d'Imanishimwe, les simples allégations formulées aux paragraphes 3.12 et 3.13 tendant à démontrer qu'ils avaient participé à des réunions ne faisaient pas état de l'élément essentiel en l'espèce, c'est-à-dire l'accord en vue de commettre le génocide[205].

103. La Chambre d'appel reconnaît que, même si le paragraphe 3.14 ne contient pas expressément les termes « entente en vue de commettre le génocide », l'allégation selon laquelle Bagambiki, Ntagerura et Imanishimwe (ainsi que d'autres personnalités importantes du MRND à Cyangugu) auraient tenu de nombreuses réunions entre eux ou avec d'autres pour « encourager, préparer, organiser le génocide »[206] pourrait être lue comme impliquant la finalité propre à l'entente en vue de commettre le génocide. La Chambre d'appel relève toutefois que la Chambre de première instance a refusé d'examiner les allégations contenues dans le paragraphe 3.14 au motif que ledit paragraphe « ne précis[ait] pas la nature de la participation de Bagambiki et Imanishimwe aux réunions invoquées »[207]. S'il semble reconnaître le vice dont souffre le paragraphe 3.14, le Procureur soutient néanmoins y avoir remédié en fournissant aux Accusés lors de la phase préalable au procès les informations nécessaires relatives aux réunions et à leur participation à ces dernières[208].

104. La Chambre d'appel considère avec la Chambre de première instance que le paragraphe 3.14 est inacceptablement vague dans la mesure où il ne fournit aucun détail sur la participation des deux accusés aux réunions. Au dire du paragraphe 3.14, Bagambiki n'aurait pas participé à plus de deux réunions tandis qu'Imanishimwe n'aurait assisté qu'à l'une d'entre elles. Aucune des réunions ne se serait déroulée en présence des trois Accusés. Quant à l'objet de ces réunions, le Procureur se contente de la formule générique selon laquelle elles étaient destinées à « encourager, préparer et organiser le génocide », sans préciser d'aucune manière le rôle que les Accusés ont pu y jouer.

105. Selon le Procureur, l'ambiguïté du paragraphe 3.14 a été corrigée par les dépositions attendues des Témoins LAI, LAP, LAG, LAR et LAN[209]. La Chambre d'appel relève que les résumés des dépositions attendues des Témoins LAI, LAP et LAG allèguent que Bagambiki et/ou Imanishimwe avaient participé à des réunions en 1993 et que le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LAR affirme qu'ils avaient rencontré Ntagerura à Bugarama le 28 janvier 1994 sans donner de précisions sur leur participation aux réunions[210]. Le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LAN alléguait que Ntagerura, Bagambiki, Munyakazi et d'autres dignitaires du parti « avaient présidé » une réunion du MRND au centre de Bushenge le 7 février 1993 à laquelle les Interahamwe « chantaient des chansons d'incitation à la purification ethnique applaudies par Ntagerura, Bagambiki et les autres », mais n'a fait état d'aucun accord conclu à cette occasion en vue de commettre le génocide[211]. En outre, cette réunion n'a pas été mentionnée au paragraphe 3.14, qui, s'agissant des réunions tenues en 1993, ne parlait que de réunions tenues « vers fin 1993 » et « entre 1993 et début 1994 dans la commune de Gatare »[212]. La Chambre d'appel relève également que Bushenge n'est pas situé dans la commune de Gatare. En conclusion, la Chambre d'appel estime que les dépositions

[205] En fait, le seul objet déclaré de ces réunions était « l'examen des problèmes relatifs à la sécurité de la population civile de la préfecture », qui, ainsi que l'a fait observer la Chambre de première instance, s'avère en contradiction avec l'accusation d'entente en vue de commettre le génocide : Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe, par. 3.13 ; Jugement, par. 50.

[206] La Chambre d'appel remarque que ce passage de la version anglaise du Paragraphe 3.14 modifié se lit « to incite, prepare, organise and commit genocide ». Ayant déposé les versions anglaise et française du paragraphe 3.14 modifié le même jour dans un seul et même document, le Procureur ne précise pas quelle version doit faire foi. La Chambre d'appel relève que l'Acte d'accusation initial Bagambiki/Imanishimwe avait initialement été déposé en français, dont la version fait donc foi.

(ii) Paragraphe 3.15

106. Pour mener à bien son analyse, la Chambre d'appel estime nécessaire de replacer le paragraphe 3.15 dans son contexte et, partant, l'examinera à la lumière des paragraphes 3.16, 3.17 et 3.18. Les paragraphes 3.15, 3.16, 3.17 et 3.18 sont formulés comme suit :

> 3.15 De plus, durant cette même période, André Ntagerura, Yussuf Munyakazi et Emmanuel Bagambiki ont publiquement exprimé des sentiments anti-tutsis.
> 3.16 Avant et durant les événements auxquels se réfère le présent acte d'accusation, le Ministre André Ntagerura, le préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, Yussuf Munyakazi, Christophe Nyandwi, tous des personnalités influentes du MRND à Cyangugu ont participé, directement ou indirectement, à la formation, l'entraînement et la distribution des armes à des miliciens du MRND, les Interahamwe, qui ont par la suite commis des massacres de la population civile Tutsi.
>
> 3.17 Lors des événements auxquels se réfère le présent acte d'accusation, le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, en sa qualité de commandant du camp militaire de Cyangugu, a participé avec le préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki et d'autres personnes, à la confection de listes de personnes à éliminer, majoritairement des Tutsis et certains Hutus de l'opposition.
> 3.18 Ces listes furent données à des militaires et à des miliciens avec ordre d'arrêter et de tuer ces personnes. Des militaires et des Interahamwe ont alors exécuté ces ordres.

107. La Chambre de première instance a constaté qu'aucun de ces paragraphes n'exposait en des termes suffisamment précis les dates et lieux des activités alléguées[213]. Elle a constaté également que le paragraphe 3.15 ne précisait pas du tout la nature et la teneur approximative des propos tenus, et le lien entre ces déclarations et un crime principal[214]. Elle a ajouté que le paragraphe 3.16 n'indiquait pas le rôle précis que Bagambiki avait joué dans l'entraînement et la distribution des armes ni ne visait aucun massacre auquel avaient participé les personnes qui auraient reçu la formation en cause[215]. Enfin, elle a constaté que les paragraphes 3.17 et 3.18 ne nommaient pas les personnes figurant sur les listes et n'indiquaient pas non plus le rôle de Bagambiki ou d'Imanishimwe dans le lancement ou l'exécution des ordres qui auraient été donnés ni la connaissance qu'ils en avaient[216].

108. En premier lieu, le Procureur fait valoir que la manière dont la Chambre de première instance a examiné les paragraphes 3.15 à 3.18 et sa conclusion selon laquelle ils manquaient de précision sont déraisonnables compte tenu de l'allégation principale retenue, en l'occurrence l'entente en vue de commettre le génocide. En outre, le Procureur soutient que les paragraphes 3,15, 3,16, 3,17 et 3.18 ont été purgés de leurs vices[217].

109. La Chambre d'appel a constaté que les paragraphes 3.12 et 3.13 n'exposaient pas l'un des faits essentiels, à savoir que Bagambiki, Imanishimwe et d'autres s'étaient entendus en vue de commettre le génocide, et que le paragraphe 3.14 était trop vague, ne précisant pas la nature de la participation de Bagambiki et Imanishimwe aux réunions évoquées. Pour ce qui est de l'entente, il importe donc peu que les paragraphes 3.15, 3.16, 3.17 et 3.18 aient fourni des informations sur le contexte et la nature continue des agissements ayant débouché sur la commission du génocide. C'est à bon droit que la Chambre de première instance a conclu que les allégations étayant le chef d'accusation d'entente en vue de commettre le génocide (Chef 19) « ne pourraient constituer les éléments essentiels » de l'entente[218].

110. En outre, le Procureur soutient que les résumés des dépositions attendues des Témoins LAI, LAP, LAG, LAR et LAN ont fourni des précisions sur les sentiments anti-Tutsis exprimés par Bagambiki et Imanishimwe tel qu'il est allégué au paragraphe 3.15[219].

111. La Chambre d'appel note qu'il est allégué dans le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LAI que « Bagambiki aussi a incité la population à tuer les Tutsis », mais sans que soient précisés la date, le lieu ou le rapport qu'il y aurait entre cette déclaration et un quelconque crime principal[220]. Le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LAP fait état de ce que Bagambiki a participé en 1993 à un rassemblement au stade Kamarampaka à l'occasion duquel on avait « incité la population contre les Tutsis » ; ce que le résumé ne dit pas, en revanche, c'est si Bagambiki a fait une quelconque déclaration allant dans ce sens[221]. Cette observation est également valable pour la réunion alléguée dans le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LAG[222]. Le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LAR ne contient aucune information selon laquelle Bagambiki aurait publiquement exprimé une quelconque hostilité à l'égard des Tutsis[223]. Le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LAN allègue que Ntagerura, Bagambiki et d'autres ont « présidé » une réunion au centre de Bushenge le 7 février 1993, réunion au cours de laquelle « les Interahamwe chantaient des chansons incitant au nettoyage ethnique et applaudies par Ntagerura, Bagambiki et d'autres »[224]. Toutefois, il n'est fait état d'aucun accord auquel seraient parvenus les participants à cette réunion en vue de commettre le génocide, fait essentiel qui fait défaut au paragraphe 3.15.

(iii) Paragraphe 3.28

112. Le paragraphe 3.28 est libellé comme suit :

> 3.28. À l'époque des événements auxquels se réfère le présent acte d'accusation, le préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki avait le devoir d'assurer la protection et la sécurité des populations civiles de sa préfecture. À plusieurs occasions en avril 1994, le préfet Bagambiki a négligé ou refusé d'aider les personnes menacées de mort qui lui demandaient assistance, notamment dans la commune de Gatare où ces personnes d'ethnie tutsie furent massacrées.

113. La Chambre de première instance a constaté que le paragraphe 3.28 n'identifiait aucune circonstance par une date et un nom de lieu précis et n'indiquait ni quand ni où précisément Bagambiki avait négligé ou refusé d'aider des personnes menacées de mort[225].

114. Le Procureur fait état du résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LQ, selon lequel, en dépit des multiples mises en garde relatives à l'imminence d'une attaque dirigée contre les personnes réfugiées à la paroisse de Hanika en avril 1994 et malgré ses promesses répétées d'intervenir, Bagambiki n'a rien fait, et quelque 2000 réfugiés ont été tués lors de l'attaque. Il fait état également du résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin MP, selon lequel Bagambiki s'est abstenu d'arrêter l'assaut lancé par les Interahamwe contre des milliers de réfugiés à la paroisse de Mbilizi entre le 12 et le 30 avril 1994[226].

115. Si la Chambre de première instance a tiré un certain nombre de conclusions factuelles concernant les attaques menées dans la commune de Gatare mentionnées au paragraphe 3.28[227], elle s'est cependant abstenue de mentionner dans le Jugement l'attaque menée à la paroisse de Hanika dont le Témoin LQ avait fait récit.

116. Les parties pertinentes du résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LQ précisent :

> À 9 heures du matin, le 11 avril 1994, des assaillants Interahamwe ont encerclé la paroisse de [Hanika] ; le témoin a téléphoné à Bagambiki pour solliciter son intervention afin de parer à l'attaque et Bagambiki a promis de dépêcher le bourgmestre de Gatare avec des gendarmes ; les attaques ont commencé d'abord avec des machettes, puis avec des grenades ; vers midi, le témoin a appelé à nouveau Bagambiki, qui lui a dit de patienter, pendant ce temps, l'assaut continuait ; le bourgmestre est arrivé vers 16h30 avec un seul gendarme et deux policiers communaux ; […] environ 2000 réfugiés ont été tués ce jour-là.[228]

117. Le résumé ne dit pas que Bagambiki, dont l'assistance a été sollicitée par le Témoin LQ, a refusé d'empêcher l'attaque. On y lit textuellement que Bagambiki a dit au Témoin LQ « de patienter » et que la protection promise par Bagambiki, toute faible qu'elle était, est arrivée dans l'après-midi. La Chambre d'appel conclut que le résumé de la déposition attendue du Témoin LQ n'allègue pas clairement que Bagambiki a négligé ou refusé de venir en aide aux personnes qui étaient attaquées à la paroisse de Hanika le 11 avril 1994 et qu'en conséquence, il est malaisé de savoir si ce résumé venait vraiment à l'appui des allégations figurant au paragraphe 3.28.

(iv) Chefs d'accusation de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe

118. La Chambre de première instance a estimé que la manière dont les chefs d'accusation avaient été formulés dans l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe « pos[ait] problème » car ils n'indiquaient pas clairement si Bagambiki et Imanishimwe étaient poursuivis en qualité d'auteurs principaux ou de complices et ne précisaient pas non plus la forme de complicité retenue[229]. Le Procureur soutient que ses arguments relatifs à la manière dont l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe a été purgé de ses vices éclairent la « nature de la participation de Bagambiki et d'Imanishimwe dans les crimes dont ils sont accusés ainsi que leur relation avec les autres auteurs »[230].

119. Le Procureur ne démontre pas en quoi la remarque de la Chambre de première instance relative à la manière dont les chefs d'accusation avaient été formulés dans l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe a pesé dans le Jugement. Dans la section précédente, la Chambre d'appel a conclu que les griefs du Procureur relatifs aux conclusions de la Chambre de première instance étaient, pour ce qui est de leur incidence sur le Jugement, sans fondement. La Chambre d'appel décline par conséquent de considérer plus avant les arguments avancés par le Procureur sur ce point.

(v) Conclusion sur l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe

[230] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 167.

120. La Chambre d'appel conclut que le Procureur n'est pas parvenu à démontrer que la Chambre de première instance avait versé dans l'erreur en jugeant vicié les paragraphes 3.12, 3.13, 3.14, 3.15 et 3.28 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe, pas plus qu'il n'est parvenu à démontrer que les vices identifiés avaient été corrigés. Les arguments du Procureur relatifs à l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe sont par conséquent également rejetés.

5. Conclusions

121. La Chambre d'appel conclut que les arguments du Procureur s'agissant des paragraphes des Actes d'accusation qui n'ont pas fait l'objet d'une analyse factuelle par la Chambre de première instance (ou seulement d'une analyse partielle pour le paragraphe 3.28 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe) sont infondés. Le Procureur n'est en effet pas parvenu à démontrer que ces paragraphes n'étaient pas viciés ou avaient été purgés.

122. Plus haut, la Chambre d'appel est parvenue à la conclusion que la Chambre de première instance avait versé dans l'erreur en reconsidérant son jugement sur la forme des Actes d'accusation après la clôture des débats sans donner aux parties l'opportunité d'être entendues[231]. Elle a également conclu que la Chambre de première instance avait versé dans l'erreur en omettant d'examiner si les vices identifiés dans les Actes d'accusation avaient été purgés[232]. À la lumière de ses conclusions sur les autres moyens d'appel, la Chambre considère cependant que ces deux erreurs n'invalident pas les décisions de la Chambre de première instance. Le quatrième motif d'appel du Procureur est par conséquent rejeté dans son intégralité.

E. CONDAMNATION POUR DES FAITS NON VISÉS DANS L'ACTE D'ACCUSATION (1ER MOTIF D'APPEL DE SAMUEL IMANISHIMWE)

124. Dans son premier motif d'appel, Imanishimwe reproche à la Chambre de première instance de l'avoir condamné pour des faits non visés dans l'acte d'accusation et, par là même, d'avoir excédé le cadre de sa saisine[234]. Il soutient que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en le condamnant au titre des chefs d'accusation 7, 10 et 13 pour des faits perpétrés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba, faits dont l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe ne dit mot[235].

1. L'acte d'accusation était-il entaché de vices ?

[235] Mémoire d'appel d'Imanishimwe, par. 8 à 12.

125. Au soutien de son grief, Imanishimwe rappelle avoir dénoncé dans plusieurs requêtes le caractère vague de l'acte d'accusation[236]. Il prétend que les paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe ne l'informaient pas des charges relatives au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba en ce que ni les véritables auteurs, ni le lieu ou la date de perpétration du massacre allégué, ni la nature de son éventuelle implication ou de ses subordonnés n'y sont précisés[237]. S'il concède que le Procureur n'a pas toujours à préciser la date et le lieu de la survenance de certains événements, il soutient que la gravité particulière du massacre survenu à Gashirabwoba exigeait du Procureur ce genre de précision en vertu des articles 17 (4), 19 (3) et 20 (4) (a) du Statut et 47 (B) et (C) du Règlement[238].

126. Le Procureur reconnaît que les charges exposées aux paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe ne le sont que dans les grandes lignes et que l'acte d'accusation reste silencieux sur les faits survenus à Gashirabwoba[239]. Il admet même que > « si le procès ne devait procéder que sur cette base, l'accusé n'aurait rien lui permettant de préparer une bonne défense »[240].

127. La Chambre de première instance a reconnu Imanishimwe coupable des chefs d'accusation de génocide (Chef 7), d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité (Chef 10) et de violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève du 12 août 1949 et du Protocole additionnel II (Chef 13) pour sa responsabilité dans le massacre de réfugiés civils perpétré au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba le 12 avril 1994, ce sur la base des paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe[241]. Elle s'est déclarée convaincue au-delà de tout doute raisonnable que, bien qu'il n'ait pas été établi qu'il ait ordonné l'attaque ou y ait été présent, Imanishimwe voyait sa responsabilité pénale engagée au regard de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour ne pas avoir empêché ses subordonnés d'attaquer les réfugiés[242].

128. Les paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 se lisent comme suit :

> 3.30 À l'époque des événements auxquels se réfère le présent acte d'accusation, les miliciens, les Interahamwe, aidés souvent par des militaires, ont participé aux massacres de la population civile tutsie et des opposants politiques hutus de la préfecture de Cyangugu.

129. Dans son Jugement, la Chambre de première instance s'est livrée à un examen minutieux des questions préjudicielles relatives aux actes d'accusation. Dans ce cadre, elle a examiné avec soin les paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 pour souligner que :

Imanishimwe fait référence à : « Exceptions préjudicielles », introduite le 28 janvier 1998 ; « Requête aux fins de requalification des faits – Art. 17 (4) des Statuts et 47 (A) et (B) du Règlement », introduite le 10 février 1998 (et non le 24 septembre 1998 comme indiqué par Imanishimwe).

[242] Jugement, par. 694, 749, 750 et 802. La Chambre d'appel remarque que la Chambre de première instance fait aussi référence, aux paragraphes 691, 744 et 794 du Jugement, au fait « qu'Imanishimwe n'a puni aucun militaire pour cette attaque ». La Chambre d'appel considère que cette précision est incidente dans la mesure où, dans ses conclusions juridiques, la Chambre de première instance a décidé de ne tenir Imanishimwe responsable que pour ne pas avoir empêché ses soldats de commettre les crimes.

> Le paragraphe 3.25 ne mentionne aucun fait précis au cours duquel des soldats ont participé avec des miliciens et des Interahamwe à des massacres de la population civile tutsie ni aucun autre fait essentiel qui démontrerait la responsabilité d'Imanishimwe pour ces crimes.[243]
> … les paragraphes 3.30 et 3.31 ne précisent ni les infractions principales ni le rôle propre que l'accusé aurait joué dans les massacres.[244]

avant de conclure que :

> Pour les raisons qui précèdent, la Chambre conclut que les paragraphes étayant les accusations contre Ntagerura, Bagambiki et Imanishimwe, ainsi que les accusations elles-mêmes, sont inacceptablement vagues. De plus, la Chambre ne relève aucune raison valable fondant le Procureur à exposer les allégations ou les accusations d'une manière aussi générale.[245]

130. La Chambre d'appel réaffirme que le Procureur doit non seulement informer l'accusé de la nature et des motifs des accusations portées contre lui dans l'acte d'accusation mais aussi exposer de façon circonstanciée les faits essentiels qui fondent lesdites accusations. La Chambre d'appel a déjà été amenée à rappeler plus haut les faits essentiels qui doivent être plaidés quand la responsabilité de l'accusé est engagée en vertu de l'article 6 (3) du Statut[246].

131. La Chambre d'appel ne peut que constater que les paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe souffrent d'une imprécision manifeste. En formulant des accusations aussi vagues, l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe ne remplit pas la fonction fondamentale qui lui est assignée, celle de fournir à l'accusé une description circonstanciée des accusations portées contre lui afin qu'il puisse préparer sa défense. La Chambre d'appel considère que l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe était entaché de vices pour ce qui est des allégations relatives au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba.

2. Les vices de l'acte d'accusation pouvaient-ils être purgés ?

132. Imanishimwe soutient que l'acte d'accusation étant le seul instrument de saisine du Tribunal, il ne peut être suppléé, complété ou corrigé par la déclaration liminaire ou le mémoire préalable du Procureur, par des déclarations de témoins ou par tout autre document divulgué avant ou pendant le déroulement du procès[247]. Tout en invoquant un certain nombre de décisions du Tribunal et du TPIY[248], ainsi que l'Opinion individuelle et dissidente du Juge Dolenc, Imanishimwe fait valoir qu'un accusé ne peut être condamné pour des accusations non portées dans l'acte d'accusation car cela consisterait pour la Chambre de première instance à excéder les limites de sa saisine, limites fixées par l'acte d'accusation[249]. Il conteste de ce fait le standard juridique énoncé aux paragraphes 67 et 68 du Jugement. Il avance que même s'il existait une possibilité juridique de purger un acte d'accusation de ses vices, le degré d'imprécision affectant l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe pour ce qui est des charges relatives à Gashirabwoba excédait à tel point les limites de l'acceptable que rien n'aurait pu remédier à l'omission du Procureur[250].

133. Le Procureur concède qu'un accusé ne peut se voir reprocher des faits qui n'entrent pas dans le champ des chefs articulés dans l'acte d'accusation. Bien qu'il reconnaisse que les charges exposées aux paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe ne sont exposées que

[250] Mémoire d'appel d'Imanishimwe, par. 48 à 57.

« dans leurs grandes lignes », le Procureur soutient qu'Imanishimwe défend une interprétation trop rigide des principes applicables à l'articulation des charges[251] et souligne que pour avancer la thèse selon laquelle un acte d'accusation vicié ne peut en aucun cas être purgé après avoir été confirmé, le Juge Dolenc s'écarte, de son propre aveu, du droit applicable[252].

134. Dans son Mémoire en réplique, Imanishimwe soutient qu'en vertu du principe de légalité, et de son corollaire le principe de l'interprétation stricte de la loi pénale, la Chambre de première instance ne pouvait s'affranchir des dispositions qui régissent l'acte d'accusation – à savoir les articles 17, 18, 19 et 20 du Statut du Tribunal et 47 et 50 du Règlement –, lesquelles interdisent à une Chambre de dépasser le cadre de sa saisine[253]. Concernant la jurisprudence Niyitegeka, Ntakirutimana et Kvocka et consorts à laquelle le Procureur se réfère, Imanishimwe soutient qu'elle ne peut être considérée comme une source de droit au terme du principe de légalité puisqu'elle est postérieure au Jugement[254].

135. La Chambre d'appel réitère qu'aucune accusation nouvelle ne peut être introduite en dehors de l'acte d'accusation, seul instrument de saisine du Tribunal. La Chambre de première instance ne dit d'ailleurs pas autre chose aux paragraphes 29, 30 et 66 du Jugement. Pour autant, la Chambre d'appel ne considère pas que l'acte d'accusation ne puisse en aucun cas « être suppléé, complété ou corrigé ». Il est en effet de jurisprudence constante qu'un acte d'accusation vicié en raison de son ambiguïté ou de son imprécision peut, dans certaines circonstances, être purgé si le Procureur fournit en temps voulu à l'accusé des informations claires et cohérentes concernant les faits sur lesquels reposent les accusations portées contre lui[255].

136. Contrairement à ce que soutient Imanishimwe, la Chambre d'appel ne considère pas que le principe selon lequel un acte d'accusation par trop vague ou imprécis puisse être purgé de ses vices déroge aux dispositions statutaires et réglementaires régissant l'acte d'accusation. C'est en procédant à l'interprétation desdites dispositions que la Chambre d'appel du TPIY a pu, pour la première fois dans ces termes, énoncer ce principe. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que le principe de légalité, ou principe nullum crimen sine lege, n'empêche pas un tribunal de trancher une question à travers un processus d'interprétation et de clarification du droit applicable ; il ne l'empêche pas non plus de s'appuyer sur certaines décisions antérieures qui renferment une interprétation du sens à donner de certaines dispositions[256]. La Chambre d'appel affirme clairement que lorsqu'elle interprète certains articles du Statut ou du Règlement, elle se borne à préciser l'interprétation correcte à associer à ces dispositions, même si elle n'avait pas été exprimée auparavant dans ces termes. L'argument d'Imanishimwe selon lequel le principe de légalité interdit de considérer la jurisprudence élaborée après le rendu du Jugement de première instance ne peut par conséquent davantage prospérer.

137. La Chambre d'appel ayant dégagé le standard juridique applicable aux actes d'accusation viciés, elle doit à présent reconnaître l'erreur commise par la Chambre de première instance dans l'énoncé de ses propres standards. Si la Chambre de première instance souligne à bon droit qu'il lui était son raisonnement procède d'une lecture erronée de la jurisprudence Kupreskić quand, au paragraphe 68, elle conclut qu'elle pourra prendre en considération les éléments de preuve à charge présentés pour voir s'il existe des preuves solides de culpabilité[258]. La Chambre d'appel renvoie à l'analyse qu'elle a pu développer sur ce point lors de l'examen du quatrième motif d'appel du Procureur[259]. La Chambre d'appel concourt avec Imanishimwe quand il affirme que la Chambre de première instance s'est affranchie des dispositions régissant l'acte d'accusation en concluant comme elle l'a fait.

138. En revanche, la Chambre d'appel ne peut souscrire aux conclusions d'Imanishimwe quand ce dernier soutient que, dans les circonstances de l'espèce, il ne pouvait être remédié à l'imprécision de l'acte d'accusation. Les arguments d'Imanishimwe procèdent d'une certaine confusion entre les éléments que doit contenir l'acte d'accusation, c'est à dire accusations proprement dites et faits essentiels qui les fondent. La Chambre de première instance n'a pas conclu que les paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe ne formulaient pas d'accusations proprement dites, mais que les accusations contenues dans ces paragraphes étaient « inacceptablement vagues »[260]. Il convient en effet de relever que l'accusation principale, les « massacres de la population civile tutsie », est formulée dans les deux paragraphes en question. Imanishimwe ne démontre pas en quoi la Chambre de première instance aurait commis une erreur en concluant de la sorte. Les événements survenus à Gashirabwoba entrent sans conteste dans le champ de cette accusation, même si cette dernière est formulée en des termes très généraux. La Chambre d'appel remarque par ailleurs que le Procureur précise dans l'acte d'accusation se fonder sur les paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 pour ce qui est des chefs d'accusation 7, 10 et 13[261]. La Chambre d'appel réaffirme la conclusion de la Chambre de première instance selon laquelle Imanishimwe n'était non pas tenu dans l'ignorance des accusations portées contre lui, mais insuffisamment informé par l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe.

139. Partant, rien en droit ne s'opposait à ce que la Chambre de première instance examine les éléments de preuve étayant cette accusation imprécise, dès lors que le Procureur avait fourni en temps voulu à Imanishimwe des informations claires et cohérentes concernant les faits sur lesquels reposait l'accusation permettant à Imanishimwe de préparer sa défense. La Chambre d'appel a déjà eu l'occasion d'indiquer que ces informations pouvaient, entre autres, et selon les circonstances, être fournies dans le mémoire préalable au procès du Procureur ou dans sa déclaration liminaire[262]. La Chambre d'appel considère qu'il importe avant tout que le procès n'ait pas été rendu inéquitable. Cette condition, la plus capitale de toutes, reste le préalable à toute déclaration de culpabilité. La Chambre va à présent examiner si Imanishimwe avait bien reçu en temps voulu les informations claires et cohérentes concernant les faits sur lesquels reposaient les accusations portées contre lui.

3. Les vices de l'acte d'accusation ont-ils été purgés ?

140. Imanishimwe prétend que la Chambre de première instance a très clairement outrepassé sa saisine en le condamnant pour les crimes perpétrés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba[263]. Si la Chambre de première instance a souligné qu'il était possible, dans certaines circonstances, de tenir compte d'éléments de preuve étayant un paragraphe vicié de l'acte d'accusation, Imanishimwe allègue que cette dernière n'a pas précisé les circonstances en question dans le Jugement[264] et que cette absence de motivation traduit la partialité de la Chambre de première instance et son intention de le « condamner à tout prix »[265]. Il soutient aussi que, lus dans leur contexte, les passages de l'arrêt Kupreskić et consorts cités par la Chambre de première instance[266] mettent en évidence l'erreur commise par cette dernière de retenir sa responsabilité sur le fondement d'allégations non visées dans l'acte d'accusation mais versées de façon imprécise par le Témoin LAC, lequel a comparu trois semaines après le début du procès, soit plus de trois ans après la confirmation de l'Acte d'accusation initial Bagambiki/Imanishimwe[267]. Imanishimwe se plaint aussi de ce que ni l'acte d'accusation, ni le Mémoire préalable du Procureur, ne l'informait de l'intention du Procureur de le poursuivre sur la base de l'article 6 (3) du Statut. Il affirme que le Procureur avait clairement limité le cadre de sa poursuite et, avec lui le cadre de saisine de la Chambre, à l'article 6 (1) du Statut[268]. Après avoir rappelé certains arguments développés par le Juge Dolenc dans son opinion individuelle et dissidente[269], Imanishimwe conclut que l'erreur de la Chambre de première instance lui a causé un grave préjudice qui ne saurait être réparé que par la réformation du Jugement[270].

141. Le Procureur prétend qu'il a été remédié aux omissions de l'acte d'accusation sur les faits survenus à Gashirabwoba par la communication en temps voulu d'informations claires et cohérentes[271]. Le Procureur fait valoir que les détails relatifs aux événements de Gashirabwoba ont été fournis à Imanishimwe dès le 26 novembre 1999 par la communication des déclarations caviardées des Témoins LAC, LAB et LAH[272]. Il soutient avoir également clairement manifesté son intention de prouver l'implication d'Imanishimwe dans le massacre du terrain de football de Gashirabwoba aux paragraphes 2.29 à 2.40 et aux annexes 3 et 5[273] du Mémoire préalable du Procureur, lequel a été déposé deux mois et demi avant le début du procès[274]. Il souligne que lesdits paragraphes informaient très distinctement Imanishimwe du détail des allégations pesant contre lui quant au massacre de Gashirabwoba[275], à savoir : (1) des auteurs des crimes[276] ; (2) du rôle joué par Imanishimwe[277] ; (3) des dates et heures des faits[278] ; (4) du lieu où se sont produits les faits[279] ; (5) de l'identité des militaires[280] ; (6) des actes perpétrés[281] ; (7) de la connaissance qu'Imanishimwe avait des faits[282] ; et (8) du manquement d'Imanishimwe à son obligation d'empêcher ou punir les crimes commis par les militaires et les Interahamwe[283]. Le Procureur conclut qu'il ressort de la façon dont Imanishimwe a abordé et mené le procès que ce dernier avait connaissance de la nature exacte des allégations portées contre lui pour les actes perpétrés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba en temps voulu et que ce dernier n'a par conséquent pas subi de préjudice dans la préparation de sa défense[284].

142. En réplique, Imanishimwe fait valoir que la défaillance du Procureur n'a pas été corrigée par le Mémoire préalable du Procureur, ni même par la communication des déclarations des Témoins LAB, LAC et LAH. Il affirme que rien dans le Mémoire préalable du Procureur n'indiquait que le Procureur entendait le poursuivre en sa qualité de supérieur hiérarchique pour des faits commis à Gashirabwoba par ses subordonnées. Il soutient à ce titre que les paragraphes 1.36 à 1.40 auxquels se réfère le Procureur font état de son implication personnelle directe dans le massacre, sans indication aucune du fait qu'il aurait à répondre des actes commis par ses subordonnés en sa qualité de supérieur hiérarchique. Les déclarations des Témoins LAB, LAC et LAH sont – prétend-il – tout aussi silencieuses sur ce point[285]. Imanishimwe argue qu'il ne s'est en conséquence défendu que des allégations concernant son implication personnelle dans le massacre au sens de l'article 6 (1) du Statut[286]. En réponse à l'argument du Procureur sur son absence d'objection, il précise s'être élevé contre les vices de l'acte d'accusation aux moments appropriés, à savoir « in limine litis » par le dépôt de deux requêtes datées des 28 janvier et 17 février 1998[287] et « à la fin du procès » dans ses conclusions écrites et plaidoiries orales[288]. Enfin, Imanishimwe relève que les versions non caviardées des déclarations des Témoins LAB, LAC et LAH ne lui ont été communiquées que le 31 août 2000, deux semaines seulement avant le procès[289]. Il réaffirme alors ne pas avoir été

143. Dans le chapitre du Jugement consacré aux questions préjudicielles relatives aux actes d'accusation, la Chambre de première instance énonce les principes qu'elle considère applicables aux actes d'accusation[291]. La Chambre d'appel a déjà conclu que la Chambre de première instance avait commis un certain nombre d'erreurs dans son énoncé juridique. La Chambre d'appel remarque que, par voie de conséquence, la Chambre de première instance a également versé dans l'erreur dans son application du droit aux faits. En effet, bien que la Chambre de première instance ait conclu à l'imprécision de l'acte d'accusation pour ce qui est des allégations relatives à Gashirabwoba, elle s'est autorisée à tirer des conclusions factuelles des éléments de preuve devant elle sans s'assurer au préalable qu'Imanishimwe avait bien reçu en temps voulu les informations claires et cohérentes concernant les faits sur lesquels reposaient les allégations en question. La Chambre de première instance ne montre à aucun moment qu'elle s'inquiète de ce que l'accusé ait bien été informé des faits essentiels pour pouvoir se défendre des accusations portées contre lui pour les faits perpétrés à Gashirabwoba, alors même qu'elle s'était engagée à examiner « dans quelle mesure l'absence de notification et l'ambiguïté ont affecté les preuves »[292]. Elle parvient au terme de son analyse et tire conclusions factuelles et juridiques pour ces événements sans s'acquitter de son obligation de vérifier que le procès n'ait pas été rendu inéquitable par l'imprécision et l'ambiguïté « inacceptables » de l'acte d'accusation[293]. La Chambre d'appel considère qu'il s'agit d'une erreur de droit qui découle directement de l'application de critères juridiques erronés.

144. S'agissant de l'accusation de partialité de la Chambre de première instance, la Chambre d'appel rappelle qu'elle ne saurait se contenter d'allégations générales ou abstraites, non étayées ni approfondies, pour réfuter la présomption d'impartialité dont bénéficient les juges du Tribunal[294]. En l'espèce, la Chambre d'appel relève qu'Imanishimwe se contente de formuler son grief sans l'étayer d'aucune façon. Le simple défaut de motivation allégué par Imanishimwe ne saurait ici emporter démonstration de la partialité des juges composant la Chambre de première instance.

146. La Chambre d'appel ne peut confirmer les déclarations de culpabilité prononcées à l'encontre d'Imanishimwe pour le massacre de Gashirabwoba sur la base des paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe que si elle est convaincue que le Procureur a fourni en temps voulu à Imanishimwe des informations claires et cohérentes concernant les faits sur lesquels reposent l'accusation, permettant de ce fait à Imanishimwe de préparer sa défense.

Charge de la preuve

147. Avant tout autre considération, il est nécessaire pour la Chambre d'appel de déterminer à qui incombe la charge de la preuve. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que lorsqu'il s'avère que l'acte d'accusation est défectueux, il incombe à l'accusé qui n'a soulevé aucune exception à cet égard en première instance de prouver en appel que sa capacité à préparer sa défense en a sensiblement pâti. En revanche, lorsque l'accusé a soulevé une exception en première instance, il incombe au Procureur de prouver en appel que sa capacité à préparer sa défense n'a pas été sensiblement compromise[295]. En l'espèce, la Chambre d'appel note que, lors de la phase préalable au procès, Imanishimwe a déposé, en vertu de l'article 72 (A) (ii) du Règlement, deux requêtes distinctes en exceptions préjudicielles fondées sur les vices de forme de l'Acte d'accusation initial Bagambiki/Imanishimwe. Dans la requête déposée le 29 janvier 1998, Imanishimwe dénonçait l'absence « d'éléments de preuve suffisants permettant d'asseoir l'accusation » et l'absence de « relation concise des faits qui sont reprochés à l'accusé »[296]. Dans celle déposée le 24 mars 1998, Imanishimwe demandait le retrait de l'acte d'accusation au motif qu'il ne l'informait pas de la nature exacte et des motifs de l'accusation portée contre lui[297]. Imanishimwe réitérait ses griefs contre l'imprécision de l'acte d'accusation dans ses Dernières conclusions écrites et ses plaidoiries orales finales, et ce dénonçant spécifiquement l'introduction des charges relatives à Gashirabwoba[298]. La Chambre d'appel constate donc qu'Imanishimwe n'excipe pas de l'existence de vices entachant l'acte d'accusation pour la première fois en appel. C'est par conséquent au Procureur qu'incombe la charge de prouver que la capacité d'Imanishimwe à préparer sa défense concernant les allégations relatives à Gashirabwoba n'a pas été sensiblement compromise par le manque d'information. Autrement dit, il incombe au Procureur de prouver que le procès n'a pas été rendu inéquitable.

Communication des faits essentiels : lieu, date, identité des auteurs du massacre

148. Dans ses écritures, le Procureur prétend avoir communiqué à Imanishimwe le détail des faits essentiels étayant l'accusation formulée aux paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 dès le 26 novembre 1999. À cette date, le Procureur déposait les déclarations caviardées des Témoins LAC, LAB et LAH, déclarations qui, selon le Procureur, constituent « les sources des précisions relatives aux faits survenus à Gashirabwoba ». La Chambre d'appel ne considère pas que la simple communication de la copie des déclarations de témoins que le Procureur entendait appeler à la barre, imposée par l'article 66 (A) (ii) du Règlement, suffisait à procurer à Imanishimwe les informations de nature à purger les vices de l'acte d'accusation[299].

149. La Chambre d'appel reconnaît néanmoins que le Procureur faisait formellement état de son intention de poursuivre Imanishimwe pour des faits perpétrés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba dans son mémoire préalable au procès préliminaire déposé le 24 mai 2000[300]. Cette intention est confirmée dans le Mémoire préalable du Procureur déposé quelques mois plus tard. Dans ce dernier, le Procureur indique clairement mettre en cause la participation d'Imanishimwe dans la tuerie perpétrée au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba le, ou vers le, mardi 12 avril 1994[301]. Le Procureur donne corps à son accusation formulée aux paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 en spécifiant date et lieu précis d'un des massacres de civils tutsis invoqués. Les informations relatives aux exactions commises, comme celles relatives aux auteurs directs, sont détaillées aux paragraphes 2.33 à 2.40 du Mémoire préalable. Il y est également précisé au paragraphe 2.39 que des militaires dépendant du commandement direct d'Imanishimwe ont pris part aux exactions.

150. Il ressort de ces éléments que le Procureur a bien fourni à Imanishimwe des informations claires et cohérentes sur les lieux et dates du massacre de réfugiés tutsis, ainsi que sur l'identité de ses auteurs directs. La Chambre d'appel réserve néanmoins à un stade ultérieur de l'analyse ses conclusions sur la question de savoir si la communication a été faite en temps voulu.

Comportement criminel imputé à Samuel Imanishimwe

[301] Mémoire préalable du Procureur, par. 2.29.

2.31. Imanishimwe encouraged with words the interahamwe to attack and exterminate the Tutsi causing them and others to flee to the football field.

2.33. It is alleged that immediately prior to the attack, Emmanuel Bagambiki and Samuel Imanishimwe brought grenades by vehicle to Gisuma commune, which were passed to Ananie Kanyamuhanda for distribution to the interahamwe.

2.36. On or around 12 April 1994, early in the morning, the interahamwe attacked the refugees who again successfully resisted. Later that same morning, Emmanuel Bagambiki and Samuel Imanishimwe came to the football field with others, including a group of armed soldiers.

152. Imanishimwe relève toutefois qu'il n'a non pas été condamné au titre de sa responsabilité pénale individuelle directe en vertu de l'article 6 (1) du Statut, mais au titre de sa responsabilité de supérieur hiérarchique au sens de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour ne pas avoir empêché ses subordonnés d'attaquer les réfugiés. La Chambre d'appel note en effet que la Chambre de première instance a conclu qu'il n'était pas établi qu'Imanishimwe ait ordonné l'attaque, ni qu'il y ait été présent[303].

Forme de responsabilité retenue à charge de Samuel Imanishimwe

153. Sans qu'il soit besoin d'examiner plus avant la question de savoir si les informations fournies à Imanishimwe en dehors de l'acte d'accusation étaient de nature à combler la défaillance du Procureur, la Chambre d'appel est d'avis que le motif d'appel d'Imanishimwe peut être accueilli à ce stade. À la lecture des informations contradictoires contenues dans le Mémoire préalable du Procureur, mais aussi dans son Réquisitoire écrit, la Chambre d'appel considère que le Procureur n'a pas soutenu l'accusation selon laquelle Imanishimwe engageait sa responsabilité de supérieur hiérarchique sur la base de l'article 6 (3) pour les crimes décrits aux paragraphes 3.25 et 3.30 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe, responsabilité au titre de laquelle il a été déclaré coupable.

154. Le Procureur expose son intention de plaider la responsabilité d'Imanishimwe pour les chefs 7, 10 et 13 sous l'angle de l'article 6 (3) du Statut dans l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe[304]. Pour autant, une lecture attentive des écritures postérieures du Procureur révèle un certain nombre de contradictions et d'incohérences quant à la mise en cause de la responsabilité d'Imanishimwe en sa qualité de supérieur hiérarchique pour lesdits chefs.

155. Les premières de ces incohérences sont contenues dans le Mémoire préalable du Procureur : alors que dans les titres des paragraphes 3.33 et 3.35 consacrés aux chefs 7 et 10 portés contre Imanishimwe le Procureur réitère son intention d'invoquer les articles 6 (1) et 6 (3) du Statut – ce qui correspond à l'accusation telle que portée dans l'acte d'accusation –, le Procureur précise sans aucune ambiguïté dans le corps des paragraphes que la responsabilité de l'accusé est envisagée sous l'angle du seul article 6 (1) :

> The accused is charged in count seven of the indictment with genocide pursuant to Article 2 (3) (a) of the Statute of the Tribunal by virtue of his responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, for killing, causing of serious bodily or mental harm and deliberate infliction of conditions calculated to bring about the destruction of Tutsis in whole or in part, that occurred in the area of Cyangugu prefecture, Rwanda in April, May and June 1994, and outlined in the indictment. […][305]
> 3.35 Crimes against Humanity (Murder, Extermination, Imprisonment and Torture), 6 (1) and 6 (3)

2.38. Samuel Imanishimwe then ordered the Hutus on the field to separate from the Tutsis and that the Hutus should leave the field, which many did; he then ordered the soldiers and the interahamwe to encircle the field.
2.39. Soldiers under the direct command of Samuel Imanishimwe began firing at the crowd. It is alleged that an automatic firing weapon, positioned on the football field, was able to spray the crowd with bullets. It is alleged that the soldiers and interahamwe threw grenades into the crowd at the same time.
2.40 After the shooting stopped, many people lay dead or fatally wounded. The Interahamwe finished off any survivors by stabbing with knives, hacking with machetes or bludgeoning to death with clubs. The interahamwe and soldiers looted the belongings of the dead.

Le Procureur ne précise pas dans son Mémoire préalable le mode de responsabilité allégué pour le chef de violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II (Chef 13)[307].

156. S'agissant plus précisément des allégations relatives à Gashirabwoba, la Chambre d'appel constate que, pour seule indication d'une éventuelle mise en cause de la responsabilité d'Imanishimwe en sa qualité de supérieur hiérarchique, le Procureur indique la participation de « soldiers under the direct command of Samuel Imanishimwe »[308]. Cette information est néanmoins communiquée au milieu d'éléments factuels désignant la participation directe d'Imanishimwe au massacre[309]. La Chambre d'appel considère par ailleurs que l'information selon laquelle des militaires sous le commandement d'Imanishimwe auraient participé au massacre n'est pas, en soi, contradictoire avec la thèse d'une participation directe qui semble, ici, être celle du Procureur[310].

157. Les mêmes contradictions sont présentes dans le Réquisitoire écrit du Procureur[311]. Alors qu'il y indique à plusieurs reprises que Samuel Imanishimwe est poursuivi pour les chefs 7, 10 et 13 sur la base des articles 6 (1) et 6 (3) du Statut[312], le Procureur fait systématiquement référence à la participation directe d'Imanishimwe dans la commission des crimes quand il en vient aux faits matériels étayant ces trois chefs d'accusations[313]. Les faits susceptibles de fonder une condamnation sous 6 (3) sont systématiquement passés sous silence.

[311] La Chambre d'appel constate que le réquisitoire orale du Procureur n'évoque pas la question du mode de responsabilité sur la base duquel Imanishimwe est poursuivi pour Gashirabwoba.

[…] The Accused Emmanuel Bagambiki and Samuel Imanishimwe participated directly in these mass killings, gave orders to others to kill Tutsis, provided ammunition to people to be used to kill Tutsis, and otherwise encouraged and facilitated the massacres and attacks against Tutsis in Cyangugu préfecture.
La Chambre décide ici de citer les paragraphes dans leur langue originale, la traduction offerte en français ne reflétant pas avec la justesse nécessaire la version anglaise. Pour le chef 13, voir Réquisitoire du Procureur, par. 1758, 1769, 1770 et 1772.

158. Au vu de ces éléments, la Chambre d'appel considère que le Procureur n'a pas, pour la tuerie de Gashirabwoba, soutenu ses poursuites en vertu de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, se concentrant uniquement sur une responsabilité pénale fondée sur l'article 6 (1) du Statut.

159. La Chambre d'appel est d'avis que les raisons qui précèdent suffisent à considérer que la Chambre de première instance ne pouvait prononcer de déclaration de culpabilité sur la base de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour les chefs 7, 10 et 13. Sur cette seule base, la Chambre d'appel considère pouvoir accueillir le motif d'appel et annuler les déclarations de culpabilité prononcées contre Imanishimwe sur la base de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour les événements de Gashirabwoba.

160. En tout état de cause, la Chambre d'appel tient à préciser que, ayant examiné la question de savoir si Imanishimwe avait correctement été informé des faits essentiels fondant une accusation portée sur la base de l'article 6 (3) pour le massacre de Gashirabwoba, elle considère que tel n'est pas le cas. L'analyse ci-dessous est offerte à cet effet.

(ii) Communication des faits essentiels fondant une accusation portée sous l'article 6 (3)

161. Si le Procureur plaide la responsabilité de Samuel Imanishimwe sur le fondement de l'article 6 (3) dans l'acte d'accusation, il y omet la plupart des faits essentiels liés à ce mode de responsabilité, et ce d'autant plus pour Gashirabwoba qui est tout simplement passé sous silence. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que les faits essentiels suivants doivent être exposés dans l'acte d'accusation lorsqu'un accusé est mis en cause sur la base de l'article 6 (3) du Statut : (1) le fait que l'accusé était le supérieur hiérarchique de certaines personnes suffisamment identifiées sur lesquelles il exerçait un contrôle effectif – en ce sens qu'il avait la capacité matérielle d'empêcher ou de punir leur conduite criminelle – et dont les actes engageraient sa responsabilité ; (2) les actes criminels commis par les personnes dont il aurait eu la responsabilité ; (3) le comportement de l'accusé qui permet de conclure qu'il savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que ses subordonnés s'apprêtaient à commettre les crimes considérés ou les avaient commis ; et (4) le comportement de l'accusé qui permet de conclure qu'il n'a pas pris les mesures nécessaires et raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs[314].

162. S'agissant tout d'abord de l'exercice par Imanishimwe d'un contrôle effectif sur des subordonnés, Imanishimwe ne pouvait ignorer que le Procureur entendait prouver qu'il exerçait l'autorité de fait et de droit sur les militaires du camp militaire de Cyangugu en sa qualité de Commandant[315]. En ce qui concerne plus précisément le massacre de Gashirabwoba, la mention au paragraphe 2.39 du Mémoire préalable du Procureur de militaires « under the direct command of Samuel Imanishimwe » achève de convaincre la Chambre d'appel qu'Imanishimwe était informé de ce fait essentiel. Il en va de même pour ce qui est de la connaissance des actes criminels prétendumment commis par ses subordonnées[316].

163. S'agissant ensuite du comportement de l'accusé qui permet de conclure qu'il savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que ses subordonnés s'apprêtaient à commettre des crimes[317], la Chambre d'appel note que, dans son Mémoire préalable, le Procureur passe sous silence ce fait essentiel. Cette omission s'explique aisément par le fait que le Procureur fait état de la présence physique et de la contribution substantielle directe de l'accusé le jour de la tuerie : la connaissance de l'accusé se déduit implicitement mais nécessairement du comportement criminel qu'il lui est reproché. À aucun moment n'est envisagée l'hypothèse de l'absence de Samuel Imanishimwe sur les lieux de la tuerie. Les résumés de dépositions des Témoins LAH, LAB et LAC annexés au Mémoire préalable du Procureur ne sont pas plus instructifs à cet égard : le résumé relatif au Témoin LAB fait état de la présence d'Imanishimwe lors de l'attaque sans plus de détail[318], tandis que celui relatif au Témoin LAC est silencieux sur la connaissance qu'Imanishimwe aurait pu avoir de l'attaque[319]. Le résumé de la déposition du Témoin LAH évoque quant à lui le fait que le témoin faisait « un rapport quotidien à Bagambiki et Imanishimwe sur l'état d'avancement des tueries »[320]. Cette indication, non spécifique à l'attaque de Gashirabwoba pour laquelle LAH mentionne la présence d'Imanishimwe, pèse cependant peu de poids face à l'abondance des informations données par le Procureur quant au fait qu'il tenterait de prouver qu'Imanishimwe était présent sur les lieux, allant jusqu'à ordonner la tuerie.

164. La Chambre d'appel ne peut conclure que le Procureur ait donné une information claire et cohérente à Imanishimwe en la matière. Il est d'ailleurs intéressant de noter que, dans son Mémoire en réponse, le Procureur se contente d'alléguer qu'Imanishimwe avait connaissance des faits en s'appuyant sur la concession faite par l'accusé lui-même le 22 janvier 2003 à la Chambre de première instance[321], alors que rien dans le passage du compte rendu d'audience pertinent ne porte à croire qu'Imanishimwe ait été informé du comportement par lequel le Procureur entendait prouver qu'il savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que ses subordonnés s'apprêtaient à attaquer les personnes réfugiées à Gashirabwoba[322]. Imanishimwe se contente de préciser qu'il savait que des massacres avaient eu lieu au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba. La Chambre d'appel note que l'accusé admet avoir su qu'un massacre avait été perpétré, pas avoir su qu'un massacre allait être perpétré, et qu'il n'est à aucun moment question de l'implication de ses subordonnés.

[Le témoin LAB déclarera que] en janvier 1994, Imanishimwe et Bagambiki sont venus à l'usine à thé de Shagasha et y ont recruté une trentaine de jeunes gens pour un entraînement militaire, qui a duré jusqu'en avril 1994 […] ; que pendant une semaine Imanishimwe leur a fait faire des exercices de tirs dans la forêt en utilisant des balles réelles tandis que Bagambiki surveillait l'entraînement et informait les recrues qu'elles étaient formées pour combattre les envahisseurs tutsis et leurs complices ; que le 7 avril, Imanishimwe et Bagambiki ont apporté 150 gourdins et 300 machettes qui ont été distribués aux Interahamwe ; que quelques jours plus tard, les Interahamwe ont lancé une attaque contre les réfugiés à Gashirabwoba, que l'attaque a été repoussée à l'aide de pierres et de briques ; que plus tard dans la journée Imanishimwe et Bagambiki sont arrivés avec un renfort de militaires pour l'assaut final sur Gashirabwoba […]

[322] Samuel Imanishimwe, CRA du 22 janvier 2003, p. 41:
M. LE PRESIDENT : Monsieur Imanishimwe, avant que je n'oublie, parce que je prends des notes, et avant que je n'oublie, peut-être que vous pourriez m'aider avec quelque chose. Je ne sais pas si je prononce bien les mots, mais si je me trompe, excusez-moi. Gashirabobwa… le terrain de football de Gashirabobwa, étiez-vous au courant qu'il y a eu des massacres à cet endroit ?
R. Oui, j'ai appris qu'il y a eu des massacres.
M. LE PRESIDENT : Très bien. Merci.

165. S'agissant enfin du comportement de l'accusé qui permettrait de conclure qu'il n'a pas pris les mesures nécessaires et raisonnables pour empêcher que le massacre ne soit commis[323], la Chambre d'appel remarque que le Mémoire préalable du Procureur n'en dit mot. Le Procureur n'attire l'attention de la Chambre sur aucun élément particulier – passage de son Mémoire préalable, de sa Déclaration liminaire, résumés de déclarations de témoins – susceptible de démontrer qu'il avait fourni à Imanishimwe une information claire et cohérente sur ce fait essentiel. Au paragraphe 50 (h) de son Mémoire en réponse, le Procureur ne fait que détailler des exactions commises par « les militaires et les interahamwe »[324], telles qu'énumérées dans le Mémoire préalable, sans montrer en quoi ces éléments auraient pu informer Imanishimwe des raisons pour lesquelles il était accusé d'avoir failli à son obligation d'empêcher les crimes commis le 12 avril 1994 au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que c'est au Procureur qu'incombait la charge de prouver que l'acte d'accusation avait été purgé de ses vices, en ce qu'Imanishimwe avait été informé des détails nécessaires fondant les accusations portées contre lui[325].

166. La Chambre d'appel constate qu'un certain nombre d'informations claires et cohérentes sur l'accusation relative au massacre de Gashirabwoba ont été fournies par le Procureur à Imanishimwe dans son Mémoire préalable, document déposé deux mois avant le début du procès. La Chambre d'appel estime cependant qu'il ne lui est pas nécessaire de se prononcer sur la question de savoir si lesdites informations ont été communiquées en temps voulu – c'est-à-dire suffisamment tôt pour qu'Imanishimwe soit à même de préparer sa défense – puisqu'elle est d'avis que toutes les informations nécessaires n'ont pas été communiquées[326]. Le comportement criminel d'Imanishimwe décrit de façon suffisamment circonstanciée par le Procureur dans son Mémoire préliminaire se limite à la participation directe d'Imanishimwe dans le massacre. Les références faites à l'article 6 (3) de façon générale et au fait que certaines personnes « under his direct command » étaient impliquées dans les crimes ne pourraient suffire, pour considérer qu'Imanishimwe était informé de façon claire et cohérente des poursuites engagées contre lui au titre de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour les actes commis par ses subordonnés à Gashirabwoba.

167. La Chambre d'appel reconnaît qu'avant la présentation de l'ensemble des moyens de preuve, le Procureur ne peut déterminer avec certitude laquelle des accusations portées contre l'accusé sera prouvée. Le cumul de qualifications est de ce fait autorisé[327]. Le Procureur ne peut cependant pas se soustraire à son obligation d'étayer chacune des accusations s'il entend effectivement plaider plusieurs modes de responsabilité, à la fois ou alternativement. Dans cette affaire, le Procureur se contente d'une simple référence à l'article 6 (3) du Statut sans jamais se contraindre à préciser à l'attention de l'accusé tous les faits essentiels susceptibles de fonder l'accusation sur la base de cet article. La simple mention de l'article 6 (3) semble constituer pour le Procureur un sésame suffisant pour autoriser une condamnation en vertu de cet article. La Chambre d'appel ne peut que dénoncer cette posture. Elle réaffirme que s'il souhaite invoquer la responsabilité pénale individuelle d'un supérieur hiérarchique en vertu de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, le Procureur a l'obligation de plaider les faits essentiels fondant

[324] Mémoire en réponse du Procureur, par. 50 (h) :

Iniquité du procès

168. Le Procureur soutient nonobstant que le procès n'a pas été rendu inéquitable car il peut être déduit du dossier qu'Imanishimwe

> « avait bien compris la thèse du Procureur concernant les accusations relatives à Gashirabwoba et qu'il était prêt à y répondre au procès »[328].

169. Au soutien de son affirmation, le Procureur relève qu'Imanishimwe n'a pas soulevé d'objection précise contre l'introduction de moyens de preuve sur le massacre de Gashirabwoba[329] et n'a pas demandé un temps supplémentaire pour contre-interroger les témoins ou mener des enquêtes supplémentaires[330]. La Chambre d'appel considère que cela ne démontre pas qu'Imanishimwe était informé du fait que le Procureur entendait, pour ces faits, mettre en cause sa responsabilité de supérieur hiérarchique. La Chambre d'appel a conclu plus haut qu'Imanishimwe avait été informé d'un certain nombre de faits essentiels ayant trait à l'accusation relative à Gashirabwoba. Il était donc normal qu'il s'en défende au procès. La Chambre d'appel remarque qu'aucun des moyens de preuve introduits par le Procureur pour les événements de Gashirabwoba ne concernait la seule responsabilité d'Imanishimwe en sa qualité de supérieur hiérarchique, nécessitant de ce dernier une objection ou la demande de temps de préparation supplémentaire.

170. Le Procureur soutient que l'attitude d'Imanishimwe durant le procès démontre qu'il s'était pleinement préparé à répondre des allégations sur Gashirabwoba. Tout d'abord, il fait état du fait que la Défense d'Imanishimwe ait contre interrogé avec précision les Témoins LAC, LAB et LAH sur les événements de Gashirabwoba[331]. À la lecture des passages des comptes rendus d'audience identifiés par le Procureur, la Chambre d'appel ne peut considérer que la façon dont la Défense d'Imanishimwe a mené les contre-interrogatoires des Témoins LAC et LAH[332] conforte la thèse du Procureur : il n'y est jamais question des éléments relatifs au mode de responsabilité pénale dont Imanishimwe a été trouvé coupable.

171. Le Procureur met ensuite en exergue le fait qu'Imanishimwe ait déposé des moyens de preuve additionnels sur Gashirabwoba[333]. Pour seul exemple de preuve additionnelle, le Procureur cite la pièce à conviction D-IS 2 présentée le 10 octobre 2002. De l'avis de la Chambre d'appel, l'introduction de cette pièce à conviction – un dessin rudimentaire du terrain de football de Gashirabwoba et des ses environs immédiats – ne démontre absolument pas qu'Imanishimwe savait qu'il avait à répondre d'une accusation portée sur la base de l'article 6 (3) du Statut. Le Procureur relève aussi que les témoins à décharge PBA et PKA ont déposé pour tenter de fournir un alibi à Imanishimwe pour la journée du 12 avril 1994[334]. La présentation de ces deux témoins et la stratégie

Lors des audiences d'appel, le Procureur étoffe son argumentation juridique en précisant qu'il est dit au paragraphe 53 de l'Arrêt Kvocka et consorts « qu'une notification adéquate peut être déduite, suite à la compréhension de l'Accusé en ce qui concerne la nature de l'affaire du Procureur » : CRA(A) du 7 février 2006, p. 27. Le Procureur se réfère aux passages suivants : Témoin LAC, CRA du 10 octobre 2000, p. 47 à 55 (huis clos) ; Témoin LAH, CRA du 11 octobre 2000, p. 87 à 114 ; Témoin LAB, CRA du 29 janvier 2001, p. 30 à 94. Voir aussi CRA(A) du 7 février 2006, p. 28. Voir Mémoire en réplique d'Imanishimwe, par. 57 à 60 et 62.

choisie par la Défense d'Imanishimwe lors de leur audition renforce la conviction de la Chambre d'appel selon laquelle Imanishimwe croyait devoir se défendre non pas de la mise en cause de sa responsabilité de supérieur hiérarchique, mais de sa responsabilité pour participation directe aux crimes. Enfin, le Procureur fait référence au fait qu'Imanishimwe lui-même ait déposé sur le massacre perpétré à Gashirabwoba, « déclarant qu'il était au courant, mais niant simplement d'y avoir participé »[335]. Encore une fois, la Chambre d'appel considère que cet élément, insuffisant s'il en est pour conclure qu'Imanishimwe était informé de tous les faits essentiels fondant une accusation sous l'article 6 (3) du Statut, semble prouver qu'Imanishimwe répondait à une accusation de participation directe à la tuerie de Gashirabwoba.

172. Pour derniers arguments, le Procureur avance enfin (1) qu'Imanishimwe a spécifiquement fait référence aux crimes perpétrés à Gashirabwoba dans sa Déclaration liminaire non pour dénoncer l'introduction des accusations relatives à Gashirabwoba mais pour s'en défendre[336] ; et (2) que les témoignages des Témoins LAB, LAC et LAH sont analysés de façon extensive dans ses Dernières conclusions écrites[337]. La Chambre d'appel estime que ces derniers arguments ne parviennent pas davantage à conforter la thèse du Procureur. Contrairement au but recherché, ils achèvent de convaincre la Chambre d'appel qu'Imanishimwe ne savait pas qu'il devait se défendre d'une mise en cause de sa responsabilité pénale pour ne pas avoir empêché le massacre en sa qualité de supérieur hiérarchique. Il est en effet éclairant de constater que toute la stratégie mise en œuvre par Imanishimwe pour Gashirabwoba se limite essentiellement à prouver qu'il n'était pas sur les lieux le 12 avril 1994.

4. Conclusion

173. La Chambre d'appel considère que la capacité d'Imanishimwe à préparer sa défense s'agissant des allégations relatives à Gashirabwoba a été sensiblement compromise. Outre le fait qu'Imanishimwe n'ait pas été informé en temps voulu de façon claire et cohérente des faits essentiels sur lesquels le Procureur entendait se fonder pour les accusations portées au titre de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, la Chambre d'appel conclut qu'Imanishimwe était en droit de comprendre des écritures postérieures à l'acte d'accusation que, pour Gashirabwoba, le Procureur avait décidé de ne pas soutenir ses poursuites sous l'article 6 (3) du Statut. De l'avis de la Chambre d'appel, Imanishimwe n'était pas informé du fait qu'il aurait à répondre de la mise en cause de sa responsabilité de supérieur hiérarchique pour le massacre de Gashirabwoba. Le procès a dès lors été rendu inéquitable. En conséquence, la Chambre d'appel conclut que la Chambre de première instance ne pouvait prononcer de déclaration de culpabilité sur la base de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour les faits commis au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba.

174. La Chambre d'appel fait droit au motif d'appel et annule les déclarations de culpabilité prononcées contre Imanishimwe sur la base de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour les faits survenus au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba, à savoir celles prononcées pour génocide (Chef 7 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe), pour extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité (Chef 10 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe) et pour violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II (Chef 13 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe). L'incidence éventuelle de ces annulations sur la peine sera examinée plus loin dans le chapitre consacré à la peine.

A. PRINCIPES RELATIFS À LA PREUVE (5ÈME MOTIF D'APPEL)

1. Application des principes relatifs à la preuve

175. Le Procureur fait valoir, en son cinquième motif d'appel, que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur sur un point de droit relative au principe d'établissement de la preuve au-delà de tout doute raisonnable. Le Procureur soutient que

> « [au] lieu d'en réserver l'application à la détermination des questions fondamentales de l'innocence ou de la culpabilité des accusés, la Chambre de première instance l'a utilisé dans le cadre de l'appréciation d'éléments de preuve individuels présentés lors du procès, considérés de manière isolée »[338].

Le Procureur affirme qu'il n'avait pas l'obligation de prouver au-delà de tout doute raisonnable chacun des faits allégués à l'encontre de l'accusé, mais que la Chambre de première instance aurait dû examiner l'ensemble des éléments de preuve produits au titre de chacun des chefs d'accusation[339]. Invoquant la jurisprudence du TPIY, le Procureur admet que pour établir la culpabilité de l'accusé il doit prouver les faits essentiels au-delà de tout doute raisonnable mais soutient qu'il n'en va pas de même des faits généraux dont la preuve n'est pas essentielle. En l'espèce, le Procureur reproche à la Chambre de première instance de s'être considérée comme tenue d'établir ces faits généraux au-delà de tout doute raisonnable[340]. De l'avis du Procureur, le > « principe du doute raisonnable, […] ne devrait être utilisé que dans le cadre de la phase du verdict et non pas lors de la phase antérieure d'établissement des faits »[341].

Selon le Procureur, ce motif d'appel vise tous les verdicts rendus à l'encontre de Ntagerura, de Bagambiki, et d'Imanishimwe[342].

176. Bagambiki et Ntagerura soutiennent que les éléments essentiels des crimes doivent être prouvés au-delà de tout doute raisonnable[343]. Imanishimwe fait quant à lui valoir qu'un acte d'accusation ne devrait pas contenir de « faits généraux », ce qui implique que chaque fait y figurant doit être considéré comme un élément du crime, qui doit par conséquent être prouvé par le Procureur[344]. En fait, il soutient que tout élément à charge contesté devrait être prouvé[345].

177. La Chambre d'appel comprend que le Procureur invoque deux griefs étroitement liés : d'une part, le fait que le principe d'établissement de la preuve au-delà de tout doute raisonnable ne devrait pas s'appliquer, comme l'a fait la Chambre de première instance, au stade de l'établissement des faits, mais plutôt à celui de la « détermination des questions fondamentales de l'innocence ou de la culpabilité des accusés »[346] ; d'autre part, le fait que la Chambre de première instance n'ait pas examiné, à tort, les éléments de preuve dans leur globalité, mais a appliqué le principe en question à chaque élément de preuve pris individuellement[347].

178. S'agissant du premier argument, le Procureur invoque l'arrêt rendu par la Cour suprême du Canada dans l'affaire R. c. Morin pour étayer l'affirmation selon laquelle le principe d'établissement de la preuve au-delà de tout doute raisonnable doit uniquement être appliqué au stade du verdict et non aux faits de la cause pris individuellement[348]. La Chambre d'appel est d'avis que cette décision ne conforte pas l'argument selon lequel les faits de la cause pris individuellement ne doivent pas être prouvés au-delà de tout doute raisonnable :

> Pendant les délibérations, le jury doit examiner la preuve comme un tout et décider si la poursuite a établi la culpabilité hors de tout doute raisonnable. Cela exige nécessairement que chaque élément de l'infraction ou du point en litige ait été prouvé hors de tout doute raisonnable.[349]

Le Juge Sopinka, parlant au nom de la majorité, souscrit ici à la conclusion dégagée dans un autre arrêt de la Cour suprême du Canada, Nadeau c. La Reine :

> Les jurés ne peuvent retenir sa version, ou portion de celle-ci, que s'ils sont, en regard de toute la preuve, satisfaits hors de tout doute raisonnable que les événements se sont passés comme tels ; à défaut de quoi, et à moins qu'un fait ne soit prouvé hors de tout doute raisonnable, l'accusé a droit à la détermination de fait qui lui est la plus favorable, en autant, bien sûr, qu'elle repose sur une preuve au dossier et n'est pas pure spéculation.[350]

La Chambre d'appel relève de plus que certains passages de l'arrêt R. c. Morin qui pourraient de prime abord être interprétés comme confortant la thèse du Procureur s'expliquent par le fait que la question en litige dans l'affaire R. c. Morin avait trait aux directives données au jury par le juge du procès. En considérant cette affaire dans le contexte du Tribunal, il convient de rappeler que le juge du fait n'est pas ici un jury, mais un collège de juges professionnels. Dans le cas du jury, la seule question à laquelle il faut répondre est celle de savoir si l'accusé est coupable ou non coupable ; les conclusions factuelles à l'appui du verdict ne sont pas exposées et ne peuvent pas être contestées par l'une des parties. Les directives données au jury portent essentiellement sur cette « question fondamentale » de l'affaire. Au Tribunal de céans, en revanche, les Chambres de première instance ne peuvent se limiter à la question fondamentale de la culpabilité ou de la non-culpabilité ; l'article 22 (2) du Statut, repris à l'article 88 (C) du Règlement, leur fait obligation de motiver leurs sentences[351].

179. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que l'article 20 (3) du Statut dispose que toute personne accusée est présumée innocente jusqu'à ce que sa culpabilité ait été établie, consacrant par là le principe général de droit selon lequel il revient au Procureur de prouver la culpabilité de l'accusé au-delà de tout doute raisonnable[352]. L'article 87 (A) du Règlement dispose clairement que l'accusé n'est déclaré coupable que lorsque la majorité de la Chambre de première instance considère que sa culpabilité a été prouvée au-delà de tout doute raisonnable. Bien que le Règlement soit silencieux sur la question de savoir si cette exigence s'applique au stade de l'établissement des faits, et si oui de quels faits, la Chambre d'appel du TPIY ne laisse aucun doute sur le fait que le principe d'établissement de la preuve « au-delà de tout doute raisonnable » ne se limite pas à la conclusion ultime de culpabilité:

> L'Accusation avance [...] que la déposition du Témoin H « [...] n'est qu'un élément d'un ensemble, celui des témoignages à charge se rapportant au chef 1 [persécution] ». La Chambre d'appel n'est pas d'accord. L'argument de l'Accusation trahit une même erreur, celle de penser que l'attaque de la maison du Témoin H n'était qu'une preuve des persécutions, et non un fait essentiel faisant partie intégrante des persécutions, ainsi qu'il a été dit à propos des vices de l'Acte d'accusation modifié. Si Zoran et Mirjan Kupreškić ont été déclarés coupables de persécutions, c'est en raison de leur participation à l'attaque de la maison du Témoin H. L'argument de l'Accusation selon lequel la Chambre de première instance était libre de recourir à tout autre critère que celui de la preuve au-delà de tout doute raisonnable lorsqu'elle appréciait la déposition du Témoin H mettant en cause Zoran et Mirjan Kupreškic dans cette attaque ne saurait être retenu[353].

(b) Approche fragmentaire de l'établissement de la preuve

180. Afin d'étayer l'argument selon lequel la Chambre de première instance a adopté une approche fragmentaire pour apprécier la preuve, le Procureur se réfère à l'Arrêt Musema où la Chambre d'appel avait souscrit au point de vue exprimé par la Chambre d'appel du TPIY dans l'Arrêt Tadić relatif aux allégations d'outrage :

182. En guise d'exemple d'erreurs qui auraient été commises en appliquant les principes relatifs à la preuve à des éléments de preuve pris individuellement, le Procureur cite les conclusions dégagées par la Chambre de première instance au paragraphe 118 du Jugement[355]. La Chambre d'appel constate que la Chambre de première instance a examiné les différents témoignages à propos du même fait dont il est question ici non pas de façon isolée mais en les considérant à la lumière d'autres témoignages. Elle a pris en considération les propos d'un témoin à décharge, le Témoin BLB, qui avaient suscité des doutes quant à la crédibilité du Témoin LAH en général et celui du témoin à charge NL qui ne corroborait pas la déposition du Témoin LAH. En procédant ainsi, la Chambre de première instance a clairement suivi le principe énoncé dans l'Arrêt Tadić relatif aux allégations d'outrage. Ce n'est qu'au terme de son analyse qu'elle a apprécié si le fait en question avait été établi au-delà de tout doute raisonnable.

183. La Chambre d'appel est d'avis que le Procureur ne fait pas une distinction nette entre les différentes étapes du processus d'établissement des faits qui débouche en définitive sur une déclaration de culpabilité :

A la première étape, la Chambre de première instance doit apprécier la crédibilité des éléments de preuve pertinents présentés. Cette appréciation ne peut pas se faire de façon morcelée. Les éléments de preuve pris individuellement, tels que les déclarations des différents témoins, ou les pièces versées au dossier, doivent être analysés à la lumière de tous les moyens de preuve présentés. Ainsi, même s'il y a des doutes quant à la fiabilité des propos d'un certain témoin, ceux-ci pourraient être corroborés par d'autres éléments de preuve conduisant la Chambre de première instance à conclure que le témoin est crédible. Ou alors, un témoignage apparemment convaincant peut être remis en question par d'autres témoignages qui démontrent que ce moyen de preuve manque de crédibilité.

Ce n'est qu'après avoir analysé tous les éléments de preuve pertinents dans leur globalité que la Chambre de première instance peut décider si les moyens de preuve sur lesquels le Procureur s'est appuyé devraient être acceptés comme établissant l'existence des faits allégués, nonobstant les moyens de preuve à décharge invoqués. À cette deuxième étape de l'établissement des faits, le principe d'établissement de la preuve « au-delà de tout doute raisonnable » doit être appliqué s'il s'agit d'établir l'existence d'un élément du crime ou du mode de responsabilité retenu à l'encontre de l'accusé, ou encore s'il s'agit d'établir l'existence d'un fait indispensable pour entrer en voie de condamnation.

À l'étape finale, la Chambre de première instance doit déterminer si l'ensemble des éléments constitutifs du crime et du mode de responsabilité retenu à l'encontre de l'accusé a été prouvé lors des étapes antérieures. Même si certains des faits essentiels articulés dans l'acte d'accusation ne sont pas établis au-delà de tout doute raisonnable[356], une Chambre peut prononcer une condamnation dès lors qu'ayant appliqué le droit à ceux des faits qu'elle a acceptés comme étant établis au-delà de tout doute raisonnable, tous les éléments constitutifs du crime et du mode de responsabilité sont établis.

À la lumière de cette analyse, la Chambre d'appel convient avec le Procureur que la démarche qui consisterait à apprécier la valeur probante de chaque élément de preuve de manière fragmentaire constituerait une erreur[357].

Conclusion

184. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que le principe de la présomption d'innocence veut que chaque fait qui fonde la condamnation de l'accusé soit prouvé au-delà de tout doute raisonnable. La Chambre d'appel est d'accord avec l'argument du Procureur selon lequel

> « [si à] la fin de la cause, les faits qui sont essentiels à la culpabilité font encore l'objet de doutes sans être soutenus par d'autres faits [cela] produira un doute dans l'esprit de la Chambre quant à savoir si la preuve a été fournie au-delà de tout doute »[358].

Ainsi, faute de rapporter la preuve de l'un des maillons de la chaîne au-delà de tout doute raisonnable, la chaîne ne pourra justifier une déclaration de culpabilité.

2. Allégations d'exemples de mauvaise application des principes relatifs à la preuve

185. Pour étayer sa thèse, le Procureur identifie un certain nombre d'exemples où la Chambre de première instance aurait mal appliqué les principes relatifs à la preuve. Elle examinera chacun de ces exemples pour déterminer si le traitement des moyens de preuve révèle une erreur de fait de la part de la Chambre de première instance. Le Procureur renvoie par ailleurs à une annexe de son Mémoire d'appel, contenant des tableaux qui « illustrent de manière visuelle les arguments [du Procureur] »[359]. La Chambre d'appel les accepte en tant qu'illustration et s'abstient donc d'examiner en détail chacun des faits qui y figurent.

(a) Implication de Bagambiki dans le massacre de Gashirabwoba et dans le meurtre des réfugiés sélectionnés à la cathédrale de Cyangugu et au stade Kamarampaka

[357] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 258.
[358] CRA(A) du 6 février 2006, p. 57.
[359] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 200.

186. À titre d'exemple de la démarche erronée de la Chambre de première instance, le Procureur mentionne la manière dont elle a traité le rôle de Bagambiki dans les faits liés au massacre de Gashirabwoba et au meurtre des réfugiés sélectionnés à la cathédrale de Cyangugu et au stade Kamarampaka[360]. Le Procureur fait valoir que la majorité de la Chambre de première instance a considéré chaque incident de manière isolée, au lieu de les considérer ensemble les uns avec les autres, ainsi qu'avec d'autres éléments de preuve. Vus dans cette perspective, affirme-t-il, il en émerge une ligne de conduite impliquant Bagambiki de manière non équivoque dans les crimes perpétrés[361].

187. En réponse, Bagambiki fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a relevé une ligne de conduite dans les faits, à savoir qu'il avait tenté d'aider et de protéger les réfugiés[362].

188. La Chambre de première instance a conclu que le 16 avril 1997, Bagambiki, Imanishimwe et d'autres avaient sélectionné douze Tutsis parmi les réfugiés regroupés au stade Kamarampaka, et qu'ils avaient été tués par la suite avec quatre autres réfugiés tutsis qui avaient été sélectionnés à la cathédrale de Cyangugu par les mêmes autorités peu de temps auparavant[363]. La majorité de la Chambre de première instance a estimé ne pas disposer d'éléments de preuve suffisants pour déterminer si Bagambiki avait participé à l'exécution de ces seize réfugiés[364]. Au paragraphe 437 du Jugement, la Chambre de première instance a estimé que le 12 avril 1994, un grand nombre de réfugiés s'étaient regroupés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba. Après qu'ils eurent été attaqués dans la matinée, Bagambiki est arrivé, a tenté de les rassurer et a promis d'envoyer des soldats pour les protéger. Une heure plus tard, des gardes armés et des soldats ont encerclé les réfugiés et ont tiré sur eux. La Chambre de première instance a conclu qu'elle n'était pas convaincue que Bagambiki avait participé à l'attaque[365].

189. Dans les deux cas, la Chambre de première instance s'est appuyée sur les dépositions d'un certain nombre de témoins pour étayer ses conclusions. Dans le cas des seize réfugiés, il n'y a pas de preuve directe que Bagambiki ait participé à leur exécution. Le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance s'est méprise en omettant de tirer la seule déduction raisonnable de la preuve circonstancielle[366]. Il ne s'agit donc pas ici de la manière fragmentaire dont la preuve aurait été examinée. S'agissant des conclusions relatives au massacre perpétré au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba, la Chambre de première instance s'est fondée essentiellement sur la déposition d'un témoin, le Témoin LAC, mais a rejeté les dépositions des Témoins LAH et LAB. Selon la Chambre de première instance, bien que les Témoins LAH et LAB aient corroboré dans une certaine mesure leurs déclarations selon lesquelles Bagambiki et Imanishimwe avaient participé à l'attaque, leurs récits se contredisaient et étaient inconciliables avec celui du Témoin LAC[367]. Le raisonnement de la Chambre de première instance ne révèle pas une démarche erronée ; bien au contraire, la Chambre de première instance a analysé la preuve dans sa globalité, sans considérer chaque élément de preuve individuellement.

190. Par ailleurs, en examinant les deux événements ensemble, une Chambre de première instance raisonnable pouvait néanmoins conclure que la participation de Bagambiki n'avait pas été prouvée. Il ne ressort pas du raisonnement de la Chambre de première instance relatif à l'exécution des seize réfugiés et au massacre du terrain de football de Gashirabwoba qu'il y ait eu mauvaise administration de la preuve.

(b) Paragraphes 3.12 à 3.22 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe

191. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas tenu compte d'un certain nombre de paragraphes de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe, parce qu'ils étaient trop vagues et ne faisaient état d'aucun comportement criminel identifiable de la part de l'accusé. De l'avis du Procureur, l'acte d'accusation dans son intégralité et l'ensemble des éléments de preuve auraient du être examinés dans leur globalité[368].

192. La Chambre d'appel relève que la plupart des arguments du Procureur ne se rapportent pas aux principes régissant la preuve, mais plutôt à la manière dont la Chambre de première instance a traité les Actes d'accusation. La Chambre d'appel s'est déjà penchée sur la question au chapitre II. D. du présent Arrêt[369].

193. S'agissant du paragraphe 3.22 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe, le Procureur avance que la Chambre de première instance a conclu que des gendarmes gardaient le stade Kamarampaka, limitant ainsi les mouvements des réfugiés qui s'y trouvaient. Il argue que la Chambre de première instance a de nouveau « appréci[é] les éléments de preuve par bribes »[370] lorsqu'elle a estimé ne pas disposer de

> « suffisamment de moyens de preuve fiables pour déterminer si les restrictions apportées aux mouvements des réfugiés visaient principalement à les garder prisonniers ou à assurer leur protection »[371].

Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance aurait dû examiner l'ensemble des éléments de preuve disponibles afin de « déterminer si la présence des gendarmes revêtait un caractère favorable ou sinistre »[372].

194. La Chambre d'appel relève que le Procureur ne précise pas quels autres éléments de preuve auraient permis à la Chambre de première instance de dégager des conclusions permettant d'incriminer les accusés. Bagambiki souligne, à juste titre, que la Chambre de première instance a conclu, par exemple, que des gendarmes protégeaient les réfugiés qui s'étaient rassemblés à la cathédrale de Cyangugu et avaient empêché deux attaques menées contre eux le 11 avril 1994, juste quelques jours avant que les réfugiés ne soient transférés au stade Kamarampaka[373]. Elle a conclu ensuite que les réfugiés avaient été transférés du stade Kamarampaka à un camp à Nyarushishi. Tant lors du transfert que durant leur séjour au camp, les réfugiés étaient protégés par des gendarmes qui avaient repoussé au moins une tentative d'attaque contre le camp[374]. À la lumière de ces conclusions qui ne sont pas contestées par le Procureur, la Chambre d'appel ne peut relever ici aucune erreur dans l'application par la Chambre de première instance des principes relatifs à la preuve.

L'exécution de seize Tutsis à Gataranda

195. Le Procureur s'élève contre la conclusion dégagée par la Chambre de première instance au paragraphe 337 :

[369] Voir supra, par. 47 à 114.

[373] Mémoire en réponse de Bagambiki, par. 198, se référant au Jugement, par. 309 et 313.
[374] Jugement, par. 609 et 611.

« La Chambre ne dispose pas de suffisamment de moyens de preuve fiables pour déterminer si les 16 Tutsis ont été exécutés à Gataranda »[375].

Ce passage, fait-il valoir, « révèle une méprise évidente s'agissant du rôle et de la fonction de la charge ultime de la preuve, principe qui doit être appliqué aux éléments de preuve dans leur globalité pour décider de la culpabilité de l'accusé et non à chaque élément de preuve pris individuellement »[376].

196. La Chambre d'appel n'est pas de cet avis et estime que l'exécution des seize réfugiés ne constituait pas un élément de preuve mais un fait qui devait être établi pour emporter condamnation. En tant que tel, il devait être prouvé au-delà de tout doute raisonnable.

(d) Participation de Ntagerura aux réunions

(i) Allégation de refus d'examiner des éléments de preuve se situant hors de la portée temporelle de l'acte d'accusation

197. Le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a refusé d'examiner les éléments de preuve liés à un certain nombre de faits, pour la simple raison que ces faits se situaient hors de la portée temporelle définie dans les paragraphes 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 et 19 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura[377]. Il avance que ces éléments de preuve auraient dû être pris en considération car ils étaient utiles à la compréhension des moyens de preuve qui, eux, relevaient de la portée temporelle de ces paragraphes[378].

198. La Chambre d'appel estime que le Procureur s'est mépris dans sa lecture du Jugement. Au paragraphe 149 du Jugement, la Chambre de première instance a en effet fait remarquer que les faits auxquels le Procureur faisait allusion « se situ[aient] hors de la portée temporelle des paragraphes 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 et 19 »[379]. Toutefois, dans une note de bas de page relative à cette observation, la Chambre de première instance a remarqué qu'elle avait examiné ces faits dans d'autres parties du Jugement et a renvoyé aux parties pertinentes[380].

(ii) La réunion au marché de Bushenge en février 1993

199. Le Procureur remet par la suite en cause les éléments dont la Chambre de première instance a tenu compte s'agissant des faits mêmes qu'il estimait, seulement quelques paragraphes plus haut, avoir été complètement ignorés par la Chambre de première instance. Par exemple, le Procureur s'élève contre les conclusions de la Chambre de première instance concernant une réunion tenue au marché de Bushenge en février 1993[381]. La Chambre de première instance a analysé le témoignage du Témoin LAN qui avait déposé que Ntagerura s'était adressé à la foule et avait fait des déclarations où il était question de repousser les « Inkotanyi » et les « Inyenzi », termes qui, selon le témoin, avaient été utilisés pour décrire l'ensemble du groupe ethnique tutsi[382]. La Chambre de première instance a jugé qu'elle ne pouvait accepter

Le Procureur fait valoir que ce témoignage aurait été mieux apprécié à la lumière des moyens de preuve relatifs à des faits ultérieurs et à la participation de Ntagerura à ceux-ci[384].

200. La Chambre d'appel relève que la Chambre de première instance s'est appuyée sur les dépositions des Témoins LAD, LAN et NG-1, et a également pris en considération la preuve par ouï-dire apportée par le témoin à décharge Hope. La Chambre de première instance a comparé leurs dépositions et est parvenue à la conclusion que malgré certaines différences entre leurs récits, leurs propos se recoupaient largement[385]. Ce raisonnement n'étaye nullement l'argument du Procureur selon lequel la Chambre de première instance aurait abordé la preuve au coup par coup et d'une manière « fragmentaire ». Le Procureur n'indique pas « les preuves relatives à des faits ultérieurs »[386] que la Chambre de première instance aurait dû prendre en considération. La Chambre d'appel comprend que le Procureur fait allusion aux allégations selon lesquelles Ntagerura avait participé à des réunions à l'hôtel Ituze, à Gatare et au bureau de la préfecture de Cyangugu[387].

(iii) Réunions à l'hôtel Ituze, à Gatare et au bureau de la préfecture de Cyangugu

201. S'agissant des réunions qui se seraient tenues à l'hôtel Ituze, à Gatare et au bureau de la préfecture de Cyangugu, le Procureur fait valoir que le traitement de ces allégations par la Chambre de première instance illustre parfaitement l'effet qu'il dénonce d'une évaluation fragmentaire des éléments de preuve[388]. Il soutient que la Chambre de première instance a même eu recours à cette mauvaise application de la « charge de la preuve ultime » pour justifier une autre application également erronée du même principe à un autre fait[389].

202. Ntagerura répond que l'intérêt que présentent ces réunions au regard de la thèse du Procureur n'est pas évident. Soit, affirme-t-il, le Procureur tentait de prouver qu'il avait incité au génocide au cours de ces réunions, soit il tentait de prouver qu'il était animé de la mens rea requise pour le crime de génocide. Dans l'un ou l'autre cas, soutient Ntagerura, les réunions étaient des faits essentiels dont la preuve devait être rapportée au-delà de tout doute raisonnable[390].

203. S'agissant de la réunion qui se serait tenue à l'hôtel Ituze, la Chambre de première instance a analysé la déposition du Témoin LAI, le seul à avoir parlé de cette réunion, et a conclu que son témoignage manquait de crédibilité[391]. Le Témoin LAI a été également le seul témoin à avoir mentionné les réunions tenues à Gatare et au bureau de la préfecture de Cyangugu ; dans ce cas également, la Chambre de première instance a refusé d'accepter son témoignage[392].

204. La Chambre d'appel estime que l'appréciation par la Chambre de première instance des éléments de preuve concernant les trois réunions ne révèle pas une mauvaise application des principes relatifs à la preuve. Le Procureur n'a spécifié aucun autre élément de preuve confirmant la présence de Ntagerura à l'une de ces trois réunions. La Chambre de première instance n'a pas analysé isolément la déposition du Témoin LAI quant à chacune des réunions ; elle a estimé plutôt qu'elle ne pouvait se fonder sur la déposition non corroborée d'un témoin qu'elle avait par ailleurs jugé non crédible. En particulier, le Procureur conteste la conclusion de la Chambre de première instance selon laquelle elle n'était pas convaincue que Ntagerura ait participé à la réunion de Gatare au motif que cette réunion avait été planifiée au cours de la réunion tenue à l'hôtel Ituze, réunion à laquelle la présence de Ntagerura n'avait pas été prouvée au-delà de tout doute raisonnable[393]. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance s'est fondée sur une conclusion erronée pour dégager une autre conclusion erronée[394]. La Chambre d'appel estime que, compte tenu du fait que le Témoin LAI ait été le seul témoin à évoquer ces deux incidents, la démarche empruntée par la Chambre de première instance n'était pas déraisonnable. Au surplus, la Chambre de première instance a fait exactement ce qu'elle aurait, de l'avis du Procureur, manqué de faire dans d'autres cas : elle a examiné le moyen de preuve relatif à un fait à la lumière d'un moyen de preuve relatif à d'autres faits. Le Procureur n'est peut-être pas satisfait du résultat de cette analyse, mais son appel ne saurait prospérer sur cette base.

(iv) Examen de l'ensemble de la preuve se rapportant aux réunions

205. Le Procureur fait valoir à plusieurs reprises que la Chambre de première instance aurait dû analyser les éléments de preuve de façon cumulative, en prenant en considération les moyens de preuve à charge dans leur ensemble[395]. Toutefois, la Chambre d'appel rappelle qu'une allégation factuelle non étayée par des éléments de preuve suffisants ne saurait établir l'existence d'un autre fait lui aussi non étayé par des éléments de preuve suffisants. Ce principe s'applique tout particulièrement à la participation présumée de Ntagerura aux réunions tenues à l'hôtel Ituze, à Gatare et au bureau de la préfecture de Cyangugu : un témoin jugé peu crédible relativement à un fait, ne devient pas plus crédible parce qu'il donne un récit tout aussi douteux au sujet d'un autre fait connexe.

3. Conclusion

206. La Chambre d'appel rejette l'argument du Procureur selon lequel la Chambre de première instance aurait versé dans l'erreur dans l'application des principes relatifs à la preuve. Le Procureur n'a pas davantage démontré que la Chambre de première instance a abordé la preuve de manière « fragmentaire », analysant de manière isolée les éléments de preuve pris individuellement. Ce motif d'appel est par conséquent rejeté dans son intégralité.

B. APPRÉCIATION DES DÉPOSITIONS DE COMPLICES (6ÈME MOTIF D'APPEL)

207. Dans son sixième motif d'appel, le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de droit dans la manière dont elle a géré les dépositions de complices et que cette erreur a faussé l'appréciation des dépositions des Témoins LAP, LAI, LAJ, LAH, LAB, LAK et LAM. Selon le Procureur, ce motif d'appel vise tous les verdicts rendus à l'encontre de Ntagerura, Bagambiki et Imanishimwe[396]. Il divise ce motif en quatre branches :

La Chambre de première instance a appliqué un critère juridique erroné aux dépositions de complices[397] ;

Elle n'a pas tenu compte de certains éléments de preuve corroborant les dépositions de complices[398] ;

Elle n'a pas appliqué la même circonspection aux dépositions des témoins à décharge complices[399] ;

Elle n'a pas autorisé le Procureur à contre-interroger des témoins à décharge sur le rôle qu'ils avaient joués en leur qualité de complices[400].

1. Standard juridique appliqué par la Chambre de première instance

208. Le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur sur un point de droit en présumant que les dépositions de complices devaient nécessairement être regardées avec circonspection, sans tâcher d'examiner de plus près la crédibilité du témoin considéré[401]. Il soutient que le fait que la Chambre de première instance ne se soit fondée sur aucune des dépositions des sept « témoins complices » présumés prouve que la stratégie de la « suspicion automatique » qu'elle a adoptée à l'égard des témoins complices s'est traduite par le « rejet en bloc » de leurs dépositions[402].

209. En réponse, Bagambiki, Imanishimwe et Ntagerura affirment que l'approche adoptée par la Chambre de première instance est correcte. Imanishimwe soutient que la Chambre a analysé les dépositions des complices visés avant de conclure qu'ils n'étaient pas crédibles[403]. Bagambiki ajoute que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas rejeté les dépositions pour la seule raison qu'elles avaient été faites par des complices[404]. Bagambiki, Imanishimwe et Ntagerura soulignent que les témoins en question étaient détenus à la prison de Cyangugu et qu'ils avaient avoué avoir participé à des crimes en 1994[405]. Ntagerura précise qu'ils attendaient tous la fixation de leurs peines par les autorités judiciaires rwandaises et avaient manifestement intérêt à impliquer les « anciennes autorités » du Rwanda dans ces crimes[406].

210. Le Procureur soutient en réplique qu'en traitant automatiquement les dépositions des témoins complices avec circonspection, la Chambre de première instance a choisi un mauvais point de départ pour son appréciation de ces dépositions et a dès lors vicié son analyse[407]. Il prétend que l'argument selon lequel les témoins étaient motivés par leurs propres intérêts n'est que « pure conjecture » dénuée de fondement[408] et ajoute que cet argument a, du reste, été réfuté par les témoins en question[409].

211. La Chambre d'appel observe que le Procureur conteste surtout les termes employés par la Chambre de première instance lors de l'appréciation des dépositions des sept témoins en question :

> « La Chambre relève que les témoins […] sont [des] complices présumés de l'accusé et qu'en conséquence, leurs dépositions doivent être examinées avec circonspection »[410].

212. Dans l'Arrêt Niyitegeka, la Chambre d'Appel a souligné que le « complice » est, dans son sens ordinaire, celui qui partage la culpabilité d'une infraction, celui qui participe à l'infraction commise par un autre, le compagnon de crime en d'autres termes[411]. En analysant la jurisprudence applicable, le Procureur relève les affaires Čelebići et Kordić et Čerkez jugées par le TPIY dans lesquelles les Chambres de première instance auraient ajouté foi aux dépositions de certains témoins alors que ceux-ci pouvaient être qualifiés de complices des accusés[412]. La Chambre d'appel souligne toutefois que dans les deux affaires, les Chambres de première instance n'ont pas considéré ces dépositions sans prudence. La Chambre de première instance a indiqué dans le Jugement Čelebići avoir « examiné d'un œil critique les éléments de preuve » présentés par le témoin en question[413], tandis que la Chambre de première instance dans l'affaire Kordić et Čerkez a relevé dans son Jugement que

S'agissant de ce témoin, Dario Kordić a soutenu en appel que la Chambre de première instance aurait dû exiger que sa déposition soit corroborée. La Chambre d'appel du TPIY a rejeté cet argument, jugeant qu'une Chambre de première instance peut condamner un accusé sur la base d'un seul témoignage, pour peu que ce témoignage soit analysé « avec toute la prudence nécessaire » et qu'il soit pris « garde que le témoin ne soit mû par des arrière-pensées »[415].

214. La Chambre d'appel conclut que, contrairement aux arguments avancés par le Procureur, la jurisprudence du Tribunal et du TPIY n'étaye pas la thèse selon laquelle une Chambre de première instance verse dans l'erreur lorsqu'elle fait preuve de circonspection dans l'appréciation des dépositions de complices. En outre, la Chambre d'appel ne souscrit pas à l'argument du Procureur selon lequel cette approche cadre mal avec le fait que diverses juridictions nationales aient aboli les règles exigeant la corroboration des dépositions de complices[419]. Même si certaines législations nationales n'exigent plus que les dépositions de complices soient corroborées, elles n'interdisent certainement pas au juge du fond de faire preuve de prudence lorsqu'il analyse ce type de dépositions. La Chambre d'appel rejette l'argument selon lequel la Chambre de première instance a utilisé un standard juridique erroné pour apprécier les dépositions de complices.

215. Il ressort de l'analyse de la jurisprudence susmentionnée que, lorsqu'elle procède à l'appréciation de la fiabilité d'une déposition de complice, la Chambre de première instance doit rechercher si le témoin considéré avait des motifs précis de déposer comme il l'a fait et de mentir[420]. À la lecture du Jugement, on constate que la Chambre de première instance s'est contentée de dire que les témoins en question étaient des « complices présumés », sans fournir de précisions sur la nature de la complicité alléguée, ni rechercher si l'un de ces témoins avait personnellement des motifs de faire un faux témoignage. La Chambre d'appel considère toutefois que le fait que la Chambre de première instance n'ait pas expressément évoqué ces motifs ne signifie pas qu'elle n'en ait pas tenu compte. La Chambre d'appel rappelle qu'une Chambre de première instance n'est pas tenue de justifier chacune des étapes de son raisonnement. En particulier, une Chambre de première instance a toute latitude pour apprécier les éléments de preuve produits et rechercher s'ils sont fiables dans l'ensemble, sans expliquer sa décision en détail[421].

216. Lors des audiences en appel, le Procureur a, pour illustrer l'erreur alléguée, cité les conclusions de la Chambre de première instance concernant un incident survenu le 20 janvier 1994, lors duquel Ntagerura serait prétendument monté dans un hélicoptère pour Bugarama ou Bigogwe afin d'y distribuer des armes. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a rejeté la preuve de la présence de Ntagerura pour la seule raison qu'elle a été fournie par des témoins complices[422].

217. La Chambre d'appel note que la Chambre de première instance a consacré deux paragraphes entiers à l'examen attentif des éléments de preuve présentés par les trois témoins en question, les Témoins LAI, LAJ et LAP. La Chambre de première instance fait état des contradictions entre leur version des faits et celle du Témoin Gratien Kabiligi[423] et discute les divergences entre la déposition au procès du Témoin LAJ et sa déposition antérieure pour les juger irréconciliables[424]. Ce n'est qu'après cet examen que la Chambre de première instance a « rappel[é] » que les Témoins LAI, LAJ et LAP étaient des « complices présumés » et que leur témoignage devait donc être apprécié avec circonspection[425]. Par conséquent, la Chambre d'appel ne considère pas que la crédibilité des Témoins LAI, LAJ et LAP « n'a pas été jugée d'une manière correcte »[426].

218. De surcroît, la Chambre d'appel considère que le Procureur ne reflète pas correctement le raisonnement de la Chambre de première instance ; contrairement à ce que prétend le Procureur[427] la Chambre de première instance ne « conclut » pas que les Témoins LAI, LAJ et LAP ont fabriqué leur preuve, mais « retient la possibilité que les dépositions […] sur cet événement aient été fabriquées de toutes pièces »[428] et conclut que > « le Procureur n'a pas prouvé au-delà de tout doute raisonnable la participation de Ntagerura à ces événements »[429].

Le Procureur n'a pas démontré que cette conclusion n'était pas ouverte à un juge des faits raisonnable.

219. Comme deuxième exemple de l'erreur alléguée, le Procureur mentionne la conclusion de la Chambre de première instance relative à la crédibilité des Témoins BLB et JNQ et à la lettre prétendument écrite par le Témoin LAP[430]. Cette question sera discutée en détail dans le cadre de l'examen du huitième motif d'appel du Procureur[431].

2. Dépositions de complices corroborées

220. Dans la deuxième branche du présent motif, le Procureur reproche à la Chambre de première instance d'avoir versé dans l'erreur en ne tenant pas compte de certaines versions des faits qui corroboraient les dépositions de complices[432]. Selon le Procureur, la Chambre de première instance a exigé que chaque point de la déposition d'un complice soit corroboré par un autre témoignage, sans rechercher si elle pouvait aussi porter crédit aux points non corroborés[433]. Il soutient que dès lors qu'il est démontré qu'un « témoin suspect » dit la vérité sur un certain nombre de sujets, même si aucun d'entre eux n'incrimine l'accusé, une juridiction connaissant des faits peut aussi ajouter foi aux points de sa déposition qui n'ont pas été corroborés[434].

221. Bagambiki répond qu'une Chambre de première instance peut décider de rejeter toute la déposition d'un témoin dès lors qu'elle estime que sa crédibilité est en cause ou de retenir uniquement les éléments de dépositions de complices qui ont été corroborés[435]. Ntagerura ajoute que la Chambre de première instance n'était pas tenue de mentionner tous les témoignages corroborant ceux de complices qui ne l'ont pas convaincue[436].

223. La Chambre d'appel rappelle de surcroît qu'il n'est pas déraisonnable pour un juge des faits d'admettre certaines parties d'un témoignage et d'en rejeter d'autres[439]. Même si certains éléments de la déposition d'un témoin ont été corroborés par un autre témoignage, une Chambre de première instance n'est pas tenue d'ajouter foi à l'ensemble de cette déposition.

Terrain de football de Gashirabwoba

224. S'agissant de l'attaque lancée au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba, le Procureur reproche à la Chambre de première instance d'avoir rejeté les dépositions des Témoins LAB et LAH alors que celles-ci avaient été corroborées dans une large mesure par le récit du Témoin LAC dont la déposition a, elle été retenue. D'après lui, la seule contradiction existant entre les différents récits réside dans la date de l'attaque, ce qui ne devrait pas être considéré comme un élément important[440].

225. La Chambre d'appel relève que l'une des raisons pour lesquelles la Chambre de première instance a rejeté la déposition du Témoin LAB réside dans le fait qu'elle avait été « largement contredite par d'autres moyens de preuve versés au dossier »[441]. La principale contradiction relevée par la Chambre de première instance porte sur la présence de Bagambiki lors de l'attaque lancée contre les réfugiés. Au dire du Témoin LAC, un grand nombre de personnes ont commencé à attaquer les réfugiés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba dans la matinée du 12 avril 1994. Bagambiki serait arrivé en compagnie d'une autre personne au cours de l'attaque et aurait demandé aux réfugiés de lui expliquer la situation. Il leur aurait ensuite promis d'envoyer des militaires pour les protéger. Une heure plus tard, des gardes armés et des militaires seraient arrivés, mais, au lieu de protéger les réfugiés, les auraient attaqués[442]. Selon les Témoins LAH et LAB, en revanche, Bagambiki et Imanishimwe auraient organisé et été présents lors de l'attaque[443].

Paroisse de Shangi

227. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a eu tort de ne pas tenir compte de la déposition du Témoin LAK concernant les incidents survenus à la paroisse de Shangi. Selon ses dires, le Témoin LAK aurait parlé des faits mêmes qui ont été acceptés par la Chambre de première instance sans que cette dernière ne daigne le mentionner. La Chambre de première instance se serait au contraire concentrée sur les points de la déposition du témoin qui n'avaient pas été corroborés pour écarter la déposition dans son intégralité[446].

228. La Chambre de première instance offre dans le Jugement un résumé exhaustif de la déposition du Témoin LAK[447]. Après analyse de cette déposition, elle conclut la trouver sujette à caution, le témoin ayant déclaré avoir vu Ntagerura livrer des armes et parler à une foule entre le 20 et le 25 décembre 1993 alors qu'il est établi que l'accusé était en mission au Cameroun à l'époque[448]. Elle relève qu'aucun autre témoin n'avait témoigné avoir vu Bagambiki ou Imanishimwe distribuer des armes au barrage routier de Shangi, ni corroboré le récit fait par le Témoin LAK au sujet de ce barrage routier[449].

229. D'après le Témoin LAK, un barrage routier avait été installé sur ordre des autorités communales près de la petite boutique d'un certain Bonaventure Harerimana – boutique pour laquelle le Témoin LAK travaillait trois jours par semaine – et tout Tutsi qui essayait de traverser ce barrage routier était tué[450]. Prétendument, Bagambiki et Imanishimwe seraient venus au barrage routier le 9 avril 1994 et y auraient distribué des armes[451]. À l'inverse, les Témoins PCG et PCF ont déclaré qu'il n'y avait pas de barrage routier devant la boutique de Bonaventure Harerimana. Selon eux, le premier barrage routier se trouvait à environ un kilomètre de là[452]. Le Témoin PCG, qui tenait ce barrage, a déclaré qu'aucun responsable ne s'y était rendu et qu'aucune arme n'y avait jamais été distribuée[453]. De plus, le Témoin PCF a déclaré qu'il buvait de la bière à la boutique de Harerimana le 9 avril 1994 au moment considéré et qu'il n'avait remarqué aucune distribution d'armes[454].

230. La Chambre d'appel constate qu'il existe des contradictions manifestes entre la déposition du Témoin LAK et celles des Témoins PCF et PCG au sujet du barrage routier de Shangi et du passage allégué de Bagambiki et d'Imanishimwe à ce barrage. Un juge des faits raisonnable pouvait conclure que la déposition du Témoin LAK n'était pas fiable à cet égard, même si sa version d'autres faits survenus à la paroisse de Shangi était corroborée par d'autres témoins.

Paroisse de Mibilizi

231. Un autre cas qui, d'après le Procureur, est « révélateur » des conséquences de l'approche adoptée par la Chambre de première instance concerne le traitement de la déposition du Témoin LAJ sur l'attaque lancée à la paroisse de Mibilizi. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a ignoré l'intégralité de la déposition alors même que ce que le Témoin LAJ avait dit au sujet de l'attaque était amplement corroboré par les Témoins MM, MP et Théodore Munyangabe[455].

232. La Chambre d'appel considère que, contrairement à ce que prétend le Procureur, le récit fait par le Témoin LAJ de l'attaque lancée à la paroisse de Mibilizi n'était pas corroboré par les Témoins MM, MP et Théodore Munyangabe[456]. La Chambre de première instance a relevé que le récit du Témoin LAJ manquait « souvent de cohérence interne et [était] contredit par d'autres moyens de preuve crédibles et fiables versés au dossier »[457]. Par exemple, explique la Chambre de première instance, le Témoin LAJ a déclaré qu'il avait participé à une attaque de grande envergure lancée contre la paroisse le 20 avril 1994 et que Munyakazi et les Interahamwe placés sous ses ordres avaient perpétré une attaque plus tard dans le courant de la journée. Par la suite, fait-elle observer, il a nié avoir participé à une attaque le 20 avril 1994. Au demeurant, il ressort des éléments de preuve versés au dossier que Munyakazi a attaqué la paroisse le 30 avril[458]. La Chambre de première instance a aussi relevé que Bagambiki et Imanishimwe avaient participé à une réunion du conseil préfectoral de sécurité le 18 avril 1994, discréditant ainsi l'allégation du Témoin LAJ selon laquelle il avait eu un entretien avec eux le même jour à l'hôtel Ituze et reçu d'eux des grenades et de l'argent[459]. La Chambre d'appel conclut que le Procureur n'est pas parvenu à établir que cette conclusion de la Chambre de première instance était déraisonnable.

Paroisse de Nyamasheke

233. Le Procureur affirme que, comme dans les cas précédents, la Chambre de première instance n'a pas tenu compte de la déposition faite par le Témoin LAM sur les incidents survenus à la paroisse de Nyamasheke alors qu'elle avait été corroborée à plusieurs égards par celles des Témoins LBI et LAY[460].

234. La Chambre de première instance a rejeté la déposition du Témoin LAM sur les incidents de la paroisse de Nyamasheke « parce qu'elle entre en contradiction avec d'autres moyens de preuve versés au dossier et qu'elle n'est ni crédible ni fiable »[461]. Pour illustrer ces contradictions, la Chambre de première instance a relevé les différences existant entre le récit du Témoin LAM relatif à l'arrivée de Bagambiki à la paroisse et ceux des Témoins LAY et LBI. Le Témoin LAM a déclaré qu'après qu'un gendarme eut tué par balles trois Interahamwe, les assaillants s'étaient repliés, avaient enlevé leurs morts et les gendarmes étaient également partis. Au dire de ce témoin, Bagambiki serait arrivé plus tard et l'aurait rencontré au bureau communal[462]. La Chambre de première instance a relevé que les Témoins LAY et LBI avaient en revanche déclaré que Bagambiki était arrivé à la paroisse lorsque les assaillants et les Interahamwe morts y étaient encore[463]. Elle a par ailleurs jugé « hautement improbable » que Bagambiki et Imanishimwe aient pu, comme l'a déclaré le Témoin LAM, distribuer des armes dans l'après-midi du 15 avril 1994, puisqu'elle a pu établir qu'ils s'occupaient, avec des autorités ecclésiastiques, du transfert de réfugiés de la cathédrale de Cyangugu au stade Kamarampaka[464].

235. Il ressort d'un examen minutieux du dossier que les conclusions de la Chambre de première instance relatives à la déposition du Témoin LAM sont partiellement erronées : en réalité, le Témoin LBI a lui aussi déclaré que les assaillants s'étaient retirés après que trois des leurs eurent été tués et sa déposition ne permet pas de savoir si Bagambiki est venu d'abord à la paroisse ou au bureau communal[465]. La déposition du Témoin LBI ne contredit par conséquent pas celle du Témoin LAM à cet égard. Un juge des faits pouvait cependant raisonnablement conclure de la déposition du Témoin LAY que les assaillants et les gendarmes étaient encore présents lorsque Bagambiki est arrivé à la paroisse[466] et considérer dès lors que la déposition du Témoin LAM était contredite.

236. Le Procureur ne conteste la conclusion à laquelle est parvenue la Chambre de première instance au sujet des activités de Bagambiki et Imanishimwe dans l'après-midi du 15 avril 1994, ni ne tente d'expliquer les contradictions entre les différents récits de l'arrivée de Bagambiki à la paroisse de Nyamasheke. Puisqu'il semble invraisemblable que Bagambiki et Imanishimwe aient été présents dans cette zone dans l'après-midi du 15 avril 1994 et puisque le récit du Témoin LAM était plutôt confus lorsqu'il parlait de leur participation à la distribution d'armes et à l'attaque perpétrée par la suite[467], l'interprétation erronée de la déposition du Témoin LBI ne constitue pas une erreur judiciaire. La Chambre d'appel conclut que, même si certains points de la déposition faite par le Témoin LAM au sujet des incidents survenus à la paroisse de Nyamasheke cadraient avec d'autres témoignages, un juge des faits raisonnable pouvait toujours conclure que les informations qu'il a fournies au sujet de la participation de Bagambiki et d'Imanishimwe à l'attaque n'étaient pas fiables.

Stade Kamarampaka

237. Lors des audiences en appel, le Procureur a, comme autre exemple, fait référence à la déposition du Témoin LAP sur les événements survenus au stade Kamarampaka. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a rejeté la déposition du Témoin LAP selon laquelle Bagambiki aurait ordonné de tuer les réfugiés évacués du stade le 16 avril 1994 bien qu'elle fût largement corroborée par d'autres témoins[468].

238. Comme le Procureur le concède, la Chambre de première instance « a donné plusieurs raisons pour lesquelles elle a rejeté la déposition [du Témoin] LAP »[469]. La Chambre de première instance a en effet consacré deux paragraphes entiers à une ample discussion sur les contradictions entre la déposition du Témoin LAP et d'autres moyens de preuve contenus dans le dossier, et sur les incohérences entre son témoignage à la barre et ses dépositions antérieures[470]. La plupart de ces contradictions et de ces incohérences concernaient précisément la partie non corroborée du témoignage du Témoin LAP relative à la participation directe de Bagambiki au meurtre des réfugiés. La Chambre d'appel considère qu'au vu de ces contradictions, il était tout à fait raisonnable pour la Chambre de première instance de ne pas tenir compte du fait que certains des aspects du témoignage étaient corroborés par d'autres moyens de preuve.

3. Manque de circonspection dans l'appréciation des dépositions de témoins à décharge complices

239. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a aggravé son traitement erroné des dépositions des témoins à charge complices en ne faisant pas preuve de la même circonspection à l'égard des complices qui ont témoigné à décharge. Il cite notamment quatre témoins à décharge – Augustin Ndindiliyimana, le Témoin BLB, Gratien Kabiligi, le sous-préfet Théodore Munyangabe – qui, d'après lui, auraient dû être qualifiés de témoins complices. Or, poursuit-il, aucun de ces témoins à décharge n'a même été considéré comme un complice éventuel dans le Jugement[471].

Augustin Ndindiliyimana

240. Le Procureur prétend qu'Augustin Ndindiliyimana a admis être accusé de génocide et de crimes contre l'humanité devant le Tribunal et que Bagambiki et lui avaient servi sous le même régime au Rwanda en 1994. Il ajoute qu'Augustin Ndindiliyimana a clairement exprimé le souhait de voir acquitter Bagambiki[472]. Rappelant qu'Augustin Ndindiliyimana est accusé de crimes commis par ses troupes à Cyangugu, le Procureur soutient qu'il s'employait manifestement ainsi à se soustraire, de même que Bagambiki, à toute responsabilité pénale[473].

241. La Chambre d'appel constate que le Procureur ne donne aucune précision sur les accusations portées contre Augustin Ndindiliyimana devant le Tribunal pas plus qu'il ne conteste l'argument de Bagambiki selon lequel ces accusations reposent sur des actes criminels différents de ceux qui sont imputés aux Accusés en l'espèce[474]. Il s'agit alors pour la Chambre d'appel de déterminer si Augustin Ndindiliyimana peut être qualifié de complice de Bagambiki au sens ordinaire du terme.

242. Dans l'affaire Niyitegeka, la Défense a fait valoir que l'un des témoins, le Témoin KJ, avait été complice et que la Chambre de première instance devait apprécier sa déposition avec circonspection[475]. Statuant sur cet argument, la Chambre de première instance a relevé que ce témoin n'était accusé d'aucun crime même s'il était détenu dans un camp militaire rwandais. Son raisonnement se poursuit ainsi :

> « En outre, aucune preuve tendant à établir qu'il a participé aux actes criminels qui servent de base aux charges dont l'accusé doit répondre n'a été produite »[476].

La Chambre de première instance en a conclu que le témoin visé n'était pas un complice dont la déposition non corroborée devait être appréciée avec une prudence particulière[477]. Saisie de la question, la Chambre d'appel a conclu de même[478]. Après examen de la jurisprudence citée dans la première section du présent chapitre[479], la Chambre d'appel constate qu'elle traite exclusivement des complices au « sens ordinaire » du terme. Dans l'affaire Čelebići, le témoin considéré comme un complice par la Chambre de première instance travaillait dans le même camp de détention que l'accusé et était impliqué dans les crimes commis contre les détenus[480]. Dans l'affaire Kordić et Čerkez, le TPIY avait condamné le témoin jugé complice du fait de sa participation à une attaque pour laquelle l'accusé était aussi poursuivi[481].

243. La Chambre rappelle que la nécessité d'apprécier avec « prudence » la déposition d'un complice procède du fait que les témoins complices peuvent avoir des motifs de mettre en cause la personne accusée devant le Tribunal ou être mûs par des arrières-pensées[482]. De toute évidence, les motivations en question sont beaucoup plus puissantes lorsque le témoin est poursuivi pour les mêmes actes criminels que l'accusé. Si les circonstances de la cause le demandent, il peut s'avérer nécessaire de faire preuve d'esprit critique aussi à l'envers les témoins qui ne sont accusés que de crimes de même nature. Dans la plupart des cas, cependant, ils n'ont pas les mêmes motifs tangibles de faire un faux témoignage qu'un témoin qui aurait participé aux mêmes actes criminels que l'accusé. En conséquence, tant qu'aucune circonstance particulière n'a été mise en évidence, il n'est pas nécessaire d'apprécier les dépositions de témoins accusés de crimes similaires avec la même prudence que celle applicable dans le cas des complices au sens ordinaire du terme.

244. Comme la Chambre d'appel l'a déjà indiqué, la Chambre de première instance n'a fourni aucune précision sur la nature de la complicité des « témoins complices » appelés à la barre par le Procureur. Le Procureur ne conteste toutefois pas l'allégation de Bagambiki selon laquelle ils étaient poursuivis en raison de leur participation aux mêmes actes criminels que ceux imputés aux Accusés[483]. De fait, les Témoins LAB et LAH ont déclaré avoir participé à l'attaque lancée au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba[484]. Même s'il a soutenu n'avoir commis aucun crime, le Témoin LAK est détenu à la prison de Cyangugu pour sa participation aux faits survenus à Shangi[485]. Le Témoin LAJ a dit qu'il avait mené l'attaque lancée à la paroisse de Mibilizi[486], le Témoin LAM qu'il avait participé à celles lancées à la paroisse de Nyamasheke[487] et le Témoin LAP qu'il avait participé au meurtre de Tutsis amenés au barrage routier de Gatandara par Bagambiki et Imanishimwe[488]. Quant au Témoin LAI, il a déclaré avoir participé à plusieurs attaques dans la préfecture de Cyangugu, notamment à celle lancée à la paroisse de Mibilizi[489]. Il s'ensuit que les « témoins complices » qui ont déposé à charge étaient en fait complices des crimes mêmes imputés à Bagambiki, Imanishimwe et Ntagerura.

245. La Chambre d'appel considère que l'allégation générale selon laquelle Augustin Ndindiliyimana « est accusé de crimes commis par ses troupes à Cyangugu »[490] n'est pas une raison valable pour le qualifier de complice au sens ordinaire du terme, c'est-à-dire de « compagnon de crime »[491]. De fait, l'acte d'accusation établi contre lui ne mentionne qu'en termes très généraux les faits survenus à Cyangugu[492]. Il n'existe aucun lien direct entre Augustin Ndindiliyimana et les événements survenus à Cyangugu si ce n'est le fait qu'il était chef d'état-major de la gendarmerie nationale à l'époque[493]. En conséquence, la Chambre d'appel conclut que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas commis d'erreur en décidant de ne pas traiter la déposition d'Augustin Ndindiliyimana avec la même circonspection que celle observée pour les témoins qui avaient directement participé aux crimes retenus contre les Accusés.

246. De plus, la Chambre d'appel relève que la Chambre de première instance n'a mentionné la déposition d'Augustin Ndindiliyimana qu'à deux reprises. Dans les deux cas, le témoin a déclaré, en termes généraux, qu'en droit rwandais, la loi habilitait le préfet à réquisitionner la gendarmerie (mais pas l'armée)[494]. Le Procureur n'a pas indiqué dans quelle mesure cet élément de preuve pouvait avoir été affecté par le fait qu'Augustin Ndindiliyimana faisait l'objet d'accusations dont la nature juridique était semblable à celle des accusations portées contre les personnes poursuivies en l'espèce.

Témoin BLB

247. Le Procureur affirme que le Témoin BLB était poursuivi au Rwanda à raison de sa participation aux mêmes infractions. Selon lui, ce témoin > « aurait manifestement pu tirer profit d'un verdict innocentant des personnes accusées d'avoir commis des infractions dans la même commune »[495].

En réponse, Bagambiki souligne que le Témoin BLB a été acquitté par le tribunal de première instance de Cyangugu[496]. Le Procureur fait aussi mention de cet acquittement, mais ajoute que le ministère public rwandais a interjeté appel[497].

248. La Chambre d'appel constate que le Procureur n'a apporté aucune précision sur les accusations portées contre le Témoin BLB. Elle croit comprendre que ces accusations avaient trait à l'enlèvement de Côme Simugomwa et aux faits survenus au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba, Dans la préfecture de Cyangugu, comme dans toutes les régions du pays, durant toute la période des événements, des membres de la population Tutsi ont cherché refuge dans des endroits qu'ils croyaient sûrs et souvent indiqués par les autorités dont entre autres, le Stade Kamparampaka et le camp de Nyarushishi. Dans ces endroits, malgré la promesse faite par les autorités qu'ils seraient protégés, des militaires et des Interahamwe ont enlevé et tué des réfugiés. Des viols et des agressions sexuelles ont été notoirement commis à l'encontre de femmes et jeunes filles tutsi, par des militaires et des Interahamwe. En outre, des militaires et des Interahamwe ont enlevé des femmes et jeunes filles tutsi qu'ils ont conduites à des endroits isolés où elles ont été violées et soumises à différents actes de violence sexuelle, incluant des traitements dégradants et humiliants, tels qu'exhiber leurs organes génitaux, la nudité et un language dérogatoire et abusif.

c'est-à-dire à des actes criminels également imputés à Bagambiki et Imanishimwe[498]. Or, comme le reconnaît le Procureur, la Chambre de première instance était au courant des accusations portées contre le Témoin BLB[499]. La Chambre d'appel comprend que le Procureur fait grief à la Chambre de première instance de s'être appuyée sur la déposition du Témoin BLB. Elle constate cependant que le Procureur n'avance aucun argument de nature à établir que la manière dont la Chambre de première instance avait apprécié cette déposition était « totalement erronée ».

249. La Chambre d'appel rappelle qu'une Chambre de première instance a toute latitude pour apprécier les éléments de preuve produits et rechercher s'ils sont fiables dans l'ensemble, sans expliquer sa décision en détail[500]. La Chambre d'appel relève que le Témoin BLB a été acquitté, même si cette décision fait l'objet d'un recours. En outre, elle estime que contrairement à ce qu'affirme le Procureur, la mesure dans laquelle le témoin aurait pu profiter de l'acquittement de Bagambiki et d'Imanishimwe n'est pas « manifeste ». Il demeure en effet que le témoin a été acquitté en première instance avant de déposer au procès de Bagambiki et d'Imanishimwe. Qui plus est, ni Bagambiki ni Imanishimwe n'est mentionné dans le jugement de la juridiction rwandaise acquittant le témoin[501]. Dans ces circonstances, la Chambre d'appel conclut que le Procureur n'a pas établi que la Chambre de première instance avait versé dans l'erreur en appréciant la déposition du Témoin BLB sans explicitement déclarer avoir fait preuve de « circonspection ».

Gratien Kabiligi

250. Le Procureur fait valoir que durant le contre-interrogatoire de Gratien Kabiligi, la Chambre de première instance a reconnu que ce témoin était accusé dans une autre affaire portée devant le Tribunal et qu'il était clair que les crimes qui lui étaient imputés pouvaient être liés à ceux imputés à Bagambiki. Malgré tout, soutient-il, la Chambre de première instance n'a pas fait preuve de circonspection particulière lorsqu'il s'est agi d'apprécier la déclaration selon laquelle il se trouvait à l'étranger le 28 janvier 1994. Bien au contraire, elle l'aurait admise et utilisée pour discréditer les Témoins LAI, LAJ et LAP qui affirmaient l'avoir vu ce jour-là. Le Procureur ajoute que la Chambre de première instance n'a même pas tenu compte du fait qu'il était possible de démontrer que Gratien Kabiligi avait utilisé à plusieurs reprises des documents falsifiés pour quitter le Rwanda[502].

251. La Chambre d'appel constate que le Procureur n'a apporté aucune précision sur les accusations portées contre Gratien Kabiligi et relève que l'acte d'accusation établi contre lui ne mentionne aucun acte criminel commis dans la préfecture de Cyangugu[503]. Les références invoquées par le Procureur pour soutenir que les crimes commis par Gratien Kabiligi pouvaient être liés à ceux imputés à Bagambiki ne sont d'aucune utilité : tout ce qu'elles prouvent, c'est que le témoin a fait usage d'un faux passeport à un moment donné[504]. La Chambre d'appel en conclut Gratien Kabiligi n'est pas « complice » de Bagambiki et Ntagerura au sens ordinaire du terme, mais une personne accusée de crimes ayant la même qualification juridique que ceux qui leur sont imputés.

252. La Chambre de première instance a relevé que les Témoins LAP, LAI et LAJ avaient déclaré avoir vu Ntagerura et Gratien Kabiligi le 28 janvier 1994 et distribuer des armes[505]. Relevant aussi d'autres incohérences dans la déposition du Témoin LAJ[506], elle a admis la version des faits corroborée selon laquelle Gratien Kabiligi était en mission en Égypte du 27 janvier au 10 février 1994[507]. La Chambre de première instance était consciente du fait que Gratien Kabiligi avait reconnu qu'après avoir quitté le Rwanda comme réfugié, il avait obtenu de faux documents pour ne pas être arrêté par les autorités rwandaises[508].

253. La Chambre d'appel conclut que le Procureur n'a pas démontré que le crédit porté à la déposition de Gratien Kabiligi par la Chambre de première instance était totalement mal fondé. Le fait que le témoin ait utilisé de faux documents pour voyager et échappé à l'arrestation lorsqu'il est devenu réfugié ne signifie pas nécessairement que ce qu'il a dit au sujet des fonctions et activités officielles qu'il exerçait avant son départ du pays est sujette à caution.

Théodore Munyangabe

254. Le Procureur conteste la manière dont la Chambre de première instance a traité la déposition du témoin Théodore Munyangabe. Selon lui, ce témoin a été accusé et reconnu coupable en première instance avant d'être acquitté en appel par les juridictions rwandaises. La cour d'appel de Cyangugu, affirme le Procureur, a accepté le moyen de défense de Théodore Munyangabe selon lequel « d'autres personnes nommément désignées », notamment Bagambiki et Imanishimwe, étaient responsables des crimes qui lui étaient imputés, dont l'enlèvement et le meurtre de 17 civils tutsis réfugiés au stade Kamarampaka[509]. D'après le Procureur, il était évident que le témoin a changé son récit devant le Tribunal, mais la Chambre de première instance n'a ni fait mention de cette contradiction flagrante ni relevé que le témoin était peut-être complice de Bagambiki et d'Imanishimwe[510].

255. Imanishimwe et Bagambiki répondent que le jugement du tribunal de première instance de Cyangugu auquel le Procureur se réfère a été par la suite infirmé par la cour d'appel de Cyangugu[511]. Imanishimwe invoque l'arrêt qui dit explicitement que les comptes rendus d'audience ont été altérés et contiennent des propos que les témoins n'ont jamais tenus[512].

256. La Chambre d'appel constate que le Procureur n'a pas indiqué dans quelle mesure la Chambre de première instance a effectivement utilisé la déposition de Théodore Munyangabe. Le Procureur semble surtout invoquer la manière dont la Chambre de première instance a traité cette déposition pour illustrer la ligne de conduite par elle adoptée. Il ressort cependant de l'examen du Jugement que la Chambre de première instance a plutôt fait preuve de circonspection envers la déposition, même si elle n'a pas considéré le témoin comme un complice présumé.

257. La Chambre de première instance a invoqué à trois reprises la déposition de Théodore Munyangabe :

Au paragraphe 317 du Jugement, elle a invoqué la déposition de Théodore Munyangabe et celle de Bagambiki pour conclure que les réfugiés qui avaient quitté la cathédrale de Cyangugu pour le stade Kamarampaka s'étaient joints à 50 à 100 autres qui s'y trouvaient depuis le 9 avril 1994. Pour les autres faits survenus à la cathédrale et au stade, la Chambre de première instance s'est appuyée sur un certain nombre d'autres témoins, notamment le Témoin LY[513] ;

Pour certains détails concernant les attaques perpétrées à la paroisse de Mibilizi, la Chambre de première instance a invoqué la déposition de Théodore Munyangabe. Pour dégager les conclusions principales relatives à ces faits, elle s'est appuyée sur les dépositions des Témoins MM et MP[514] ;

Ce n'est qu'à propos des faits survenus à la paroisse de Shangi que la déposition de Théodore Munyangabe a été utilisée de manière plus approfondie. Cela dit, la Chambre ne s'est jamais fondée exclusivement sur sa déposition : il n'est que l'un des nombreux témoins mentionnés dans ce cadre[515].

Ses conclusions relatives à certains détails des faits survenus à la paroisse de Mibilizi mises à part, la Chambre de première instance ne s'est jamais fondée sur la seule déposition non corroborée de Théodore Munyangabe. S'agissant des faits survenus à la paroisse de Shangi, elle a relevé que la déposition de Théodore Munyangabe était « en grande partie conforme » à celles des témoins à charge NG-1 et LAD et du témoin à décharge GLB appelé par Bagambiki[516]. La Chambre d'appel relève en particulier que la Chambre de première instance n'a jamais utilisé la déposition de Théodore Munyangabe pour discréditer les témoins à charge.

258. La Chambre d'appel relève en outre que Théodore Munyangabe avait déjà été acquitté du chef de participation aux crimes commis dans la préfecture de Cyangugu en 1994 lorsqu'il a témoigné devant le Tribunal. S'il avait un motif de faire un faux témoignage, ce motif s'était donc considérablement réduit. S'agissant de la présumée « contradiction flagrante » qui existerait entre la déposition de Théodore Munyagabe devant le tribunal rwandais et celle qu'il a faite devant le Tribunal, la Chambre d'appel relève que lorsqu'on lui a opposé le jugement rendu au Rwanda, Munyangabe a soutenu que sa déposition y avait été déformée[517]. De surcroît, la Cour d'appel de Cyangugu a conclu que

La Chambre d'appel estime qu'un juge des faits raisonnable pouvait ne pas tenir compte de la contradiction alléguée, puisqu'il est malaisé de déterminer ce que Théodore Munyangabe a réellement dit devant le tribunal rwandais.

4. Refus d'autoriser le Procureur à contre-interroger des témoins à décharge sur leur rôle de complice

259. Dans le même ordre d'idées, le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur sur un point de droit en ce qu'elle a indûment limité le contre-interrogatoire de certains témoins à décharge et a empêché le Procureur d'éprouver leur crédibilité[519]. Tel a été le cas,

Q. Il est également exact que vous faites référence au préfet Bagambiki et à Samuel Imanishimwe, comme étant parmi les personnes qui ont enlevé des personnes du stade et les ont assassinées à une date que vous ignorez, n'est-ce pas ?

R. La phrase également ici n'est pas correcte. C'est pour cela que ce jugement, j'ai fait l'appel, parce que je n'étais pas content du jugement. Je voudrais, si vous me le permettez, Monsieur le Procureur, vous dire ce que j'ai dit, avec une petite nuance qu'il y a, marquée ici.

Q. Monsieur le Témoin, dans ce paragraphe, le jugement fait référence à votre déposition, n'est-ce pas ?

R. Non, le jugement a mal utilisé ma déclaration, et c'est pour cela que j'ai fait appel [de] ce jugement justement, parce que, pour moi, il est incorrect.

soutient-il, pour les dépositions des Témoins Augustin Ndindiliyimana, BLB, Gratien Kabiligi et PNA[520]. Le Procureur conclut que la Chambre de première instance ne lui a pas permis > « d'évoquer des questions qui se rapporteraient au rôle personnel du témoin dans les affaires dont elle était saisie »[521].

Augustin Ndindiliyimana

260. Le Procureur soutient qu'il a tenté de mettre à l'épreuve la crédibilité d'Augustin Ndindiliyimana « en évoquant sa participation aux crimes », mais en a été empêché, la Chambre de première instance n'ayant pas voulu obliger le témoin à déposer dans les conditions prévues par l'article 90 (E) du Règlement qui aurait offert au témoin la protection nécessaire[522].

261. L'article 90 (E) du Règlement est ainsi libellé:

> Un témoin peut refuser de faire toute déclaration qui risquerait de l'incriminer. La Chambre peut toutefois obliger le témoin à répondre. Aucun témoignage obtenu de la sorte ne peut être utilisé par la suite comme élément de preuve dans une poursuite contre le témoin, hormis le cas de poursuite pour faux témoignage.

À n'en pas douter, la Chambre de première instance a refusé de recourir à cette option. La Chambre d'appel relève toutefois que pendant la déposition d'Augustin Ndindiliyimana, le Procureur n'a pas explicitement demandé à la Chambre de première instance d'obliger le témoin à répondre :

> Si le témoin refuse de répondre aux questions, c'est son droit. [Les juges peuvent l'obliger à répondre], mais si ce n'est pas le cas, moi, je ne peux pas poursuivre. Mais je sais que c'est le droit en premier lieu du Procureur de pouvoir poser ce genre de questions.[523]

La question envisagée a été finalement autorisée, mais le témoin a refusé d'y répondre[524]. Elle portait sur le transport d'Interahamwe par des autobus de l'Onatracom dans le nord du Rwanda[525]. D'autres questions posées par la suite portaient sur la distribution d'armes à Kigali et dans ses environs[526], ainsi que sur un rapport traitant de la situation militaire au Rwanda que le témoin avait reçu en septembre 1992[527]. Finalement, le Président de la Chambre a jugé nécessaire de donner un avertissement au substitut du Procureur[528].

Nous n'allons pas reprendre les débats d'hier après-midi au cours desquels j'ai dû sans cesse vous rappeler que tout ce que vous reprocheriez à ce témoin de n'avoir pas fait ou tout acte répréhensible que vous estimeriez qu'il a peut-être commis ou pas ne présente aucun intérêt pour le présent procès. Voilà donc le dernier avertissement que je vous adresse. À présent, passons à un autre sujet au lieu d'évoquer ceux dans le cadre desquels vous tentez de vous appuyer sur l'acte d'accusation du témoin même pour mettre en doute sa crédibilité.

262. La principale question dont est saisie la Chambre d'appel est celle de savoir si, comme le prétend le Procureur[529], la Chambre de première instance a abusé du pouvoir discrétionnaire que lui confère l'article 90 (E) du Règlement en n'obligeant pas le témoin à répondre à la première question. Le Procureur a apparemment abandonné ses deuxième et troisième questions après les interventions de la Défense et du Président de la Chambre[530]. La Chambre d'appel garde à l'esprit le fait que la responsabilité première de la Chambre de première instance est d'exercer un contrôle sur les modalités de l'interrogatoire des témoins et l'ordre dans lequel ils interviennent et qu'elle doit, dans l'exercice de cette fonction, faire en sorte que l'interrogatoire serve à la manifestation de la vérité et éviter toute perte de temps injustifiée[531].

263. De l'avis de la Chambre d'appel, la question relative au transport d'Interahamwe dans le nord du Rwanda ne se rapportait guère aux faits de l'espèce ni à l'objet de la déposition d'Augustin Ndindiliyimana[532]. Le substitut du Procureur a fait valoir qu'il était nécessaire de la poser pour mettre à l'épreuve la crédibilité du témoin[533]. L'article 90 (G) (i) du Règlement prévoit la possibilité de poser des questions sur des points ayant trait à la crédibilité du témoin lors de son contre-interrogatoire. Toutefois, cette possibilité de poser des questions tendant à vérifier la crédibilité du témoin n'est pas illimitée[534]. La Chambre d'appel a déjà relevé qu'Augustin Ndindiliyimana n'était pas un complice au sens ordinaire du terme mais une personne accusée de crimes semblables à ceux qui sont imputés à Bagambiki et Imanishimwe[535]. La question que le Procureur voulait poser au témoin avait trait à un sujet bien précis qui n'était lié que d'une manière très générale aux accusations portées contre les Accusés. Le nombre de points abordés dans la déposition d'Augustin Ndindiliyimana étant très limité[536], la Chambre d'appel conclut que le Procureur n'a pas établi que cette question précise était nécessaire pour vérifier la fiabilité du récit offert par le témoin en l'espèce. La Chambre d'appel n'estime pas que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de droit lorsqu'elle a omis d'invoquer l'article 90 (E) du Règlement pour obliger le témoin à répondre à la question.

Gratien Kabiligi

264. Le Procureur avance un argument similaire s'agissant du contre-interrogatoire de Gratien Kabiligi. Il affirme avoir > « tenté de vérifier sa crédibilité sur une question relative aux lieux où il se trouvait à l'époque des faits »[537].

Lorsque le témoin a refusé de répondre à la question, soutient-il, la Chambre de première instance aurait dû l'obliger à répondre en vertu de l'article 90 (E), mais elle n'a pas voulu le faire.

> « Par conséquent, la Chambre de première instance a limité le contre-interrogatoire qu'effectuait le Procureur en lui interdisant d'évoquer des questions qui se rapporteraient au rôle personnel du témoin dans les affaires dont elle était saisie »[538].

265. La Chambre d'appel relève que la question posée était de savoir si le témoin avait été informé de l'attaque lancée par le FPR à Ruhengeri le 22 janvier 1991[539]. Le Procureur n'a pas établi en quoi cette question était liée aux faits visés en l'espèce ni comment la réponse du témoin aurait entamé sa crédibilité. La Chambre d'appel conclut que le Procureur n'a pas établi que la Chambre de première instance a abusé de son pouvoir discrétionnaire lorsqu'elle a refusé d'obliger le témoin à répondre.

Témoin BLB

266. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance est aussi intervenue pendant le contre-interrogatoire du Témoin BLB d'une manière inadmissible. Selon ses dires, il a demandé au témoin et la Chambre de première instance n'a pas permis au témoin de répondre à cette question[540].

> « si sa déposition avait pour but de soustraire Bagambiki et lui-même à la responsabilité qu'ils encourraient à raison des massacres perpétrés dans la commune »

267. Après examen du compte rendu de l'audience, la Chambre d'appel constate que même si le Président de la Chambre entretenait au départ certains doutes quant à l'admissibilité de la question[541], il a fini par l'autoriser et le témoin y a dûment répondu[542]. L'argument du Procureur est donc manifestement dénué de fondement.

Témoin PNA

268. Le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance l'a également empêché de poser au Témoin PNA des questions concernant son identité qui touchaient à sa crédibilité[543].

269. La Chambre d'appel relève que le Témoin PNA n'est pas du tout mentionné dans le Jugement. Le Procureur n'a pas démontré l'intérêt que sa déposition présente dans le cadre du procès intenté contre Bagambiki, Imanishimwe et Ntagerura. Par conséquent, la Chambre d'appel n'examinera pas le bien-fondé de l'argument du Procureur.

5. Apparence d'iniquité

270. Au dire du Procureur, la Chambre de première instance a usé de son pouvoir discrétionnaire pour traiter différemment les témoins complices selon qu'ils déposaient à charge ou à décharge et a examiné plus rigoureusement les dépositions des témoins à charge, donnant ainsi lieu à une apparence d'iniquité qui « constitue en soi une erreur de droit supplémentaire »[544]. Le Procureur souligne qu'il ne met en doute ni l'indépendance du Tribunal ni l'impartialité de ses juges, mais estime qu'il y a en l'espèce apparence d'iniquité entre les parties[545].

271. La Chambre d'appel est d'avis qu'un examen du Jugement infirme l'affirmation du Procureur selon laquelle la Chambre de première instance n'a pas fait preuve de la même circonspection à l'égard des complices témoignant à décharge, créant ainsi « une norme différente pour le Procureur ». Lorsqu'elle appréciait les dépositions de cinq témoins à décharge cités par Imanishimwe, la Chambre de première instance a pris en considération

> « le fait que les déclarations des témoins à décharge cités par Imanishimwe sont teintées de parti pris et intéressées puisque ceux-ci ont antérieurement servi en tant que soldats sous les ordres d'Imanishimwe et que reconnaître que des civils ont été amenés au camp reviendrait à admettre leur implication ou celle de leurs collègues dans les mauvais traitements infligés aux premiers »[546].

La Chambre de première instance a manifestement tenu compte de l'éventualité de la participation de ces témoins à décharge à la perpétration des crimes imputés à Imanishimwe et a conclu qu'elle rendait leurs dépositions peu fiables.

272. La Chambre d'appel a conclu que les arguments présentés par le Procureur au sujet des erreurs qu'aurait commises la Chambre de première instance dans la manière dont elle a traité les témoins à décharge « complices » sont dénués de fondement. En conséquence, il n'y a aucune raison de soutenir que la Chambre de première instance ait fait preuve de discrimination dans l'appréciation des dépositions de complices.

6. Conclusion

273. Le sixième motif d'appel du Procureur est rejeté.

C. MOYENS DE PREUVE EN RÉFUTATION SE RAPPORTANT À CERTAINES LETTRES (8ÈME MOTIF D'APPEL)

1. Témoin PR3/LAP

274. En son huitième motif d'appel, le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de droit dans sa décision du 21 mai 2003[547] par laquelle elle a refusé au Procureur l'autorisation de présenter des moyens preuves en réfutation relatifs à certaines lettres[548]. Selon le Procureur, ce motif d'appel vise tous les verdicts rendus à l'encontre de Ntagerura, Bagambiki et Imanishimwe[549]. Il soutient que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en autorisant que cinq lettres qui auraient été écrites par les témoins à charge LAP, LAB et LAJ soient versées au dossier de première instance[550] aux motifs que le témoin qui les a présentées, le témoin JNQ, n'a pas été en mesure d'en certifier l'authenticité et qu'elles n'ont à aucun moment été opposées aux témoins à charge lors de leur contre-interrogatoire[551]. Le Procureur ajoute qu'il a alors essayé d'administrer la preuve en réfutation s'agissant de l'authenticité de ces lettres, mais que la Chambre de première instance a, à tort, rejeté sa requête.

275. En réponse, Bagambiki et Ntagerura soutiennent notamment que la Chambre de première instance ne s'est quoi qu'il en soit pas fondée sur les lettres en question, et que, par conséquent, ni l'admission de ces dernières comme moyens de preuve, ni le refus d'autoriser le Procureur à administrer la preuve en réfutation n'ont eu d'incidence sur le verdict final[552].

276. La Chambre d'appel relève que bien que cinq lettres aient été présentées comme moyens de preuve, les arguments du Procureur se concentrent sur les deux lettres prétendument écrites par le Témoin LAP. En fait, les lettres qui auraient prétendument été écrites par les Témoins LAB et LAJ ne sont nullement mentionnées dans le Jugement.

277. S'agissant du Témoin LAP et des deux lettres présentées par le Témoin JNQ, la Chambre de première instance s'est prononcée dans les termes suivants :

> De plus, de l'avis de la Chambre, le fait que le témoin LAP ait demandé de l'argent en échange de son témoignage donne l'impression que celui-ci est à vendre, ce qui est également corroboré par les témoins à décharge GLB et JNQ, cités par Bagambiki, qui ont déclaré que le témoin LAP avait la réputation de porter de fausses accusations pour son profit personnel. La Chambre relève également que le témoin JNQ a témoigné au sujet d'une série de lettres portant le cachet de la prison de Cyangugu, dans lesquelles le témoin LAP a admis avoir falsifié des preuves se rapportant à d'autres affaires. Le Procureur a affirmé que ces lettres n'étaient pas dignes de foi en raison de leur provenance suspecte. Etant donné les nombreux indices de l'absence de crédibilité ou de fiabilité du témoin LAP, la Chambre n'a pas besoin d'examiner cette question plus avant.[553]

De l'avis de la Chambre d'appel, il apparaît clairement que la Chambre de première instance ne s'est pas fondée sur les lettres en question, d'autres moyens de preuve lui ayant permis d'établir que le témoignage du Témoin LAP n'était pas fiable. Le Procureur n'a pas démontré que cette conclusion était déraisonnable. La Chambre d'appel estime que, si erreur de droit il y avait, le Procureur n'a pas démontré que l'erreur alléguée serait susceptible d'invalider la décision et, pour cette raison, décline d'examiner plus avant les arguments du Procureur.

2. La lettre prétendument écrite par le Témoin LAH

278. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a adopté la même approche quant à l'admission de moyens de preuve entamant la crédibilité de témoins à charge à plusieurs reprises. Il fait référence à une lettre qui aurait été écrite par le Témoin LAH dans laquelle ce dernier énumère des éléments de preuve qu'il aurait présentés contre le Témoin BLB devant les juridictions rwandaises. Le Procureur fait valoir que la lettre n'a jamais été présentée au Témoin LAH lors de son contre-interrogatoire et que l'on n'en a jamais prouvé l'authenticité[554]. Il soutient que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur en permettant que la lettre susvisée soit versée au dossier et en se fondant sur elle par la suite pour discréditer le Témoin LAH[555].

279. Ntagerura et Bagambiki répondent que le Procureur n'a pas cherché à examiner l'authenticité de la lettre ou à présenter des éléments de preuve en réfutation[556]. Après avoir souligné que le Témoin BLB avait été acquitté par les juridictions rwandaises, Ntagerura ajoute que la lettre n'avait joué qu'un rôle secondaire dans les conclusions de la Chambre[557].

280. La Chambre de première instance a admis la lettre considérée comme pièce à conviction D-EBA 8, en écartant une objection formulée par le Procureur[558]. Il est fait référence à cette pièce à conviction à plusieurs reprises dans le Jugement. Aux paragraphes 118, 141 et 438 du Jugement, on retrouve la même conclusion, à savoir :

> La Chambre a examiné la déposition du témoin à la lumière des éléments de preuve apportés par le témoin à décharge BLB, qui a déclaré que le témoin LAH avait porté de fausses accusations à son égard en relation avec des infractions graves dont étaient saisis les tribunaux rwandais, avant de se rétracter.

À l'appui de cette conclusion, la Chambre de première instance a fait état de la déposition du Témoin BLB ainsi que des pièces à conviction 8 et 9 versées au dossier par la Défense de Bagambiki[559], la pièce à conviction 9 étant le jugement acquittant le Témoin BLB[560].

281. Avant de déterminer si la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en admettant la lettre comme moyen de preuve, la Chambre d'appel rappelle que:

> La Chambre de première instance a le pouvoir de décider si, au vu des circonstances, l'exigence d'un procès équitable interdit le versement au dossier d'un élément de preuve particulier. La Chambre d'appel ne reviendra sur la décision de la Chambre de première instance que si la partie qui la conteste a établi qu'aucun juge du fait n'aurait pu raisonnablement parvenir à la même conclusion […].[561]

282. Aux termes de l'article 89 (C) du Règlement, une Chambre peut admettre tout élément de preuve pertinent dont elle estime qu'il a valeur probante. Conformément à cet article, la fiabilité d'un élément de preuve est pertinente au regard de son admissibilité. La capacité de décider qu'un élément de preuve n'est pas admissible est toutefois limitée. Pour refuser d'admettre un élément de preuve, il doit être à ce point peu fiable qu'il soit dépourvu de toute valeur probante[562]. Dès lors qu'il existe des indices suffisants permettant d'établir provisoirement sa fiabilité, l'élément de preuve peut être admis[563].

283. Selon le Témoin BLB, une copie de la lettre qu'aurait écrite le Témoin LAH – ou qui aurait été écrite en son nom[564]– avait été envoyée à son épouse par le ministère public rwandais. Par la suite, toujours selon le témoin, il avait utilisé la lettre comme moyen de preuve à décharge à son procès, lequel s'est soldé par son acquittement[565]. La Chambre d'appel estime qu'un juge des faits raisonnable pourrait déduire de cette déposition qu'il existe des indices suffisants permettant de croire à l'authenticité de la lettre. La Chambre de première instance n'a donc pas commis d'erreur en acceptant que la lettre soit versée au dossier.

284. Le Procureur prétend en outre que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de fait en utilisant cette lettre pour apprécier la crédibilité du Témoin LAH[566]. Il soutient que le Témoin BLB n'était ni l'auteur ni le destinataire de cette lettre et qu'il n'a pas été en mesure de confirmer que le Témoin LAH l'avait écrite, ainsi que cela était allégué[567].

Chambre d'appel estime que le Procureur n'a pas démontré que la façon dont la Chambre de première instance avait apprécié la crédibilité du Témoin LAH n'était pas celle d'un juge des faits raisonnable.

3. Conclusion

286. Le huitième motif d'appel du Procureur est rejeté.

D. L'ADMINISTRATION DE LA PREUVE RELATIVE AUX RAPPORTS PRÉSUMÉS D'ANDRÉ NTAGERURA AVEC LA RTLM (7ÈME MOTIF D'APPEL)

287. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de droit en l'empêchant d'administrer la preuve des rapports de Ntagerura avec la Radio Télévision Libre des Mille Collines (« RTLM »), en sa qualité de membre fondateur et d'actionnaire[569]. Ce faisant, la Chambre de première instance a, de l'avis du Procureur, versé dans l'erreur en omettant de considérer et d'évaluer la pertinence et la force probante des éléments de preuve permettant de démontrer la mens rea de Ntagerura pour l'ensemble des crimes qui lui étaient reprochés[570].

288. Le Procureur soutient en outre que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de droit en l'empêchant subséquemment de contre-interroger Ntagerura au sujet de ses rapports avec la RTLM[571] afin de tester sa crédibilité alors que, d'une part, ce dernier avait été préalablement autorisé à présenter des éléments de preuve relatifs à d'autres médias et que, d'autre part, le Juge Président s'est contenté d'affirmer que la crédibilité de Ntagerura n'était pas en jeu pour refuser le contre-interrogatoire[572].

289. Ntagerura objecte en réponse que même si le Procureur entendait démontrer son intention délictueuse en apportant la preuve de ses rapports avec la RTLM, la mens rea doit être considérée comme un élément essentiel des crimes reprochés et que, comme telle, elle aurait dû faire l'objet d'une allégation claire dans l'acte d'accusation[573]. Il conteste de surcroît la pertinence de la preuve de sa prétendue implication dans la RTLM car « aucune des accusations contre [lui] n'était de loin ou de près reliée aux activités de la RTLM »[574].

290. La Chambre d'appel remarque que l'objet de l'erreur alléguée sous ce motif d'appel est circonscrit à deux occurrences. Elle est invitée à déterminer, dans un premier temps, si la Chambre de première instance a, à tort, privé le Procureur de la possibilité d'administrer la preuve de l'intention délictueuse de Ntagerura lors de l'interrogatoire du Témoin expert Guichaoua. Elle est appelée à évaluer, dans un second temps, si l'exclusion de la ligne de questions engagée par le Procureur lors du contre-interrogatoire de Ntagerura a indûment empêché le Procureur de tester la crédibilité de Ntagerura.

crime de génocide et de complicité de génocide que l'implication supposée de Ntagerura dans la RTLM a été invoquée la première fois par le Procureur[577]. C'est donc au regard de ces deux chefs d'accusation que la Chambre de première instance a refusé de prendre en considération l'implication prétendue de Ntagerura dans la RTLM.

293. C'est toutefois au regard des chefs d'entente en vue de commettre le crime de génocide et de complicité de génocide que la Chambre d'appel bornera son examen puisque ce sont ces deux chefs d'accusation qui ont justifié l'évocation des liens entre Ntagerura et la RTLM par le Procureur au procès et son rejet à deux reprises par la Chambre de première instance. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura allègue comme second chef d'accusation le crime d'entente en vue de commettre le génocide en raison des actes décrits aux paragraphes 9, 13, 14.3, 16 et 19. Les troisième et sixième chefs d'accusation figurant dans l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura correspondant à la complicité de génocide se fondent tous deux sur les actes décrits aux paragraphes 9 à 19[582]. Aux fins de trancher le présent motif d'appel, la Chambre d'appel examinera ci-après le traitement par la Chambre de première instance de ces trois chefs d'accusation.

294. La Chambre d'appel observe que la Chambre de première instance a rejeté le chef d'entente en vue de commettre le génocide en avançant plusieurs conclusions. La Chambre de première instance a d'abord précisé que le paragraphe 10 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura correspondait à une « allégation générale »[583], ne permettant pas d'appuyer à ce titre un chef d'accusation. S'agissant ensuite des paragraphes 12.2, 14.2, 15.1 et 15.2 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura, elle a estimé qu'aucun élément de preuve n'avait été présenté à l'appui des allégations contenues dans ces paragraphes[584]. Elle a en outre considéré, au terme d'une étude minutieuse[585], que les paragraphes 11, 12.1, 13 et 16 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura

Notwithstanding, however, Your Honours, the evidence is nonetheless admissible in support of the count of conspiracy. Membership of RTLM, in itself, indeed may not be a chargeable offence or crime. It does, however, go to show the mens rea of the Accused with regard to the counts of conspiracy and complicity, and on that basis, Your Honours, it is admissible even though no specific reference is made in the factual allegations.

Elle a donc retenu les seuls paragraphes 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 et 19 pour dégager ses conclusions factuelles tout en relevant les nombreuses imprécisions et lacunes que présentaient ces paragraphes[587]. La Chambre de première instance a en conséquence rejeté le chef d'entente en vue de commettre le génocide :

> […] car les allégations étayant ces chefs, même si elles étaient prouvées, ne pourraient constituer les éléments essentiels du crime d'entente. En particulier, les exposés succincts des faits caractérisant ces crimes n'allèguent pas l'élément matériel de l'entente, à savoir que deux personnes ou plus se sont entendues en vue de commettre le génocide.[588]

295. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que la Chambre de première instance a examiné les moyens de preuve présentés au soutien des allégations exposées aux paragraphes 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 et 19 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura et qu'elle a constaté que les allégations en question n'avaient pas été prouvées au-delà de tout doute raisonnable[589]. Lorsqu'elle a examiné le quatrième motif d'appel du Procureur, la Chambre d'appel a conclu que le Procureur n'avait pas démontré que la Chambre de première instance avait versé dans l'erreur en estimant que les paragraphes 11, 12.1, 13 et 16 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura étaient entachés de vices qui n'avaient pas été purgés[590].

296. Ayant estimé que la Chambre de première instance avait à bon droit constaté les vices des paragraphes 11, 12.1, 13 et 16 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura, et puisque le Procureur a admis qu'aucun moyen de preuve ne venait étayer les allégations portées aux paragraphes 12.2, 14.2, 15.1 et 15.2 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura, la Chambre d'appel considère que la Chambre de première instance a dûment tiré la conclusion qui s'imposait en rejetant le chef d'entente en vue de commettre le génocide puisque celui-ci reposait sur les faits décrits dans ces paragraphes. Dans la mesure où l'entente en vue de commettre le génocide n'a pas été correctement plaidée, la Chambre d'appel conclut que la question de l'intention de Ntagerura est rendue sans objet.

297. Passant aux chefs de complicité de génocide, la Chambre d'appel note que la Chambre de première instance a rejeté les chefs trois et six sur la base de plusieurs considérations. Réitérant les conclusions qu'elle avait tirée relativement aux paragraphes 11, 12.1, 12.2, 13, 14.2, 15.1, 15.2 et 16 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura[591], la Chambre de première instance n'a retenu, pour formuler ses conclusions juridiques, que les paragraphes 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 et 19[592]. Elle a ensuite considéré que les faits décrits dans les paragraphes 17 et 18 ne reprochaient aucun comportement criminel à Ntagerura[593]. Elle a en outre estimé que les faits allégués dans les paragraphes 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3 et 19 n'avaient pas été prouvés au-delà de tout doute raisonnable[594].

298. La Chambre d'appel remarque que par son cinquième motif d'appel, le Procureur conteste notamment l'appréciation par la Chambre de première instance des éléments de preuve permettant d'établir les faits ainsi que la culpabilité de Ntagerura[595]. À cet égard, le Procureur, bien qu'il ait fait référence à de nombreuses conclusions[596], n'a développé son argumentation qu'au regard de certains exemples choisis[597]. Il a spécifiquement contesté le refus par la Chambre de première instance d'examiner les allégations contenues aux paragraphes 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 et 19 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura au vu des éléments de preuve se rapportant aux allégations suivantes, relevant des paragraphes 9.1, 9.2 et 9.3 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura : la réunion tenue en février 1993 au marché de Bushenge, la réunion du mois de juin 1993 à l'hôtel Ituze, la réunion du mois d'octobre 1993 à Gatare, la visite effectuée à la cimenterie de Cimerwa à Bugarama en décembre 1993 et la visite à Bugarama en janvier 1994. La Chambre d'appel relève que certaines autres conclusions relatives aux paragraphes 9.1, 9.2 et 9.3 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura n'ont fait l'objet d'aucune constatation du Procureur.

299. La Chambre d'appel a précédemment analysé l'appréciation des éléments de preuve effectuée par la Chambre de première instance pour chacun des faits spécifiques contestés par le Procureur sous le cinquième motif d'appel. Elle n'a décelé aucune erreur de la Chambre de première instance dans l'appréciation des éléments de preuves relatifs auxdits faits se rapportant aux paragraphes 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3, 17, 18 et 19 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura[598]. Au surplus, la Chambre d'appel estime qu'elle n'est pas tenue de se prononcer sur les autres conclusions relatives aux paragraphes 9.1, 9.2 et 9.3 de l'Acte d'accusation Ntagerura puisque ces dernières n'ont pas été contestées par le Procureur.

300. Partant, la Chambre d'appel estime que c'est à raison que la Chambre de première instance a conclu que les faits allégués aux paragraphes 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 14.1, 14.3 et 19 n'ont pas été prouvés au-delà de tout doute raisonnable et qu'ils ne permettent donc pas d'entrer en voie de condamnation contre Ntagerura pour les chefs 3 et 6 de complicité de génocide[599]. La Chambre d'appel considère que, puisque le Procureur n'est pas parvenu à établir que la Chambre de première instance avait versé dans l'erreur en ne concluant pas que les éléments matériels de la responsabilité pour complicité de génocide étaient prouvés, la question de l'intention de Ntagerura sous ce chef est sans objet.

301. Cette conclusion n'épuise pas l'examen de ce motif d'appel. Il reste à la Chambre d'appel à apprécier si l'exclusion de la ligne de questions engagée par le Procureur à propos des liens entre Ntagerura et la RTLM lors du contre-interrogatoire de Ntagerura a indûment empêché le Procureur de tester la crédibilité de Ntagerura.

302. La Chambre d'appel note que Ntagerura a effectivement fait admettre comme moyen de preuve une série de transcriptions d'émissions diffusées par Radio Rwanda et la BBC, établissant, selon lui, des faits et discours gouvernementaux précis. Lors du contre-interrogatoire de Ntagerura, le Procureur a interrogé celui-ci sur sa qualité de membre fondateur et actionnaire de la RTLM[600], ce à quoi le Conseil de Ntagerura a objecté. Lorsqu'elle a fait droit à cette objection, la Chambre de première instance a précisé :

> Ce que le Témoin a fait, c'est déclarer que le Gouvernement a fait certaines déclarations pendant certaines réunions qui ont été rapportées par la presse, et la presse a diffusé cette information. Mais cela ne veut pas dire qu'il faut qu'on s'intéresse maintenant à ce que d'autres stations de radio auraient diffusé.[601]

303. Le Procureur n'a pas expliqué en quoi la question relative à sa qualité de membre fondateur et d'actionnaire de la RTLM permettait de tester la crédibilité de Ntagerura quant à des faits et propos gouvernementaux rapportés par d'autres médias radiophoniques. S'il était ouvert au Procureur de démontrer que les faits et propos en question étaient rapportés différemment selon les radios[602], celui-ci n'a cependant pas convaincu la Chambre de première instance qu'un questionnement sur la qualité de membre fondateur et d'actionnaire de la RTLM de Ntagerura lui permettrait de le faire. La Chambre d'appel considère que c'est à bon droit que la Chambre de première instance a exclu du contre-interrogatoire les questions liées à l'implication de Ntagerura dans la RTLM.

304. Au vu de ce qui précède, la Chambre d'appel conclut que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas commis d'erreur de droit en écartant de l'interrogatoire du Témoin expert Guichaoua puis du contre-interrogatoire de Ntagerura la question des rapports de ce dernier avec la RTLM. Ce motif d'appel est rejeté.

E. PARTICIPATION D'EMMANUEL BAGAMBIKI AUX CRIMES (1ER ET 2ÈME MOTIFS D'APPEL)

Mauvaise application de la charge de la preuve (2ème motif d'appel)

306. Le Procureur fait grief à la Chambre de première instance de lui avoir imposé une charge de la preuve impossible à assumer. Selon lui, la majorité des juges de la Chambre de première instance « semble » avoir exigé la preuve directe de la participation de Bagambiki aux crimes. Le Procureur se fonde sur certains passages de l'Opinion dissidente du Juge Williams, de l'Opinion individuelle et dissidente du Juge Ostrovsky et du libellé du Jugement[605]. Partant du principe que les éléments de preuve circonstancielle peuvent suffire à soutenir une condamnation, le Procureur estime que si la Chambre de première instance a jugé que la participation criminelle de Bagambiki ne pouvait être établie que par des moyens de preuve directe, elle s'est méprise sur les principes applicables à l'administration de la preuve en matière pénale[606].

307. Bagambiki relève que le Procureur n'identifie pas les éléments de preuve circonstancielle qui auraient dû, selon lui, emporter déclaration de culpabilité[607]. Il fait valoir que les arguments du Procureur procèdent d'erreurs d'interprétation, fruit de déductions hâtives, des opinions exprimées par les Juges Williams et Ostrovsky et des conclusions dégagées par la Chambre de première instance[608]. S'il est vrai, fait valoir Bagambiki, que la Chambre de première instance a rejeté certains éléments de preuve circonstancielle, rien dans le Jugement ne permet de déduire qu'elle avait pris le parti de ne considérer que les éléments de preuve directe[609].

308. La Chambre d'appel note que dans son Opinion dissidente, le Juge Williams présente sa position relative au massacre du terrain de football de Gashirabwoba comme étant la « seule conclusion logique »[610] ou la « seule conclusion raisonnable »[611] qui puisse être dégagée des éléments de preuve présentés. Dans son Opinion individuelle et dissidente, le Juge Ostrovsky estime quant à lui que les éléments de preuve se rapportant à la conduite de Bagambiki au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba et au stade Kamarampaka soulèvent une « vague présomption » qui ne saurait valoir preuve au-delà de tout doute raisonnable[612]. Le Juge Ostrovsky conclut son opinion individuelle en ces termes :

> Ce témoignage et d'autres sont de nature à établir que Bagambiki était soucieux d'assurer le bien-être des réfugiés et à faire naître en moi un doute raisonnable relativement à l'assertion > selon laquelle Bagambiki était animé de l'intention de voir massacrer les réfugiés de la préfecture de Cyangugu ou qu'il était non seulement instruit de la perpétration de tels massacres mais qu'en plus il les approuvait. [...] Après avoir pris en compte l'ensemble des éléments de preuve dignes de foi et crédibles produits en l'espèce, force m'est de dire que je ne suis pas convaincu qu'avec les forces dont il disposait, Bagambiki aurait pu assurer une meilleure protection aux personnes réfugiées à la préfecture de Cyangugu.[613]

309. La majorité des juges de la Chambre de première instance a estimé qu'elle « ne dispos[ait] pas de suffisamment de moyens de preuve fiables pour déterminer » si Bagambiki avait joué un rôle dans le meurtre des réfugiés sélectionnés et emmenés du stade Kamarampaka et de la cathédrale de Cyangugu, et dans la mort de Côme Simugomwa[614]. De l'avis de la Chambre d'appel, il ressort du Jugement que la Chambre de première instance s'est effectivement posée la question de savoir si l'ensemble des éléments de preuve produits permettait de conclure au-delà de tout doute raisonnable que les crimes visés engageaient la responsabilité de Bagambiki, et qu'elle a décidé, à la majorité de ses membres, que tel n'était pas le cas[615].

310. Rien dans le Jugement ne permet de supposer que lorsque la majorité des juges de la Chambre de première instance a déclaré ne pas disposer « de suffisamment de moyens de preuve fiables pour déterminer » si Bagambiki avait été impliqué dans les crimes visés, elle se référait à l'insuffisance des moyens de preuve directe fiables, comme le prétend le Procureur[616]. À aucun moment il ne ressort du Jugement que la majorité des juges ait rejeté un élément de preuve en raison de son caractère circonstanciel. Du reste, le Procureur reconnaît que, s'agissant d'Imanishimwe, la Chambre de première instance

Ce faisant, il n'y a pas lieu de retenir, comme le voudrait le Procureur, que la Chambre de première instance « semble » avoir eu pour règle générale d'exiger, à tort, la preuve directe de la conduite criminelle alléguée[618]. La question de savoir si la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de fait pour ne pas avoir tiré des éléments de preuve circonstancielle la seule déduction raisonnable sera examinée dans la section suivante.

2. La Chambre de première instance n'a pas tiré la seule déduction raisonnable (1er motif d'appel)

311. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de fait en ce qu'elle n'a pas retenu la responsabilité pénale de Bagambiki pour le massacre des réfugiés tutsis au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba et le meurtre de seize réfugiés tutsis sélectionnés à la cathédrale de Cyangugu et au stade Kamarampaka, alors que cette déduction était la seule raisonnable au vu des faits établis par la Chambre elle-même[619]. Le Procureur étaye cet argument en présentant une paraphrase détaillée des conclusions factuelles dégagées en première instance[620], suivie d'une récapitulation des « faits culminants » qui fondent selon lui la « conclusion inéluctable de la culpabilité »[621] de Bagambiki. Il ajoute qu'il suffisait, pour retenir la responsabilité de Bagambiki pour avoir aidé et encouragé le génocide et les autres crimes, de conclure que Bagambiki avait connaissance de l'intention génocidaire qui animait d'autres participants et qu'il avait lui-même contribué de façon substantielle à la commission des crimes. Le Procureur fait valoir que les circonstances de l'espèce – en particulier, la position de Bagambiki, son implication dans les faits et la proximité de ses actes avec les crimes – étaient telles que la seule déduction raisonnable qui pouvait être dégagée des moyens de preuve était qu'il avait aidé et encouragé la commission des crimes[622].

Principes applicables aux éléments de preuve circonstancielle

313. Dans l'Arrêt Čelebići, la Chambre d'appel du TPIY a énoncé les principes applicables aux moyens de preuve circonstancielle :

> Un faisceau de présomptions est constitué d'un certain nombre d'indices qui, pris ensemble, porteraient à conclure à la culpabilité de l'accusé, parce qu'ils ne sont habituellement réunis que lorsque ce dernier a fait ce qui lui est reproché [...]. Pareille conclusion doit être établie au-delà de tout doute raisonnable. Il ne suffit pas que les moyens de preuve permettent raisonnablement de conclure ainsi. Cette conclusion doit être la seule raisonnable possible. Si une autre conclusion peut être raisonnablement tirée des éléments de preuve et qu'elle n'exclut pas l'innocence de l'accusé, celui-ci doit être acquitté.[624]

Les mêmes principes ont été suivis dans les Arrêts Vasiljević, Krstić et Kvočka et consorts lorsqu'il a été question d'établir par déduction l'état d'esprit de l'accusé[625] et, plus récemment, dans l'Arrêt Stakić[626].

314. Comme la Chambre d'appel du TPIY l'a souligné dans l'affaire Kordić et Čerkez, les principes applicables aux éléments de preuve circonstancielle dégagés dans l'affaire Čelebići doivent être distingués des critères régissant l'examen en appel[627]. Il est en effet

et il est possible de confirmer une conclusion en appel

> « même lorsque d'autres conclusions touchant la culpabilité auraient pu raisonnablement être tirées au procès en première instance »[628].

315. Il est de jurisprudence constante qu'un accusé ne peut être déclaré coupable sur la base d'éléments de preuve circonstancielle que si sa culpabilité est la seule déduction raisonnable qui s'impose au vu de l'élément de preuve produit. Qu'elle décide de déduire l'existence d'un fait particulier emportant la culpabilité de l'accusé sur la base d'éléments de preuve directe ou circonstancielle, la Chambre de première instance doit démontrer que cette déduction s'impose à elle au-delà de tout doute raisonnable. Si une autre déduction autorisant à penser que le fait visé a pu ne

(b) Terrain de football de Gashirabwoba

316. La Chambre d'appel est d'avis que les fonctions qu'occupait Bagambiki en tant que préfet et que sa « participation active aux faits qui se produisaient sur le terrain »[629] ne permettent pas de conclure sans équivoque à sa culpabilité. La Chambre d'appel relève en particulier plusieurs cas où la Chambre de première instance a estimé que Bagambiki était activement intervenu pour protéger des réfugiés[630]. En outre, la Chambre de première instance a considéré qu'à plusieurs reprises, les autorités préfectorales avaient tenté de venir en aide aux réfugiés, par exemple en envoyant des gendarmes ou des vivres[631]. La Chambre d'appel note que, d'après les constatations de la Chambre de première instance, Bagambiki n'a jamais pris part en personne à une attaque lancée contre des réfugiés, ni donné des ordres aux assaillants. S'il avait ordonné (ou cautionné) l'attaque lancée contre le terrain de football de Gashirabwoba, comme l'affirme le Procureur[632], il s'agirait du seul exemple du soutien qu'il aurait apporté à une telle opération.

317. Le Procureur invoque les « rapports étroits » que Bagambiki entretenait avec Imanishimwe, lequel a été déclaré pénalement responsable du massacre perpétré au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba. Bagambiki nie de son côté avoir entretenu de tels rapports et affirme qu'aucun élément de preuve ne vient étayer une telle conclusion[633].

318. Le Procureur ne fournit pas d'explications quant au sens à donner aux « rapports étroits » qui auraient uni Bagambiki et Imanishimwe. De l'avis de la Chambre d'appel, le fait qu'Imanishimwe aurait eu connaissance des activités criminelles de ses militaires ne signifie pas pour autant que Bagambiki en avait conscience ou qu'il était au fait de l'implication d'Imanishimwe dans les crimes.

319. La Chambre d'appel note en outre que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas acquis la conviction que Bagambiki exerçait une autorité de jure ou de facto sur les soldats stationnés au camp militaire de Karambo. Elle a conclu qu'il n'y avait pas de lien de subordination entre la préfecture et le camp militaire de Karambo et qu'aucun élément de preuve fiable n'attestait que Bagambiki avait donné un ordre quelconque aux militaires[634].

320. Enfin, le Procureur invoque la grande proximité, dans le temps et dans l'espace, entre les actes de Bagambiki et les crimes visés pour étayer la thèse selon laquelle la culpabilité de l'accusé était la seule déduction raisonnable que la Chambre de première instance pouvait tirer[635]. Il note en particulier que, lorsqu'il s'était rendu au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba, Bagambiki était accompagné du directeur de l'usine à thé de Shagasha, usine dont les gardes allaient par la suite participer à l'attaque contre le terrain de football[636].

[634] Jugement, par. 641 et 642. Dans son acte d'appel, le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de droit lorsqu'elle a conclu que Bagambiki n'exerçait pas un contrôle effectif sur les militaires (Acte d'appel du Procureur, par. 59). Dans son Mémoire d'appel, le Procureur met l'accent sur la position de Bagambiki vis-à-vis des gendarmes et ne fait que des allusions passagères aux militaires (Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 361 et 372 à 381 ; le paragraphe 371 contient la seule référence expresse aux militaires). La question est examinée plus loin, voir infra, par. 340.
[635] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 27.
[636] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 20.

321. Malgré ces circonstances, la Chambre de première instance n'a pas conclu qu'avant le massacre du terrain de football de Gashirabwoba, les militaires avaient lancé des attaques aveugles et à grande échelle contre les réfugiés. En définitive, la Chambre de première instance n'a constaté pour seule attaque à grande échelle à laquelle des militaires avaient pris part que le massacre perpétré au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba[637]. Le 11 avril 1994, un jour avant l'attaque, des militaires avaient exercé des sévices sur des personnes détenues au camp militaire de Karambo, tuant deux d'entre elles[638]. Aucun élément de preuve particulier ne permet cependant de conclure que Bagambiki était au courant de ces incidents.

322. Considérant que la Chambre de première instance a relevé plusieurs occasions où Bagambiki avait agi dans le souci de protéger les réfugiés ou d'empêcher que des attaques ne soient lancées contre eux[639], la Chambre d'appel conclut qu'il n'était pas déraisonnable pour la majorité des juges de la Chambre de première instance de rejeter la thèse selon laquelle Bagambiki avait ordonné l'attaque lancée sur le terrain de football de Gashirabwoba le 12 avril 1994. De même, considérant que la Chambre de première instance n'a constaté que cette seule attaque à grande échelle lancée contre des réfugiés dans la préfecture à laquelle des militaires aient participé, la Chambre d'appel conclut qu'un juge des faits raisonnable pouvait également ne pas déduire que Bagambiki avait agi en sachant que les militaires attaqueraient les réfugiés et en y consentant.

(c) Le meurtre de seize réfugiés tutsis

323. La Chambre de première instance s'est prononcée comme suit quant au meurtre des seize réfugiés tutsis sélectionnés à la cathédrale de Cyangugu et au stade Kamarampaka :

> […] le 16 avril 1994, Bagambiki, Imanishimwe et d'autres personnes ont sélectionné 12 Tutsis et un Hutu parmi les réfugiés du stade sur la base d'une liste préétablie. La Chambre estime que les 12 réfugiés tutsis ont été exécutés avec quatre autres Tutsis qui avaient été sélectionnés et extraits de la cathédrale de Cyangugu par les mêmes autorités peu de temps auparavant. La Chambre ne dispose pas de suffisamment de moyens de preuve fiables pour déterminer si les 16 Tutsis ont été exécutés à Gatandara. La Chambre à la majorité, le juge Williams ayant exprimé son désaccord, estime ne pas disposer d'éléments de preuve suffisants pour déterminer si Bagambiki ou Imanishimwe ont participé à l'exécution de ces 16 réfugiés en les tuant eux-mêmes, en ordonnant à des soldats de les tuer ou en les remettant aux Interahamwe pour qu'ils les tuent.[640]

324. Bagambiki a déclaré que les 16 et 17 avril 1994, des assaillants de plus en plus nombreux avaient tenté à plusieurs reprises d'attaquer les réfugiés du stade Kamarampaka[641]. Toujours selon sa déposition, il affirme que le 17 avril, le commandant de la gendarmerie chargé de la garde du stade l'avait informé que les assaillants lui avaient remis une liste de personnes suspectées d'être en contact avec le FPR[642]. Le commandant lui avait également dit qu'il n'était pas sûr de pouvoir empêcher le massacre des réfugiés, étant donné le nombre croissant d'assaillants et le peu de gendarmes disponibles[643].

325. Bagambiki a dit avoir consulté à ce sujet ceux des membres du conseil de sécurité préfectoral qu'il avait pu joindre. Le Procureur de la République avait, en réponse, proposé d'interroger, sous la protection de la gendarmerie, les personnes figurant sur la liste à l'effet de vérifier qu'elles n'avaient ni armes ni radios pour prendre contact avec le FPR[644]. Bagambiki a rappelé qu'il avait décidé qu'il s'agissait là de l'unique solution[645]. Bagambiki a déclaré qu'il n'avait pas le pouvoir de demander l'aide des militaires, ceci étant du ressort du commandant de la gendarmerie. Il a ajouté qu'il avait tenu compte, au moment de prendre sa décision, de ce qui s'était passé à Nyamasheke où les assaillants avaient abandonné leur projet d'attaque après avoir exigé et obtenu qu'un certain prêtre quitte la paroisse[646].

326. Bagambiki a déclaré avoir été informé, le lendemain matin, que ces personnes avaient été conduites à la brigade judiciaire de Rusizi pour y être interrogées le jour suivant, mais que l'immeuble, protégé par quelques gendarmes, avait été pris d'assaut par une foule d'assaillants et que les détenus avaient été tués[647]. Selon Bagambiki, se trouvaient dans cet immeuble les bureaux et les cellules de détention des inspecteurs de la police judiciaire, ainsi que les personnes qui devaient être interrogées par le Procureur de la République[648].

327. Bagambiki soutient en appel qu'il n'avait pas eu d'autre choix : les assaillants, qui avaient déjà attaqué la cathédrale à plusieurs reprises, menaçaient de s'en prendre au stade si les réfugiés figurant sur la liste n'étaient pas emmenés hors de ce lieu. Il avance en outre qu'il savait qu'il était risqué d'emmener ces personnes, mais qu'il s'y était résolu, ce déplacement étant, selon lui, la seule façon de garantir à la fois la sécurité des réfugiés du stade et de ceux d'entre eux qui figuraient sur la liste[649].

328. Aucun élément de preuve directe fiable ne permet d'établir que Bagambiki était effectivement présent lors du meurtre des seize réfugiés ou qu'il avait donné l'ordre de les tuer. Seul le Témoin LAP a déposé dans ce sens[650]. La Chambre de première instance a cependant relevé de « nombreux indices de l'absence de crédibilité ou de fiabilité du témoin LAP », notamment le fait que plusieurs de ses affirmations contredisaient les dépositions d'autres témoins, que sa propre déposition présentait des incohérences et qu'il avait demandé à être payé pour témoigner[651]. Bien que le Procureur conteste la décision de la Chambre de première instance de ne pas admettre certains moyens de preuve en réfutation relatifs à la déposition du Témoin LAP[652], tout porte à croire qu'il accepte la conclusion de la Chambre qu'il n'y a pas de preuve fiable de la participation directe de Bagambiki dans les meurtres visés. La thèse du Procureur est d'ailleurs que Bagambiki a « contribué sensiblement » à la commission du crime tout en connaissant l'intention génocidaire de ses auteurs, et qu'il s'est donc rendu coupable d'aide et encouragement[653].

329. De façon générale, le Procureur reprend les mêmes éléments de fait pour étayer sa conclusion selon laquelle Bagambiki aurait « à tout le moins » aidé et encouragé le meurtre des seize réfugiés, à savoir la position de Bagambiki en tant que préfet et sa « participation active aux faits qui se produisaient sur le terrain »[654].

Il est vrai que, après les faits, la décision était risquée, même si elle a permis de protéger… donc d'écarter l'attaque contre les réfugiés — les milliers de réfugiés — qui étaient au stade et qui sont aujourd'hui en vie. Mais quand j'y réfléchis, je me demande si je pouvais prendre une décision autre que celle-là. Donc, à ce moment-là, nous ne voyions aucune autre décision à prendre ; c'était la seule qui garantissait la sécurité des personnes sur la liste et la sécurité des personnes au stade… qui restaient au stade. Donc, c'était la seule que nous avions jugée utile et opportune.

330. La Chambre d'appel constate que Bagambiki savait que la décision d'emmener les réfugiés sélectionnés était « risquée »[655]. Ceci n'emporte pas nécessairement engagement de sa responsabilité pénale. Bagambiki a déclaré dans le prétoire qu'au moment où elle avait été prise, cette décision était la seule qui pût assurer la sécurité à la fois des réfugiés sélectionnés et des autres qui resteraient au stade[656]. La Chambre d'appel considère que pour retenir la responsabilité pénale de Bagambiki pour le meurtre des seize réfugiés, une Chambre de première instance raisonnable devait être convaincue au-delà de tout doute raisonnable qu'il savait que les réfugiés seraient tués et qu'il avait, par ses actes, contribué de façon substantielle à leur meurtre. Ce scénario n'est pas compatible avec la conclusion selon laquelle, tout en étant conscient du risque qu'il faisait courir aux personnes concernées, Bagambiki entendait faire sortir du stade les réfugiés pour les protéger.

331. Le Témoin LCJ, dont la déposition a été invoquée dans l'Opinion dissidente du Juge Williams, a déclaré ce qui suit :

> [Bagambiki] a dit que les personnes qu'il allait citer étaient des personnes qui troublaient la sécurité des Hutus qui se trouvaient hors du stade, donc de la population hutue. Et, il a ajouté que les gens disaient que ces personnes avaient des armes, ainsi que des uniformes militaires, et que, par conséquent, on allait les emmener pour les interroger, et, si nécessaire, décider de leur sort.[657]

Étant donné que Bagambiki ne faisait apparemment que répéter les raisons données par les assaillants pour obliger les réfugiés figurant sur la liste à quitter le stade, la Chambre d'appel estime que pour un juge des faits raisonnable, l'allocution de Bagambiki n'allait pas nécessairement exposer les réfugiés concernés à un danger plus grand que celui auquel ils faisaient déjà face.

332. Le fait que le seul Hutu qui se trouvait parmi les dix-sept réfugiés sélectionnés ait survécu ne permet pas en soi de conclure que Bagambiki savait ou avait des raisons de savoir le sort qui attendait les autres. En premier lieu, il n'est pas certain qu'il savait que cette personne avait été séparée des seize réfugiés tutsis. En second lieu, il a déclaré avoir été informé après les événements que celle-ci avait été conduite au domicile du commandant de la gendarmerie, la brigade de Rusizi ne comptant pas assez de cellules et cette personne étant la seule femme parmi les dix-sept personnes sélectionnées[658].

334. Dans sa déposition, Bagambiki a insisté sur le fait que sa décision de consentir à l'extraction des dix-sept réfugiés avait été prise en tenant compte de ce qui s'était passé à Nyamasheke[660]. La Chambre de première instance a en effet conclu que Bagambiki était intervenu à la paroisse de Nyamasheke le 13 avril 1994, avait négocié avec les assaillants et soustrait le prêtre en question, le père Ubald. Aucune attaque n'avait plus eu lieu les 13 et 14 avril, mais la paroisse avait été la cible d'un assaut massif le 15 avril, au cours duquel la plupart des réfugiés qui s'y trouvaient avaient été massacrés[661]. Bagambiki avait été informé de ces faits le jour même, de sorte que l'on pourrait faire valoir qu'au moment où il avait pris sa décision, le 16 avril, d'emmener dix-sept réfugiés de la cathédrale de Cyangugu et du stade Kamarampaka, il était pour le moins incertain qu'une telle mesure pût effectivement préserver les personnes réfugiées au stade. Néanmoins, l'espoir nourri par Bagambiki – si tel était bien le motif de sa décision – que le transfert des dix-sept réfugiés préviendrait d'autres attaques s'est apparemment avéré fondé : selon la Chambre de première instance, il n'y a pas eu d'attaques à grande échelle contre les réfugiés rassemblés au stade Kamarampaka après le 16 avril 1994[662].

335. La Chambre d'appel constate que les faits survenus à la paroisse de Shangi démontrent que la sélection de certains réfugiés pour satisfaire les exigences des assaillants ne signifiait pas nécessairement que les personnes emmenées seraient tuées. Selon les conclusions de la Chambre de première instance, Bagambiki avait envoyé Théodore Munyangabe à la paroisse de Shangi le 26 avril 1994, après avoir été informé d'une attaque imminente. Munyangabe y avait négocié avec les assaillants, acceptant d'emmener un certain nombre de réfugiés à condition que ceux qui resteraient à la paroisse ne soient pas attaqués. Les assaillants avaient remis à Munyangabe une liste où figuraient les noms de personnes qui selon eux « causaient de l'insécurité »[663]. Munyangabe avait ensuite sélectionné une quarantaine de réfugiés, qui avaient été emmenés à la préfecture et au camp de la gendarmerie. L'un d'entre eux avait été tué en route, lorsque la population locale s'en était prise au groupe, et certains d'entre eux avaient subi des sévices au camp de la gendarmerie avant d'être emmenés au stade Kamarampaka[664].

336. En résumé, la Chambre d'appel conclut que les éléments de preuve ne sont pas aussi dénués d'équivoque que l'avance le Procureur. Bon nombre des conclusions factuelles se prêtent à différentes interprétations. S'il est vrai que la conclusion selon laquelle Bagambiki savait que sa participation à la sélection des réfugiés conduirait à la mort de ceux-ci trouve appui dans certains faits, elle ne saurait en aucun cas constituer la seule déduction raisonnable. La Chambre d'appel considère qu'un juge des faits raisonnable pouvait conclure que la défense de Bagambiki n'était pas réfutée par les moyens de preuve produits et déclarer que ce dernier n'était pas pénalement responsable de la mort des seize réfugiés.

3. Conclusion

337. Pour ces raisons, les premier et deuxième motifs d'appel du Procureur sont rejetés dans leur intégralité.

F. ENGAGEMENT DE LA RESPONSABILITÉ PÉNALE D'EMMANUEL BAGAMBIKI (9ÈME MOTIF D'APPEL)

338. En son neuvième motif d'appel, le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur sur un point de droit en exonérant Bagambiki de sa responsabilité pénale individuelle au titre des articles 6 (1) et 6 (3) du Statut[665]. Bien que le Procureur présente son argumentation sous l'intitulé « Application erronée du droit rwandais », la Chambre d'appel comprend qu'il soulève en fait plusieurs questions d'ordre plus général :

[661] Jugement, par. 584.
[662] Jugement, par. 331. Il y a eu plusieurs cas de réfugiés emmenés du stade, et l'un d'entre eux au moins, un certain George Nkusi, a été tué (Jugement, par. 325). Le Témoin LBH a rapporté le massacre à grande échelle de réfugiés du stade Kamarampaka, mais la Chambre de première instance a rejeté ce témoignage dont elle a noté qu'il était contredit par d'autres moyens de preuve (Jugement, par. 327).
[663] Jugement, par. 468 et 482.
[664] Jugement, par. 482.
[665] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 360.

Contrairement à ce qu'a conclu la Chambre de première instance, Bagambiki engageait sa responsabilité pénale du fait d'« omission ou négligence criminelle grave » et pour avoir aidé et encouragé la commission de crimes par consentement ou tacite approbation[666] ;

La Chambre de première instance a conclu à tort qu'il n'existait pas de lien de subordination entre Bagambiki et les gendarmes[667] ;

La Chambre de première instance a mal appliqué l'article 6 (3) du Statut en ne retenant pas contre Bagambiki le massacre de Tutsis commis par la police communale de Kagano[668].

1. Responsabilité pénale pour omissions en vertu de l'article 6 (1) du Statut

339. S'agissant de la responsabilité de Bagambiki en vertu de l'article 6 (1) du Statut, le Procureur fait valoir dans son Acte d'appel que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en constatant que la législation rwandaise ne prévoyait que des sanctions civiles, excluant ainsi toute sanction pénale, à l'encontre d'un préfet qui ne s'acquitte pas de son obligation d'assurer la protection et la sécurité de la population civile[669]. Dans son Mémoire d'appel, le Procureur étend cet argument et fait valoir que non seulement Bagambiki était responsable du fait d'omissions coupables, mais que son inaction ou son silence, alors qu'il avait connaissance des crimes d'une telle envergure, constituait un comportement équivalant à encourager tacitement la commission de ces crimes ou à y consentir[670].

Omission coupable

340. En ce qui concerne la responsabilité pénale pour omissions ou négligence criminelle grave, le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en se fondant exclusivement sur la loi rwandaise. S'appuyant sur la jurisprudence du Tribunal, il affirme qu'un principe de droit bien établi veut que la responsabilité pénale d'un accusé puisse être engagée pour omission coupable sous l'empire de l'article 6 (1). Il ajoute que ce principe est également consacré par le Code pénal rwandais[671]. Il en conclut que Bagambiki était pénalement responsable, parce qu'il « n'a rien fait pour empêcher les auteurs des crimes d'agir ou pour les punir » à raison des tueries et des actes de violence, malgré la connaissance qu'il avait ou aurait dû avoir des crimes[672].

341. Bagambiki répond que la Chambre de première instance a établi une distinction entre l'obligation générale qui était la sienne d'assurer la protection de la population de sa préfecture et son obligation d'aider des personnes en danger qui lui avaient expressément demandé assistance[673]. Selon lui, le raisonnement de la Chambre de première instance au regard de la législation rwandaise ne faisait écho qu'à la première allégation d'omission de la part de Bagambiki relative à son obligation d'agir imposée par sa fonction de préfet[674]. À cet égard, Bagambiki soutient que le Jugement était conforme à la jurisprudence et au Statut du Tribunal[675].

342. Le Procureur conteste les conclusions dégagées par la Chambre de première instance aux paragraphes 658 à 660 du Jugement. D'emblée, celle-ci a défini les conditions auxquelles la responsabilité pénale d'un accusé pouvait être engagée à raison d'une omission, en tant qu'auteur principal, à savoir :

(a) l'accusé doit avoir eu une obligation d'agir en vertu d'une règle de droit pénal ; (b) l'accusé doit avoir eu la capacité d'agir ; (c) l'accusé a omis d'agir car il voulait les conséquences pénalement sanctionnées ou il savait et acceptait que ces conséquences adviennent ; et (d) l'omission d'agir a eu pour résultat la perpétration du crime.[676]

La Chambre de première instance a ensuite constaté que la loi rwandaise imposait à Bagambiki l'obligation d'assurer la protection de la population de sa préfecture. Elle a poursuivi en examinant si Bagambiki avait la possibilité d'agir. Elle a estimé qu'il pouvait, en sa qualité de préfet, requérir l'intervention des forces armées mais n'avait cependant pas le pouvoir de décider comment les forces armées devaient exécuter une opération ou d'exercer un droit de regard à ce sujet. Au surplus, elle a constaté « qu'il ne ressort[ait] pas des preuves produites que d'autres solutions concrètes s'offraient au préfet »[677]. Elle a cependant conclu que :

> « cette obligation légale n'était pas imposée par une règle de droit pénal. En conséquence, tout manquement à cette obligation découlant de la loi rwandaise, même s'il était prouvé, n'aurait pas pour résultat d'engager la responsabilité pénale en application de l'article 6 (1) du Statut »[678].

343. Les parties ne contestent pas le fait qu'un accusé puisse être tenu pénalement responsable d'une omission sur la base de l'article 6 (1) du Statut[679], pas plus qu'elles ne contestent que toute responsabilité pénale pour omission suppose l'existence d'une obligation d'agir. La question est plutôt de savoir si cette obligation d'agir doit découler d'une règle de droit pénal ou si, comme le Procureur semble le soutenir, il suffit qu'elle dérive d'une obligation légale quelconque. La Chambre d'appel relève que l'Arrêt Blaskić, sur lequel le Procureur se fonde dans son Mémoire en réplique[680], n'aborde pas cette question[681].

344. En l'espèce, point n'est besoin d'examiner cette question. La Chambre de première instance a fondé sa conclusion sur les deux arguments suivants : l'obligation faite au préfet n'était pas prescrite par une règle de droit pénal et il n'était pas clair que Bagambiki disposait des moyens pour s'acquitter de cette obligation. La Chambre d'appel prend également acte de l'opinion individuelle du Juge Ostrovsky ainsi exprimée :

> J'estime au demeurant que le Procureur n'a simplement pas produit des preuves suffisantes pour démontrer que la préfecture disposait d'un surcroît d'effectifs suffisant pour lui permettre d'endiguer la vague de violence qui avait déferlé sur Cyangugu et de mieux assurer la protection des réfugiés. Après avoir pris en compte l'ensemble des éléments de preuve dignes de foi et crédibles produits en l'espèce, force m'est de dire que je ne suis pas convaincu qu'avec les forces dont il disposait, Bagambiki aurait pu assurer une meilleure protection aux personnes réfugiées à la préfecture de Cyangugu.[682]

[680] Mémoire en réplique du Procureur, par. 75.
[682] Opinion du Juge Ostrovsky, par. 17.

Le Procureur n'a pas indiqué les possibilités dont disposait Bagambiki pour s'acquitter de ses obligations dans le cadre de la législation nationale rwandaise. Ainsi donc, même si le fait de ne pas s'être acquitté de l'obligation incombant à un préfet rwandais d'assurer la protection de la population dans sa préfecture était susceptible d'engager sa responsabilité en droit pénal international, le Procureur n'a pas établi que l'erreur qu'aurait commise la Chambre de première instance a invalidé sa décision.

345. Par ailleurs, la Chambre d'appel relève que le Procureur n'identifie aucune occasion précise, au titre du présent motif d'appel, où Bagambiki aurait failli à son obligation d'agir.

Aide et encouragement par approbation tacite

346. Le Procureur fait valoir que

> « la connaissance [que Bagambiki] avait de crimes d'une telle envergure et son inaction ou son silence constituent une omission blâmable, une négligence grave ou un comportement équivalant à encourager tacitement, à aider et à encourager la commission de ces crimes ou à y consentir »[683].

Citant le Jugement Aleksovski, le Procureur soutient que lorsqu'un supérieur hiérarchique est au fait des crimes commis par ses subordonnés, son silence ne peut être interprété que comme valant approbation, même s'il n'était pas présent en personne sur le lieu du crime[684].

347. De l'avis de la Chambre d'appel, la distinction doit être faite entre la responsabilité pénale pour omission, qui emporte condamnation en tant qu'auteur principal du crime, et l'aide et l'encouragement à la commission d'un crime par incitation, approbation tacite ou omission, équivalant à une contribution substantielle à la commission du crime. Dans son Acte d'appel, les arguments du Procureur se rapportent exclusivement à la question de la responsabilité pénale pour omission. La question de la responsabilité de Bagambiki pour avoir aidé et encouragé la commission des crimes par approbation tacite n'est soulevée que dans le Mémoire d'appel, sans que le Procureur n'ait sollicité au préalable l'autorisation de modifier ses moyens d'appel[685]. En conséquence, la Chambre d'appel décide de ne pas poursuivre l'examen de cette question.

2. Responsabilité du supérieur hiérarchique en vertu de l'article 6 (3) du Statut

Lien de subordination entre Bagambiki et les gendarmes

348. Le Procureur s'élève contre la conclusion de la Chambre de première instance selon laquelle Bagambiki n'exerçait ni en droit ni en fait une autorité sur les gendarmes. Le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a adopté une définition erronée de la notion de supérieur hiérarchique au sens de l'article 6 (3) du Statut[686].

349. Dans son Acte d'appel, le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en concluant que « [Bagambiki] n'exerçait aucun contrôle effectif sur les gendarmes et les militaires »[687]. Dans son Mémoire d'appel, le Procureur axe son argumentation sur le fait que Bagambiki exerçait un contrôle effectif sur les gendarmes et il en déduit qu'il avait « le pouvoir matériel requis pour empêcher ou punir les crimes commis par les gendarmes qu'il avait réquisitionnés »[688].

La Chambre d'appel va donc se pencher sur la question de la responsabilité de Bagambiki pour les crimes commis par les gendarmes.

350. Le Procureur affirme que

> « la Chambre de première instance a limité la définition de la notion de supérieur à une structure de type militaire, dans laquelle le supérieur peut donner des ordres ou punir ou empêcher des transgressions en délivrant des ordres ou en prenant des mesures disciplinaires »[689].

Le paragraphe du Jugement auquel se réfère le Procureur se lit comme suit :

> Après examen des dispositions applicables de la loi rwandaise, la Chambre n'est pas convaincue que la capacité de Bagambiki de réquisitionner des gendarmes lui donnait de jure le pouvoir de leur donner des ordres pendant l'exécution d'une opération. [...] La loi ne contient aucune disposition indiquant qu'un préfet ait l'autorité légale d'un supérieur hiérarchique d'empêcher un gendarme de commettre un crime en donnant un ordre durant l'exécution d'une opération ou de punir un gendarme qui a commis un crime durant l'exécution d'une opération.[690]

Au paragraphe suivant, la Chambre de première instance s'est attachée à déterminer si Bagambiki exerçait une autorité de fait sur les gendarmes, et a conclu comme suit :

> Bien qu'il y ait de nombreuses preuves que Bagambiki a réquisitionné des gendarmes pour assurer la sécurité d'un certain nombre de sites, il n'est pas établi à suffisance qu'il a maintenu un contrôle quelconque sur la manière dont ces gendarmes menaient leur mission après leur intervention.[691]

Dans ce paragraphe, la Chambre de première instance n'a pas explicitement fait état de la capacité de Bagambiki d'empêcher la commission des crimes ou d'en punir les auteurs, mais sa conclusion doit se lire dans le contexte de la définition générale qu'elle a donnée de la responsabilité du supérieur hiérarchique, à savoir :

> [U]n lien de subordination est établi par la démonstration de l'existence d'un rapport hiérarchique officiel ou non. Le supérieur doit avoir eu le pouvoir ou l'autorité, de jure ou de facto, d'empêcher ou de punir l'infraction commise par ses subordonnés. Le supérieur doit avoir exercé un contrôle effectif sur les subordonnés au moment des faits. Par « contrôle effectif » on entend la capacité matérielle d'empêcher la commission de l'infraction ou d'en punir les auteurs principaux.[692]

Cette définition est conforme aussi bien à la jurisprudence constante du Tribunal de céans qu'à celle du TPIY[693]. En particulier, la Chambre d'appel rappelle la conclusion de la Chambre d'appel du TPIY dans l'affaire Blaškić :

> Les marques d'un contrôle effectif sont davantage une affaire de preuve que de droit substantiel et elles servent seulement à montrer que l'accusé avait le pouvoir de prévenir les crimes, d'en punir les auteurs ou, lorsqu'il convient, de prendre l'initiative d'une action pénale à leur encontre.[694]

351. La définition donnée par la Chambre de première instance et le paragraphe 637 du Jugement indiquent clairement que la Chambre de première instance avait bien considéré que le critère du

352. La Chambre d'appel ne considère pas que la Chambre de première instance ait « subordonné une loi à des instructions ministérielles relatives à la gendarmerie »[696] lorsqu'elle a examiné la question de la position de jure de Bagambiki. L'analyse de la Chambre de première instance englobait non seulement l'instruction ministérielle rwandaise relative au maintien et rétablissement de l'ordre[697], mais aussi le Décret-loi portant création de la gendarmerie[698]. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance aurait également dû prendre en considération la législation rwandaise relative à l'organisation et au fonctionnement de la préfecture, laquelle disposerait que les préfets « ont le devoir général d'assurer la tranquillité, l'ordre et la sécurité des personnes et des biens »[699]. Il ne fait état d'aucune disposition particulière de cette législation à l'appui de son allégation. La Chambre d'appel relève toutefois que l'article 8 (2) de la Loi relative à l'organisation et au fonctionnement de la préfecture fait obligation au préfet d'« assurer la tranquillité, l'ordre et la sécurité des personnes et des biens »[700]. Pour permettre au préfet de s'acquitter de cette obligation, la loi l'habilite à requérir l'intervention des forces armées « conformément à la procédure prévue par le Décret-loi portant création de la gendarmerie »[701]. En d'autres termes, le décret-loi en question a concrétisé les obligations du préfet en faisant état de la loi rwandaise portant création de la gendarmerie, loi que la Chambre de première instance a dûment prise en considération.

353. Le Procureur invoque par ailleurs le paragraphe 78 du Jugement Aleksovski :

> La simple possibilité de transmettre des rapports aux autorités suffit, dès lors que l'autorité civile, de par sa position dans la structure hiérarchique, est supposée agir de la sorte lorsque des exactions sont commises et que, compte tenu de cette position, la probabilité que ces rapports déclenchent l'ouverture d'une enquête ou l'imposition de mesures disciplinaires, voire pénales, est élevée.[702]

En réponse, Bagambiki se réfère à la déposition du témoin expert à charge André Guichaoua, lequel affirme qu'en 1994, les magistrats, à Cyangugu, n'étaient pas en mesure d'assurer correctement les tâches qui leur incombaient : ces personnes > « ne se sont jamais fait une grande réputation pour avoir arrêté ou empêché un assassinat quelconque »[703].

Et Bagambiki d'ajouter :

> « Peut-on également reprocher à [Bagambiki] de ne pas avoir fait rapport au gouvernement intérimaire, dont les membres sont aujourd'hui jugés devant votre Haute juridiction ? »[704].

354. Il appartenait au Procureur de préciser les autorités auxquelles, selon lui, Bagambiki aurait dû faire rapport afin d'empêcher les crimes ou d'en punir les auteurs, ce qu'il n'a pas fait. De l'avis de la Chambre d'appel, la possibilité théorique de signaler les crimes commis à l'encontre des réfugiés tutsis à des autorités qui, elles-mêmes, comme le Procureur l'affirme dans d'autres affaires, ordonnaient et organisaient activement des massacres de Tutsis de par le Rwanda ne suffit pas à établir la responsabilité pénale de Bagambiki.

356. Pour démontrer que Bagambiki exerçait un « contrôle effectif » sur les gendarmes, le Procureur devait rapporter la preuve qu'il avait la capacité matérielle requise pour empêcher ou punir les crimes, ce qu'il n'a pas fait. La Chambre d'appel constate que le Procureur n'a établi l'existence d'aucune erreur dans le raisonnement de la Chambre de première instance quant à la position d'autorité de Bagambiki, de jure ou de facto, vis-à-vis des gendarmes.

357. Le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en ne jugeant pas Bagambiki responsable du massacre de réfugiés civils tutsis à la paroisse de Nyamasheke le 15 avril 1994, massacre auquel avaient participé des membres de la police communale de Kagano[706]. Le Procureur affirme que bien que la Chambre de première instance ait jugé que Bagambiki possédait la qualité de supérieur hiérarchique et exerçait un contrôle effectif sur la police communale de Kagano, elle l'a néanmoins acquitté au motif qu'il n'existait aucune preuve démontrant qu'il était informé de l'attaque[707]. Selon le Procureur, cela « est difficilement conciliable » avec la conclusion de la Chambre de première instance indiquant que Bagambiki, du fait de sa fonction, aurait dû avoir connaissance des différentes attaques[708]. De surcroît, le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a mal interprété le critère « savait ou avait des raisons de savoir » requis par l'article 6 (3) du Statut[709].

358. La Chambre d'appel relève tout d'abord que l'argument selon lequel la Chambre de première instance aurait mal interprété le critère « savait ou avait des raisons de savoir » énoncé à l'article 6 (3) du Statut est soulevé pour la première fois dans le Mémoire d'appel du Procureur. Cet argument n'est du reste pas lié à l'allégation selon laquelle la Chambre de première instance aurait mal interprété la législation rwandaise[710]. Le Procureur n'ayant pas demandé l'autorisation de modifier ses motifs d'appel à l'effet d'inclure cette nouvelle allégation d'erreur[711], la Chambre d'appel décide de ne pas l'examiner.

359. En ce qui concerne la connaissance qu'avait Bagambiki de la participation de ses subordonnés au massacre de la paroisse de Nyamasheke, la Chambre de première instance a constaté ce qui suit :

> Rien n'indique à la Chambre que Bagambiki ait été informé, alors qu'il visitait la paroisse de Nyamasheke avec Kamana et d'autres le 13 avril 1994, que la police de la commune de Kagano participait à l'attaque à cette date. Rien n'indique non plus que Bagambiki ait été informé de l'attaque du 15 avril 1994 à Nyamasheke avant qu'elle n'ait pris fin[.][712]

Elle a poursuivi en soulignant que Bagambiki aurait dû savoir que Kamana, le bourgmestre de Kagano, avait participé à cette attaque. S'agissant de la police communale de Kagano, elle a conclu comme suit :

> La Chambre manque d'éléments de preuve fiables pour déterminer si Bagambiki aurait dû être au courant de la participation de la police de Kagano à l'attaque du 15 avril 1994, vu le nombre limité de témoignages concernant la participation de celle-ci aux attaques contre la paroisse de Nyamasheke et d'attaques auxquelles elle a participé et vu le fait qu'elle n'avait à rendre compte directement au préfet que si ce dernier l'avait spécialement réquisitionnée.[713]

360. La Chambre d'appel estime que le Procureur interprète mal le Jugement lorsqu'il déclare que la Chambre de première instance a conclu qu'« il n'existait aucune preuve démontrant [que Bagambiki] était informé de l'attaque »[714]. En fait, la Chambre de première instance a estimé que Bagambiki était informé de l'attaque, et qu'il avait en conséquence suspendu de ses fonctions le bourgmestre Kamana[715]. Elle n'a pas jugé Bagambiki responsable de l'attaque parce qu'elle manquait d'éléments de preuve fiables indiquant que Bagambiki aurait dû être au courant de la participation de la police communale de Kagano à l'attaque. Le Procureur n'a pas démontré que cette conclusion était déraisonnable.

3. Conclusion

361. Le neuvième motif d'appel du Procureur est rejeté dans son intégralité.

G. NATURE DE LA RESPONSABILITÉ PÉNALE DE SAMUEL IMANISHIMWE POUR LES ÉVÉNEMENTS DE GASHIRABWOBA (10ÈME MOTIF D'APPEL)

362. La Chambre de première instance a reconnu Imanishimwe coupable de génocide (Chef 7 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe), extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité (Chef 10) et violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II (Chef 13) en vertu de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour les actes commis par ses subordonnés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba le 12 avril 1994.

363. Le Procureur soutient que l'engagement de la responsabilité pénale d'Imanishimwe sur le seul fondement de l'article 6 (3) du Statut > « ne reflète pas la véritable nature du rôle et de la participation de celui-ci dans le massacre commis au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba »[716].

[712] Jugement, par. 649.
[713] Jugement, par. 649.
[714] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 382.
[715] Jugement, par. 581 et 586. La Chambre de première instance n'a pas conclu explicitement que Bagambiki était informé de la seconde attaque le 15 avril 1994, mais elle a accepté la déclaration de Bagambiki selon laquelle il avait été informé de l'attaque par le Bourgmestre Kamana et l'avait suspendu parce qu'il n'avait pas été convaincu par ses explications. Jugement, par. 568 et 586.
[716] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 392.

D'après lui, la seule conclusion qu'un juge des faits raisonnable aurait pu tirer des faits établis était qu'Imanishimwe était directement responsable pour avoir ordonné ou, au minimum, pour avoir aidé et encouragé les crimes commis le 12 avril 1994 à Gashirabwoba[717]. Le Procureur soumet également qu'Imanishimwe aurait dû être trouvé responsable au titre de sa participation « à une entreprise criminelle commune à titre de co-auteur en position de donner des ordres »[718]. En somme, le Procureur prétend que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en ne retenant pas la responsabilité pénale d'Imanishimwe sur le fondement de l'article 6 (1) du Statut.

364. En réponse au grief du Procureur, Imanishimwe fait valoir qu'il ne pouvait être condamné pour les faits survenus à Gashirabwoba. D'une part, il soutient que les faits prétendument commis par des militaires à Gashirabwoba le 12 avril 1994 ne sont pas visés dans l'acte d'accusation. D'autre part, il prétend que le Procureur n'a pas apporté la preuve que les militaires qui auraient commis le massacre des réfugiés étaient ses subordonnés[719]. Imanishimwe répète en fait ici les arguments qu'il développe au soutien de ses premier et deuxième motifs d'appel. S'agissant de l'engagement de sa responsabilité pénale sur le fondement de l'article 6 (1), Imanishimwe se contente de déclarer que les arguments développés par le Procureur > « n'ont aucun intérêt, car ils ne présentent aucune preuve de la présence de Samuel Imanishimwe au cours de ce massacre de Gashirabwoba le 12 avril 1994 »[720].

1. Constatations de la Chambre de première instance

365. À l'issue de l'examen des moyens de preuve présentés par les parties sur les événements survenus à Gashirabwoba, la Chambre de première instance est parvenue aux constatations factuelles suivantes :

> 435. […] La Chambre à la majorité, le juge Ostrovsky ayant exprimé son désaccord, estime que le 11 avril 1994, après que les réfugiés eurent repoussé une attaque, Bagambiki, Imanishimwe et des soldats se sont rendus au terrain de football [de Gashirabwoba] entre 14 h 30 et 15 heures et que les réfugiés ont déclaré à Bagambiki subir les attaques d'assaillants des secteurs de Bumazi et Gashirabwoba. […] Vers 19 heures le même jour, des soldats sont retournés au terrain de football et ont demandé aux réfugiés s'ils étaient tous tutsis.
> 437. Sur la base de la déposition du témoin LAC, la Chambre estime de plus que, le 12 avril 1994, la population réfugiée au terrain de football avait presque atteint 3 000 personnes. Ce matin-là, des milliers d'assaillants des zones avoisinantes et de l'usine à thé de Shagasha ont commencé à attaquer les réfugiés au terrain de football. La Chambre à la majorité, le juge Ostrovsky ayant exprimé son désaccord, estime que Bagambiki et Nsabimana, le directeur de l'usine à thé de Shagasha, se sont rendus au terrain de football pendant environ 30 minutes. Sur la base de la déposition du témoin LAC, la majorité considère que Bagambiki a promis d'envoyer des soldats pour protéger les réfugiés. Une heure plus tard, des gardes armés de l'usine à thé et au moins 15 soldats ont encerclé les réfugiés et, après que ceux-ci eurent levé les mains et déclaré vouloir la paix, tiré et jeté des grenades sur ces derniers pendant 30 minutes. Les Interahamwe ont alors achevé les survivants et pillé leurs affaires personnelles.

> 439. […] La Chambre relève que le témoin LAC, dont elle a accepté la déposition, n'a pas vu Bagambiki ou Imanishimwe au terrain de football juste avant que les soldats n'attaquent.

366. La Chambre d'appel note que la Chambre de première instance indique au paragraphe 624 du Jugement qu'elle examinera la responsabilité pénale individuelle d'Imanishimwe > « soit en tant que supérieur hiérarchique sur la base de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, soit pour avoir 'ordonné' la commission de crimes sur la base de l'article 6 (1) du Statut ».

Quelques paragraphes plus loin, la Chambre de première instance semble étendre le champ de l'analyse en déclarant vouloir apprécier la nature et la forme de responsabilité pénale et de participation de chacun des accusés « au regard des articles 2 (3) et 6 (1)du Statut »[721].

367. Sur la base de ses constatations factuelles, la Chambre de première instance a retenu les conclusions juridiques suivantes s'agissant de la responsabilité pénale d'Imanishimwe :

> 653. La Chambre a constaté que, le 12 avril 1994, des militaires ont participé à l'attaque de réfugiés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba. La Chambre ne dispose pas de preuves fiables suffisantes pour conclure qu'Imanishimwe a ordonné aux soldats placés sous ses ordres de prendre part à l'attaque au sens de l'article 6 (1) du statut. [non souligné dans l'original]
>
> 654. La Chambre considère cependant qu'Imanishimwe était au courant ou aurait dû être au courant de la participation des militaires placés sous ses ordres à l'attaque au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba. Pour conclure ainsi, la Chambre rappelle qu'Imanishimwe se trouvait au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba le 11 avril 1994 et qu'en conséquence il avait parfaitement conscience de la présence de réfugiés et de la situation difficile qui était la leur. Les militaires placés sous ses ordres revinrent plus tard dans la soirée pour vérifier si les réfugiés étaient tous tutsis. Le 12 avril 1994, au moins 15 militaires ont encerclé les réfugiés et les ont tués après que ceux-ci eurent déclaré vouloir la paix. Compte tenu de la taille relativement petite du camp, du contrôle exercé par Imanishimwe sur ses soldats et des contacts réguliers qu'il avait avec les militaires placés sous ses ordres, stationnés en dehors du camp, la Chambre ne peut accepter que 15 militaires ou plus aient participé à une telle attaque systématique et de grande échelle sans que leur commandant ne le sache. La Chambre relève que rien n'indique qu'Imanishimwe ait pris quelque mesure que ce soit afin d'empêcher l'attaque ou de punir tout militaire du camp de Karambo pour y avoir participé. Dès lors, la Chambre considère qu'Imanishimwe peut être reconnu pénalement responsable, au regard de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, des actes de ses subordonnés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba.[722]
>
> 695. La majorité ayant décidé qu'Imanishimwe a engagé sa responsabilité pénale pour génocide en sa qualité de supérieur hiérarchique en vertu de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, la Chambre conclut qu'il n'est pas coupable du chef 8 de l'acte d'accusation établi à son encontre pour complicité dans le génocide, qui est fondé sur les mêmes faits que le chef 7, et ne le considère pas comme pénalement responsable au regard de l'article 6 (3) du Statut.[723]

368. La Chambre d'appel note que, pour ce qui est de Gashirabwoba, la Chambre de première instance ne se prononce explicitement que sur la responsabilité d'Imanishimwe en tant que supérieur hiérarchique et pour avoir ordonné les crimes. Toutefois, il ressort de ses conclusions sur l'ensemble des allégations portées contre Imanishimwe que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas limité le champ de son examen à ces deux seules formes de responsabilité pénale. Force est par exemple de constater la déclaration de culpabilité prononcée contre Imanishimwe pour avoir aidé et encouragé les actes de torture et de traitements cruels perpétrés au camp de Karambo[724]. De l'avis de la Chambre d'appel, le silence de la Chambre de première instance s'agissant de Gashirabwoba sur les autres formes de responsabilité pénale s'explique par la nature même de ses constatations factuelles : de toute évidence, la Chambre de première instance considérait qu'aucune autre forme de responsabilité pénale que celles envisagées dans le corps du Jugement n'était à même de décrire le comportement criminel de l'accusé.

[722] Voir aussi Jugement, par. 691 : « la Chambre considère Imanishimwe comme pénalement responsable, au regard de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, des actes commis par ses subordonnés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba car il n'a pas empêché la perpétration du crime. La Chambre rappelle aussi qu'Imanishimwe n'a puni aucun militaire pour cette attaque, ce qui démontre d'autant plus qu'il approuvait la participation des militaires au massacre. » ; par. 694 : « La Chambre est convaincue au-delà de tout doute raisonnable qu'Imanishimwe voit sa responsabilité pénale engagée au regard de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour génocide car il n'a pas empêché le meurtre de membres du groupe ethnique tutsi par ses subordonnés lors des faits survenus au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba le 12 avril 1994 ».

369. Il s'agit à présent pour la Chambre d'appel de déterminer si, à la lumière des constatations factuelles de la Chambre de première instance, cette dernière a versé dans l'erreur en retenant la responsabilité pénale d'Imanishimwe pour les événements de Gashirabwoba sur le seul fondement de l'article 6 (3) du Statut.

2. Responsabilité pour participation à une entreprise criminelle commune

370. Le Procureur avance qu'Imanishimwe aurait dû être trouvé coupable en tant que « co-auteur en position de donner des ordres »[725] des crimes commis à Gashirabwoba du fait de sa participation à une entreprise criminelle commune.

371. La Chambre d'appel rappelle avoir conclu plus haut que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas commis d'erreur en décidant d'écarter de son examen la responsabilité pour participation à une entreprise criminelle commune au motif que le Procureur n'avait pas plaidé ladite forme de responsabilité dans l'acte d'accusation[726]. Partant, la Chambre d'appel considère que le Procureur n'est pas fondé à invoquer ici cette forme de responsabilité. La Chambre d'appel n'examinera donc pas plus avant les arguments du Procureur développés à cet égard.

3. Responsabilité pour avoir ordonné la commission des crimes

372. Le Procureur soutient qu'Imanishimwe aurait dû voir sa responsabilité pénale engagée en vertu de l'article 6 (1) du Statut pour avoir ordonné la tuerie perpétrée au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba. Le Procureur affirme que la Chambre de première instance aurait dû déduire de l'ensemble des éléments de preuve qu'Imanishimwe n'avait pas « simplement approuvé » la participation de ses soldats à la tuerie mais avait au contraire « ordonné celle-ci »[727]. Il rappelle, à l'appui de sa thèse, que « [l]e fait qu'un ordre ait été donné peut être établi par des éléments de preuve conjecturaux » et que

> « [t]outes les formes de responsabilité pénale peuvent être établies au moyen de preuves directes ou indirectes »[728].

Or, selon lui, il ressort clairement de l'ensemble des conclusions factuelles de la Chambre de première instance que les soldats n'auraient pas participé au massacre de Gashirabwoba

[726] Voir supra, par. 45.
[727] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 403. Le Procureur cite le passage suivant du Jugement Galić, par. 170 : « Lorsqu'une personne en situation d'autorité est tenue de réprimer le comportement illégal de ses subordonnés alors qu'elle en a connaissance, et qu'elle ne fait rien pour mettre un terme à leurs agissements, on est en droit de conclure que cette personne a, par ses actes positifs ou ses omissions coupables, directement pris part, suivant les modalités envisagées à l'article 7 (1) du Statut, à la perpétration des crimes en question ».
[728] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 402, citant Jugement Galić, par. 171, et Jugement Blaškić, par. 281.

« sans en avoir reçu l'ordre exprès d'Imanishimwe ou, à tout le moins, sans une quelconque forme d'assistance de sa part »[729], la Chambre ayant notamment établi qu'Imanishimwe exerçait un contrôle effectif sur les soldats du camp de Karambo, qu'il leur avait donné des ordres illégaux ayant entraîné sa condamnation sur la base de l'article 6 (1) pour d'autres crimes commis au cours de la même période que celle du massacre, et qu'un massacre d'une telle envergure n'aurait pas pu se produire sans qu'il n'en ait eu connaissance[730].

373. Sur cette question, la Chambre de première instance a considéré ne pas disposer de preuves fiables suffisantes pour conclure qu'Imanishimwe avait ordonné aux soldats placés sous ces ordres de prendre part à l'attaque au sens de l'article 6 (1) du Statut[731].

374. La Chambre d'appel a plusieurs fois eu l'occasion de rappeler les éléments constitutifs de cette forme de responsabilité :

l'élément matériel (ou actus reus) est constitué quand une personne, usant de sa position d'autorité, donne l'ordre[732] à une autre personne de commettre un crime ;

l'élément moral (ou mens rea) requis est établi lorsque cette personne a agi avec l'intention directe de donner l'ordre[733].

375. En appliquant ces critères juridiques aux conclusions factuelles de la Chambre de première instance, la Chambre d'appel ne considère pas que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur dans ses conclusions juridiques. Les éléments de preuve présentés à la Chambre de première instance n'établissent pas qu'Imanishimwe ait, d'une façon ou d'une autre, explicitement ou implicitement, donné instruction à ses subordonnés d'attaquer les tutsis réfugiés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba. Partant, la Chambre de première instance était fondée à conclure que la responsabilité d'Imanishimwe ne pouvait être engagée pour avoir « ordonné » les crimes commis le 12 avril 1994 à Gashirabwoba. Ce moyen d'appel est rejeté.

4. Responsabilité pour avoir aidé et encouragé la commission des crimes

376. Enfin, le Procureur allègue que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur en omettant de considérer la question de savoir si Imanishimwe était pénalement responsable en application de l'article 6 (1) du Statut pour avoir aidé et encouragé la tuerie perpétrée à Gashirabwoba le 12 avril 1994[734]. Un tribunal raisonnable, prétend-il, « aurait, au minimum, jugé que Imanishimwe avait aidé et encouragé le massacre des réfugiés tutsis au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba le 12 avril 1994 en sachant que ses soldats allaient participer à cette attaque et en les autorisant à le faire »[735].

Le Procureur soutient que l'élément matériel de l'aide et encouragement est en l'espèce constitué par l'omission d'Imanishimwe d'empêcher ses soldats de se rendre à Gashirabwoba, omission qui a eu un effet décisif sur leur capacité à participer à l'attaque[736]. Il prétend en outre qu'Imanishimwe [733] Arrêt Kordić et Cerkez, par. 29. La Chambre d'appel note que, dans l'Arrêt Blaskić, la Chambre d'appel du TPIY est parvenue à la conclusion qu'un type d'élément moral autre que l'intention directe pouvait être retenu, à savoir le fait d'ordonner « un acte ou une omission en ayant conscience de la réelle probabilité qu'un crime soit commis au cours de l'exécution de cet ordre » : Arrêt Blaskić, par. 42.

[734] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 406.
[735] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 407.
[736] Mémoire d'appel du Procureur, par. 408. Au soutien de son raisonnement, le Procureur cite le Jugement Blaškić, par. 284 : « l'élément matériel de la complicité par aide ou encouragement peut être commis par omission, à condition que cette possédait la connaissance requise pour être considéré comme ayant aidé et encouragé la tuerie de Gashirabwoba[737], la Chambre de première instance ayant jugé qu'il avait connaissance ou aurait dû avoir connaissance de la participation de ses militaires à l'attaque[738].

377. La Chambre d'appel observe que la Chambre de première instance ne s'est pas explicitement prononcée sur la question de savoir si la responsabilité pénale d'Imanishimwe pouvait être engagée pour avoir aidé et encouragé les crimes commis au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba le 12 avril 1994. Pour autant, la Chambre d'appel n'en conclut pas que la Chambre de première instance a omis d'examiner cette forme de responsabilité. Il ressort en effet de l'ensemble des conclusions juridiques dégagées par la Chambre de première instance que cette forme de responsabilité a été considérée, et même retenue lorsque les faits s'y prêtaient. La Chambre d'appel interprète le silence de la Chambre de première instance comme indication de ce qu'il n'était pas établi que la conduite de l'accusé pouvait être qualifiée d'aide et encouragement en l'espèce[739].

378. Partant, il s'agit pour la Chambre d'appel de se demander si cette conclusion est de celles auxquelles un juge raisonnable des faits pouvait parvenir.

379. Pour établir l'élément matériel (ou actus reus) de l'aide et encouragement envisagé à l'article 6 (1) du Statut, il faut prouver que l'accusé a commis des actes qui visent spécifiquement à assister, favoriser ou fournir un soutien moral[740] à la perpétration d'un crime spécifique et que ce soutien a eu un effet important sur la perpétration du crime. La Chambre d'appel ajoute que cet élément matériel peut, dans certaines circonstances, être constitué par une omission[741]. L'élément moral (ou mens rea) requis est le fait pour l'accusé de savoir que ses actes contribuent à la perpétration d'un crime précis par l'auteur principal[742].

380. En l'espèce, la Chambre de première instance a estimé qu'il n'était pas établi que l'accusé ait ordonné, ni n'ait été présent lors de l'attaque lancée à Gashirabwoba le 12 avril 1994[743]. En revanche, elle a conclu que les militaires responsables de l'attaque ne pouvaient y avoir participé sans que leur supérieur, Samuel Imanishimwe, ne le sache[744]. Le fait qu'il n'ait puni aucun des militaires incriminés démontrait, pour la Chambre de première instance, qu'Imanishimwe « approuvait la participation des militaires au massacre »[745].

381. Au préalable, la Chambre d'appel souhaite préciser que la preuve de la présence d'Imanishimwe au cours du massacre n'était pas nécessaire en l'espèce, contrairement à ce que prétend ce dernier[746]. La Chambre d'appel du TPIY a été amenée à préciser que celui qui aide et encourage peut apporter sa contribution, avant, pendant ou après la perpétration du crime, et à une certaine distance du lieu du crime[747]. La Chambre d'appel fait siennes ces conclusions et considère que l'argument d'Imanishimwe est dénué de pertinence.

[740] La Chambre d'appel note que les termes « assist, encourage or lend moral support » employés originellement par la Chambre d'appel dans les Arrêts Tadić (par. 229), Aleksovski (par. 163), Vasiljević (par. 102) et Blaskić (par. 45) ont été traduits par « aider, encourager ou fournir un soutien moral » dans les versions françaises desdits arrêts. La Chambre d'appel estime que cette traduction est susceptible d'induire le lecteur en erreur vu que l'expression « aiding and abetting » est traduite dans la version française du Statut par « aidé et encouragé ».

382. La Chambre d'appel estime que les faits tels que constatés par la Chambre de première instance n'obligaient pas un juge raisonnable des faits à retenir la responsabilité pénale d'Imanishimwe pour aide et encouragement à la commission des crimes de génocide, extermination et meurtres perpétrés à Gashirabwoba.

383. Si la Chambre de première instance conclut qu'Imanishimwe a « approuvé » la participation de ses militaires au massacre, elle n'établit pas que cette approbation a eu un quelconque effet, a fortiori un effet important, sur la perpétration du crime. En effet, un juge des faits raisonnable n'aurait pu conclure sur la base des éléments de preuve que l'approbation dont il est question avait été perçue par les militaires impliqués dans le massacre, tout comme il n'aurait pu établir dans quelle mesure elle avait pu influer sur lesdits militaires. Dans ces circonstances, il ne peut être fait grief à la Chambre de première instance de ne pas avoir retenu la responsabilité d'Imanishimwe pour avoir aidé ou encouragé les auteurs du massacre.

384. Le Procureur avance que l'omission d'Imanishimwe d'empêcher ses soldats de se rendre à Gashirabwoba a eu un effet décisif sur leur capacité à participer à l'attaque. La Chambre d'appel considère que les constatations de la Chambre de première instance ne permettent pas d'établir que l'omission d'Imanishimwe visait spécifiquement à offrir à ses soldats la possibilité d'aller perpétrer le massacre, ni qu'il avait connaissance de l'assistance qu'il leur apportait. Par ailleurs, le Procureur ne démontre pas qu'aucun juge du fait raisonnable n'aurait pu manquer de parvenir à de telles conclusions sur la base des éléments de preuve admis par la Chambre de première instance.

385. La Chambre d'appel considère que le Procureur n'est pas parvenu à démontrer que la Chambre de première instance avait commis une erreur en refusant de conclure que Samuel Imanishimwe avait agi ou omis d'agir – par exemple, en ne retenant pas ses soldats – en connaissance de ce que son acte ou omission assisterait, favoriserait ou fournirait un soutien moral[748] à la perpétration de crimes contre les personnes réfugiées au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba. La Chambre d'appel conclut par conséquent qu'il n'a pas démontré que la Chambre de première instance avait versé dans l'erreur en rejetant cette forme de responsabilité pour qualifier la participation d'Imanishimwe au massacre du 12 avril 1994.

5. Conclusion

386. Au vu de ce qui précède, la Chambre d'appel conclut que le Procureur n'est pas parvenu à démontrer que la Chambre de première instance avait versé dans l'erreur en refusant d'engager sur la base de ses constatations factuelles la responsabilité individuelle pénale de Samuel Imanishimwe sur le fondement de l'article 6 (1) du Statut pour avoir ordonné ou aidé et encouragé la perpétration du massacre de Gashirabwoba. La Chambre d'appel a décliné de considérer la question de la responsabilité d'Imanishimwe pour participation à une entreprise criminelle commune dans la mesure où Imanishimwe n'était pas informé de ce que le Procureur entendait plaider cette forme de responsabilité à son encontre. La Chambre d'appel rejette toutes les branches de ce motif d'appel.

IV. L'Appel de Samuel Imanishimwe

A. Responsabilité du supérieur hiérarchique au titre de l'article 6 (3) du Statut (2ème motif d'appel)

387. Au titre de ce deuxième motif d'appel, Imanishimwe allègue que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en retenant sa responsabilité de supérieur hiérarchique aux termes de l'article 6 (3) du Statut sans que ne soit établi que les militaires qui auraient perpétré le massacre des réfugiés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba relevaient de son autorité[749].

388. La Chambre d'appel ayant fait droit au premier motif d'appel de Samuel Imanishimwe et ayant, en conséquence, décidé d'annuler les déclarations de culpabilité prononcées contre Imanishimwe en vertu de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour les faits survenus au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba, le présent motif d'appel devient sans objet et, comme tel, ne requiert pas l'examen de la Chambre d'appel.

B. CONDAMNATION SUR LA BASE DE L'ARTICLE 4 DU STATUT (4ÈME MOTIF D'APPEL)

389. La Chambre de première instance a reconnu Imanishimwe coupable de violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II au titre des articles 6 (1) et 6 (3) du Statut (Chef 13 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe) pour des faits perpétrés au camp de Karambo et au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba. Pour quatrième motif d'appel, Imanishimwe demande à la Chambre d'appel d'infirmer la condamnation prononcée au titre de l'article 4 (a) du Statut pour les faits commis à Gashirabwoba[750]. Il prétend que la Chambre de première instance « a brillé par sa partialité et sa complaisance »[751] en fondant sa « culpabilité s'agissant des événements de Gashirabwoba sur une relation parcellaire des faits »[752]. Il soutient aussi que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas démontré l'existence du lien de connexité entre les faits allégués et le conflit armé[753].

C. APPRÉCIATION DES ÉLÉMENTS DE PREUVE RELATIFS AU CAMP MILITAIRE DE KARAMBO (5ÈME MOTIF D'APPEL)

391. Dans son cinquième motif d'appel, Imanishimwe soulève deux erreurs, de droit et de fait, se rapportant à des éléments de preuve relatifs aux faits survenus au camp de Karambo. Imanishimwe avance, d'une part, que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur dans l'appréciation, partiale selon lui, de la crédibilité des témoins entendus. Il soutient, d'autre part, que la Chambre de première instance s'est contentée de spéculations et de déductions pour conclure à sa responsabilité, lui niant ainsi le bénéfice de la présomption d'innocence.

1. Crédibilité des témoins

392. Imanishimwe fait grief à la Chambre de première instance d'avoir refusé d'accorder tout crédit aux témoins militaires à décharge[754]. Il dénonce l'insuffisance du motif invoqué par la Chambre de première instance pour écarter le témoignage de ces témoins oculaires dont les déclarations ont été [752] Mémoire d'appel d'Imanishimwe, titre 4.1, p. 63.

[754] Bien qu'ils ne soient pas spécifiquement désignés dans le Mémoire d'appel d'Imanishimwe, la Chambre d'appel considère qu'Imanishimwe vise particulièrement ici les témoins PNC, PNE, PKB, PCC, PCD et PCE.

corroborées par quatre autres témoins – PNF, PBA, PNB et Essono –, qui eux, ne sont pas militaires[755]. Il soumet que l'argument de la Chambre de première instance selon lequel les témoins militaires sont biaisés parce qu'intéressés aurait également dû, s'il était opérant, s'appliquer aux Témoins LI, MG, MA, LCJ et LAC présentés par le Procureur comme les victimes des actes dont la responsabilité est attribuée à Imanishimwe[756].

393. Imanishimwe reproche corrélativement à la Chambre de première instance d'avoir accordé trop de crédit aux Témoins LI et MG[757]. S'agissant du Témoin LI, Imanishimwe soumet que le caractère invraisemblable de sa déclaration jette un doute sur sa présence au camp de Karambo au moment des faits qu'il prétendait décrire et il reproche à la Chambre de première instance d'avoir ignoré le témoignage apporté par le témoin à décharge Essono, établissant selon lui « la grossièreté du récit de LI »[758]. S'agissant du Témoin MG, Imanishimwe soutient que plusieurs de ses allégations ont été contredites par le témoin à décharge PNB et que la Chambre de première instance a toutefois indûment ignoré cette déposition[759].

394. Dans son Mémoire en réponse, le Procureur fait valoir que les allégations d'Imanishimwe sont mal fondées et qu'il n'a pas démontré qu'aucun juge des faits raisonnable n'aurait pu parvenir à des conclusions similaires[760]. Il ajoute qu'Imanishimwe s'est plutôt contenté de proposer des variantes de conclusions auxquelles la Chambre de première instance aurait pu parvenir[761]. Le Procureur répond en outre que la Chambre n'a pas écarté les témoignages des témoins à décharge en bloc ou du fait de leur statut de complice mais qu'elle a procédé à un examen équilibré des témoignages à charge et à décharge, selon une démarche équitable et rationnelle[762]. Le Procureur allègue par ailleurs qu'Imanishimwe a manqué d'établir que la Chambre de première instance n'avait pas tenu compte des dépositions des Témoins PFN, PBA, PNG et Essono[763]; il prétend qu'au contraire la Chambre de première instance a pris en considération l'ensemble des éléments de preuve de manière explicite[764] alors qu'elle n'était pas tenue d'exposer dans le détail les raisons qui l'avaient conduite à admettre ou à rejeter un témoignage[765].

395. En réplique, Imanishimwe allègue que la Chambre de première instance a appliqué un traitement plus favorable aux témoins à charge qu'aux témoins à décharge (1) en ne déclarant pas « intéressés » les Témoins LI, MA et MG alors que l'origine tutsie de ces témoins et « la nécessité de se venger contre les accusés d'origine Hutu […] rendaient intéressés leur[s] témoignages »[766] ; (2) en rejetant abusivement les témoignages à décharge et en particulier celui d'Essono au motif que le temps écoulé discréditait ce témoin[767].

396. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que l'admissibilité des éléments de preuve est régie par l'article 89 (C) du Règlement qui dispose que

> « [l]a Chambre peut recevoir tout élément de preuve pertinent dont elle estime qu'il a valeur probante ».

Par ailleurs, au fil de leur jurisprudence, le Tribunal et le TPIY ont dégagé un certain nombre de principes directeurs relatifs à l'appréciation des éléments de preuve en fonction de leur nature.

397. Concernant les éléments de preuve directe prenant la forme de déclarations faites par des témoins à l'audience, leur crédibilité doit être présumée au moment de leur admission ; le fait que ces déclarations soient recueillies sous serment et que leurs auteurs puissent être contre interrogés constituant à ce stade des indices suffisants de fiabilité. La décision de leur admissibilité ne préjuge néanmoins aucunement du poids et de la crédibilité que la Chambre de première instance attribuera ultérieurement à ce moyen de preuve, selon son appréciation souveraine. En ce sens, la Chambre d'appel du TPIY a récemment eu l'occasion de rappeler que :

> Determinations as to the credibility of witnesses are bound up in the weight afforded to their evidence, as is readily apparent from any Trial Judgement.[768]

399. Il ressort de la lecture des comptes rendus d'audience que la crédibilité des témoins militaires à décharge a été testée lors de leur contre-interrogatoire par le Procureur[769]. La crédibilité de ces témoins n'a pas été appréciée de manière fragmentaire par la Chambre de première instance. Celle-ci, ayant entendu l'ensemble des témoins à charge et à décharge, a retenu certaines parties des dépositions des témoins militaires cités par Imanishimwe – nommément les Témoins PNC, PNE, PKB, PCE et Essono – portant notamment sur l'agencement du camp de Karambo[770]. Elle n'a toutefois pas estimé crédibles celles des déclarations de ces mêmes témoins « selon lesquelles aucun soldat n'a jamais été amené ni maltraité (sic) au camp »[771]. Ce faisant, elle a spécifié qu'elle estimait que ces témoins n'étaient « pas crédibles sur ce point »[772] et en a exposé la justification :

400. Concernant plus spécifiquement le reproche fait par Imanishimwe à la Chambre de première instance d'avoir ignoré le témoignage apporté par le Témoin à décharge Essono établissant, selon lui, [772] Jugement, par. 399 (non souligné dans l'original).

[773] Jugement, par. 399.

401. S'agissant du Témoin PNB, la Chambre d'appel observe que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas négligé de prendre en compte sa déposition ; elle a plutôt mis en balance les dépositions des Témoins MG et PNB et a estimé que celle de MG était plus probante, ainsi qu'il ressort clairement du Jugement[778].

402. La Chambre d'appel est d'avis que la Chambre de première instance a appliqué le même traitement aux témoins à décharge et aux témoins à charge LI et MG en appréciant leur crédibilité. C'est au terme d'un examen pondéré, à l'aune de l'ensemble des déclarations à charge et à décharge, et parce que les témoignages de LI et MG se corroboraient[779] que la Chambre de première instance a retenu leur crédibilité sur les points spécifiques de l'incarcération et des mauvais traitements infligés à des civils à différents moments entre avril et juillet 1994 par les militaires au camp de Karambo.

403. Pour les raisons susmentionnées, la Chambre d'appel considère que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas appliqué un traitement différent dans l'appréciation de la crédibilité des témoins, et qu'elle n'a dès lors pas commis d'erreur à ce titre.

2. Violation de la présomption d'innocence

404. Dans son Mémoire d'appel, Imanishimwe conteste la démarche déductive adoptée par la Chambre de première instance, qui équivaut selon lui à appliquer à Imanishimwe une présomption de culpabilité[780]. Il relève pour étayer cet argument plusieurs conclusions auxquelles la Chambre de première instance serait parvenue « par spéculation » et sans preuves suffisantes ou en dépit de preuves contradictoires : (1) la présence d'Imanishimwe lors de la rafle du 6 juin 1994 à Kamembe[781]; (2) l'ordre donné par Imanishimwe à ses militaires de tuer MG et sa famille[782] ; et (3) la responsabilité d'Imanishimwe pour le meurtre prétendu du frère du Témoin LI et un ancien camarade de classe, ainsi que la sœur du Témoin MG et de sa compagne de cellule Mbembe[783].

405. Imanishimwe dénonce « l'absurdité » des deux conclusions à laquelle la Chambre de première instance est parvenue en appliquant cette démarche déductive et selon lesquelles : (1) les militaires auraient tenté de faire assassiner MG et sa famille par des Interahamwe alors qu'ils auraient pu le faire eux-mêmes[784] ; (2) les militaires du camp de Karambo, moins nombreux et affaiblis physiquement, commandés par le lieutenant Imanishimwe, seraient allés extraire des personnes se trouvant à la gendarmerie commandée par un Lieutenant-colonel et dotée d'hommes en meilleure forme physique et bénéficiant d'une meilleure logistique[785].

406. Le Procureur répond que la Chambre de première instance avait > « toute latitude pour faire fond sur des preuves circonstancielles ou pour tirer des déductions raisonnables à partir de circonstances données »[786].

Il prétend qu'Imanishimwe n'a pas démontré que la Chambre de première instance avait tiré des conclusions déraisonnables, ni en quoi la démarche déductive adoptée par elle équivalait à une violation du principe de la présomption d'innocence. Il ajoute qu'Imanishimwe a procédé à tort à une lecture fragmentée du Jugement[787] alors que la Chambre de première instance a dûment appliqué une démarche conforme à la jurisprudence constante du Tribunal et consistant à examiner d'abord la preuve à charge, à en apprécier la fiabilité, puis à examiner la preuve à décharge ; cette dernière n'ayant pas suffi à faire naître un doute raisonnable dans les circonstances de l'espèce[788].

407. La Chambre d'appel rappelle que la Chambre de première instance dispose d'un pouvoir discrétionnaire dans le choix de la méthode d'évaluation des éléments de preuve qu'elle estime la plus adéquate dans les circonstances de l'espèce[789]. Ce n'est que

408. La Chambre d'appel rappelle ses conclusions relatives à la méthode d'évaluation des éléments de preuve circonstancielle[791]. S'agissant de la démarche déductive comme méthode d'évaluation des éléments de preuve circonstancielle, elle renvoie à ses développements précédents selon lesquels le niveau de preuve requis – la preuve au-delà de tout doute raisonnable – exige que l'on ne puisse conclure à la culpabilité de l'accusé à partir d'éléments de preuve circonstancielle que s'il s'agit de la seule déduction raisonnable possible vu les éléments de preuve disponibles. La même exigence doit s'appliquer pour déduire des éléments de preuve disponibles l'existence d'un fait dont dépend la culpabilité de l'accusé ainsi que pour déduire une conclusion dont dépend la culpabilité de l'accusé, à partir de plusieurs conclusions factuelles distinctes[792].

409. La Chambre d'appel va à présent examiner les conclusions spécifiques contestées par Imanishimwe.

410. La Chambre de première instance a conclu à la présence d'Imanishimwe lors de l'opération de ratissage du 6 juin 1994 à Kamembe sur la base du témoignage de MG[793], qu'elle a estimé crédible. La Chambre d'appel relève que pour contester cette conclusion, Imanishimwe avance que la Chambre n'a pas pris en considération (1) la description donnée par les témoins à décharge, dont Bagambiki, selon laquelle la rafle a été organisée par les autorités civiles compétentes avec l'appui de la gendarmerie et (2) le Décret-loi portant création de la Gendarmerie Nationale du Rwanda du 23 janvier 1974[794]. Sur ce second point, Imanishimwe soutient plus particulièrement que la rafle du 6 juin 1994 s'est déroulée conformément audit décret-loi, c'est-à-dire, selon lui, sous la direction du Commandant du groupement de gendarmerie de Cyangugu[795].

411. La Chambre d'appel observe en premier lieu qu'Imanishimwe ne cite que Bagambiki comme témoin à décharge dont la description infirmerait la conclusion de la présence d'Imanishimwe lors de l'opération de ratissage au marché de Kamembe, sans spécifier la portion du témoignage venant au soutien de sa contestation. La Chambre d'appel note au surplus qu'Imanishimwe ne précise pas en quoi la description des témoins à décharge prouverait que la présence d'Imanishimwe lors de la rafle du 6 juin 1994 n'était pas établie au-delà de tout doute raisonnable. Elle relève par ailleurs qu'Imanishimwe ne démontre pas non plus, par sa référence abstraite au décret-loi de 1974 et en l'absence d'allégation développée, que la Chambre de première instance aurait pu raisonnablement parvenir à une conclusion différente lorsqu'elle a estimé qu'Imanishimwe était présent lors de la rafle du 6 juin 1994.

412. Le défaut de précision et de clarté de cet argument et des références aux parties du dossier d'appel évoquées par Imanishimwe ne permettent pas à la Chambre d'appel d'établir que la Chambre de première instance aurait pu raisonnablement parvenir à une autre conclusion que celle de la présence d'Imanishimwe lors de l'opération de ratissage sur le marché de Kamembe le 6 juin 1994.

L'ordre donné par Imanishimwe à ses militaires de tuer MG et sa famille lors du trajet vers la gendarmerie

413. Afin d'apprécier si la conclusion de la Chambre de première instance selon laquelle Imanishimwe avait donné l'ordre à ses militaires de tuer MG et sa famille devait être établie au-delà de tout doute raisonnable, il convient de déterminer préalablement si l'ordre en question est un « fait dont dépend la culpabilité de l'accusé ». Dans cette optique, la Chambre d'appel constate que, par cet argument, Imanishimwe conteste les déclarations de culpabilité prononcées à son encontre sur la base de l'article 6 (1) du Statut pour assassinat, torture, emprisonnement, tous trois constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité et pour violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II.

414. Une lecture attentive de la partie du Jugement consacrée aux conclusions juridiques retenues par la Chambre de première instance permet de repérer plusieurs mentions de l'ordre – déduit par la Chambre de première instance – donné par Imanishimwe de tuer MG et sa famille sur le trajet vers la gendarmerie. Une première mention apparaît au paragraphe 656 du Jugement, dans le cadre de l'analyse de la responsabilité d'Imanishimwe : elle participe, avec d'autres constatations, à la conclusion de la Chambre de première instance selon laquelle

Une seconde mention ressort du paragraphe 686 du Jugement lors de l'examen par la Chambre des faits constitutifs de génocide. Il est encore fait mention de l'ordre contesté aux paragraphes 735 et 789 du Jugement, dans le cadre de l'analyse des faits constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité et de violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II, respectivement.

[795] Mémoire d'appel d'Imanishimwe, par. 173.
[796] Jugement, par. 656.

415. La Chambre d'appel relève d'emblée que la Chambre de première instance mentionne l'ordre contesté par Imanishimwe dans ce qui peut être considéré comme un récapitulatif liminaire[797], avant analyse des actes spécifiques constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité.

416. La Chambre d'appel constate que, pour déclarer Imanishimwe coupable de crime contre l'humanité prenant la forme d'assassinats en vertu de l'article 6 (1) du Statut, la Chambre de première instance s'est précisément fondée sur le meurtre du frère du Témoin LI et d'un de ses anciens camarades de classe, de la sœur du Témoin MG et de sa compagne de cellule Mbembe[798]. Elle ne s'est pas appuyée sur l'attaque du Témoin MG et de sa famille lors de leur transfert de la place du marché de Kamembe vers la gendarmerie, d'où il ressort que l'ordre prétendument donné par Imanishimwe ne constituait pas un fait dont dépendait sa culpabilité pour ce chef. Partant, la Chambre d'appel considère que la Chambre de première instance n'était pas tenue d'établir ce fait au-delà de tout doute raisonnable.

417. S'agissant de la déclaration de culpabilité pour crimes contre l'humanité prenant la forme d'emprisonnement en vertu de l'article 6 (1) du Statut, la Chambre d'appel est d'avis qu'un ordre visant l'incarcération doit être distingué d'un ordre visant l'assassinat. Si le premier est clairement prohibé sous le chef d'emprisonnement constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, le second ne saurait être considéré à ce titre et relève bien plutôt de l'assassinat en tant que crime contre l'humanité. La Chambre de première instance a reconnu Imanishimwe coupable du chef d'emprisonnement constitutif de crime contre l'humanité en constatant

Cette conclusion, sans rapport avec l'attaque de MG et sa famille par les militaires juste après la rafle du marché de Kamembe, n'a pas été tirée sur la base de l'ordre contesté par Imanishimwe et la culpabilité d'Imanishimwe pour le crime d'emprisonnement ne reposait pas sur cet ordre.

418. Pour conclure à la culpabilité d'Imanishimwe pour le chef de crimes contre l'humanité prenant la forme de torture, la Chambre de première instance a tenu pour établi que des militaires qui se trouvaient sous le contrôle effectif d'Imanishimwe avaient « maltraité parfois en sa présence sept réfugiés placés sous leur garde après leur arrestation près de la cathédrale de Cyangugu le 11 avril 1994 »[800] et qu'ils « avaient sévèrement battu en sa présence le témoin MG et un autre détenu »[801], se référant ainsi explicitement à des mauvais traitements infligés dans l'enceinte du camp de Karambo. En outre, là encore, les mauvais traitements infligés constituent un acte distinct d'assassinat. Pour le chef de torture constitutive de crime contre l'humanité, comme pour ceux précédemment évoqués, la Chambre d'appel ne peut considérer l'ordre intimé par Imanishimwe de tuer MG et sa famille comme un fait dont dépendait la culpabilité d'Imanishimwe.

419. La Chambre d'appel estime que le même raisonnement doit s'appliquer à la déclaration de culpabilité prononcée à l'encontre d'Imanishimwe pour violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II. En effet, la Chambre de première instance mentionne l'ordre contesté par Imanishimwe dans ce qui doit être tenu pour un récapitulatif liminaire[802], avant analyse des actes spécifiques constitutifs de violations graves sous l'article 4 (a) du Statut (meurtre, torture, traitements cruels). À aucun de ces trois titres, elle n'a toutefois considéré l'attaque de MG et sa famille lors de leur transfert depuis la place du marché de Kamembe vers la gendarmerie.

420. Dès lors, la Chambre d'appel ne peut considérer que l'ordre donné par Imanishimwe de tuer MG et sa famille lors de leur transfert vers la gendarmerie constitue un fait dont dépendait la culpabilité d'Imanishimwe pour violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II et auquel le critère de la seule déduction raisonnable aurait dû s'appliquer. Partant, la Chambre d'appel rejette cet argument et considère que la Chambre de première instance n'était pas tenue d'établir ce fait au-delà de tout doute raisonnable puisque la déclaration de culpabilité prononcée reposait sur d'autres éléments de preuve.

L'ordre donné par Imanishimwe de tuer le frère du Témoin LI, un ancien camarade de classe, ainsi que la sœur du Témoin MG et sa compagne de cellule Mbembe

421. La Chambre d'appel observe en premier lieu qu'Imanishimwe ne conteste, dans son Mémoire d'appel, que la conclusion de la Chambre de première instance selon laquelle Imanishimwe aurait donné l'ordre à ses militaires de tuer le frère du Témoin LI, d'un ancien camarade de classe, ainsi que de la sœur du Témoin MG et de sa compagne de cellule Mbembe[803]. Il ne conteste pas la conclusion correspondant à l'ordre d'Imanishimwe visant l'incarcération des personnes sus identifiées.

422. La Chambre d'appel doit considérer si l'ordre contesté visant le meurtre du frère du Témoin LI, d'un ancien camarade de classe, ainsi que de la sœur du Témoin MG et de sa compagne de cellule Mbembe est un « fait dont dépend la culpabilité de l'accusé ». La Chambre d'appel procède ci-après à l'analyse des déclarations de culpabilité prononcées à l'encontre d'Imanishimwe sur la base de l'article 6 (1) du Statut afin de déterminer le niveau de preuve requis pour établir l'ordre d'Imanishimwe pour le meurtre de ces personnes.

423. La Chambre d'appel a déjà pu noter que la Chambre de première instance a explicitement fondé les déclarations de culpabilité pour crime contre l'humanité prenant la forme d'assassinat sur l'ordre donné par Imanishimwe aux militaires de tuer le frère du Témoin LI et son ancien camarade de classe, la sœur du Témoin MG et sa compagne de cellule Mbembe[804]. Cet ordre doit donc être considéré comme un fait dont dépendait la culpabilité d'Imanishimwe pour ce chef. Une telle conclusion s'impose avec force dans la mesure également où – au contraire de ce qui a été remarqué plus tôt au sujet de l'ordre de tuer MG et sa famille sur le trajet vers la gendarmerie – l'ordre donné par Imanishimwe de tuer le frère du Témoin LI, l'un de ses ancien camarade de classe, ainsi que la sœur du Témoin MG et sa compagne de cellule Mbembe figure tout à la fois dans le récapitulatif liminaire[805], avant analyse des actes constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité, et dans l'analyse même de l'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité[806].

424. En l'espèce, la Chambre de première instance a conclu à l'existence d'un ordre d'Imanishimwe de tuer le frère du Témoin LI et un ancien camarade de classe, ainsi que la sœur du Témoin MG et sa compagne de cellule Mbembe sur le fondement de la déposition du Témoin LI[807]. L'on peut raisonnablement penser que plusieurs des constatations factuelles de la Chambre établies sur le fondement des dépositions de plusieurs témoins venaient étayer cette conclusion :

la sœur de MG a été emmenée avec MG, son autre sœur et son père par des militaires au camp de Karambo le 7 juin 1994[808] ;

LI a été arrêté en même temps que son frère et un ancien camarade de classe par des militaires le 11 avril 1994[809] ;

ils ont été emmenés au camp de Karambo où ils se sont trouvés en captivité ensemble[810] ;

à leur arrivée au camp de Karambo, Imanishimwe était présent alors que des militaires les maltraitaient[811] ;

lors des mauvais traitements infligés à LI par les militaires, ceux-ci l'ont menacé de mort[812] ;

lors des mauvais traitements infligés à LI par les militaires, des militaires ont emmenés certains réfugiés qui ne sont pas revenus[813] ;

la sœur de MG était détenue au camp de Karambo dans la même cellule que Mbembe[814] ;

le nom de la sœur de MG ainsi que celui de Mbembe ont été appelés une nuit pendant leur incarcération au camp de Karambo à la suite de quoi les deux femmes ont été emmenées[815] ;

depuis lors, la sœur de MG a été portée disparue et le corps de Mbembe a été retrouvé à Kadasomwa[816] ;

le frère de LI et l'ancien camarade de classe de LI sont morts[817] ; les militaires du camp de Karambo étaient sous le commandement d'Imanishimwe[818].

425. Ayant conclu que le frère de LI et son ancien camarade de classe[819], ainsi que la sœur du Témoin MG et sa compagne de cellule Mbembe[820], avaient été tués au camp de Karambo la seule déduction opérée par la Chambre de première instance à partir des constatations exposées a été de considérer que les militaires ne pouvaient pas participer au meurtre de ces personnes « sans qu'Imanishimwe le sache et l'approuve ou l'ordonne »[821]. En dépit du caractère ambigu, voire équivoque, de cette formulation, la Chambre d'appel relève qu'elle doit être lue au regard du paragraphe 410 du Jugement qui la clarifie dans les termes suivants :

> « la Chambre ne peut accepter l'idée que des soldats présents au camp de Karambo aient agi de la sorte, surtout à une telle échelle, sans instructions d'Imanishimwe, le commandant du camp ».

426. Au demeurant, la Chambre d'appel souligne que pour parvenir à la conclusion

> « qu'Imanishimwe a donné des ordres autorisant des militaires à arrêter, à détenir des civils soupçonnés d'entretenir des liens avec le FPR, à leur infliger des mauvais traitements et à les exécuter »[822], la Chambre de première instance a pris également en considération « le caractère répétitif et la fréquence des arrestations de civils et de leur transfert au camp », la présence d'Imanishimwe « au cours de la détention de certains civils et des mauvais traitements qui leur ont été infligés » ainsi que

donnant à penser qu'il ne les contrôlait pas et qu'il les avait empêchés de maltraiter des civils ou qu'ils les avait punis à ce titre »[823].

427. Pour les raisons qui précèdent, la Chambre d'appel considère qu'un juge des faits raisonnable pouvait conclure que la seule déduction raisonnable sur la base des éléments de preuve était qu'Imanishimwe avait donné l'ordre aux militaires de tuer le frère du Témoin LI et un ancien camarade de classe, ainsi que la sœur du Témoin MG et sa compagne de cellule Mbembe.

428. Cette conclusion en rapport avec la reconnaissance de culpabilité d'Imanishimwe pour le crime contre l'humanité d'assassinat s'étend également aux autres déclarations de culpabilité établies sur la base de l'article 6 (1) du Statut et rend obsolète la question de savoir si l'ordre de tuer le frère du Témoin LI et un ancien camarade de classe, ainsi que la sœur du Témoin MG et de sa compagne de cellule Mbembe a également été déterminant pour déclarer Imanishimwe coupable pour torture et emprisonnement constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité et pour violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II.

429. La Chambre d'appel considère donc qu'un tribunal raisonnable des faits pouvait parvenir par déduction aux conclusions contestées ici par Imanishimwe sans violer la présomption d'innocence dont il bénéficiait. La Chambre d'appel rejette en conséquence le cinquième motif d'appel d'Imanishimwe.

D. CUMUL DE DÉCLARATIONS DE CULPABILITÉ (3ÈME MOTIF D'APPEL)

430. Imanishimwe soutient que la Chambre de première instance a versé dans l'erreur en cumulant des déclarations de culpabilité prononcées au titre des articles 2, 3 et 4 du Statut[824]. Il avance que, pour être concurrentes, les déclarations de culpabilité ne doivent avoir aucun lien entre elles : l'une ne doit pas être « spéciale » par rapport à l'autre, ni ne doit être le moyen de perpétration de l'autre ou la « conséquence logique ou naturelle » de l'autre[825].

431. Imanishimwe reproche tout d'abord à la Chambre de première instance de l'avoir déclaré coupable à raison des mêmes faits à la fois de génocide en vertu de l'article 2 du Statut (Chef 7) et d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité en vertu de l'article 3 (b) du Statut (Chef 10). Il soutient que les deux qualifications ne sont pas concurrentes dans la mesure où l'extermination est le moyen de perpétration du génocide, l'extermination étant le « crime-moyen » et le génocide le « crime-fin »[826]. Il ajoute que les deux infractions assurent le respect d'une seule et même valeur : le « caractère sacré et inviolable de la vie et sa protection contre l'extermination »[827]. Enfin, il prétend que l'infraction spécifique – le génocide de par sa mens rea – aurait dû être retenue au détriment de l'infraction générale – en l'espèce, l'extermination[828]. Il soutient également que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur en le condamnant à raison des mêmes faits pour assassinat et torture constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité en vertu des articles 3 (a) et 3 (f) du Statut (Chefs 9 et 12) et pour violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole II en vertu de l'article 4 (a) du Statut (Chef 13). Il soutient que les articles 3 et 4 du Statut tendent à assurer la protection des mêmes « valeurs humaines »[829] mais aussi que les éléments constitutifs des infractions concernées sont fondamentalement les mêmes[830].

Au soutien de son argument, Imanishimwe se réfère entre autres au Jugement Kupreskić et consorts, par. 707, mais cite aussi le passage suivant de l'Arrêt Čelebići, par. 413 : « si un ensemble de faits est régi par deux dispositions dont l'une comporte un élément supplémentaire nettement distinct, la Chambre se fondera uniquement sur cette dernière disposition pour déclarer l'accusé coupable» : Mémoire d'appel d'Imanishimwe, note 68. Voir aussi Mémoire en réplique d'Imanishimwe, par. 113 à 115.

432. Pour illustrer le préjudice dont il estime être victime, Imanishimwe se réfère à l'Opinion individuelle et dissidente des Juges Hunt et Bennouna jointe à l'Arrêt Čelebići, laquelle fait état de la stigmatisation sociale attachée au fait d'être reconnu coupable et de l'impact d'un cumul de déclarations de culpabilité sur la longueur de la peine et sur les mesures pouvant intervenir pendant l'exécution de celle-ci comme la libération anticipée[831].

433. En réponse, le Procureur soutient que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas commis d'erreur dans l'application des principes gouvernant le cumul de déclarations de culpabilité[832]. Il fait valoir que le raisonnement emprunté par Imanishimwe procède d'une interprétation erronée de la jurisprudence de la Chambre d'appel en matière de condamnations cumulatives. S'appuyant sur les principes dégagés dans l'Arrêt Čelebići, le Procureur soutient qu'un cumul n'est possible, à raison d'un même fait et sur la base de différentes dispositions du Statut, que si chacune des dispositions comporte un élément constitutif matériellement distinct qui fait défaut dans l'autre[833]. Le Procureur rappelle alors que la Chambre d'appel a considéré à plusieurs reprises que le cumul de déclarations de culpabilité sur la base des articles 2 et 3 (b) du Statut à raison des mêmes faits était possible, chacun des crimes comportant un élément constitutif matériellement distinct faisant défaut à l'autre, à savoir l'intention spécifique pour le premier et l'existence d'une « attaque généralisée ou systématique contre une population civile » pour le second[834]. S'agissant des condamnations prononcées à raison des mêmes faits en vertu des articles 3 et 4 du Statut, le Procureur soutient que leur cumul est permis, chacune des dispositions comportant un élément matériellement distinct : tandis que l'article 3 exige la preuve de l'existence d'une « attaque généralisée ou systématique contre une population civile », l'article 4 exige quant à lui la preuve de l'existence d'un lien de connexité entre les actes de l'accusé et le conflit armé[835].

434. Souscrivant aux principes dégagés dans l'Arrêt Celebici, la Chambre d'appel a déjà établi que le cumul de déclarations de culpabilité sur la base de différentes dispositions du Statut mais à raison d'un même fait n'est possible que si chacune des dispositions comporte un élément constitutif matériellement distinct qui fait défaut dans l'autre[836]. Un élément est matériellement distinct d'un autre s'il exige la preuve d'un fait que n'exige pas l'autre[837].

faits des condamnations multiples pour génocide et pour crime contre l'humanité, chacun de ces crimes comportant un élément constitutif matériellement distinct que n'exige pas l'autre : « l'intention de détruire, en tout ou partie, un groupe national, ethnique, racial ou religieux » pour le premier ; l'existence d'une « attaque généralisée ou systématique contre une population civile » pour le second[838].

436. S'agissant des condamnations prononcées en vertu des articles 3 et 4 du Statut à raison des mêmes faits, la Chambre d'appel observe que chacune d'entre elles requiert un élément matériellement distinct que n'exige pas l'autre. Tandis que la condamnation prononcée au titre de l'article 3 requiert la preuve de l'existence d'une attaque généralisée ou systématique contre une population civile, la condamnation au titre de l'article 4 exige quant à elle la preuve d'un lien de connexité entre les actes visés et le conflit armé.[839] La Chambre d'appel conclut que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas versé dans l'erreur en cumulant les déclarations de culpabilité prononcées en vertu des articles 3 (assassinats et torture) et 4 (meurtres et traitements cruels) du Statut à raison des mêmes faits.

437. Le troisième motif d'appel d'Imanishimwe est rejeté.

V. Motifs d'appel relatifs à la peine

A. INTRODUCTION

438. Aux termes de l'article 24 du Statut, la Chambre d'appel peut « confirmer, annuler ou réviser » une peine prononcée par une Chambre de première instance. La Chambre d'appel rappelle toutefois que les Chambres de première instance sont investies d'un large pouvoir discrétionnaire pour déterminer la peine appropriée. Cela tient à l'obligation qu'elles ont de personnaliser la peine pour tenir compte de la situation de l'accusé et de la gravité du crime[840]. En règle générale, la Chambre d'appel ne substituera sa propre peine à celle prononcée par la Chambre de première instance que s'il est démontré que la Chambre de première a commis une erreur manifeste dans l'exercice de son pouvoir discrétionnaire ou qu'elle s'est écartée du droit applicable[841].

439. Les éléments que la Chambre de première instance est tenue de prendre en compte dans la détermination de la peine d'une personne déclarée coupable sont énoncés aux articles 23 du Statut et 101 du Règlement. Aux termes de l'article 101 (B) (ii) du Règlement, elle doit, en droit, tenir compte de l'existence de toute circonstance atténuante. Toutefois, la détermination de ce qui constitue une circonstance atténuante[842] et du poids qu'il convient de lui accorder[843] est laissée à son appréciation.

440. La Chambre de première instance a condamné Imanishimwe à deux peines d'emprisonnement confondues de 15 ans pour l'avoir reconnu coupable, à raison des crimes perpétrés au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba par ses subordonnés, de génocide (Chef 7) et d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité (Chef 10), en application de l'article 6 (3) du Statut[844]. Pour les déclarations de culpabilité prononcées sur la base des chefs 9, 11, 12 et 13[845], elle a infligé des peines d'emprisonnement confondues de dix, trois, dix et douze ans respectivement[846] résultant en une condamnation à 27 ans d'emprisonnement au total[847]. Pour parvenir à cette décision, la Chambre de première instance a tenu compte des pratiques suivies en matière de détermination de la peine, de la législation rwandaise et de la situation personnelle d'Imanishimwe[848]. Elle a en outre jugé que la fonction de commandant exercée par Imanishimwe dans la préfecture de Cyangugu constituait une circonstance aggravante[849] et relevé que celui-ci n'avait invoqué en sa faveur[850]. La Chambre de première instance n'a pas jugé que son parcours professionnel, tel qu'il a été présenté, constituait une circonstance atténuante[851].

B. AGGRAVATION DE LA PEINE PRONONCÉE POUR GÉNOCIDE ET EXTERMINATION (11ÈME MOTIF D'APPEL DU PROCUREUR)

441. En son onzième motif d'appel, le Procureur affirme que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur manifeste en condamnant Imanishimwe à quinze ans d'emprisonnement pour génocide et extermination[852].

C. IMPORTANCE ACCORDÉE AUX CIRCONSTANCES ATTÉNUANTES (6ÈME MOTIF D'APPEL DE SAMUEL IMANISHIMWE)

443. En son sixième motif d'appel, Imanishimwe fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de fait pour n'avoir pas tenu compte de toutes les circonstances atténuantes qu'il y avait en sa faveur. De l'avis d'Imanishimwe, ces circonstances atténuantes ont été écartées parce qu'elles n'avaient pas été évoquées dans sa plaidoirie finale[853]. Il relève que, la Chambre de première instance ayant demandé aux parties de faire preuve de concision parce qu'elles avaient déjà exposé des arguments détaillés dans leurs dernières conclusions écrites respectives[854], il a décidé de répondre au réquisitoire oral du Procureur plutôt que de reprendre les arguments relatifs aux circonstances atténuantes qu'il avait développés dans ses écritures[855]. Il cite les paragraphes pertinents de ses Dernières conclusions écrites dans lesquels il souligne que le fait qu'il n'a jamais été impliqué dans une activité criminelle, son jeune âge et le grade relativement bas qu'il détenait dans la hiérarchie militaire rwandaise constituent des circonstances atténuantes qui auraient dû être prises en compte dans la détermination de sa peine[856].

[856] Mémoire d'appel d'Imanishimwe, par. 181 à 184.

444. En réponse, le Procureur fait valoir qu'au vu des crimes commis et du rôle d'Imanishimwe dans leur commission aucune des circonstances atténuantes invoquées n'aurait pu peser[857]. Il soutient qu'à supposer même que certaines circonstances atténuantes militant en faveur d'Imanishimwe n'aient pas été prises en considération, cette omission n'aurait aucun effet > « compte tenu de la gravité des crimes qu'il a commis, du rôle actif qu'il a joué dans leur commission, et de sa position de supérieur hiérarchique et d'autorité dont il a abusé »[858].

445. Si la Chambre de première instance doit tenir compte de toute circonstance atténuante lorsqu'elle examine la peine qu'il convient de prononcer, l'importance qui doit leur être accordée est laissée à son appréciation, cette dernière n'étant nullement tenue de préciser chacune des circonstances qu'elle retient[859]. La Chambre d'appel relève que la Chambre de première instance a néanmoins explicitement évoqué les Dernières conclusions écrites d'Imanishimwe lorsqu'elle examinait la question des circonstances atténuantes[860] et qu'il s'agit là d'un élément suffisant pour présumer que les arguments d'Imanishimwe ont été pris en compte[861].

446. La Chambre d'appel fait observer à cet égard que la Chambre de première instance a expressément fait état des paragraphes 31 et 33 des Dernières conclusions écrites d'Imanishimwe dans lesquels son parcours scolaire et professionnel est exposé. Ces paragraphes font partie de la section des Dernières conclusions écrites intitulée « Présentation de l'accusé » qui tend à présenter objectivement Imanishimwe[862] et traite du grade peu élevé qu'il aurait détenu dans l'armée rwandaise[863], de l'insignifiance du camp de Karambo[864], de son absence de casier judiciaire[865] et de sa qualité de jeune officier[866]. Ce sont les circonstances qu'Imanishimwe estime que la Chambre de première instance aurait dû prendre en considération pour atténuer sa peine[867]. Même si la Chambre de première instance n'a pas explicitement évoqué les paragraphes 1203 et 1204 des Dernières conclusions écrites d'Imanishimwe qui constituent la section intitulée « Circonstances atténuantes : Délinquant primaire », la teneur de ces paragraphes est incluse dans la section intitulée « Présentation de l'accusé »[868]. Il n'y a donc aucune raison de conclure que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas dûment tenu compte des arguments en question.

447. La Chambre d'appel estime que loin d'indiquer, comme le prétend Imanishimwe, que ses observations relatives à la détermination de la peine ont été complètement ignorées, le passage du paragraphe 820 du Jugement qui dit que souligne tout simplement le fait qu'il n'a présenté aucun argument au sujet de la peine lors de sa plaidoirie orale.

448. Le fait que la Chambre de première instance ait décidé qu'il n'y avait pas de motifs suffisants pour conclure à l'existence de circonstances atténuantes en l'espèce s'inscrit dans les limites de son pouvoir discrétionnaire d'appréciation[869]. Les circonstances invoquées, à savoir le parcours d'Imanishimwe, son « jeune » âge au moment de la commission des crimes, son absence de casier judiciaire et le grade peu élevé qu'il détenait dans la hiérarchie militaire rwandaise ne sont pas de nature à avoir une quelconque incidence sur la peine encourue par Imanishimwe. Le fait d'avoir un casier judiciaire vierge est un trait commun à de nombreux accusés auquel on n'accorde, dans le meilleur des cas, que peu d'importance en l'absence de circonstances exceptionnelles lorsqu'on examine la question de l'atténuation de la peine[870]. Imanishimwe avait 32 ans lorsqu'il a participé aux crimes considérés[871] et il est permis de penser que la Chambre de première instance a tenu compte du caractère relatif de sa position d'autorité quand elle insistait sur le principe de la gradation des peines[872].

449. La Chambre d'appel conclut qu'Imanishimwe n'a pas démontré que la Chambre de première instance avait ignoré ses arguments relatifs à sa situation personnelle et aux circonstances atténuantes ni abusé de son pouvoir souverain d'appréciation à tel point que sa peine doive être réduite.

450. Pour ces raisons, la Chambre d'appel rejette le sixième motif d'appel d'Imanishimwe dans son intégralité.

D. CONSÉQUENCES DES CONCLUSIONS DE LA CHAMBRE D'APPEL

451. La Chambre d'appel rappelle avoir annulé les déclarations de culpabilité prononcées contre Imanishimwe sur la base de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour les crimes commis au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba pour génocide (Chef 7 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe) et pour extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité (Chef 10 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe)[873]. En conséquence, les peines prononcées par la Chambre de première instance sur la base des chefs 7 et 10 – deux peines confondues de quinze ans d'emprisonnement à purger consécutivement aux peines prononcées sur la base des autres chefs[874] – doivent être infirmées.

453. Pour l'avoir trouvé coupable de meurtre, torture et traitement cruel constitutifs de violations graves de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève et du Protocole additionnel II (Chef 13 de l'Acte d'accusation Bagambiki/Imanishimwe) sur la base des articles 6 (1) et 6 (3) du Statut[877], la Chambre de première instance a condamné Imanishimwe à une peine de douze ans confondue avec les peines prononcées pour les chefs 9, 11 et 12[878]. La Chambre d'appel rappelle avoir annulé la déclaration de culpabilité prononcée sous ce chef sur la base de l'article 6 (3) du Statut pour les crimes commis au terrain de football de Gashirabwoba[879] mais confirmé la condamnation prononcée sur la base de l'article 6 (1) du Statut[880]. Etant donnée la gravité des crimes dont Samuel Imanishimwe a été trouvé coupable sur la base de l'article 6 (1), la Chambre d'appel estime qu'il n'y a pas lieu de reconsidérer la peine de douze ans prononcée pour le chef 13 en conséquence de l'annulation de la déclaration de culpabilité prononcée sur la base de l'article 6 (3) du Statut. A l'unanimité, la Chambre d'appel est en effet d'avis que la révision partielle du verdict n'affecte pas la peine de douze ans confondue avec les peines prononcées pour les chefs 9, 11 et 12 imposée par la Chambre de première instance pour le chef 13. A la majorité des juges, le Juge Schomburg étant en désaccord, la Chambre d'appel conclut que la peine totale imposée contre Imanishimwe est de douze ans.

VII. Déclaration du juge Schomburg

1. Je suis entièrement d'accord avec la décision concernant André Ntagerura et Emmanuel Bagambiki.

2. Cependant, j'estime non seulement que l'acte d'accusation établi contre André Ntagerura est imprécis mais qu'il doit être considéré comme frappé de nullité parce qu'aucun des crimes reprochés à l'accusé n'est exposé avec suffisamment de précision et que l'étendue des accusations n'est pas suffisamment circonscrite. En conséquence, l'acte d'accusation établi contre André Ntagerura ne remplit pas les deux fonctions principales de tout acte d'accusation, à savoir :

informer l'accusé des accusations portées contre lui (fonction d'information qui consacre le droit fondamental à être entendu) et limiter la portée personnelle et matérielle des accusations (fonction de délimitation).

L'acte d'accusation établi contre Emmanuel Bagambiki et Samuel Imanishimwe ne remplit ces deux fonctions principales que pour certains chefs.

3. Par ailleurs, si l'on considère que ces documents sont entachés de nullité en tout ou en partie, il est à noter que ce n'est pas à la Chambre d'appel de déterminer si la maxime ne bis in idem (droit à ne pas être jugé ou puni deux fois[1]) s'applique en l'espèce. C'est au Procureur de ce Tribunal[2], en premier lieu (Cf. article 8 du Statut), ou à tout autre représentant du ministère public près une juridiction compétente pour juger les crimes en question, de décider de l'opportunité d'engager de nouvelles poursuites sur la base d'un nouvel acte d'accusation dans la mesure où le principe de l'autorité de la chose jugée n'interdit pas de poursuivre à nouveau André Ntagerura, Emmanuel Bagambiki et Samuel Imanishimwe[3].

4. Je tiens à rappeler qu'André Ntagerura a été acquitté exclusivement – et Emmanuel Bagambiki et Samuel Imanishimwe l'ont été principalement – pour des questions de procédure car il n'y avait pas, ne serait-ce que dans une certaine mesure, d'acte d'accusation – principal instrument des poursuites – qui puisse être purgé. Sans un tel acte d'accusation, il ne peut y avoir de procès, et en tout état de cause, pas de procès équitable, le principe d'équité prenant également en compte les intérêts des victimes et de leurs familles.

1. Appel du Procureur

3. Le Procureur a déposé son Acte d'appel le 25 mars 2004 ainsi que son Mémoire d'appel le 8 juin 2004. Ayant obtenu une prorogation des délais de dépôt de leur mémoire de l'intimé le 24 juin 2004[1], Bagambiki et Ntagerura ont chacun déposé une « Réponse » à l'Acte d'appel du Procureur le 8 octobre 2004[2]. En raison de substantielles erreurs de traduction dans la version en langue française du Jugement, le Juge de la mise en état en appel a ordonné deux semaines plus tard que soient suspendus les délais de dépôt des écritures en appel jusqu'à réception par les parties d'une nouvelle version certifiée conforme du Jugement en langue française[3]. Le 10 novembre 2004, statuant à la demande du Procureur[4], le Juge de la mise en état en appel a déclaré les Réponses de Bagambiki et Ntagerura irrecevables au motif que ni le Règlement, ni les Directives pratiques applicables à la procédure d'appel ne prévoyait le dépôt d'une réponse à un acte d'appel[5]. Dans cette décision, le Juge de la mise en état en appel a rappelé à Bagambiki et Ntagerura qu'ils devaient déposer leur mémoire de l'intimé dans un délai de vingt jours à compter de la notification de la nouvelle version certifiée conforme du Jugement en langue française. Imanishimwe, Bagambiki et Ntagerura ont déposé leur mémoire de l'intimé les 14, 16 et 17 février 2005 respectivement. Le Procureur a déposé son Mémoire en réplique le 3 mars 2005.

2. Appel d'Imanishimwe

4. Le 3 mars 2004, Imanishimwe a déposé une requête aux fins de prorogation des délais de dépôt de son acte d'appel et de son mémoire d'appel, faisant valoir qu'il n'avait pas encore reçu le Jugement dans une langue que lui et son Conseil comprenaient, à savoir le français[6]. Le 24 mars 2004, le Juge de la mise en état en appel a fait droit à la requête, ordonnant à Imanishimwe de déposer son acte d'appel au plus tard dans les trente jours suivant la notification de la version française du Jugement et son mémoire de l'appelant dans un délai de soixante-quinze jours à compter du dépôt de son acte d'appel[7]. Imanishimwe a déposé son Acte d'appel le 2 septembre 2004. Le 21 octobre 2004, en raison de substantielles erreurs de traduction dans la version en langue française du Jugement, le Juge de la mise en état en appel a ordonné que soient suspendus les délais de dépôt des écritures en appel jusqu'à réception par les parties d'une nouvelle version certifiée conforme du Jugement en langue française[8]. Le Mémoire d'appel d'Imanishimwe a été déposé le 25 février 2005 et la Réponse du Procureur le 5 avril 2005. À la suite d'une requête aux fins de prorogation de délai[9], Imanishimwe s'est vu octroyé une prorogation de délai de quinze jours à compter de la notification à sa Défense de la version française de la Réponse du Procureur pour déposer son mémoire en réplique[10]. Imanishimwe a finalement déposé son Mémoire en réplique le 12 juillet 2005.

B. Désignation des juges

5. Le 23 mars 2004, les juges suivants ont été désignés pour connaître de l'appel d'Imanishimwe : les Juges Theodor Meron (Président), Florence Mumba, Mehmet Güney, Fausto Pocar et Inés Mónica Weinberg de Roca[11]. Le Juge Mehmet Güney a été désigné Juge de la mise en état en appel[12]. Après que l'Acte d'appel du Procureur ait été déposé, le Président de la Chambre d'appel a ordonné le 29 mars 2004 que les deux appels soient traités comme une seule et même affaire, par le même collège de juges[13]. Le 25 janvier 2005, le Juge Wolfgang Schomburg a été désigné pour remplacer le Juge Theodor Meron[14]. Le 15 juillet 2005, la Juge Andrésia Vaz a été désignée pour remplacer la Juge Inés Mónica Weinberg de Roca[15]. Le Juge Mehmet Güney est alors devenu Juge Président. Devenu Juge Président de la Chambre d'appel le 17 novembre 2005, le Juge Fausto Pocar est devenu Juge Président de l'affaire. Le 18 novembre 2005, le Juge Théodor Meron a été désigné pour remplacer la Juge Florence Mumba[16].

C. Moyens de preuve supplémentaires

6. En vertu de l'article 115 du Règlement, le Procureur a déposé une requête aux fins d'admission de deux déclarations de témoins comme moyens de preuve supplémentaires en date du 10 mai 2004[17]. Dans les décisions datées des 18 et 19 mai 2004, le Juge de la mise en état en appel a autorisé Bagambiki et Ntagerura à déposer leur réponse à ladite requête au plus tard dans les dix jours suivant la notification de la traduction française[18]. Le 2 juin 2004, le Juge de la mise en état en appel a rendu une ordonnance enjoignant au Procureur de déposer confidentiellement les versions non caviardées des déclarations des deux témoins dont il cherchait à obtenir l'admission et l'invitant également à Conformément à cette ordonnance, le Procureur a déposé le 7 juin 2004, sous scellé, les versions non caviardées des déclarations des deux témoins[20]. Le même jour, le Procureur a déposé une requête dans laquelle il renouvelait sa demande de mesures de protection en faveur des deux témoins[21]. La Chambre d'appel a rejeté la requête aux fins d'admission de moyens de preuve supplémentaires au motif qu'elle n'était pas convaincue que, présentés au procès, les moyens de preuve offerts par les deux témoins en auraient changé l'issue[22].

D. Audiences en appel

7. Les audiences en appel se sont tenues à Arusha, Tanzanie les 6 et 7 février 2006. Le 8 février 2006, à l'issue des audiences, la Chambre d'appel a confirmé l'acquittement de Ntagerura et Bagambiki[23], rejetant ainsi les motifs d'appel du Procureur concernant ces deux personnes acquittées. En rendant son dispositif, la Chambre d'appel a indiqué que la motivation écrite de sa décision sera offerte dans l'arrêt disposant de l'ensemble des motifs d'appel du Procureur et d'Imanishimwe[24].

International Court of Justice, Case Concerning The Arrest Warrant of 11 April 2000 (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Belgium), 14 February 2002

I. Introduction

1. On 28 July 2005, Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov confirmed the Indictment against Michel Bagaragaza. The Indictment contains three counts: conspiracy to commit genocide, genocide and complicity in genocide in the alternative. The Indictment alleges among other facts that: through numerous meetings, Michel Bagaragaza planned with others the extermination of all members of the Tutsi population because of their association with the Inkotanyi; he made hate speeches to incite others to participate in such a plan; he provided financial assistance to the Interahamwe, agreed to raise funds for the Interahamwe, and supported the idea of them receiving paramilitary training; he ordered the employees of the Rubaya tea factory to provide fuel to the Interahamwe and the Presidential Guard as they were on their way to attack and kill hundreds of Tutsi at Kesho hill; he ordered one of his drivers from Nyabihu tea factory to transport the Interahamwe to the Nyundo Cathedral for an attack on some Tutsi; he ordered another driver to transport the Interahamwe to Rubaya for another attack; one of his subordinates recruited military reservists as employees, provided military training, arms and ammunition to other employees of Rubaya tea factory, and both groups of employees later took part in the killing of Tutsi.

2. Before his surrender on 16 August 2005, the Accused made an agreement to cooperate with the Prosecution and provided an extensive statement on the 1994 events in Rwanda which incriminated both himself and other Rwandans.[1] He agreed with the Prosecution to be tried before a national court, which would be determined at a later stage. On 15 February 2006, the Prosecution submitted a request for referral of the Indictment to the Kingdom of Norway pursuant to Rule 11 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. The Defence responded to the request, supporting it in principle and making further requests to the Chamber.[2]

3. On 21 February 2006, pursuant to Rule 11 bis (A), the President designated Trial Chamber III composed of Judges Dennis C. M. Byron (presiding), Jai Ram Reddy and Joseph Asoka Nihal de Silva to consider the Motion.[3] On 23 March 2006, the Chamber ordered the Parties and invited the Kingdom of Norway to make further submissions while recalling the provisions of Rule 74 on Amicus curiae.[4] The Defence, the Prosecution and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Kingdom of Norway filed further submissions on 30 March, 6 April and 10 April 2006, respectively. The Prosecution filed a response on 12 April 2006, while the Registrar made submissions pursuant to Rule 33 (B) on 20 April 2006. The Defence submitted a response to this later filing and a clarification of its own further submissions on 24 April 2006. No one else made submissions or sought leave to make the same. Considering all of the submissions, the Chamber will now decide the Motion.

II. Deliberations

4. On 19 May 2006, the President forwarded to the Chamber a Note Verbale that he received from the Rwandan Ministry of Foreign Affairs.[5] The Republic of Rwanda wishes to be heard before determination of the application if so invited pursuant to Rule 74. In its Order of 23 March 2006, the Chamber noted Rule 74 which provides that any interested party may be granted leave to appear or make submissions on any issue specified by the Chamber. It is the view of the Chamber that the Republic of Rwanda should have seized the Chamber to that effect following its Order. The Chamber declines the request for submissions by the Republic of Rwanda at this stage and notes that the right to be heard alleged in the Note Verbale will not be affected.

5. Pursuant to Rule 11 bis, three requirements have to be considered in deciding a motion for referral: (1) the jurisdiction, willingness and preparedness of the Referral State; (2) the ability of the Referral State to conduct a fair trial and; (3) the non-imposition of the death penalty in the Referral State. In their submissions, the Parties raised other conditions for the referral.[6]

[1] The Agreement and the Statement were attached to the Referral Motion as confidential materials because their disclosure would constitute a security risk to the Accused and his family.

[2] The Defence response was filed on 20 February 2006.

[3] Designation of Trial Chamber Under Rule 11 bis (President), 21 February 2006.

[4] Rule 74 reads as follows: "A Chamber may, if it considers it desirable for the proper determination of the case, invite or grant leave to any State, organization or person to appear before it and make submissions on any issue specified by the Chamber."

[5] See the President's Memorandum with the reference [ICTR/PRES/026.06] and the Note Verbale with the reference [247/09.01/CAB/MIN/06].

[6] If referral is granted, the Prosecution requests an order relating to the detention and hand-over of the Accused no later than 18 August 2006, and that the protective measures of the witnesses in this case remain in force until a comparable order can be obtained from the Norwegian authorities. Also in the case of referral, the Defence requests that the Chamber order the safe and permanent location of the Accused outside of the African

A. Jurisdiction, Willingness and Preparedness of the Referral State

6. Pursuant to Rule 11 bis (A), a confirmed Indictment may be referred to a State (i) in whose territory the crime was committed, or (ii) in which the accused was arrested, or (iii) which has jurisdiction and is willing and adequately prepared to accept the referral. In the present case, the Prosecution requests that the Indictment be referred to the Kingdom of Norway under the third provision of Rule 11 bis (A).

7. In its Motion, the Prosecution excludes both the Republic of Rwanda and the United-Republic of Tanzania as possible Referral States. While the Republic of Rwanda is the State where the crimes were committed (Rule 11 bis (A) (i)), the Prosecution recalls the provisions of Rule 11 bis (C) containing two other requirements – the absence of the death penalty and the guarantee of a fair trial – and declares that none of those requirements can be met at the present time. The Prosecution further states that, even if those requirements are met, strong public policy reasons favour the involvement of other countries in the prosecution of the Accused because it would be a manner of educating people in other countries on the lessons to be learned from the Rwandan genocide and would promote the development of ideas to prevent future similar tragedies. As for the United-Republic of Tanzania, where the Accused was arrested (Rule 11 bis (A) (ii)) following his surrender on 16 August 2005, the Prosecution submits that a referral would be inconsistent with Article XX (1) of the Headquarters Agreement.[7]

8. The Prosecution, however, argues that the Kingdom of Norway meets the third criterion, being a State which has jurisdiction and is willing and adequately prepared to accept such a case (Rule 11 bis (A) (iii)). The Prosecution attaches to its Motion correspondence exchanged with the Norwegian authorities supporting their willingness to take over this case for trial.

9. From that exchange of correspondence and from the further submissions made by the Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Chamber has concluded that the Kingdom of Norway does not have any provision against genocide in its domestic criminal law. The Norwegian authorities inform the Chamber that, on the basis of the facts alleged in the Indictment, the Accused may be prosecuted as an accessory to homicide or negligent homicide, for which the maximum sentence is 21 years imprisonment. The Norwegian authorities also submit that prosecution of the case may occur under the principle of universal jurisdiction, which implies that the Indictment will be approved by the King in Council. This means that, even though there is no direct basis for jurisdiction in the Norwegian courts on the facts as pleaded in the Indictment, prosecution can still take place under certain circumstances as explained in the Norwegian submissions of 10 April 2006. Finally, the Kingdom of Norway submits that, if the case is referred, it will exercise its discretion to determine whether prosecution is warranted in view of the evidence.

10. Relying on the Stankovic Referral Decision, the Prosecution argues that the criterion of "having jurisdiction" does not imply that the Referral State must have the same provisions in its domestic criminal law as the Statute of the Tribunal. The Prosecution submits that the maximum penalty as included in the Norwegian General Civil Penal Code is adequate, considering the fact that the Accused is 60 years old, that he has accepted responsibility for his actions as detailed in his continent following the completion of his trial and potential sentence served in the Kingdom of Norway, and that the Tribunal make available the continued assistance of his ICTR designated international legal counsel.

[7] Article XX (1) of The Headquarters Agreement (31 August 1995) provides that: "The host country shall not exercise its criminal jurisdiction over any person present in its territory, who is to be or has been transferred as a suspect or an accused to the premises of the Tribunal pursuant to a request or an order of the Tribunal, in respect of acts, omissions or convictions prior to their entry into the territory of the host country."

statement, and that he has agreed to collaborate with domestic and international criminal proceedings regarding the 1994 events in Rwanda.

11. The Defence argues that nothing prevents the Kingdom of Norway from exercising universal jurisdiction in this case. The Defence relies on the Norwegian law which provides for universal jurisdiction over ordinary crimes under national law. The Defence also relies on international jurisprudence, notably the Warrant of Arrest Judgment.[8] The Prosecution, however, disagrees with the reference to the Warrant of Arrest case and argues that the only relevant legal basis for jurisdiction to be exercised by the Kingdom of Norway is Rule 11 bis and that there is no need to meet the requirements identified by the Defence in the Joint Separate Opinion of Judges Higgins, Kooijmans and Buergenthal in the Warrant of Arrest Judgment of 14 February 2002.

12. The Appeals Chamber has affirmed that, although the Statute of the ICTY does not contain an explicit legal basis for Rule 11 bis, it is clear that alternative national jurisdictions have consistently been contemplated for the "transfer" of accused persons.[9] In determining whether the Kingdom of Norway has jurisdiction under Rule 11 bis (A) (iii), this Chamber must be satisfied that an adequate legal framework exists which could criminalize the alleged behaviour of the Accused, and that if found guilty, an appropriate punishment could be applied based on the offences currently charged before the Tribunal.[10] The Chamber is of the view that in making such a determination, the Statute is the main legal instrument to be considered.

13. The Statute provides for a definition of jurisdiction in its Articles 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 7. The interpretation of Rule 11 bis (A) (iii) should rely on that definition which requires ratione materiae, ratione personae, ratione loci, ratione temporis. When confirming an indictment, the Confirming Judge must find that each of those requirements is satisfied in order for the Tribunal to have jurisdiction. In this case, the universal jurisdiction referred to in the submissions of the Kingdom of Norway will permit the prosecution of the Accused (ratione personae) for his acts allegedly committed in Rwanda (ratione loci) in 1994 (ratione temporis). The only aspect of jurisdiction which would not be covered by Norwegian law is the ratione materiae. The submission that Norwegian criminal law does not provide for the crime of genocide directly affects the finding of jurisdiction ratione materiae, where the legal qualification of the facts alleged in the confirmed Indictment is made.[11]

14. The Chamber looks to the Stankovic case, where the Referral Bench refused to determine, as between two laws applicable to the crimes alleged in the Indictment, which one the Referral State should apply but nonetheless gave a detailed analysis of the substantive law which could be applied if the case was referred to Bosnia and Herzegovina.[12] The Referral Bench concluded that since the Criminal Code of the Socialist Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina ("SRBiH CC") did not contain any provisions criminalizing either violations of laws or customs of war or crimes against humanity,

[10] Prosecutor v. Radovan Stankovic, Decision on Referral of Case Under Rule 11 bis – Partly Confidential and Ex Parte (Referral Bench), 17 May 2005, para. 32.

[11] The reference by the Parties and the Kingdom of Norway to the principle of universal jurisdiction applies only to the jurisdiction ratione loci or geographic jurisdiction, and not the jurisdiction ratione materiae. The Kingdom of Norway ratified the 1948 Genocide Convention on 22 July 1994. The assertion that Norwegian criminal law does not incriminate the crime of genocide means that the Convention has not been incorporated in its domestic law, making it impossible to prosecute anyone for its perpetration.

[12] Prosecutor v. Radovan Stankovic, Decision on Referral of Case Under Rule 11 bis – Partly Confidential and Ex Parte (Referral Bench), 17 May 2005, para. 32.

the crimes charged in the relevant Indictment, it should not even be considered.[13] The Bench, however, was satisfied that other criminal instruments available to the Referral State contained provisions which criminalize participation similar, if not equal, to those in the Statute and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the ICTY. Therefore the Bench concluded that the prosecution of some or all of the alleged criminal acts of the Accused could occur in the Referral State.[14]

15. The Chamber finds the Prosecution's argument that the Chamber does not have to determine the substantive applicable law before the domestic court misleading. The Chamber must determine whether the Referral State has jurisdiction within the definition provided by the Statute. Where several applicable laws exist within the domestic law of the Referral State, the Chamber does not have the power to determine which one should be applied, if each of the laws provides for appropriate legal qualification in accordance with the Statute.

16. In this case, it is apparent that the Kingdom of Norway does not have jurisdiction (ratione materiae) over the crimes as charged in the confirmed Indictment. In addition, the Chamber recalls that the crimes alleged – genocide, conspiracy to commit genocide and complicity in genocide – are significantly different in term of their elements and their gravity from the crime of homicide, the basis upon which the Kingdom of Norway states that charges may be laid against the Accused under its domestic law. The Chamber notes that the crime of genocide is distinct in that it requires the "intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such". This specific intent is not required for the crime of homicide under Norwegian criminal law. Therefore, in the Chamber's view, the ratione materiae jurisdiction, or subject matter jurisdiction, for the acts alleged in the confirmed Indictment does not exist under Norwegian law. Consequently, Michel Bagaragaza's alleged criminal acts cannot be given their full legal qualification under Norwegian criminal law, and the request for the referral to the Kingdom of Norway falls to be dismissed.

B. Other Requirements

17. Having found that the Kingdom of Norway does not have jurisdiction over the alleged crimes in the Indictment against Michel Bagaragaza, there is no need for the Chamber to consider the other requirements for referral as provided in Rule 11 bis or in the Parties' submissions.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Motion in its entirety.

454. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively) is seized of an interlocutory appeal filed by the Prosecution,[1] pursuant to Rule 11 bis (H) of the Tribunal's Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules"), against a Trial Chamber decision,[2] denying its request to refer the case of Michel Bagaragaza to the Kingdom of Norway.

455. The Appeals Chamber is also presently seized of a request by the Prosecution for clarification on how to proceed in an appeal under Rule 11 bis and for a scheduling order for the filing of written briefs by the parties.[3] The Prosecution makes no submissions concerning a possible proper framework for appealing under the rule, and simply makes reference to the practice adopted by the Appeals Chamber for the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia ("ICTY").[4]

456. Rule 11 bis (H) sets a time frame of fifteen days for the filing of a notice of appeal, but is silent on the period for filing an appeal brief. Under the equivalent provision of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence for the ICTY, the Appeals Chamber has followed a practice of allowing fifteen days from the filing of the notice of appeal for the filing of the appeal brief on the merits.[5] The Appeals Chamber sees no reason to depart from this practice in considering appeals under Rule 11 bis in this Tribunal.

457. As this is the first appeal of a decision taken under Rule 11 bis in this Tribunal, the Appeals Chamber will allow the Prosecution to file its appeal brief within fifteen days from filing of this decision.[6] The Appeals Chamber finds no reason to issue a detailed scheduling order as its practice directives fully cover the procedures to follow in cases under the Rules where an appeal lies as of right.[7]

458. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber ORDERS the Prosecution to file its appeal brief within fifteen days at the latest from the date of this decision (i.e. by 23 June 2006).

Order for the Continued Detention of Michel Bagaragaza at the ICTY Detention Unit in The Hague, The Netherlands 17 August 2006 (ICTR-2005-86-I)

Office of the President

Judge : Erik Møse, President

Michel Bagaragaza – Accused generally detained under the jurisdiction of the Tribunal held in the ICTR Detention Facility in Arusha (Tanzania), Possibility to detain an accused in another country, Continued detention of the Accused in The Hague in interests of justice – Application granted

THE PRESIDENT OF THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

BEING SEIZED of the Prosecutor's Application of 16 August 2006 to extend the present conditions of detention of Michel Bagaragaza;

NOTING the exchange of diplomatic notes between the Tribunal and the Government of the Netherlands of 4 and 16 August 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES THE APPLICATION

Introduction

On 13 August 2005, Judge Arlette Ramaroson, in her capacity as Acting President, ordered that Michel Bagaragaza ("the Accused") be transferred to the Detention Unit of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia ("ICTY"), The Hague, Netherlands, for a period of six months. He was transferred to The Hague and arrived at the ICTY Detention Unit on 18 August 2005. On 15 February 2006, the Prosecutor requested an extension of this period of detention for a further six months. This request was granted by the President on 17 February 2006.

On 15 February 2006, the Prosecutor filed a request to transfer the case of the Accused to Norway for trial pursuant to Rule 11 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. This request was denied by the Trial Chamber on 19 May 2006. The Prosecutor has appealed this decision, and the matter is currently pending before the Appeals Chamber.

Submissions

The Prosecutor requests a further order extending the detention of the Acccused at the ICTY Detention Unit in order to allow sufficient time to arrange for the removal of the Accused from The Netherlands following the disposition of its appeal. The Prosecutor observes that if this appeal is granted and the transfer of the case to Norway ordered, it will take several days thereafter to arrange for the physical transfer of the Accused to Norway. If it is denied, it will take several weeks to negotiate an alternative disposition of the case as envisaged in the agreement between the Prosecutor and the Accused dated 18-19 December 2004. According to the Prosecutor, the Appeals Chamber decision is expected shortly. He therefore requests a relatively brief extension of the Accused's current detention in The Hague, for a period not exceeding two months from the date of the order.

The Prosecutor recalls that the Netherlands and the ICTY originally consented to the detention of the Accused at the ICTY Detention Unit for a period not exceeding one year. This period expires on 17 August 2006. The Government of the Netherlands, on 16 August 2006, agreed to permit the Accused to remain there for an additional period, until 16 October 2006, on the assumption that the Tribunal shall do its utmost to arrange a prompt transfer of the Accused to another State. According to the Prosecutor, counsel for the Accused does not object to the granting of this Application.

The Prosecutor submits that the detention of the Accused in The Hague continues to be justified due to special security reasons, and will have the incidental effect of facilitating contact between the Accused and his counsel.

Deliberations

Generally, accused detained under the jurisdiction of the Tribunal are held in the ICTR Detention Facility in Arusha, Tanzania. However, Rule 64 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence permits an accused to be detained in a country other than in Tanzania. The detention of an accused in another country after he or she has been transferred to the custody of the Tribunal requires a modification of his or her conditions of detention. The President may order a modification of these conditions on application from either party. In the present case, this was done in the original Order and maintained in the second Decision. Although this period has now elapsed, final disposition of the Accused's case would appear to be imminent. Further, the documentation provided by the Prosecutor demonstrates that the Dutch Authorities have consented to this Application. The security concerns raised previously by the Prosecutor justify his detention at The Hague.

Consequently, the continued detention of the Accused in The Hague is in interests of justice. The Application should therefore be granted.

FOR THE REASONS MENTIONED ABOVE, THE PRESIDENT

ORDERS that Michel Bagaragaza be detained at the Detention Unit of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, at The Hague, The Netherlands, until 16 October 2006;

REQUESTS the Registrar to transmit this order to the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and to Michel Bagaragaza.

Arusha, 17 August 2006.

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively) is seized of an interlocutory appeal filed by the Prosecution,[1] ("Appeal") pursuant to Rule 11 bis (H) of the Tribunal's Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules"), against a decision of Trial Chamber III,[2] denying its request to refer the case of Michel Bagaragaza to the Kingdom of Norway ("Norway").

Background

[1] Prosecutor's Notice of Appeal (Rule 11 bis (H)), 1 June 2006 ("Notice of Appeal"); Prosecutor's Appeal Brief (Rule 11 bis (H)), 23 June 2006 ("Prosecution Appeal Brief"). In addition, the Prosecution files a separate motion seeking clarification on the lengths of written briefs in appeals under Rule 11 bis. See Prosecutor's Motion for Clarification on the Length of a Brief on Appeal Pursuant to Rule 11 bis OR Permission to File a Brief of a Certain Length, 26 June 2006. Mr. Bagaragaza responded in Defence Response to Prosecutor's Motion for Clarification on the Length of a Brief on Appeal Pursuant to Rule 11 bis OR Permission to File a Brief of a Certain Length, 27 June 2006. The Appeals Chamber notes that the proper length for briefs on Appeal under Rule 11 bis (H) is governed by paragraph C (2) (a) of the Practice Direction on the Length of Briefs and Motions on Appeal. This provision relates to interlocutory appeals where appeals lie as of right, as stated in Rule 11 bis (H). The Appeals Chamber, however, grants the Prosecution leave to file its brief in excess of this requirement, as this is the first appeal under Rule 11*bis* and its request is unopposed.

[2] The Prosecutor v. Michel Bagaragaza, Case N°ICTR-2005-86-R11*bis*, Decision on the Prosecution Motion for Referral to the Kingdom of Norway, 19 May 2006 ("Impugned Decision").

2. The indictment against Mr. Bagaragaza was confirmed on 28 July 2005 and charges three counts of genocide, conspiracy to commit genocide, and, in the alternative, complicity in genocide.[3] In its Appeal, the Prosecution identifies the facts underlying the charges as alleging that Mr. Bagaragaza provided fuel, transport, and financial support for Interahamwe.[4] The Prosecution further explains that it is not alleged that Mr. Bagaragaza directly participated in, or was present, during the killings.[5]

3. Before his surrender, Mr. Bagaragaza had agreed to cooperate with the Prosecution and knowingly and voluntarily provided it with a lengthy statement incriminating himself and others.[6] The Prosecution explains that Mr. Bagaragaza has accepted responsibility for his actions and has agreed to assist in the process of justice.[7] As part of the agreement between the Prosecution and Mr. Bagaragaza, the Prosecution undertook not to prosecute Mr. Bagaragaza before the Tribunal and to request his transfer to a national jurisdiction outside the continent of Africa.[8]

4. Mr. Bagaragaza voluntarily surrendered to the Tribunal's authorities in Arusha, Tanzania, on 16 August 2005, and pleaded not guilty to all of the charges.[9] He was then transferred immediately and extraordinarily to the Detention Unit of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia ("UNDU" and "ICTY", respectively) in The Hague for a period of one year.[10] The Prosecution requested these special measures due to the security risks Mr. Bagaragaza faced at the United Nations Detention Facilities ("UNDF") in Arusha as a result of his agreement to testify as a Prosecution witness and to assist in the investigations of other accused.[11]

5. On 15 February 2006, the Prosecution requested the referral of Mr. Bagaragaza's case to Norway for trial with the full support of the Accused.[12] The Tribunal's President referred the matter to Trial Chamber III for consideration, which in turn invited Norway to make submissions on its jurisdiction over the crimes charged against Mr. Bagaragaza.[13] After considering the submissions of the parties and of Norway, the Trial Chamber denied the Prosecution's request to refer Mr. Bagaragaza's case to the Norwegian authorities.[14] On appeal, the Prosecution requests the Appeals Chamber to reverse the Trial Chamber's decision and to refer Mr. Bagaragaza's case directly to Norway.[15]

459. In his response to the Appeal,[16] Mr. Bagaragaza supports generally the Prosecution's position.[17] Mr. Bagaragaza also raises additional points, which the Appeals Chamber will not address given that he has not appealed the Trial Chamber's decision.

460. In addition, in relation to this Appeal, Norway requests leave pursuant to Rule 74 to file an Amicus Curiae brief related to its ability to exercise of jurisdiction over Mr. Bagaragaza's case.[18] The Appeals Chamber, therefore, finds it desirable for the proper determination of the appeal to grant leave to Norway to file its brief.[19]

Discussion

461. Rule 11 bis allows a designated Trial Chamber to refer a case to a competent national jurisdiction for trial if it is satisfied that the accused will receive a fair trial and that the death penalty will not be imposed or carried out.[20] Rule 11 bis (A) contemplates possible referral to either the state where the crimes occurred, the state of the accused's arrest, or any other state having jurisdiction and being willing and adequately prepared to accept such a case.

462. This case is the first involving a referral under Rule 11 bis in this Tribunal. However, the ICTY Appeals Chamber has considered referrals to national jurisdictions in cases under a similar legal framework.[21] Such case law is largely applicable in the context of this Tribunal as well. In assessing whether a state is competent within the meaning of Rule 11 bis to accept one of the Tribunal's cases, a designated Trial Chamber must consider whether it has a legal framework which criminalizes the alleged conduct of the accused and provides an adequate penalty structure.[22] The Trial Chamber's decision on whether to refer a case to a national jurisdiction is a discretionary one, and the Appeals Chamber will only intervene if the Trial Chamber's decision was based on a discernible error.[23] Accordingly, an appellant must show that the Trial Chamber misdirected itself either as to the principle to be applied or as to the law which is relevant to the exercise of its discretion, gave weight to irrelevant considerations, failed to give sufficient weight to relevant considerations, or made an error as to the facts upon which it has exercised its discretion; or that its decision was so unreasonable

[20] Rule 11 bis provides in pertinent part:

(A) If an indictment has been confirmed, whether or not the accused is in the custody of the Tribunal, the President may designate a Trial Chamber which shall determine whether the case should be referred to the authorities of a State:

(i) in whose territory the crime was committed; or

(ii) in which the accused was arrested; or

(iii) having jurisdiction and being willing and adequately prepared to accept such a case, so that those authorities should forthwith refer the case to the appropriate court for trial within that State.

(C) In determining whether to refer the case in accordance with paragraph (A), the Trial Chamber shall satisfy itself that the accused will receive a fair trial in the courts of the State concerned and that the death penalty will not be imposed or carried out.

and plainly unjust that the Appeals Chamber is able to infer that the Trial Chamber must have failed to exercise its discretion properly.[24]

463. The Appeals Chamber notes that, pursuant to Rule 11 bis (B), it is the designated Trial Chamber that decides, proprio motu or at the request of the Prosecutor, whether a referral of a case to national authorities is appropriate in the circumstances of each particular case. In these circumstances and without prejudice to the independence of the Prosecutor as a separate body of the Tribunal, the Appeals Chamber emphasizes that the Prosecution can hardly anticipate on the certainty of such transfer prior to applying for it.

464. In the concrete case before this Appeals Chamber, the Prosecution principally argues that the Trial Chamber erred in focusing on whether Norwegian criminal law had crimes with the same legal elements as defined in the Tribunal's Statute as opposed to considering whether it adequately criminalized the underlying conduct.[25] In support of this position, the Prosecution argues that a plain meaning of Rule 11 bis indicates that what is being transferred is a "case", not a crime.[26] The Prosecution notes that a "case" is a broad concept, referring to the criminal conduct or behavior of the accused, as opposed to legal qualification of the criminal conduct charged.[27] The Prosecution supports this reading by alluding to the plain language of the Rule, the need for flexibility, the limited number of States specifically criminalizing genocide and willing to exercise universal jurisdiction, as well as the principle of double criminality generally applicable in transnational criminal matters.[28] The Prosecution argues that Norway satisfies the conditions for transfer because it has jurisdiction over the criminal acts of the accused, provides for an adequate penalty structure in the context of this case, and is willing to cooperate.[29]

465. In its Amicus Curiae Brief, Norway submits that it has subject matter jurisdiction over Mr. Bagaragaza's alleged genocidal acts.[30] In this respect, it provides pertinent information on its legislative framework and the relationship between international law and Norwegian law.[31] Norway points to its consistent adherence to and support of international humanitarian law, in particular its early ratification of the 1948 Genocide Convention, its cooperation with the Tribunal and the ICTY, and its ratification of the Rome Statute on the International Criminal Court.[32]

466. Norway acknowledges that Norwegian criminal law does not explicitly contain the crime of genocide.[33] However, it submits that on ratifying the 1948 Genocide Convention, its Parliament considered it unnecessary to enact implementing legislation as all conduct prohibited under the convention was already criminal under existing provisions of its criminal law.[34] Norway explains that, according to its legal tradition, its laws are drafted in a general manner, but interpreted in light of both its international legal obligations as well as relevant legislative history.[35]

467. In this respect, Norwegian law has a general provision providing jurisdiction over certain crimes, including homicide and serious bodily injury, when committed abroad by a foreigner provided that the prosecution is authorized by the King.[36] Norway submits that its provisions against homicide and bodily harm would cover the underlying acts alleged in the Indictment against Mr. Bagaragaza.[37] In addition, Norway submits that Mr. Bagaragaza's alleged genocidal intent, as well as the number of its victims, could be taken into account under provisions allowing for the most severe penalties in aggravating circumstances, thus fully reflecting the gravity of the crimes charged.[38] Norway states that

> "if an indicted person accused of acts amounting to genocide is tried before Norwegian courts on the basis of an agreement between the requesting international court and the Norwegian government, the indictment in the case will fully reflect the aggravating circumstances under which the alleged offences have been carried out."[39]

The Prosecution supports the position of Norway, and it further claims that the maximum possible penalty of 21 years' imprisonment under Norwegian law would provide adequate punishment in light of the specific charges against Mr. Bagaragaza and his willingness to cooperate.[40]

468. The Trial Chamber acknowledged that Norway could exercise jurisdiction over Mr. Bagaragaza's alleged criminal conduct committed in Rwanda in 1994.[41] However, the Trial Chamber reasoned that Norway lacked jurisdiction within the meaning of Rule 11 bis because it could not charge the crime of genocide as defined in the Statute, noting that the crime of homicide did not require proof of genocidal intent, an essential element of the crime of genocide.[42]

469. Considering the submissions of the parties, the Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that the Prosecution has demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in denying its request to refer Mr. Bagaragaza's case to Norway for trial. As the Amicus Curiae Brief makes clear, Norway's jurisdiction over Mr. Bagaragaza's crimes would be exercised pursuant to legislative provisions dealing with the prosecution of ordinary crimes. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the basis of the Tribunal's authority to refer its cases to national jurisdictions flows from Article 8 of the Statute, as affirmed in Security Council resolutions.[43] Article 8 specifies that the Tribunal has concurrent jurisdiction with national authorities to prosecute "serious violations of international humanitarian law". In other words, this provision delimits the Tribunal's authority, allowing it only to refer cases where the state will charge and convict for those international crimes listed in its Statute.

470. The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Prosecution that the concept of a "case" is broader than any given charge in an indictment and that the authorities in the referral State need not necessarily proceed under their laws against each act or crime mentioned in the Indictment in the same manner that the Prosecution would before this Tribunal.[44] In addition, the Appeals Chamber appreciates fully that Norway's proposed prosecution of Mr. Bagaragaza, even under the general provisions of its criminal code, intends to take due account of and treat with due gravity the alleged genocidal nature of the acts underlying his present indictment. However, in the end, any acquittal or conviction and sentence would still only reflect conduct legally characterized as the "ordinary crime" of homicide. That the legal qualification matters for referrals under the Tribunal's Statute and Rules is reflected inter alia in Article 9 reflecting the Tribunal's principle of non bis in idem.[45] According to this statutory provision, the Tribunal may still try a person who has been tried before a national court for "acts constituting serious violations of international humanitarian law" if the acts for which he or she was tried were "categorized as an ordinary crime". Furthermore, the protected legal values are different. The penalization of genocide protects specifically defined groups, whereas the penalization of homicide protects individual lives.

[43] The ICTY Appeals Chamber made this observation on the basis of the equivalent Article of the ICTY Statute (Article 9) in Stanković Appeal Decision, paras 14-17. See also Mejakić et al. Appeal Decision, para. 16. The Security Council has endorsed the referral of cases by this Tribunal in S/Res/1503 (2003) and S/Res/1534 (2004).

471. The Appeals Chamber recognizes that this decision may have a practical impact on Mr. Bagaragaza's situation who, according to the Prosecution's submissions to the President of the Tribunal, faces security risks if detained in the UNDF in Arusha. It also notes that it may limit future referrals to similar jurisdictions which could assist the Tribunal in the completion of its mandate. However, the Appeals Chamber cannot sanction the referral of a case to a jurisdiction for trial where the conduct cannot be charged as a serious violation of international humanitarian law. This is particularly so when the accused has been charged with genocide, an offense that – unlike murder – is designed to protect a "national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such".

472. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber DISMISSES the Prosecution's Appeal.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA ("Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber III ("Chamber"), composed of Judges Khalida Rachid Khan, Presiding, Inés Mónica Weinberg de Roca and Dennis C. M. Byron;

SEIZED OF the "Prosecutor's Application for Leave to Amend the Indictment" ("Motion"), filed on 1 November 2006;

CONSIDERING the "Defence Response to Prosecutor's Application for Leave to Amend the Indictment" ("Response"), filed on 7 November 2006; the "Prosecutor's Reply to the Defence Response to the Application for Leave to Amend the Indictment" ("Reply"), filed on 8 November 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion, pursuant to Rules 50 and 73 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules").

Introduction

1. The current Indictment against Michel Bagaragaza was confirmed by Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov on 28 July 2005 and charges the Accused with Conspiracy to Commit Genocide, Genocide, and alternatively, Complicity in Genocide.[1] The Accused made an initial appearance before the Tribunal on 16 August 2005, where he pleaded not guilty to all Counts. The Prosecution now requests leave to amend the Indictment against Michel Bagaragaza, principally by adding a new, fourth Count against the Accused pursuant to Article 4 of the Tribunal's Statute for killing and causing violence to health and physical or mental well-being as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and Additional Protocol II of 1977 ("War Crimes"). The Prosecution also proposes other changes to the Indictment, namely deletion of one paragraph which the Prosecution has since discovered was not supported by the evidence, a few additions to reflect changes in recent jurisprudence, several additions to make the details of the existing factual allegations more precise, and a few other corrections of a grammatical or typographical nature. The Prosecution stresses that the proposed amendments are not adding any new factual allegations of a substantial nature, an assertion with which the Defence does not take issue.

2. The Defence agrees to the granting of this Motion, provided that the newly proposed fourth Count, War Crimes, is charged only in the alternative to the Genocide Counts.[2] In the Reply, the Prosecution accedes to the Defence stance, and amends its application accordingly.

Discussion

PRELIMINARY MATTER: CONFIDENTIAL SUBMISSIONS TO BE RECLASSIFIED AS PUBLIC DOCUMENTS

3. The Motion and the Reply were filed by the Prosecution as confidential documents. The Prosecution requests that these proceedings remain confidential until the Chamber renders a decision on the Motion, in order to "avoid speculation" on any cooperation provided by a State in connection with any possible referral of the Indictment to another Court, pursuant to Rule 11 bis of the Rules.

4. In the Chamber's view, the Prosecution's Motion and Reply do not contain information that, if disclosed, would cause any prejudice to the Parties in the case or be contrary to the interests of justice. There was no good reason to file these as confidential documents. The Chamber therefore directs that the Motion and Reply be reclassified as public documents.

ON THE MERITS

Addition of the War Crimes Count

5. The Prosecution submits that

> "the addition of the war crimes count is appropriate in view of the evidence, and with this count included, the Indictment better reflects the criminal liability of the Accused".[3]

It also emphasises that its request to amend the Indictment by adding a War Crimes Count is mainly motivated by its intent to seek the transfer of this case to a national jurisdiction under Rule 11 bis of the Rules.[4]

6. In the Chamber's view and according to the Statute, the Rules and the established jurisprudence, the purpose of encouraging a State to accept a possible transfer of an Accused under Rule 11 bis of the Rules is not a relevant factor to be taken into consideration by a Chamber when deciding whether to grant leave to amend an Indictment. In that respect, the Chamber notes that the Prosecutor "shall act independently as a separate organ of the International Tribunal for Rwanda" and shall not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other source.[5]

7. Rule 50 (A) (i) of the Rules prescribes that after the initial appearance of the accused, an amendment of an Indictment may only be made by leave granted by a Trial Chamber. In deciding whether to grant leave to amend the indictment, the Chamber shall, mutatis mutandis, follow the procedures and apply the standards set out in Sub-Rules 47 (E) and (F) in addition to considering any other relevant factors.[6] The Chamber shall therefore examine the proposed amendments to the Indictment, and any supporting materials the Prosecution has provided, to determine whether a prima facie case exists against the Accused.[7] Pursuant to the jurisprudence, other relevant factors include the Accused's right to be tried without undue delay, and to be promptly informed and in detail of the nature and cause of the charges against him or her.[8] In that respect, Chambers have taken into consideration whether the proposed changes more accurately describe the totality of the criminal conduct of the accused,[9] the ameliorating effect of the changes on the clarity and precision of the case to be met,[10] newly discovered evidence,[11] and the diligence of the Prosecution in bringing the amendment in a timely manner.[12]

[3] Motion, paragraph 9.

[4] "[W]ithin [the proposed state's] jurisdiction prosecutors have considerable experience in prosecuting war crimes cases and have expressed a desire to pursue a war crimes count against the Accused in addition to the genocide counts. It is with respect for the judgment and experience of these national authorities that the Prosecutor seeks to amend the Indictment to include a charge of war crimes." Motion, paragraph 6.

8. The Chamber notes that the supporting materials have already been reviewed by the confirming Judge who determined that a prima facie case exists against the Accused for the Counts of Conspiracy to Commit Genocide, Genocide, and Complicity in Genocide. The Chamber further notes that the proposed War Crimes Count is based on the same material facts, and having also reviewed the supporting materials, is satisfied that a prima facie case exists against the Accused for this Count as well.

9. Since the Defence agrees to the amendment, no date has yet been set for trial, and the additional War Crimes Count does not include any new material facts, granting leave to amend will not negatively impact the rights of, or otherwise prejudice the Accused. The Chamber therefore grants the Prosecution leave to amend.

10. The Chamber notes that according to the jurisprudence, even in the absence of new factual or evidentiary material, charges in the alternative or additional legal theories of liability are considered new charges.[13] Since the addition of the War Crimes Count amounts to alleging a new legal theory of liability of the Accused and therefore a new charge, a further appearance of the Accused is required as soon as practicable to enable the accused to enter a plea on the War Crimes Count, in accordance with Rule 50 (B) of the Rules.[14]

The Chamber's Directions on Specificity, Consistency, and Clarity of Charging

11. According to Article 20 of the Statute and Rule 47 (C) of the Rules, the Prosecution must state the material facts underpinning the charges in the indictment: the indictment has to fulfil the fundamental purpose of informing the accused of the charges against him with sufficient particularity to enable him to mount his defence. The Prosecution's characterisation of the alleged criminal conduct and the proximity of the accused to the underlying crime are decisive factors in determining the degree of specificity with which the Prosecution must plead the material facts of its case in the indictment in order to provide the accused with adequate notice. The practice by the Prosecution of merely quoting the provisions of Article 6 (1) of the Statute in the indictment is likely to cause ambiguity, and it is preferable that the Prosecution indicate in relation to each individual count precisely and expressly the particular nature of the responsibility alleged.[15] If the Prosecution relies on a theory of joint criminal enterprise, then the Prosecutor must plead the purpose of the enterprise, the identity of the participants, and the nature of the accused's participation in the enterprise. The Prosecution should also specify the form of joint criminal enterprise it intends to rely on.[16] The Chamber has reviewed the details of the proposed Amended Indictment in light of these principles.

12. Paragraphs 17 through 20, 26, and 28 through 30 of the proposed Amended Indictment allege, inter alia, the Accused's participation in a joint criminal enterprise with the common purpose of (i) committing Genocide[17] and/or (ii) killing, and causing violence to health and physical or mental well being against the Tutsi.[18] The Prosecution does not specify which form of joint criminal enterprise it intends to rely on. Paragraph 26 alleges that, in addition to a small group of named individual participants, the joint criminal enterprise included "members of the Interahamwe and Presidential Guard, and other unknown participants", whereas paragraph 17 says only "other participants", despite the fact that the events alleged in support of these crimes are the same. Paragraphs 28 through 30 specify that the Interahamwe and Presidential Guard who allegedly carried out the attacks at Kesho Hill, Nyundo Cathedral and in Rubaya were members of the joint criminal enterprise, whereas paragraphs 18 through 20 do not. The Chamber directs the Prosecution to make the following changes to the proposed Amended Indictment:

(i) the Prosecution should specify the form of joint criminal enterprise it intends to rely on;

(ii) where possible, the Prosecution should identify individual members of the Interahamwe and Presidential Guard who allegedly participated in the joint criminal enterprise;

(iii) if further specificity regarding the names of the individual Interahamwe and Presidential Guard allegedly involved in the joint criminal enterprise is not possible, the Prosecution should replace the phrase "other participants" in paragraph 17 with the phrase "members of the Interahamwe and Presidential Guard, and other unknown participants" from paragraph 26, as the latter phrase adds some specificity;

(iv) the Prosecution should add the allegation that the Interahamwe and Presidential Guard who allegedly carried out the attacks at Kesho Hill, Nyundo Cathedral and in Rubaya were members of the joint criminal enterprise, as is already alleged in paragraphs 28, 29 and 30, to paragraphs 18, 19, and 20 for the purposes of adding specificity to those paragraphs as well as consistency.

13. Introductory Paragraphs 17 and 26 of the proposed Amended Indictment allege that Michel Bagaragaza is individually responsible under Article 6 (1) of the Statute for Genocide and War Crimes, respectively. Both paragraphs allege that the Accused "planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of" these crimes, but the particular paragraphs that follow only allege that Michel Bagaragaza aided and abetted the crimes.[19] In the Chamber's view, it is preferable that the Prosecution indicate precisely in relation to each individual count the particular nature of the responsibility alleged, rather than simply quoting the provisions of Article 6 (1). The Prosecution should therefore amend Introductory Paragraphs 17 and 26 so that the particular nature of responsibility alleged is consistent with the more particular paragraphs that follow them.

14. Paragraphs 23 and 34 of the proposed Amended Indictment refer to "the chief of the plantation of the Nyabihu tea factory in Gisenyi préfecture" without specifying his name. If possible, the Prosecution should specify this name.

15. Paragraph 30 of the proposed Amended Indictment alleges,

[17] Counts II and III of the proposed Amended Indictment, paras. 17-20.

[18] Count IV of the proposed Amended Indictment, paras. 26, 28-30.

[19] Paragraphs 18 through 20 of the proposed Amended Indictment set forth the particulars for Count II: Genocide, and Count III: Complicity in Genocide. Paragraphs 27 through 30 set forth the particulars for the new War Crimes Count.

"On or about 9 April 1994, at his home in Rambura, Michel Bagaragaza ordered a driver called Nsanzimana to transport a group of Interahamwe […]", whereas paragraph 20 states,

"On or about 9 April 1994, Michel Bagaragaza order a driver […] to transport a group of Interahamwe [….]".

The underlying events are the same, but paragraph 30 alleges particulars that are not alleged in paragraph 20 – specifically, that the Accused was at his home in Rambura and that the driver was called Nsanzimana. For the purpose of consistency, these particulars should be added to paragraph 20.

16. Paragraph 31 of the proposed Amended Indictment alleges that Michel Bagaragaza is responsible for War Crimes as a superior pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute. The Prosecution alleges that, in addition to those individually named or identified, "members of the Interahamwe" were subordinates of the Accused. Paragraph 21, which alleges Michel Bagaragaza's responsibility as an Article 6 (3) superior for Genocide or Complicity in Genocide, does not include "members of the Interahamwe" among the list of subordinates. The material facts alleged in support of the Genocide and War Crimes Counts are identical. Therefore, the Chamber is of the view that, for the purposes of consistency and particularity, the Prosecution should, depending on what it intends to prove at trial, either include "members of the Interahamwe" among the list of subordinates in paragraph 21, or remove "members of the Interahamwe" from the list of subordinates in paragraph 31.

17. Paragraph 35 of the proposed Amended Indictment alleges that "On or about 8 or 9 April 1994, Emmanuel Mbarshimana, a driver at the tea factory of Nyabihu, transported a truck full of Interahamwe to Nyundo …", whereas, paragraph 25, which deals with the same allegation, says "On or about 7-9 April 1994." The Prosecution should amend these paragraphs so that the dates alleged are consistent, and, if possible, should provide more specific dates. In addition, paragraph 35 does not clearly allege which subordinate's actions Michel Bagaragaza had reason to know of and failed to prevent or punish. Both Mbarshimana and members of the Interahamwe are alleged to be subordinates of the Accused elsewhere in the proposed Amended Indictment. Paragraph 25, which concerns the same material facts, clearly alleges that Mbarshimana was a subordinate of Michel Bagaragaza. If the Prosecution is also referring to Mbarshimana as the subordinate in paragraph 35, then this should be clearly specified.

18. The Prosecutor seeks to delete paragraph 14 of the current Indictment, as further investigations have revealed that the factual allegation contained therein is an inaccurate repetition of the allegation contained in paragraph 11 of the current Indictment (now renumbered as paragraph 15). The Chamber considers that the proposed deletion causes the Accused no prejudice, and is consistent with his right to be informed of the nature and cause of the changes against him. The Chamber therefore allows the proposed change.

19. The Chamber has identified typographical errors and other minor issues that should be corrected:
    (i) In paragraph 18 of the proposed Amended Indictment the second sentence of the paragraph includes the phrase "of the tea" twice in immediate succession.
    (ii) In paragraph 28 of the proposed Amended Indictment the Prosecution should change the internal reference from paragraph number 27, which is incorrect, to paragraph number 26, which is the correct number of the paragraph it is referring to.
    (iii) Paragraph 35 of the proposed Amended Indictment includes the following sentence: "These Tutsi civilians were taking no active part in the non-international armed conflict referred to in paragraph 6 above but were perceived to be sympathizers or accomplices of the RPF. but hundreds of them were killed and seriously injured as a result." These sentences are not clear and should be amended in a comprehensible way.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. GRANTS leave to amend the Indictment to add an additional, and in the alternative with the Genocide Counts, Count pursuant to Article 4 of the Tribunal's Statute for killing and causing violence to health and physical or mental well-being as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and Additional Protocol II of 1977, subject to the above-mentioned directions; and,

II. ORDERS the Prosecution to file an Amended Indictment with the Registry and the Chamber, including the directions on specificity, consistency, and clarity as outlined above within three (3) days from the service of this Decision; and

III. ORDERS that a further appearance shall be held as soon as practicable, and, accordingly, requests that the Registrar make further arrangements.

I. Introduction

1. Confirmé le 28 juillet 2005 par le juge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov, l'acte d'accusation dressé contre Michel Bagaragaza retient trois chefs d'accusation à savoir : entente en vue de commettre le génocide, génocide et, à titre subsidiaire, complicité dans le génocide. Pour l'essentiel, il y est allégué que Michel Bagaragaza a participé à de nombreuses réunions au cours desquelles il a planifié, de concert avec d'autres personnes, l'extermination de tous les membres de la population tutsie en raison de leur association avec les Inkotanyi ; qu'il a prononcé des discours de haine pour inciter d'autres à participer à un tel plan ; qu'il a fourni une assistance financière aux Interahamwe, accepté de collecter des fonds à leur profit, et souscrit à l'idée de leur faire suivre une formation paramilitaire ; qu'il a ordonné aux employés de l'usine de thé de Rubaya de fournir du carburant aux Interahamwe et aux éléments de la Garde présidentielle lorsque ceux-ci se rendaient sur la colline de Kesho dans le but d'attaquer et tuer des centaines de Tutsis qui s'y trouvaient ; qu'il a ordonné à l'un des chauffeurs de l'usine de thé de Nyabihu de transporter des Interahamwe à la cathédrale de Nyundo pour y attaquer des Tutsis ; qu'il a ordonné à un autre chauffeur de transporter des Interahamwe à Rubaya pour y mener une autre attaque ; que l'un de ses subordonnés a donné des emplois à des réservistes de l'armée, assuré une formation militaire, fourni des armes et des munitions à d'autres employés de l'usine de thé de Rubaya, et par la suite, que les deux groupes d'employés ont participé au massacre de Tutsis.

2. Avant sa reddition le 16 août 2005, l'accusé avait conclu un accord avec le Procureur, acceptant de coopérer avec celui-ci, faisant une déclaration exhaustive sur les événements survenus au Rwanda en 1994, incriminant d'autres Rwandais[1] et lui-même. Il a convenu avec le Procureur d'être jugé devant un tribunal interne qui serait désigné à une date ultérieure. Le 15 février 2006, le Procureur a déposé une requête en renvoi de l'acte d'accusation aux autorités du Royaume de Norvège conformément à l'article 11 bis du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »). La Défense a répondu à la requête y donnant son accord de principe et saisissant la Chambre d'autres demandes[2].

3. Le 21 février 2006, par application de l'article 11 bis (A) du Règlement, le Président a saisi la Chambre de première instance III composée des juges Dennis C. M. Byron (Président), Jai Ram Reddy et Joseph Asoka Nihal de Silva, de la requête[3]. Le 23 mars 2006, la Chambre a ordonné aux parties et au Royaume de Norvège de déposer des écritures supplémentaires, tout en rappelant les dispositions de l'article 74 du Règlement (Amicus curiae)[4]. La Défense, le Procureur et le ministère des affaires étrangères du Royaume de Norvège ont déposé ces écritures respectivement les 30 mars, 6 avril et 10 avril 2006. Le 12 avril 2006, le Procureur a déposé une réponse, le Greffier produisant le 20 avril 2006, des observations sur le fondement de l'article 33 (B) du Règlement. Le 24 avril 2006, la Défense a déposé une réponse à ces dernières écritures et une clarification de ses propres écritures supplémentaires. Aucune autre partie n'a déposé de conclusions ou demandé l'autorisation de le faire. La Chambre statue sur la requête sur la base de toutes ces écritures.

II. Délibération

4. Le 19 mai 2006, le Président a communiqué à la Chambre une note verbale émanant du Ministère rwandais des affaires étrangères[5] tendant à ce que la République rwandaise soit entendue en vertu de l'article 74 du Règlement, avant que la Chambre ne statue sur la demande de renvoi de l'acte d'accusation. Dans sa décision du 23 mars 2006, la Chambre, relevant qu'aux termes de l'article 74 du Règlement toute partie intéressée peut être autorisée à comparaître ou à lui présenter toute question spécifiée par elle, estime que la République rwandaise aurait dû la saisir à cet effet à la suite de sa décision. Rejetant la demande formulée par la République rwandaise en vue de présenter des écritures à ce stade de la procédure, elle fait observer que le droit d'être entendu invoqué dans la note verbale n'en sera pas affecté.

[1] L'accord et la déclaration ont été joints à la requête en renvoi comme documents confidentiels leur divulgation étant de nature à nuire à la sécurité de l'accusé et des membres de sa famille.

[2] La Défense a déposé sa réponse le 20 février 2006.

[3] Désignation de la Chambre de première instance en vertu de l'article 11 bis du Règlement (Président), 21 février 2006.

[4] L'article 74 du Règlement est libellé comme suit : « une Chambre peut, si elle le juge souhaitable dans l'intérêt d'une bonne administration de la justice, inviter ou autoriser tout Etat, toute organisation ou toute personne à comparaître devant elle et lui présenter toute question spécifiée par la Chambre ».

[5] Voir Mémorandum du Président sous la cote [ICTR/PRES/026.06] et la note verbale sous la cote [247/09.01/CAB/MIN/06].

5. Selon l'article 11 bis du Règlement, trois conditions doivent être satisfaites pour qu'il soit statué sur une demande de renvoi, à savoir : (1) l'État de renvoi doit avoir compétence et être disposé et tout à fait prêt à accepter une telle affaire ; (2) l'État de renvoi doit être en mesure de garantir un procès équitable et ; (3) l'accusé n'encourt pas la peine capitale dans l'État de renvoi. Dans leurs conclusions, les parties ont mis d'autres conditions au renvoi[6].

A. L'Etat de renvoi doit avoir compétence et être disposé et tout à fait prêt à accepter la cause

6. Aux termes de l'article 11 bis (A) du Règlement, un acte d'accusation confirmé peut être renvoyé aux autorités d'un État (i) sur le territoire duquel le crime a été commis ; (ii) dans lequel l'accusé a été arrêté, ou (iii) ayant compétence et étant disposé et tout à fait prêt à accepter une telle affaire. En l'espèce, le Procureur demande le renvoi de l'acte d'accusation aux autorités du Royaume de Norvège en vertu de la troisième disposition de l'article 11 bis (A).

7. Dans sa requête, le Procureur exclut aussi bien la République rwandaise que la République-Unie de Tanzanie comme États de renvoi. Si la République rwandaise est l'État sur le territoire duquel les crimes ont été commis (alinéa (A) (i) de l'article 11 bis), le Procureur, rappelant les dispositions du paragraphe (C) dudit article qui posent deux autres conditions (l'absence de la peine capitale et la garantie d'un procès équitable) fait valoir qu'aucune de ces conditions ne peut être à l'heure actuelle satisfaite. Le Procureur soutient en outre que, même si ces conditions étaient satisfaites, de solides raisons d'ordre public militent en faveur de l'intervention d'autres pays dans les poursuites contre l'accusé, y voyant une manière de sensibiliser la population desdits pays aux leçons du génocide rwandais et de cultiver les idées de nature à prévenir pareilles tragédies dans l'avenir. En ce qui concerne la République-Unie de Tanzanie où l'accusé a été arrêté (alinéa (A) (ii) de l'article 11 bis) à la suite de sa reddition le 16 août 2005, le Procureur soutient que lui renvoyer l'affaire ferait entorse à l'article XX (1) de l'Accord de siège[7].

8. Toutefois, le Procureur soutient que le Royaume de Norvège satisfait à la troisième condition, étant un État qui a compétence et qui est disposé et tout à fait prêt à accepter une telle affaire (alinéa (A) (iii) de l'article 11 bis). Le Procureur joint à sa requête la correspondance échangée avec les autorités norvégiennes, attestant leur volonté d'être saisies de l'affaire.

9. De cet échange de correspondances et des écritures supplémentaires présentées par le ministère des affaires étrangères de la Norvège, la Chambre a conclu que le droit pénal interne norvégien ne réprime pas le génocide. Les autorités norvégiennes informent la Chambre que, sur la base des faits allégués dans l'acte d'accusation, l'accusé peut être poursuivi des chefs de complicité d'homicide ou d'homicide par imprudence, crimes passibles d'une peine maximale de 21 ans d'emprisonnement. Les autorités norvégiennes font valoir également que les poursuites en l'espèce peuvent être exercées en vertu du principe de compétence universelle, lequel exigerait que l'acte d'accusation soit approuvé par le King in Council. Autrement dit, même si les tribunaux norvégiens n'ont pas pleine compétence pour juger les faits allégués dans l'acte d'accusation, les poursuites peuvent néanmoins être exercées dans certaines circonstances, comme il ressort des observations des autorités norvégiennes en date du 10 avril 2006. Enfin, le Royaume de Norvège fait valoir qu'en cas de renvoi, il appréciera souverainement l'opportunité de poursuites au vu des éléments de preuve.

10. Invoquant la décision de renvoi dans l'affaire Stanković, le Procureur soutient que le critère de la « compétence » n'exige pas que le droit pénal interne de l'État concerné doive contenir les mêmes dispositions que le Statut du Tribunal. Il fait valoir que la peine maximale prévue par le Norwegian General Civil Penal Code est adéquate, quand on sait que l'accusé est âgé de 60 ans, qu'il a assumé l'entière responsabilité de ses actes, comme il ressort de sa déclaration, et qu'il a accepté de coopérer à l'exercice de poursuites pénales internes et internationales a raisons des faits survenus en 1994 au Rwanda.

11. La Défense fait valoir que rien n'empêche le Royaume de Norvège d'exercer une compétence universelle en l'espèce. Elle invoque la loi norvégienne portant compétence universelle à l'égard des infractions de droit commun réprimées en droit interne. Elle invoque également la jurisprudence internationale, notamment l'arrêt relatif au mandat d'arrêt[8]. Toutefois, le Procureur, s'opposant à l'évocation de l'affaire sur le mandat d'arrêt, soutient que l'unique titre de compétence du Royaume de Norvège est l'article 11 bis du Règlement, et qu'il n'est pas nécessaire de satisfaire les conditions relevées par la Défense dans l'opinion individuelle conjointe des juges Higgins, Kooijmans et Buergenthal dans l'arrêt relatif au mandat d'arrêt rendu le 14 février 2002.

12. La Chambre d'appel a déclaré que si le Statut du TPIY ne renferme pas de base légale explicite pour l'article 11 bis du Règlement, à l'évidence des compétences internes alternatives ont toujours été envisagées aux fins de « transfert » d'accusés[9]. En recherchant si le Royaume de Norvège a compétence en vertu de l'article 11 bis (A) (iii), la Chambre doit être convaincue de l'existence d'un cadre légal adéquat qui permette de réprimer le comportement présumé de l'accusé, et s'il est déclaré coupable, lui infliger une peine appropriée par référence aux infractions justiciables du Tribunal[10]. La Chambre estime qu'à cette fin, elle doit se guider principalement sur le Statut.

13. Le Statut définit la compétence en ses articles 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 et 7. L'interprétation de l'article 11 bis (A) (iii) doit se fonder sur cette définition de la compétence ratione materiae, ratione personae, ratione loci et ratione temporis. Lorsqu'il confirme un acte d'accusation, le juge saisi doit rechercher si chacune de ces conditions est satisfaite pour donner compétence au Tribunal. En l'espèce, la compétence universelle invoquée dans les observations du Royaume de Norvège permettra de poursuivre l'accusé (ratione personae) pour les actes qu'il aurait commis au Rwanda (ratione loci) en 1994 (ratione temporis). Le seul titre de compétence qui ne serait pas envisagé par le droit norvégien est la compétence ratione materiae. L'argument selon lequel le génocide est inconnu du droit pénal norvégien intéresse directement la compétence ratione materiae puisqu'il touche la qualification juridique des faits allégués dans l'acte d'accusation confirmé[11].

[10] Le Procureur c. Radovan Stanković, Decision on Referral of Case Under Rule 11 bis - Partly Confidential and Ex Parte (Referral Bench), 17 mai 2005, par. 32.

14. La Chambre s'inspire de l'affaire Stanković à l'occasion de laquelle la formation saisie a refusé de dire, entre deux régimes de droit applicable aux crimes allégués dans l'acte d'accusation, lequel l'État de renvoi devrait appliquer, mais a néanmoins donné une analyse détaillée du droit de fond qui pourrait être appliqué si l'affaire était renvoyée à la Bosnie-Herzégovine[12]. Le Code pénal de la République socialiste de Bosnie-Herzégovine ne réprimant ni les violations de lois ou coutumes de la guerre ni les crimes contre l'humanité, la formation saisie a conclu qu'il n'y avait nullement lieu d'envisager les crimes retenus dans l'acte d'accusation considéré[13]. Toutefois, ladite formation était convaincue que d'autres instruments de droit pénal à la disposition de l'État de renvoi renfermaient des dispositions similaires, sinon égales, à celles du Statut et du Règlement du TPIY, érigeant en crime la participation. En conséquence, la formation saisie a conclu que des poursuites peuvent être engagées contre l'accusé dans l'État de renvoi à raison de certains ou de tous les actes criminels allégués[14].

15. La Chambre juge trompeur l'argument du Procureur selon lequel la Chambre n'est pas tenue de déterminer le droit de fond applicable devant la juridiction interne. Elle doit déterminer si l'État de renvoi a compétence au sens de la définition donnée par le Statut. Lorsque plusieurs régimes de droit applicable existent dans le droit interne de l'État de renvoi, la Chambre n'a pas qualité pour dire lequel doit trouver application, si chacun des régimes prévoit une qualification appropriée en conformité avec le Statut.

16. En l'espèce, il appert que le Royaume de Norvège n'a pas compétence (ratione materiae) à l'égard des crimes imputés dans l'acte d'accusation confirmé. En outre, la Chambre rappelle que les crimes allégués (génocide, entente en vue de commettre le génocide et complicité dans le génocide) diffèrent sensiblement sous l'angle de leurs éléments constitutifs et de leur gravité du crime d'homicide, du chef duquel le Royaume de Norvège estime pouvoir poursuivre l'accusé au regard de son droit interne. La Chambre rappelle que le crime de génocide se singularise en ceci qu'il requiert l'« intention de détruire, en tout ou en partie, un groupe national, ethnique, racial ou religieux, comme tel ». Cette intention spécifique n'est pas requise pour le crime d'homicide en droit pénal norvégien. En conséquence, la Chambre estime que la compétence ratione materiae, à l'égard des faits allégués dans l'acte d'accusation confirmé n'est pas organisée par le droit positif norvégien. Il suit de là que les actes criminels reprochés à Michel Bagaragaza ne peuvent être pleinement qualifiés en droit pénal norvégien, la demande de renvoi de l'affaire aux autorités du Royaume de Norvège devant être rejetée.

B. Autres conditions

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

REJETTE la requête dans son intégralité.

Fait à Arusha, le 19 mai 2006.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, designated by the Chamber in accordance with Rule 73 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence;

BEING SEIZED of the "Urgent Motion for Trial Chamber Authorization to Interview Witness LE-1", filed by the Kabiligi Defence on 24 January 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 25 January 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. The Kabiligi Defence requests permission to meet with Witness LE-1, who testified as a Defence witness on 19, 20 and 21 October 2005, notwithstanding the Chamber's instruction to the witness not to "discuss your testimony with anyone".[1]

2. Following a change of Lead Counsel, the Kabiligi Defence was authorized by the Chamber to present its case after the other Defence teams.[2] Recognizing that witnesses appearing for the other Accused may subsequently testify on behalf of the Accused Kabiligi, the Chamber has in the past routinely authorized the Kabiligi Defence to meet with these witnesses, when so requested.[3] There is no reason not to do so in the present case. The permission should be understood as applying to any matters potentially relevant to the present trial, including matters on which the witness has testified before the Chamber.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Kabiligi "Application for Certification for Appeal Pursuant to Rule 73 (B) of the Trial Chamber's 'Decision on Request for Particulars of the Amended Indictment'", filed on 4 October 2005;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 11 October 2005; the Defence Reply, filed on 14 October 2005; the Prosecution Further Response, filed on 17 October 2005; and the Defence Reply thereto, filed on 19 October 2005;

HEREBY DECIDES the application.

Introduction

1. On 27 September 2005, the Chamber denied a Kabiligi Defence motion that the Prosecution be ordered to remedy alleged deficiencies in the Indictment against the Accused by providing further particulars.[1] The issue now before the Chamber is whether leave to appeal this Decision should be granted.

2. As a preliminary matter, the Kabiligi Defence objects to consideration of the Prosecution's Further Response, as being both out of time and not permitted under the Rules. The Trial Chamber has discretion to consider late-filed or supplementary submissions and, in the present instance, chooses to do so.[2]

Deliberations

3. Leave to appeal a Trial Chamber decision may, pursuant to Rule 73 (B) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, be granted where it

> "involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and for which, in the opinion of the Trial Chamber, an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings".

4. The Kabiligi Defence argues that the Decision affects the essential fairness of the trial and its outcome. Allowing the trial to proceed on the basis of the "vague charges set out in the Indictment" impairs the Defence's ability to meet and counter the Prosecution case.[3] The Chamber's consideration of the Pre-trial Brief to determine whether the Defence had sufficient notice of certain material facts was improper.[4] Immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber would materially advance the proceedings by, if successful, requiring the Prosecution to clarify the scope of its case and, hence, reducing the length of the Defence case.[5]

5. The adequacy of an indictment is undoubtedly a question which affects the "fair and expeditious conduct of proceedings" as required by the first prong of Rule 73 (B). The basis for the certification request is that the lack of particulars impairs the Defence's ability to directly and succinctly address the Prosecution case. Even if the evidence admitted in relation to the allegedly vague portions of the Indictment is ultimately excluded by the Trial Chamber, the "fair and expeditious conduct of proceedings" would have been affected.

6. The issue in the present application is whether immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber "may materially advance the proceedings". The application asserts that communications which supplement the Indictment, such as the Pre-trial Brief, should not have been considered by the Chamber, and that "the Indictment itself" must be rectified to cure its alleged vagueness.[6] No jurisprudence is cited in support of this principle. On the contrary, the Appeals Chamber has declared unambiguously that an indictment which is insufficiently specific in respect of some material fact or allegation may be cured by other forms of disclosure to the Defence, including the Pre-trial Brief.[7] Whether this is the case depends on the

> "the timing of such communications, the importance of the information to the ability of the Accused to prepare its defence, and the impact of the newly-disclosed material facts on the Prosecution's case are relevant".[8]

Factual determinations as to the weight of each of these factors are the primary responsibility of the Trial Chamber. Similarly, no reasonable basis has been raised showing how the Chamber committed any reversible error in relation to multiple counts arising from the same material facts, or the charge of superior responsibility.

7. In the Chamber's opinion, reference of the Decision to the Appeals Chamber in these circumstances would not materially advance the proceedings.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA,

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Application for Certification for Appeal Pursuant to Rule 73 (B) of Part of the Trial Chamber's 'Decision on Exclusion of Testimony Outside the Scope of the Indictment' filed 27 September 2005", filed by the Kabiligi Defence on 4 October 2005 ("the Application");

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 11 October 2005; the Reply thereto, filed on 14 October 2005; the Prosecution's Further Response, filed on 17 October 2005; and the Reply to the Further Response, filed on 19 October 2005;

HEREBY DECIDES the Application.

Introduction

1. The Kabiligi Defence requests leave to appeal the Chamber's Decision on Exclusion of Testimony Outside the Scope of the Indictment, filed on 27 September 2005[1]. The Decision declared that portions of the testimony of two witnesses were inadmissible as not relevant to the Indictment against the Accused, but denied all other such requests in respect of a total of eight witnesses[2].

Deliberations

2. Leave to appeal may be certified under Rule 73 (B) of the Rules where a decision

> "involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and for which, in the opinion of the Trial Chamber, an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings".

3. The first criterion is undoubtedly met. More than a dozen events, some of which may be characterized as highly incriminating of the Accused, are at issue in the Decision. The case against the Accused – and the need for a Defence case to rebut this evidence – would be substantially reduced if this evidence were to be excluded at this stage.

4. The second requirement for granting leave to appeal is that it be "the opinion of the Trial Chamber" that immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber "may materially advance the proceedings". The issue addressed by the Decision is whether various items of testimony should be declared inadmissible as not relevant to the Indictment. This depends, in turn, on whether general allegations in the Indictment have been clarified by virtue of subsequent disclosure, in particular, through the Pre-trial Brief. The Decision makes very clear the interrelationship between these two questions:

> Rule 89 (C) provides that "[a] Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value". To be admissible, the "evidence must be in some way relevant to an element of a crime with which the Accused is charged." The present motion complains that the evidence has no relevance to anything in the Indictment, or that some paragraphs of the Indictment to which it might be relevant are too vague to be taken into account. Some recent Appeals Chamber judgements thoroughly discuss the specificity with which an indictment must be pleaded, and the significance of other forms of Prosecution disclosure of its case. Although the question addressed in those cases was whether a conviction should be quashed because of insufficient notice of a charge in the indictment, the analysis is equally relevant to the present question, namely, whether evidence is sufficiently related to some charge in the Indictment to be admissible[3].

[3] Decision, para. 2 (references omitted).

In short, the Decision is a ruling on the admissibility of evidence.

5. The Appeals Chamber has held that certification should not ordinarily be granted on questions of admissibility of evidence, reasoning that

> "as the matters in the Appeal are clearly for the Trial Chamber, as trier of fact, to determine in the exercise of its discretion, in the view of the Appeals Chamber, it … should not have been certified"[4].

Although such rulings are not immune from interlocutory review, the Appeals Chamber has stated that certification must be the "the absolute exception"[5]. The applicant must raise some ground for certification other than that an error has been made in evaluating a fact on which the Chamber's discretion was exercised[6].

6. The Defence acknowledges that the scope of the material facts encompassed by an indictment may be supplemented by additional disclosure, but argues that the Trial Chamber

> "erred in its exercise of discretion to admit such material facts, given the specific methods and timing of disclosure adopted by the Prosecution in this case in relation to the abovementioned witness"[7].

The Defence asserts that, cumulatively, the evidence admitted by the Chamber is "tantamount to a radical transformation of the Amended Indictment and the case"[8]. Such a "radical transformation" is, according to the Appeals Chamber, impermissible[9].

7. The characterization of the cumulative effect of the Decision as constituting a legal error is not convincing. No argument has been made that an incorrect legal standard was applied to any particular evidence, or even that the Chamber made any specific error of fact in applying that legal standard. The complaint of the Defence, in substance, is that the Chamber has exercised its discretion in a manner with which it disagrees and considers incorrect. This is just the type of factual determination which the Appeals Chamber has specifically described as not appropriate for certification. Nothing in the present request for certification takes it into the realm of the "absolute exception" contemplated by the Appeals Chamber.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Application.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Kabiligi "Motion for Reconsideration of the 'Decision on Kabiligi Application for Certification'", etc., filed on 12 December 2005;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 16 December 2005; and the Kabiligi Reply, filed on 21 December 2005.

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. On 21 October 2005, the Chamber made an oral ruling preventing the Defence from asking questions after the Prosecution's cross-examination. The Chamber observed that the questions concerned a "general issue which has been on the table throughout these proceedings", and which, therefore, was not a new question arising only during the Prosecution cross-examination.[1] Leave to appeal this decision was subsequently denied.[2]

2. The Kabiligi Defence now asks the Chamber to reconsider the denial of leave to appeal. Its primary argument is that the Chamber should not have considered the merits of the underlying decision. Rule 73 (B), which requires that the appeal may "materially advance the proceedings", is said to exclude consideration of the nature of the underlying decision or the likelihood of success on appeal.[3] A second but related argument is that the Chamber should not have relied on the "primacy of Trial Chamber decisions which involve an exercise of discretion", a consideration which applies only to the standard of appellate review, not the standard for leave to appeal. Finally, the Defence complains that the Chamber's explanation that "interlocutory appeals are only warranted under exceptional circumstances" did not sufficiently address the specific arguments presented by the Defence.

Deliberations

3. The present motion raises the question whether a Trial Chamber is barred from considering the merits of an appeal in deciding whether leave for that appeal should be granted. In the Decision challenged by the Kabiligi Defence, the Chamber held, quoting a decision from 2003, that the question of whether resolution of the matter by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings "requires consideration not only of the effect on proceedings assuming that there would be a reversal or modification of the Chamber's decision, but also whether there is serious doubt as to the correctness of the legal principles at issue". The Defence has failed to raise such doubt on the Chamber's decision, in large part because the decision rested on an exercise of the Chamber's discretion.[4]

4. The correctness of a decision is a matter for the Appeals Chamber, should certification be granted. In this sense, it is certainly true that a Trial Chamber is not concerned with the correctness of its own decision when determining whether to grant leave to appeal.[5] On the other hand, Trial Chambers do have a responsibility to screen out requests for certification with no prospect of success and which, accordingly, would not "materially advance the proceedings". The Appeals Chamber has emphasized, for example, that certification should not ordinarily be granted on questions of admissibility of evidence, reasoning that

> "as the matters in the Appeal are clearly for the Trial Chamber, as trier of fact, to determine in the exercise of its discretion, in the view of the Appeals Chamber, it … should not have been certified".[6]

Numerous Trial Chamber decisions – and not only by this Trial Chamber – have applied this concept more generally, and inquired whether a request for certification discloses any grounds to believe that the appeal might succeed.[7] The narrow reading of the words "materially advance"

Permitting interlocutory appeals of decisions on the basis of arguments which were not advanced in relation to the original motion would encourage repetitive pleadings and could lead to resolution of issues by the Appeals Chamber without a prior decision on the merits by the Trial Chamber. Even though a Trial Chamber may at the certification stage revisit the substance of a decision, it does so only within the context of the criteria set out in Rule 73 (B)"); Bizimungu et al., Decision on Prosper Mugiraneza's Motion for Certification (TC), 7 July 2005, para. 12 ("[The] Chamber does not consider that there is serious doubt, raised by the Defence Motion, about any question of law, resolution of which by the Appeals Chamber would materially advance the proceedings, as required by Rule 73 (B)"); Bagosora et al., Decision on Certification of Appeal Concerning Admission of Written Statement of Witness XXO (TC), 11 December 2003, para. 7 ("In light of Rule 90 (A), and the absence of any argument raising a serious doubt as to the correctness of its oral decision of 20 November 2003, the Chamber does not believe that immediate resolution of the legal issue by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings, as proposed by the Defence would lead to the result that Trial Chambers are bound to certify decisions even on motions which had been found to be frivolous, provided that the subject-matter concerned the fair and expeditious conduct of proceedings, and reversal of which would advance the proceedings. Rule 73 (B) requires no such inconceivable result. It must be "the opinion of the Trial Chamber" that certification could "materially advance the proceedings": in the absence of any reasonably articulated ground of appeal, certification could not materially advance the proceedings. This does not mean, of course, that a Trial Chamber should simply substitute its own opinion for that of the Appeals Chamber; rather, the appropriate inquiry is whether a showing has been made that the appeal could succeed. That threshold would be met, for example, by showing some basis to believe that the Chamber committed an error as to the applicable law; that it made a patently incorrect conclusion of fact; or that it was so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of the Trial Chamber's discretion.[8]

5. The Decision correctly observes that the

> "Appeals Chamber has repeatedly emphasized the primacy of Trial Chamber rulings involving an exercise of discretion".[9]

The underlying decision "rested on an exercise of the Chamber's discretion", based on a fact-specific analysis of the particular cross-examination in question.[10] The Chamber concluded in summary fashion that no "serious doubt as to the correctness of the legal principles" had been raised. For the reasons described above, the Chamber was correct to consider whether the appeal had any prospect of success. The repetition of the settled formulation that interlocutory appeals "are only warranted under exceptional circumstances" was descriptive, rather than determinative, of the Chamber's conclusion. No error of law or abuse of discretion has been demonstrated.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the motion.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Requête de la Défence de Bagosora en Modification de sa Liste de Témoins", filed on 7 December 2005; the Ntabakuze Defence "Motion for Leave to Vary the Witness List Pursuant to Rule 73 ter (E)", filed on 7 December 2005; and the Nsengiyumva Defence "Urgent Motion for Leave to Amend the List of Defence Witnesses", filed on 15 December 2005;

CONSIDERING the parties' subsequent written pleadings;

HEREBY DECIDES the motions.

Introduction

1. The Bagosora, Ntabakuze, and Nsengiyumva Defence teams request leave to amend their witness lists so as to eliminate a total of fifty-one of their prospective witnesses and to add thirty-one others. The Prosecution does not oppose the deletion of names from the witness lists, but argues that the addition of any new witnesses must be conditional upon complete disclosure of the witnesses' intended testimony and identifying information. A detailed mechanism to ensure such disclosure is proposed, by which the Prosecution would determine whether the disclosure conditions have been met as a prerequisite to their addition to the witness lists. If the Chamber declines to authorize such a mechanism, the Prosecution opposes the motion.

2. The Chamber notes that some of the parties' submissions were filed outside of the time-limits prescribed by the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules"). The Trial Chamber has discretion to consider late-filed submissions and, in the present instance, chooses to do so.[1]

Deliberations

(i) Applicable Standard

3. Rule 73 ter (E) of the Rules provides that:

> After commencement of the Defence case, the Defence, if it considers it to be in the interests of justice, may move the Trial Chamber for leave to reinstate the list of witnesses or to vary its decision as to which witnesses are to be called.

4. In interpreting a similarly worded provision applicable to Prosecution witnesses, this Trial Chamber has held that amendments of a witness list must be supported by "good cause" and be in the "interests of justice".[2] Similar principles have been applied in assessing Defence motions to vary a witness list.[3] The determination of whether to grant a request to vary the witness list requires a close analysis of each witness, including the sufficiency and time of disclosure of the witness' information; the materiality and probative value of the proposed testimony in relation to existing witnesses and allegations in the indictment; the ability of the other party to make an effective cross-examination of the witness; and the justification offered by the party for the addition of the witness.[4]

5. The Bagosora, Ntabakuze and Nsengiyumva Defence teams seek leave to drop nine, thirty-two and ten witnesses respectively.[5] The requests are not opposed by the Prosecution, will economize judicial resources, and are obviously consistent with the effective presentation of Defence evidence. The requests are, therefore, granted.

(iii) Proposed Consent Mechanism

6. The Prosecution does not oppose the requests to add Defence witnesses, provided that the addition of any witness is conditional upon (i) disclosure of the witness' intended testimony, identifying information and statements; (ii) written confirmation by the Prosecution that adequate disclosure has taken place; and (iii) the witness not testifying sooner than sixty days after the Prosecution's confirmation that full disclosure has taken place.

7. The Prosecution has rightly pointed out its need to be informed of the identifying information of any new witnesses and to be provided with a summary of the intended testimony. However, the suggested procedure would interfere with the Chamber's responsibility to grant or deny permission under Rule 73 ter (E). Discretion for variance of the witness list is solely vested with the Chamber, and any Defence team wishing to add new witnesses must make application to the Chamber. Moreover, granting the Defence requests subject to a series of subsequent conditions imposed by the Prosecution could cause confusion and give rise to further disputes. Based on the parties' submissions, the Chamber is in a position not only to assess the merits of the Defence requests to add witnesses, but also to prescribe the timing of the Defence's disclosure obligations so as to ensure that the Prosecution has adequate information and time to prepare for cross-examination.[6]

(iv) Addition of Witnesses

a. General Issues

8. The Chamber will first address issues common to the three motions and will then turn to each Defence team's specific request. The timing of the motions has not been challenged by the Prosecution. It does not claim unfair surprise or an inability to prepare an effective cross-examination of the proposed witnesses, provided that it is given sufficient time for preparation.

9. The Defence requests provide a general indication of the scope of each witness' proposed testimony and, where applicable, identify the Prosecution evidence to be rebutted by the new witness. The Bagosora and Ntabakuze Defence teams also refer to the paragraphs of the Indictment which are relevant to each proposed witness' testimony. The Ntabakuze and Nsengiyumva Defence teams specify the anticipated duration of the witness' examination-in-chief. The information which the Defence has thus far provided may be viewed as a substantial step toward compliance with the Defence's disclosure obligations. Moreover, the Defence requests establish that the proposed testimony is relevant to the charges against the Accused, responds to evidence offered by the Prosecution as part of its case against the Accused, and is relatively brief in length.

[5] The Bagosora Defence wishes to remove Witnesses I-08, J-01, J-06, J-10, K-04, K-05, K-06, K-10 and expert witness Hounkpatin. The witnesses to be removed by the Ntabakuze Defence are: Witnesses Anyidoho, Apedo, Matthew Morcher, Kwesi, Michel Chossudovsky, Gilbert Ngijol, Romeo Dallaire, Plante, Lancaster, Luc Marchal, Todd Howland, DK-17, DM-27, DM-45, DN-15, DN-30, DN-35, DH-50, DM-40, DH-65, DK-12, DH-23, DH-26, L-21, DH-11, DH-21, DH-52, DI-21, DK-51, DK-52, DK-71 and DM-198. The witnesses to be removed by the Nsengiyumva Defence are: GW-1, BZ-2, CF-3, SR-1, BR-5, LN-2, BD-1, LK-7, BK-2 and LND-1.

[6] This Chamber has previously addressed the issue of remedies for late disclosures of witness information. Where new information pertaining to Prosecution Witness DBQ was disclosed shortly before the witness' appearance, the Chamber postponed cross-examination of the witness in order to afford the Defence sufficient time to investigate and prepare for the new evidence. Bagosora et al., Decision on Admissibility of Evidence of Witness DBQ (TC), 18 November 2003, paras. 24-29.

10. The Prosecution places particular emphasis on the overall number of Defence witnesses and on the trial schedule. The Defence challenges the Prosecution arguments and asserts that each team's request must be assessed separately in accordance with Rule 82 (A). The Chamber need not resolve this dispute in deciding the present motions. Each witness is considered individually, applying the criteria mentioned above.

11. Notwithstanding the fact that each witness' proposed testimony must be individually assessed by the Chamber, the Chamber notes that the overall number of witnesses to be called by the Defence teams is reduced, thereby expediting the proceedings. This does not exclude, however, the possibility that certain testimony may be duplicative and may not be allowed by the Chamber at a later stage.

b. Bagosora Request

12. The Bagosora Defence requests leave to amend its list of witnesses by adding one witness. The proposed witness, Witness X-04, will testify about his observations at the SGP gas station on the night of 6 April 1994 and the morning of 7 April 1994. His evidence directly responds to the testimony of Prosecution Witness CW and addresses paragraph 6.32 of the Indictment. The Defence claims to have learned of the witness' existence on 24 October 2005 and to have immediately taken measures to contact him.

13. The Chamber finds that the Bagosora Defence has satisfied the criteria for adding Witness X-04. His proposed testimony is probative of a specific allegation against the Accused and appears to have been recently discovered through ongoing investigations. Moreover, the testimony will directly respond to Prosecution evidence.

c. Ntabakuze Request

14. The Ntabakuze Defence seeks leave to amend its list of witnesses by adding eight witnesses.[7] In the Chamber's view, the criteria for adding these witnesses have been satisfied. The Defence has stated that each of the proposed witnesses was discovered as a result of new or ongoing investigations. The probative value of each witness has also been sufficiently established, with reference to specific Prosecution evidence and paragraphs of the Indictment. Moreover, several of the witnesses replace or condense testimony of other Defence witnesses, which economizes judicial resources and streamlines the presentation of evidence for Ntabakuze. The Chamber grants the request.

d. Nsengiyumva Request

15. The Nsengiyumva Defence requests leave to amend its list of witnesses by adding twenty-two witnesses.[8] It has provided a summary of the proposed testimony for each witness and has estimated the length of the examination-in-chief. In most instances, the Defence has also expressly described the Prosecution evidence to which the proposed testimony responds. The Defence has explained that the availability of most of these witnesses has only recently been confirmed.

16. Even though the explanation for the late availability could have been more detailed, the Chamber finds that the criteria have been met with regard to each of the proposed testimonies. The witnesses respond directly to Prosecution evidence proffered in this case and many are claimed to be the sole witness on a particular issue. The estimated examination-in-chief for each of the proposed witnesses is also relatively brief.

[7] The witnesses to be added by the Ntabakuze Defence are: Witnesses DM-04, DH-133, DI-41, DK-14, DI-40, DI-37, L-22 and DH-7.

[8] The witnesses to be added by the Nsengiyumva Defence are: Witnesses ZEU-1, ZDR-1, XEN-1, KYZ-1, ZDR-2, XEN-2, OME-1, BRA-1, WIN-1, ANG-1, SUM-1, KB-1, MNC-1, BE-1, WY, ZEU-2, MAR-1, Joseph Nzirorera, Ephrem Setako, Edouard Karemera, Simon Bikindi and Joseph Serugendo.

(v) Timing of Disclosures

17. The Chamber orders that disclosure of all information pertaining to the new witnesses must be made at least thirty-five days before the trial session in which the witness is to appear. This requirement is consistent with prior witness protection decision in this case.[9]

(vi) Witness Protection Measures

18. Pursuant to Rule 75, the Chamber has ordered measures to safeguard the privacy and security of witnesses in this case.[10] Existing witness protection measures shall apply to all new witnesses.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS, in their entirety, the requests of the Bagosora, Ntabakuze, and Nsengiyumva Defence teams;

ORDERS that witness protection measures in this case be extended to each new witness;

ORDERS that all identifying information and unredacted statements of the witness be disclosed to the Prosecution at least thirty-five days before the appearance of the witness.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA,

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Amended Request for Certification of 21 October 2005 Decision on Request to Cross-Examine a Witness on New Evidence", filed by the Bagosora Defence on 7 November 2005;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 9 November 2005;

HEREBY DECIDES the Request.

Introduction

1. The Bagosora Defence requests leave to appeal an oral decision of the Chamber on 21 October 2005 denying permission to ask additional questions to Defence Witness LE-1 after the Prosecution cross-examination of the witness. The entire context of the witness's testimony, and a prior ruling of the Chamber in respect of an earlier request for additional cross-examination, are relevant to the present motion and are set out below.

2. Witness LE-1 testified for three days, on 19, 20 and 21 October 2005. The Nsengiyumva Defence, as the party calling the witness, conducted the examination-in-chief. The Ntabakuze and Bagosora Defence teams followed with additional questions to the witness.[1] During the subsequent Prosecution cross-examination, the witness was asked about his request to re-join active military service in April 1994. In particular, he was asked about a written statement in which he had asserted that a condition of his reappointment was that he "be made part of the [army] command because the population was requesting … clear and bold orders to put an end to massacres".[2] The Prosecution suggested to the witness that this indicated that he must have thought that the army command was in a position to stop the massacres of civilians, and that some of its members did not support stopping them. Furthermore, the Prosecution suggested that the rejection of his re-appointment showed that the Minister of Defence did not support stopping the massacres. The witness denied these propositions.[3]

3. Immediately following the Prosecution cross-examination, the Kabiligi Defence requested permission to ask questions concerning matters raised during the Prosecution cross-examination.[4] After oral argument, the Chamber authorized the Kabiligi Defence to ask additional questions:

> Now we are faced with a request for cross-examination to be limited to information that came up in connection with the Prosecution's cross-examination. We can only possibly allow such cross-examination within that framework, not anything beyond that scope, and we expect the Defence counsel now to concentrate on what came up, which is adverse to his client.[5]

After a few questions had been asked, it became apparent that the Kabiligi Defence was embarking on a general inquiry about the military situation in Kigali in April 1994. When asked to explain the line of questioning, the Kabiligi Defence argued that its purpose was to show that the army was not in a position to stop massacres of civilians.[6] After oral argument, the Chamber precluded any further cross-examination on this subject. Though acknowledging that the Prosecution questions had arisen from the previously undisclosed statement of the witness, the Chamber ruled that "this is a general issue which has been on the table throughout the proceedings".[7] On 2 December 2005, the Chamber denied certification to appeal this decision.[8]

4. During the witness's re-examination, the Nsengiyumva Defence tendered the witness's statement as an exhibit, but did not ask specific questions about the capacity of the military to stop the massacres of civilians. The Ntabakuze Defence then asked additional questions about other, unrelated matters, which elicited no objection from the Prosecution.[9]

5. The Bagosora Defence then indicated that it wished to ask additional questions about "the document which was produced, and which I was not aware of at this time". After a Prosecution objection, the Chamber ruled orally that the Bagosora Defence was not entitled to ask additional questions:

As Witness LE-1 was not a Bagosora witness, the questioning conducted by the Bagosora Defence was not an examination-in-chief.

> The idea that one could be in this privileged position, first, to cross-examine the witness, and then to re-examine the witness would be a novel approach in this Tribunal. We have to stick to normal practice and not allow that.
> When it comes to that particular situation, when it was mentioned in the immigration statement that the witness approached authorities, I note that two Defence teams have had the possibility to cross-examine on that immigration statement, and one of them even tendered it as an exhibit. So that's that.[10]

The Bagosora Defence now requests leave for an interlocutory appeal of that decision.

Deliberations

6. The Bagosora Defence requests certification of the decision, arguing that, as required by Rule 73 (B), it affects the "fair and expeditious conduct of proceedings or the outcome of the trial" and that "immediate resolution may materially advance the proceedings".

7. The applicant has not discharged its burden of showing that the decision affects the fair and expeditious conduct of proceedings. The witness denied the incriminating propositions put to him by the Prosecution. He denied unequivocally and repeatedly that his request to be appointed to the army command implied that it was not doing enough to stop the massacres. Reversal of the present decision, and recalling the witness for further cross-examination by the Defence, would be of marginal significance to the outcome or conduct of the present trial.

8. Further, immediate resolution of the present controversy could not, in the Chamber's view, materially advance the proceedings. Defence cross-examination after the Prosecution is permitted where: (i) a new issue has arisen during the Prosecution cross-examination, which (ii) is adverse to the Accused who wishes to pose additional questions.[11] The Defence does not disagree with this standard.[12] The Bagosora Defence suggests, however, that the Chamber improperly considered the possibility that other Defence teams could pose questions to defend its interests. This is said to deprive the Accused of his right under Rule 82 "to be accorded the same rights as if he were being tried separately".[13] The Bagosora Defence argues that the questions would have been allowed had this been a single-accused trial.

9. If the Bagosora Defence had shown that the testimony was adverse to the Accused, then it would have been entitled to pose additional questions to the witness. However, the submission by Lead Counsel failed to show that the subject-matter of the testimony in question was actually detrimental to the Accused Bagosora.[14] The Accused was not mentioned in the document by name, and the witness had denied all of the incriminating propositions suggested by the Prosecution. And that will then be the remedy for the other defence teams").

Chamber made a fact-specific determination based on the submissions before it, applying the correct legal standard.[15] Leave to appeal this determination would not materially advance the proceedings.

10. The Bagosora Defence also suggests that the Chamber's decision in respect of Witness LE-1 is irreconcilable with its decision concerning Witness DM-25, of whom the Defence was permitted to ask questions after the Prosecution cross-examination. The Bagosora Defence had explicitly reserved the right to ask questions after the Prosecution cross-examination of Witness DM-25. The Bagosora Defence argues that this difference is immaterial.[16]

11. The Chamber did not rely on the absence of a reservation of rights as a reason for denying leave to ask additional questions. Nothing in the decision suggests that this was part of the Chamber's reasoning. Certification would not be justified on this basis. The assessment of whether to allow supplemental cross-examination or re-examination is a fact-specific inquiry involving a detailed evaluation of a variety of factors, including the efficient use of courtroom time, which falls squarely within the Trial Chamber's discretion. As the Defence agrees with the legal standard applied by the Chamber, reference of the present decision to the Appeals Chamber would not materially advance the proceedings.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the request.

[15] Although the Chamber did not specifically recite the two-part test in response to the Bagosora application, the oral ruling was very soon after the ruling on the Kabiligi request for additional cross-examination, which did apply the two-part test. T. 21 October 2005 p. 43. Furthermore, the Chamber's use of the term "re-examine" rather than "cross-examine" is immaterial: the Chamber was simply referring to the additional questioning.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Bagosora "Requête en Extrême Urgence", etc., filed on 15 February 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. The Bagosora Defence requests an order for the temporary transfer of one its witnesses, Jean Kambanda, to the Detention Unit of the Tribunal in Arusha for the purpose of testifying before the Chamber. Mr. Kambanda is serving a life sentence of this Tribunal in the Republic of Mali.[1] The Bagosora Defence wishes to call Mr. Kambanda some time after 13 March 2006 and before the end of the present trial session on 7 April 2006. In a letter to Defence Counsel, Mr. Kambanda has indicated his willingness to testify on behalf of the Accused.

2. Rule 90 bis (B) sets two conditions for such an order: first, that

> "the detained witness is not required for any criminal proceedings in the territory of the requested State during the period the witness is required by the Tribunal";

and second, that the "[t]ransfer … does not extend the period of his detention as foreseen by the requested State". Furthermore, Article 4 (3) of the agreement between the United Nations and the Republic of Mali specifically provides for the temporary transfer of a detained person for the purpose of giving testimony, provided that the detainee is not required for criminal proceedings in Mali.[2]

3. The Chamber has been advised by the Registry that Mr. Kambanda is not required for criminal proceedings in Mali during the proposed period of transfer. The first condition, therefore, is satisfied. As Mr. Kambanda is serving a life sentence, there is no scope for the application of the second condition. On the basis of Mr. Kambanda's expression of willingness to testify on behalf of the Accused, the order is justified.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

ORDERS, conditional upon the agreement of the Government of Mali, that Jean Kambanda shall be temporarily transferred to the Detention Unit in Arusha on or about 10 March 2006, and returned no later than 20 April 2006, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules;

REQUESTS the Government of Mali to facilitate the transfer in cooperation with the Registrar and the Tanzanian Government;

INSTRUCTS the Registrar to:

(A) transmit this decision to the Governments of Mali and Tanzania;

(B) ensure the proper conduct of the transfer, including the supervision of the witnesses in the Tribunal's detention facilities;

(C) remain abreast of any changes which might occur regarding the conditions of detention provided for by the requested State and which may possibly affect the timing of the temporary detention, and as soon as possible, inform the Trial Chamber of any such change.

HEREBY DECIDES the motions.

Introduction

1. The Defence for Ntabakuze seeks disclosure of prior statements made by Defence Witnesses DM-30, DM-46, DM-80 and DM-81, on the basis that they are exculpatory under Rule 68 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules"). The Prosecution denies possessing any statements by Witness DM-30 and DM-81, and objects to the disclosure of the statements of the other witnesses on the grounds that they contain no exculpatory information. The Prosecution also asks to be relieved of any disclosure obligation under the Rule 68 (D), as such disclosure would prejudice ongoing Prosecution investigations into individuals named in the statements.

Deliberations

(i) Procedural Matters

2. The Defence argues that the Prosecution motion of 10 October 2005 is, in substance, a response to the Defence motion which, accordingly, must be deemed to have been filed outside of the time-limits prescribed by the Rules. Even assuming this to be the case, the Trial Chamber has discretion to consider late-filed submissions and, in the present instance, chooses to do so.[1]

(ii) Exculpatory Character of the Statements

3. Rule 68 (A) requires the Prosecution to disclose any material which "may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt" of the accused. The initial determination of whether information is exculpatory is to be made by the Prosecution.[2] If the Defence contests this determination, it must present a prima facie basis to believe that the material sought is exculpatory.[3] As the Prosecution avers that it does not possess any statements of Witnesses DM-30 and DM-81, the Chamber need only consider the statements of Witnesses DM-46 and DM-80.

4. The Prosecution claims that Witness DM-46's statement contains "only second-hand information", as the witness was outside Rwanda in 1994. Any disclosure obligation which does exist should be suspended in accordance with Rule 68 (D), as the statement names certain individuals, disclosure of which would prejudice ongoing investigations.[4] The exculpatory character of Witness DM-80's statement is also contested. The Prosecution argues that information about the alleged criminal conduct of others could only be exculpatory if it related to"the exact specific acts with which the accused person has been charged".[5] Information concerning crimes committed by other persons is irrelevant to the case against the accused, and could be used for no other reason than to mount a tu quoque defence. The Defence responds that the information can be used for a variety of purposes which are directly relevant to the Prosecution case against the accused.[6] As with Witness DM-46, the Prosecution asserts that Witness DM-80's statement names specific individuals, disclosure of which would prejudice ongoing investigations, and that these statement cannot be easily redacted to conceal their identity. The Prosecution asks to be relieved of its disclosure obligation or, in the alternative, to be given the opportunity to redact the statement so as not to disclose certain individuals referred to therein.

5. The only issue now before the Chamber is whether the statements of Witness DM-46 and Witness DM-80 contain material which may be exculpatory, as defined by Rule 68 (A). The Chamber is not here concerned with the admissibility of such information. Nevertheless, whether information "may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the accused" must depend on an evaluation of whether there is any possibility, in light of the submissions of the parties, that the information could be relevant to the defence of the accused.

6. The Chamber is of the view, having examined the statements of Witness DM-46 and DM-80, that some of the information may be exculpatory. For example, descriptions of infiltration into areas of government control by RPF soldiers disguised as civilians could provide context or background information which may assist the Chamber in understanding some of the conduct about which the Chamber has heard testimony during the Prosecution case. Information concerning the assassination of President Habyarimana may also assist the Chamber in understanding the background to events in April 1994. The admission of any particular element of evidence will depend on the purpose for which it is tendered; whether the extent of detail is necessary for that purpose; and the Chamber's discretion to avoid needless consumption of time.[7]

7. On the other hand, some of the information in the statements of the two witnesses is not exculpatory. Descriptions of crimes committed by RPF forces against civilians in geographic areas physically distant from combat between the opposing armed forces in 1994 would not suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the accused. The impact of such events on the criminal conduct with which the accused are charged is too remote and indirect. The Defence submissions have not demonstrated that such information would assist in disproving any element of the offences with which the Accused are charged, or how it could sustain a valid excuse or justification for their alleged conduct.[8] The possible uses of such information suggested by the Defence would not, in the Chamber's view, be exculpatory.

(iii) Exemption under Rule 68 (D)

8. Having reviewed the statements, the Chamber is satisfied that they may feasibly be redacted so as to conceal the identity of any targets of ongoing investigations, while still conveying the substance of exculpatory information. This is the appropriate means of both respecting the rights of the Accused and safeguarding the ability of the Prosecution to continue its investigations under Rule 68 (D).

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motions in part;

ORDERS the Prosecution to immediately identify and disclose to the Defence any exculpatory information in the statements of Witness DM-46 and Witness DM-80, in accordance with the guidance in the present decision;

ORDERS the Defence, including the Accused, to keep the statements confidential to itself;

GRANTS the Prosecution request to redact the statements of Witness DM-46 and Witness DM-80 so as to conceal the identities of individuals who are the target of ongoing Prosecution investigations.

[7] A recent decision has underlined that questions concerning the assassination of the President Habyarimana warranted only general inquiry, and that extensive examination would not be permitted: Bizimingu et al., Reconsideration of Oral Ruling of 1 june 2005 On Evidence Relating to the Crash of the Plane Carrying President Habyarimana (TC), 23 February 2006, para. 11 ("The jurisprudence of the Tribunal shows that questions relating to the responsibility for the shooting down of the plane may be put to a witness provided that this line of questioning does not go into great detail").

[8] The word "disprove" is used here simply to mean that an element of the crime is less likely to be present than not. This should not be understood as meaning that any burden is placed on the Defence.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Extremely Urgent Joint Motion for Severance", filed by the Defences of Kabiligi, Nsengiyumva and Ntabakuze on 17 March 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 20 March 2006; the Bagosora Response, filed on 21 March 2006; the Joint Reply to the Prosecution Response, filed on 21 March 2006; the Joint Reply to the Bagosora Response, filed on 21 March 2006; and the oral submissions on 22 March 2006;

HEREBY GIVES WRITTEN REASONS for having denied the motion.

Introduction

1. The Accused Kabiligi, Nsengiyumva and Ntabakuze argue that they will be prejudiced by the testimony of two witnesses whom the Bagosora Defence wishes to call, Jean Kambanda and Marcel Gatsinzi.[1] This prejudice is said to justify their severance from the present trial, pursuant to Rule 82 (B) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules").[2] The motion does not ask for a new trial; rather, the remedy requested is that the evidence tendered by the Bagosora Defence after the moment of severance would not form part of the case against the three Accused. Suspension of the testimony of Jean Kambanda is requested pending resolution of the motion.

2. On 22 March 2006, the Chamber denied the motion orally.[3] These are the reasons for that decision.

Deliberations

3. The present motion is brought under Rule 82 (B):

> The Trial Chamber may order that persons accused jointly under Rule 48 be tried separately if it considers it necessary in order to avoid a conflict of interests that might cause serious prejudice to an accused, or to protect the interests of justice.

Whether to order a separate trial of an accused is within the discretion of the Trial Chamber.[4] The nature of the possible prejudice to an accused, the advantages of a joint trial, and the mechanisms for mitigating the claimed prejudice by means other than severance, must all be weighed in the exercise of this discretion.[5] The preference for joint trials of individuals accused of acting in concert in the commission of a crime is not based merely on administrative efficiency. A joint trial relieves the hardship that would otherwise be imposed on witnesses, whose repeated attendance might not be secured; enhances fairness as between the accused by ensuring a uniform presentation of evidence and procedure against all; and minimizes the possibility of inconsistencies in treatment of evidence, sentencing, or other matters, that could arise from separate trials.[6] The burden of establishing serious prejudice rests with the moving party.[7]

[1] Although the motion was filed confidentially, all the responses and replies have been filed publicly. The Chamber does not see any need for the present decision to be confidential.

4. The Defence argues that the Bagosora witnesses will

> "introduce evidence which is Prosecution-oriented and highly prejudicial to the defence cases of all four defendants".[8]

Given the allegations in Kambanda's plea agreement against, amongst others, the Rwandan Armed Forces, the potential prejudice against the Accused is said to be "obvious".[9] Furthermore, the testimony will include evidence "which does not currently form part of the Prosecution evidence against the defendants". No procedural mechanism is available, according to the motion, which can adequately mitigate this prejudice other than severance.[10]

5. The fact that one co-accused may adduce evidence which is said to be disadvantageous to another co-accused does not, in and of itself, justify severance. Even intentionally antagonistic defences do not necessarily outweigh the positive effects of a joint trial. In rejecting severance where two co-accused sought to blame one another for criminal acts with which they were both charged, an ICTY Trial Chamber has held:

> Nor does the Trial Chamber see any possibility of serious prejudice resulting from the prospect that Brdanin may give evidence which incriminates Talic or that Talic will be unable, without fear of contradiction, to blame Brdanin and others for the orders which the prosecution may establish that he followed. A joint trial does not require a joint defence, and necessarily envisages the case where each accused may seek to blame the other. The Trial Chamber will be very alive to the "personal interest" which each accused has in such a case. Any prejudice which may flow to either accused from the loss of the "right" asserted by Talic here to be tried without incriminating evidence being given against him by his co-accused is not ordinarily the type of serious prejudice to which [Rule 82 (B)] is directed. The Trial Chamber recognises that there could possibly exist a case in which the circumstances of the conflict between the two accused are such as to render unfair a joint trial against one of them, but the circumstances would have to be extraordinary.[11]

Requests to sever trials on the basis of hostile or inconsistent defences have been repeatedly rejected by Chambers of the international tribunals, as in national jurisdictions.[12]

6. The applicants submit, however, that the present situation is more prejudicial than the intentional introduction of adverse evidence by a co-accused. Having failed in its attempt to call Kambanda as its own witness, the Prosecution will now have the opportunity to obtain "Prosecution-oriented" evidence by an indirect route. The cross-examination will give it a chance to "fill the gaps" in its case and, effectively, to reopen its case. The three co-Accused will have no choice but to call "a litany of additional witnesses" to rebut the prejudicial evidence of these witnesses.[13]

7. The suggestion that the Prosecution case can be re-opened through cross-examination is unfounded. Rule 90 (G) (i) constrains the scope of cross-examination to three areas: the subject-matter of the examination-in-chief; matters affecting credibility; and,

> "where the witness is able to give evidence relevant to the case for the cross-examining party, to the subject-matter of the case".

This last category must read in light of Rule 85 (A) (i), which prescribes that

> "the trial shall be presented in the following sequence: (i) Evidence of the prosecution; (ii) Evidence for the defence; (iii) Prosecution evidence in rebuttal; (iv) Defence evidence in rejoinder …"

This sequence implies that the Defence may reasonably infer that matters on which no evidence was led during the Prosecution case do not form part of that case. Accordingly, the "case for the cross-examining party" must now be understood as defined and limited by the evidence presented during the Prosecution case.[14] The Prosecution may adduce evidence during its cross-examination which

See also Zafiro v. United States, 506 U.S. 534, pp. 538-539 (federal rule of procedure authorizing severance "does not require severance even if prejudice is shown; rather, it leaves the tailoring of the relief to be granted, if any, to the district court's sound discretion"); U.S. v. Talavera, 668 F.2d 625, p. 630 (1st Cir. 1982) ("'antagonistic defences do not per se require severance, even if the defendants are hostile or attempt to cast the blame on each other.' Severance is required only where the conflict is so prejudicial and the defences are so irreconcilable that the trier of fact will unjustifiably infer that this conflict alone demonstrates that both are guilty") (citations omitted); R. v. Crawford, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 858, pp. 880-881 (Canada) ("There exist, however, strong policy reasons for accused persons charged with offences arising out of the same event or series of events to be tried jointly. The policy reasons apply with equal or greater force when each accused blames the other or others, a situation which is graphically labelled a "cut-throat defence". Separate trials in these situations create a risk of inconsistent verdicts … Although the trial judge has a discretion to order separate trials, that discretion must be exercised on the basis of principles of law which include the instruction that severance is not to be ordered unless it is established that a joint trial will work an injustice to the accused. The mere fact that a co-accused is waging a 'cut-throat' defence is not in itself sufficient"); R. v. Cairns, Zaidi and Chaudhary [2003] 1 Cr.App.R. 38, para. 52 CA (England) ("Of course the trial court has a discretion to be exercised in the interests of justice. But the fact that one defendant is likely to give evidence adverse to a co-defendant, after that co-defendant has given evidence, will not of itself normally require separate trials. It is, after all … a common enough experience of the courts").

[13] Reply to Prosecution, paras. 16-18.

[14] This reading of Rule 90 (G) (i) is reinforced by Rule 90 (G) (ii), which requires the cross-examining party, when it is adducing evidence relevant to its case, to "put to that witness the nature of the case of the party for whom that counsel appears which is in contradiction of the evidence given by the witness". In other words, the evidence which is being adduced corroborates or reinforces evidence presented during the presentation of its case, but may not, at this stage, venture into new areas.

8. The Chamber does not see that there is any basis to distinguish between the jurisprudence concerning mutually antagonistic defences of co-accused, and the present case where the allegedly prejudicial evidence rather appears to arise from a disagreement as to strategy. In either case, the issue is whether the evidence might cause "serious prejudice" to the co-accused, which can only be avoided by severance of trial. No such "serious prejudice" has been established. The fact that more evidence will be heard than would be the case if the three co-Accused had absolute control over the presentation of the defence does not constitute "serious prejudice", as is amply demonstrated by the jurisprudence concerning antagonistic defences. This is a normal incident of a joint trial which, in other respects, may be beneficial to the three co-Accused or to the administration of justice. The proposed testimony of Jean Kambanda is not even alleged to concern any of the co-Accused individually. Indeed, the motion emphasizes that the testimony is prejudicial to all four accused, demonstrating that there is a disagreement between the three co-Accused and the Bagosora Defence, rather than a conflict of interest.[15] If evidence is adduced which, in the opinion of the co-Accused, is prejudicial to their interest, then they will have the opportunity, subject to the Chamber's control, to cross-examine the witness on any matter raised by the Prosecution and, where legally justified, to call additional rebuttal evidence.[16] In short, the co-Accused have not demonstrated that there is any specific aspect of the witnesses' testimony which is particularly or unusually prejudicial so as to justify severance.[17]

9. The timing of the present motion also weighs against severance. While the appearance of a scheduled witness is never certain, the Bagosora Defence gave notice on 13 December 2005 that it had a reasonable basis to believe that the witness would testify, by including his name on a list of persons which it "intended to call during the next session". Although the three-month delay since that time does not, of itself, warrant dismissing the motion, the advanced stage of proceedings, combined with this delay, is a factor against granting severance. More than eighty Defence witnesses have been called so far. Only the two named in the present motion have given cause for a motion for severance. In these circumstances, the interests of ensuring uniform presentation of evidence and procedure strongly favour maintaining the joint trial. Severing individual segments of trials because portions, viewed separately, might cause a disadvantage to the position of some co-accused, would undermine the very purpose of joint trials. The present claim of prejudice must be viewed in the context of the entire trial, from which the co-Accused have accrued substantial benefit as a result of being able to rely on the evidence presented by one another. At this advanced stage of proceedings, and in the absence of any particularized showing of prejudice, granting severance even in the limited form requested by the co-Accused, is unwarranted.

10. The decisions in Kajelijeli and in Kovacević, mentioned by the Defence, concern very different circumstances.[18] Severance in the former case was granted before start of trial because "most of the must be relevant to evidence which, in the case of a party which is conducting a cross-examination of a witness after the presentation of its case, has already been presented.

[15] Motion, para. 17 (the evidence is "highly prejudicial to the defence cases of all four defendants"); Reply to Prosecution, para. 16.

In particular, the Defence has a full opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses called by other co-accused. And, where necessary and the legal requirements have been met, it may be open to a party to apply for leave to call additional evidence in rebuttal").

[17] The fact that Jean Kambanda formerly appeared on the Prosecution witness list is not unique. Other Defence witnesses, including those called by the co-Accused, also formerly appeared on that list. Similar situations have arisen in other trials without leading to severance, see e.g. Nyiramasuhuko et al., Decision on Ntahobali's Motion for Separate Trial (TC), 2 February 2005, para. 6.

allegations in the indictment" did not relate to the accused. He would thus endure a lengthy trial concerning many matters which would be of no concern to him, impairing his right to be tried without undue delay.[19] The Kovacević decision concerned a motion for joinder before the commencement of trial, not near the end of the trial, as here. Rule 82 (B) was mentioned tangentially, but the balance of prejudice and benefits of a joint trial were apparently quite different in that case.[20]

11. The Defence has requested that the testimony of Jean Kambanda be suspended pending decision on the joint motion. As he has not yet testified, this request is moot.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the motion.

This Chamber has already rejected severance on the basis of such arguments. Bagosora et al., Decision on Motions by Ntabakuze for Severance and to Establish a Reasonable Schedule for the Presentation of Prosecution Witnesses (TC), 9 September 2003, paras. 30-31 ("As to the claim that Mr. Ntabakuze is a minor figure unfairly prejudiced by association with figures of much greater responsibility, the Chamber notes that this assertion was contested by the Prosecution. In the absence of a clear showing of a severe disproportion of responsibility, the Chamber can only make that determination upon a presentation of the facts at trial. Unlike a trial before a jury, there is little danger of Mr. Ntabakuze being unfairly tarnished by guilt by association before a panel of judges … The Chamber considers the degree of responsibility of the Accused and the quantum of evidence implicating him to be contested issues that can only be evaluated in the course of the trial. The Defence has made no clear showing that only a tiny percentage of the testimony in this case concerns Mr. Ntabakuze. The Chamber eschews a minute analysis of the expected testimony of Prosecution witnesses but notes that the pre-trial brief does identify many witnesses as providing evidence against Mr. Ntabakuze, and that there is testimony implicating him in a conspiracy with his co-Accused").

In that case, the Accused was ready to proceed to trial immediately, whereas joinder with the other co-accused would have delayed the start of trial, impairing his right to be tried without undue delay. None of these factors are present here.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Urgent Motion Requesting an Order Directed at the Kingdom of Belgium", etc., filed by the Nsengiyumva Defence on 7 April 2006;

CONSIDERING the Registrar's submissions, filed on 10 April 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the request.

1. The Nsengiyumva Defence asks the Chamber to make a request to the Kingdom of Belgium, under Article 28 of the Tribunal's Statute, to facilitate interviews with four UNAMIR officers who were stationed in Gisenyi Préfecture in 1994. These four individuals, Commander Marc Biot, Captain Luc Geysels, Major Jacques De Koninck, and Warrant Officer Marc Beyens, are said to have information concerning the Butotori training facility – in particular, whether it was used to train Interahamwe, as alleged by Prosecution witnesses. The Nsengiyumva Defence also requests permission to meet with a certain Alphonse Higaniro, a person said to be in Belgian custody who can contradict the testimony of Witness XBH that the Accused met with Colonel Bagosora and other persons in Butare before April 1994 to plan a genocide against the Tutsi.[1]

[1] Motion, paras. 19-20.

2. Article 28 of the Statute imposes an obligation on States to > "cooperate with the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of committing serious violations of international humanitarian law".

A request to a Chamber to make an order under Article 28 must set forth the nature of the information sought; its relevance to the trial; and the efforts that have been made to obtain it. The type of assistance sought should also be defined with particularity.[2]

3. The motion adequately articulates the nature of the information sought and its relevance to the proceedings against the Accused. The four UNAMIR officers were likely in a position to observe events in Gisenyi préfecture which are relevant to the present trial.[3] As to Mr. Higaniro, the Defence appears to have reason to believe that he has precise information which will contradict the incriminating testimony of Prosecution Witness XBH. Based on these submissions, the Chamber is satisfied that the information sought is relevant to the present trial.

4. The Defence has demonstrated that it has made reasonable efforts to obtain the information without recourse to Article 28. The Registrar explains that the Belgian authorities do not object to the content of the request, but that Belgian law requires the issuance of a judicial order as a prerequisite to any cooperation.[4] Under these circumstances, the Chamber finds that the second condition under Article 28 is satisfied.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

RESPECTFULLY REQUESTS the Kingdom of Belgium to provide any relevant assistance in facilitating meetings between the Defence for Nsengiyumva and Commander Marc Biot, Captain Luc Geysels, Major Jacques De Koninck, Warrant Officer Marc Beyens and Mr. Alphonse Higaniro; DIRECTS the Registry to transmit this decision to the relevant authorities of the Kingdom of Belgium.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Prosecution "Urgent Request for Extension of Time", etc., filed on 4 April 2006;

CONSIDERING the Response filed by the Ntabakuze Defence on 10 April 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. On 28 March 2006, the Ntabakuze Defence filed a motion for exclusion of evidence as falling outside the scope of the Indictment.[1] The Prosecution asks for an extension to respond to the motion until 15 June 2006, or five days after all of the Defence teams have filed such a motion, whichever is later. The Prosecution argues that given the length of motion, five days is too short a period to prepare an adequate response. Furthermore, since there will be substantial overlap in the response to each of the motions, judicial economy is served by a single, omnibus response to all four motions. Finally, granting the request will not prejudice the Defence, which will not commence the next trial segment until mid-May.

2. As is evident from the arguments presented in the Ntabakuze motion, and the Chamber's own recent decision on this question, the issues to be resolved by the Chamber are highly fact-specific.[2] In particular, the Chamber will be required to analyze, with the assistance of the parties' submissions, the relationship of the evidence in question to the wording of the Indictment. Although some of the evidence identified in the motion may also be relevant to other Accused, most of it is pertinent only to the Accused Ntabakuze. Under these circumstances, the Chamber sees little justification for extending the deadline so as to permit an omnibus response.

3. As of 8 May, the Prosecution will have had forty-one days to respond to the motion. The Chamber considers this sufficient time and shall, in its discretion, set this as the deadline for submission of a response.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the motion in part;

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Prosecution "Urgent Request for Extension of Time", etc., filed on 10 May 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. On 9 May 2006, the Nsengiyumva Defence filed a 30-page motion for the exclusion of evidence as falling outside the scope of the Indictment of the Accused.[1] The Prosecution requests additional time to respond, citing the detailed nature of the factual, procedural and legal issues involved.

2. In light of the scope and complexity of the issues raised by the Nsenigyumva motion, the Chamber is convinced that the Prosecution needs more than the five-day statutory time-period to prepare a response. The approach of the next trial session and the need for clarity in respect of the issues raised by the motion must also, however, be taken into consideration. Accordingly, the Prosecution will have until 19 May 2006 to file a response, being ten full days after the Nsengiyumva motion was filed.

extend the deadline for filing responses to all of the Defence motions on the basis that an omnibus response will avoid duplication of effort.

2. The Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules") do not prescribe the form in which responses to motions may be filed. Any response to a motion is, however, required to be filed within five days of the filing of the original motion, pursuant to Rule 73 (E). The Prosecution is entitled to compose responses to motions in any form which it considers appropriate, but must do so within the time period prescribed by the Rules unless otherwise authorized.[2] If a party objects, for whatever reason, to an extension of time requested by another party then the appropriate means of doing so is to file a response to a motion for extension of time.

3. No such extension of time has yet been requested in respect of the Kabiligi motion. The Prosecution did file a request for the extension of time to respond to the motion filed by the Ntabakuze Defence, and did argue in that motion that an omnibus motion would serve judicial economy.[3] But no request to extend the time to respond to the Kabiligi motion was ever made. Nevertheless, in the interests of clarity, the Chamber hereby sets 16 May 2006 as the deadline for the Prosecution to respond to the Kabiligi motion. The Chamber considers this sufficient to prepare a response, being more than forty days after the motion was filed.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

1. The Ntabakuze Defence has filed a motion for exclusion of evidence falling outside the scope of the Indictment of the Accused.[1] The Prosecution has filed its Response[2] and an annex thereto.[3] On 15 May 2006, the Ntabakuze Defence replied to the Prosecution Response and its annex, indicating that a further Ntabakuze reply would be forthcoming on 22 May 2006.[4] The Ntabakuze Defence now notifies the Chamber that, due to logistical complications, the reply will require four days longer than originally anticipated. In the alternative, if the Chamber believes that the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules") prescribe a deadline for filing a reply, the Ntabakuze Defence requests an extension until 26 May 2006 to file its reply.

2. The Rules make no mention of replies and their consideration by the Chamber is a matter of discretion. There is no basis to request extension of a deadline which does not exist. However, the Chamber has taken cognizance of the situation described in the Ntabakuze notification.

HEREBY DECIDES the requests.

Introduction

1. On 27 September 2005, the Chamber denied a request by the Nsengiyumva Defence for an order requiring the Prosecution to disclose any documents or other materials in its possession concerning the immigration status of Defence witnesses.[1] The Prosecution had previously acknowledged that it had obtained statements made by Defence witnesses to national or inter-governmental immigration authorities, and had asked questions to Defence witnesses based on those previous statements. The Chamber rejected the Defence argument that either Rule 66 (B) or Rule 68 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules") generated an obligation to disclose any such materials. The Defence requests leave to appeal the Decision.

Deliberations

2. Leave to file an interlocutory appeal of a decision "may" be granted under Rule 73 (B) where it significantly affects the "fair and expeditious conduct of proceedings or the outcome of the trial" and where "immediate resolution may materially advance the proceedings".

(i) Fair and Expeditious Proceedings

3. The Defence argues that Defence witness statements in the possession of the Prosecution must be disclosed under Rule 66 (B), which provides that the Prosecution must permit inspection of documents "which are material to the preparation of the defence". The Chamber interpreted this provision to require the Prosecution to make available any document material to the Prosecution case-in-chief. The Defence argues, however, that the provision should encompass any document which could be used to challenge the credibility of Defence witnesses.[2] The failure to require the Prosecution to make any prior statements of Defence witnesses available well in advance of cross-examination is said to deprive the Defence of the opportunity to make a fully informed assessment of the credibility of its witnesses.[3] Disclosure would assist the Defence in deciding whether to withdraw its witness or, alternatively, to more fully prepare the witness's testimony so as to clarify and explain any apparent contradictions with a prior statement.[4] Allowing the Prosecution to pose questions about statements which are disclosed no earlier than the start of the witness's cross-examination interferes with the fair trial rights of the Accused.

4. The category of documents covered by the Decision is much broader than witness statements. The original motion requested not only statements of Defence witnesses, but also any > "material, documents, correspondence and any papers in [the Prosecution's] possession, control and/or custody that relate to immigration status".[5]

In rejecting this request, the Chamber ruled that

> "Rule 66 (B) cannot be interpreted as laying down a blanket obligation for the Prosecution to disclose documents pertinent to its cross-examination of Defence witnesses".

5. The Chamber agrees that the Decision, as it relates to the broad category of documents potentially covered by Rule 66 (B), does affect the "fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings". Certification may be appropriate where, in particular, "broad categories of evidence" are affected by a decision.[6] The obligation advocated by the Defence could, in practice, require the Prosecution to disclose any and all documents which may be relevant to its cross-examination of Defence witnesses. Such an obligation, if it exists, would constitute a significant expansion of the Prosecution's duty to disclose which, in and of itself, could impact on the fair and expeditious conduct of proceedings. Failure to disclose a document which the Prosecution might wish to use during its cross-examination could, presumably, lead to an adjournment. Furthermore, the modalities for examining witnesses, including the practice of permitting the cross-examining party to disclose documents as late as the beginning of the cross-examination, would be changed. Given the range of documents involved, and its consequences for the conduct of the trial, the Chamber agrees that the first condition for granting certification is satisfied.

(ii) Materially Advance the Proceedings

6. The interpretation of Rule 66 (B) is a determination of law which may have significant practical consequences. The Defence has articulated its grounds for challenging the correctness of the decision, and the Chamber cannot say that the appeal has no prospect of success.[7] The use of Defence witness statements to immigration authorities has not thus far had an obviously significant impact on Prosecution cross-examinations. The Chamber nonetheless believes, in light of the potential impact of its decision, that immediate resolution of the interpretation of Rule 66 (B)

> "will avoid the serious consequences that could result from proceeding throughout the remainder of the Defence case on an incorrect legal footing."[8]

7. Certification of the ruling in respect of Rule 68 (A) would not, however, materially advance the proceedings. The decision applied the well-established rule that the Defence must suggest a prima facie basis to believe that the material requested is exculpatory.[9] The Chamber found, on the basis of the submissions before it, that no such showing had been made. The Kabiligi Defence has raised the new argument in its certification request that any material which might be used by the Prosecution to undermine the credibility of Defence witnesses should be considered exculpatory. This new argument is inadmissible as a basis for certification, having not been raised in the original motion.[10] In any event, the Chamber finds the argument to be unconvincing. Rule 68 (A) refers to "material" which

> "may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the accused or affect the credibility of Prosecution evidence".

Information which affects the credibility of Defence evidence does not, of itself, suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the Accused.

8. The Chamber does not consider that a stay pending resolution of the appeal is warranted.[11] The only category of documents which the Defence has sought in this application is statements of prior witnesses to national immigration authorities. As mentioned above, absence of advance disclosure of

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Joint "Motion for Certification of the 'Decision on Request for Severance of Three Accused'", etc., filed by the Defences of Kabiligi, Nsengiyumva and Ntabakuze on 3 April 2006;

CONSIDERING the oral submissions of the Prosecution on 4 April 2006, opposing the motion;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Accused Kabiligi, Nsengiyumva and Ntabakuze request leave to file an interlocutory appeal from the Chamber's oral decision of 22 March 2006, denying severance of the Accused Kabiligi, Nsengiyumva, and Ntabakuze from the present trial.[1]

Deliberations

2. Leave to file an interlocutory appeal of a decision "may" be granted under Rule 73 (B) where it significantly affects the "fair and expeditious conduct of proceedings or the outcome of the trial" and where "immediate resolution may materially advance the proceedings or the outcome of the trial".

(i) Fair and Expeditious Proceedings

3. In denying the severance motion from which leave to appeal is now requested, the Chamber considered, as required by Rule 82 (B), whether the testimony of the two witnesses "might cause serious prejudice to an accused". The Chamber is now confronted with a similar issue in deciding whether to grant leave to appeal under Rule 73 (B): whether permitting these two witnesses to testify is a decision which would significantly affect the "fair and expeditious conduct of proceedings".

4. The motion argues that the testimony of Jean Kambanda and Marcel Gatsinzi will be highly prejudicial to the three Accused, thus rendering the trial unfair, and possibly affecting the outcome of the trial. Two specific areas of testimony are identified as damaging. Kambanda, according to a will-say statement issued by the Bagosora Defence, will testify that there was a genocide in Rwanda between April and July 1994, a view which is contested by the Accused.[2] Gatsinzi will testify, according to media reports, that "Colonel Théoneste Bagosora is a criminal", and that "Bagosora and other former military officials planned and supervised the genocide".[3] Though called by the Accused Bagosora, these witnesses will, in effect, present new Prosecution evidence against the Accused, which would not be heard but for the fact that the Accused are bring tried jointly. Cross-examination is said to be insufficient to remedy the unfairness arising from this testimony. Furthermore, proceedings will be substantially lengthened by the need of the three co-Accused to call witnesses in rebuttal.

5. The Chamber does not see that the fair and expeditious conduct of proceedings, or the outcome of the trial, will be affected by permitting Jean Kambanda to testify that there was a genocide in Rwanda between April and July 1994. This is a general proposition on which the Chamber has already heard considerable testimony. The addition of Kambanda's evidence on this subject will not render the proceedings unfair, nor does it foreseeably justify rebuttal evidence of any significant scope by the three co-Accused, if at all. Gatsinzi's prospective testimony is, at present, far from clear. The Bagosora pre-Defence brief says only that he will testify on > "his military career; his activity in GOMN; his activity as acting deputy chief of staff; his activities from April to July 1994".[4]

The media reports about Gatsinzi's opinions are an inadequate foundation upon which to rule that the testimony would impair the "fair conduct of proceedings", just as they were inadequate to establish that the testimony could cause "serious prejudice" to the co-Accused.

(ii) Materially Advance the Proceedings

DENIES the motion.

BEING SEIZED OF the "Requête Confidentielle", etc., filed by the Bagosora Defence on 19 December 2005;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Preliminary Response, and its Further Response, filed on 23 December 2005 and 12 January 2006, respectively;

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion.

Introduction

1. On 23 September 2005, the Prosecution disclosed to the Defence a statement entitled "Witness AIU". The attached cover letter explained that the person had never been listed as a witness in the present case, and was not otherwise the subject of any protective order. Nevertheless, portions of the statement were redacted to conceal the witness's identity, even though

> "[g]iven the nature of the statement, Colonel Bagosora will undoubtedly have personal knowledge of the identity of witness AIU".

The cover letter indicated that Prosecution counsel in the present case had become aware of the statement within the previous twenty-four hours.[1]

2. The Defence asks the Chamber to order the Prosecution to disclose the statement in its entirety, arguing that there is no justification for withholding Witness AIU's identity, which is itself exculpatory. The Defence also asks for a subpoena requiring Witness AIU to meet with the Defence.

Deliberations

(i) The Exculpatory Nature of Witness AIU's Identity

3. Rule 68 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules") requires the disclosure of any material in the actual knowledge of the Prosecutor which

> "may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the accused or affect the credibility of Prosecution evidence".

The Prosecution implicitly acknowledges that the statement itself was disclosed pursuant to this provision. For example, the Prosecution argues that disclosing Witness AIU's identity would not "make the information in the statement more exculpatory", and that it is under no obligation to "disclose the entire document from which exculpatory evidence is extracted".[2] The Chamber infers, therefore, that the Prosecution has disclosed the content of the statement pursuant to Rule 68 (A).

4. The Prosecution argues that this obligation requires disclosure of only the content of the statement, and that no prima facie showing has been made that Witness AIU's identity is itself exculpatory. A previous decision of this Trial Chamber, which did require such disclosure, is said to be distinguishable from the present situation.[3] In that decision, the Chamber required the identification of three individuals, formerly listed as Prosecution witnesses, who had made statements concerning the same events as a witness who was still scheduled to appear before the Chamber. The Prosecution relies on the Chamber's comment that

> "[t]he importance of any discrepancies in the statements may depend, for example, on the nature of the relationships between the different witnesses to the events".[4]

As this element is not present in respect of Witness AIU, argues the Prosecution, his identity need not be disclosed.

5. The Chamber is of the view that Witness AIU's identity is "inextricably connected with the substance of the statements".[5] The statement cannot be properly understood without knowing the author's ability to observe the events he describes; his possible biases or point of view; or the consistency of his account with any other statements he may have given. Providing the author's identity does not merely assist the Defence to carry out further investigations, but is essential to the content of the statement itself. Accordingly, the identity of Witness AIU, and any portions of the statement redacted to protect the witness's identity, must be considered to be exculpatory within the meaning of Rule 68 (A).[6]

[1] The statement appears to have been taken by representatives of the Office of the Prosecution on 17 and 26 April 2003, and 28 May 2003.

[6] See Bizimungu et al., Decision on Prosper Mugiraneza's Motion to Compel Disclosure of Exculpatory Evidence Pursuant to Rule 68 (TC), 10 December 2003, para. 21.

6. Witness AIU's present location does not assist in understanding the content of the statement. Accordingly, any indications in the statement of the witness's present location is not exculpatory and need not be disclosed to the Defence. The Prosecution may make redactions for that purpose.

(ii) Non-Disclosure of Exculpatory Information

7. The Prosecution asserts that it is empowered to withhold Witness AIU's identity on the basis of Rule 39 (ii) of the Rules, which authorizes the Prosecution to > "take all measures necessary for the purpose of the investigation and to support the prosecution at trial, including the taking of special measures to provide for the safety of potential witnesses and informants".

8. Rule 39 (ii) is a general provision appearing in Part 4 of the Rules, "Investigations and Rights of Suspects". By contrast, Rule 68 itself contains a specific provision which offers the Prosecution a mechanism to be relieved of the obligation to disclose exculpatory material. Sub-part (D) provides:

> The Prosecutor shall apply to the Chamber sitting in camera to be relieved from an obligation under the Rules to disclose information in the possession of the Prosecutor, if its disclosure may prejudice further or ongoing investigations, or for any reasons may be contrary to the public interest or affect the security interests of any State, and when making such application, the Prosecutor shall provide the Trial Chamber (but only the Trial Chamber) with the information that is sought to be kept confidential.

Rule 68 (D), as the specific provision governing this particular type of material, is applicable to the present situation, not Rule 39 (ii). The Appeals Chamber has referred to the obligation to disclose exculpatory material as "fundamental to the fairness of proceedings before the Tribunal".[7] Exceptions to that obligation must be subject to the specific, judicially-controlled provisions of Rule 68 (D). An independent power of the Prosecution to withhold information on unenumerated grounds could undermine the scope of Rule 68 (A).

9. The Prosecution has made no application to the Chamber under Rule 68 (D). Rather than arguing that any of the three conditions for non-disclosure are present, the Prosecution relies on a general concern that the security and trust of informants can only be maintained by non-disclosure of their identities.

10. Whatever force this argument may have in other circumstances, it is not relevant here, in light of the Prosecution concession that the Accused must already know Witness AIU's identity, given the content of his statement. In the absence of any submissions showing that any of the conditions of Rule 68 (D) are satisfied, the Prosecution cannot be relieved of its obligation to disclose exculpatory information.

(iii) Subpoena for Purpose of Meeting With Witness AIU

11. The Prosecution indicates in a letter to the Defence that Witness AIU "was informed about [the Defence's] probable request" for a meeting, and that the witness has refused the request on the ground that any meeting near his place of residence would reveal his present whereabouts and jeopardize his security.[8] As an alternative, the Prosecution proposes that the Defence submit questions in writing, which would then be conveyed to the witness with a recommendation that he cooperate. In essence, the Prosecution argues that this would constitute a form of cooperation which would obviate the need for a subpoena. The Defence argues that the method proposed by the Prosecution is impractical, as written questions and answers could lead to many rounds of further questions and clarifications.

[7] Krstic, Judgement (AC), 19 April 2004, para. 180.
[8] Defence Motion, Annex C; Prosecution Further Response, para. 14.

12. Rule 54 of the Rules authorizes a Trial Chamber to > "issue such orders, summonses, subpoenas, warrants and transfer orders as may be necessary for the purposes of an investigation or for the preparation or conduct of the trial".

This authority includes the power to require

> "a prospective witness to attend at a nominated place and time in order to be interviewed by the Defence where that attendance is necessary for the preparation or conduct of the trial".[9]

The first condition for such a subpoena is that there is a reasonable basis to believe that the prospective witness may be able to provide information of material importance.[10] Having reviewed the witness's statement, the Chamber finds this condition to be satisfied.

13. A second condition for the issuance of a subpoena is that the applicant has > "made reasonable attempts to obtain the voluntary cooperation of the parties involved and has been unsuccessful".[11]

At present, those efforts must be channelled through the Prosecution, which legitimately wishes to keep the current location of its informant secret. Based on the submissions now before the Chamber, it is not clear that the Prosecution has communicated an actual, pending Defence request for an interview. A subpoena cannot be issued until those efforts have been exhausted.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion for disclosure of portions of the statement of Witness AIU which have been redacted by the Prosecution to safeguard his identity;

DECLARES that the Prosecution may continue to make redactions to protect Witness AIU's current location;

DENIES the request for a subpoena.

Decision on Motion to Unseal Testimony of Defence Witness RAS-1 24 May 2006 (ICTR-98-41-T)

Théoneste Bagosora, Gratien Kabiligi, Aloys Ntabakuze and Anatole Nsengiyumva – Sealed Testimony, References throughout the transcript which could reveal the witness's identity, Impracticable parsing of the testimony into two documents, Re-classification of an exhibit – Motion partially granted

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA,

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Prosecution "Motion to Unseal the Transcripts and Exhibits of the Testimony of Defence Witness RAS-1", etc., filed on 12 December 2005;

CONSIDERING the Response filed by the Nsengiyumva Defence on 20 December 2005;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. On 13 October 2005, the Nsengiyumva Defence requested that the testimony of Witness RAS-1 be held entirely in closed session citing, in particular, a concern that his voice was easily identifiable. The Prosecution opposed the motion. Following arguments, the Chamber ruled:

> We do not find all the arguments advanced in relation to this witness convincing for holding his entire testimony in closed session. But the factual situation, leaving aside our view on some of the arguments, is that we do not have voice scrambling available … And, therefore, because of the voice recognition issue, we will then grant your request, Mr Ogetto.[1]

At the end of the testimony, the Prosecution raised the possibility of unsealing some of the testimony that had been heard in closed session. The Presiding Judge invited further submissions:

> We have to now look into the transcripts because there will obviously be some portions that, by their substance, should be placed under seal, whereas there may be other portions which may not cause protection issues. If you would also, Defence, it's your witness, look into this matter, and then we can solve this in a practical way later on.[2]

2. The Prosecution now asks that all the testimony of Witness RAS-1 be unsealed, with the exception of excerpts specified in its motion. The Prosecution also requests that two of the three exhibits entered under seal be made public. The Defence opposes the motion, and cites several example of information that would reveal the identity of the witness.

[1] T. 13 October 2005 p. 63.
[2] T. 19 October 2005 p. 30.

Deliberations

3. The Chamber has reviewed Witness RAS-1's testimony in its entirety. There are numerous references throughout the transcript which could reveal the witness's identity. Parsing the testimony into two documents, one closed and one public, is impracticable. Neither would be comprehensible in light of the numerous transitions from public to confidential.

4. Exhibit P-336 does not seem likely to identify the witness. Accordingly, the Chamber grants the request to re-classify this exhibit as a public document. The re-classification shall be delayed for seven days from the date of this decision to give any party the opportunity to file submissions concerning this re-classification.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the request to reclassify Prosecution Exhibit 366 as a public document, subject to a delay of seven days from the date of this decision;

DENIES the remainder of the motion.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED of the Ntabakuze "Motion to Deposit Certain United Nations Documents into Evidence for the Truth of Their Contents", filed on 7 December 2005;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 12 December 2005; the Defence Reply, filed on 3 January 2006; and the Prosecution Further Response, filed on 4 January 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Ntabakuze Defence seeks to admit twenty-three sets of documents into evidence. Lead Counsel for Ntabakuze explained that he personally procured these documents from the United Nations.[1] The documents consist of official United Nations correspondence arising from the UNAMIR peacekeeping mission in Rwanda in 1994. Each document is authored by one of three senior officials: Jacques-Roger Booh-Booh, former Special Representative of the Secretary-General to Rwanda; Kofi Annan, former Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations; or Lieutenant-General Roméo Dallaire, former Force Commander of UNAMIR. With one exception, all of the documents are dated January through April 1994.

Deliberations

2. Rule 89 (C) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules") provides that a Chamber "may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value". When offering a document for admission, the moving party must make a prima facie showing that the document is both relevant and has probative value.[2]

3. The Defence has discharged its prima facie burden of showing the relevance of the documents, which reflect the views of United Nations officials as to the political and military context of Rwanda in 1994. This context is relevant to the charges against the Accused and has been the object of extensive testimony called by both the Defence and the Prosecution.

4. Documents need not be recognized by a witness in order to have probative value.[3] On the other hand, there must be some indication that the document is what the moving party says it is, and that its contents are reliable.[4] The Rules impose no technical requirements for establishing the authenticity of a document, but a number of factors have been considered relevant:

- the extent to which the document's content is corroborated by other evidence;[5]
- the place where the it was obtained;[6]
- whether the it is an original or a copy;[7]
- if it is a copy, whether it is registered or filed with an institutional authority;[8]
- whether it is signed, sealed, stamped, or certified in any way.[9]

At the admissibility stage, the Chamber is not called upon to make a final determination whether the document is what the party says it is, much less whether its contents are truthful or accurate.[10]

6.* In this case, the balance of probabilities favors a finding of probative value for all the documents that were produced contemporaneously with the events that occurred in Rwanda in 1994. The documents were obtained from the archives of United Nations Headquarters, confirming their apparent status as United Nations documents. Furthermore, the documents were created at the time of the events in question as part of the routine exchange of correspondence between top UNAMIR officials, or is directly linked to this correspondence. These characteristics endow the documents with sufficient reliability to be admissible.

8. The Prosecution contention that some of the documents have already been admitted is correct.[11] There is no need for these documents to be exhibited a second time.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Nsengiyumva "Confidential and Extremely Urgent Motion for Leave to Amend the List of Defence Witnesses", filed on 16 May 2005;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response thereto, filed 18 May 2006; the Nsengiyumva Reply, filed 23 May 2006; and the Corrigendum to the motion, filed on 25 May 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. Nsengiyumva requests leave to add twelve new witnesses to its witness list, and to remove twelve others. The new witnesses are said to have been contacted only recently, allegedly because of the difficult conditions in the places where they reside and lack of information concerning their whereabouts. The testimony of the new witnesses concerns matters on which the Chamber has not yet heard testimony, which will replace that of the witnesses being removed. The identities and content of the testimony of each of the twelve new witnesses is provided with the motion, and the total expected time for their testimony is said not to exceed five days.[1]

2. The Prosecution opposes the addition of the new witnesses.

Deliberations

(i) Applicable Standard

3. Rule 73 ter (E) of the Rules provides that:

> After commencement of the Defence case, the Defence, if it considers it to be in the interests of justice, may move the Trial Chamber for leave to reinstate the list of witnesses or to vary its decision as to which witnesses are to be called.

This standard has previously been addressed in this case:[2]

> In interpreting a similarly worded provision applicable to Prosecution witnesses, this Trial Chamber has held that amendments of a witness list must be supported by "good cause" and be in the "interests of justice".[3] Similar principles have been applied in assessing Defence motions to vary a witness list.[4] The determination of whether to grant a request to vary the witness list requires a close analysis of each witness, including the sufficiency and time of disclosure of the witness' information; the materiality and probative value of the proposed testimony in relation to existing witnesses and allegations in the indictment; the ability of the other party to make an effective cross-examination of the witness; and the justification offered by the party for the addition of the witness.[5]

Whether the addition of witnesses will result in "unfair surprise or prejudice" to the opposing party must be considered in light of the disclosure obligations of the moving party.[6]

(ii) Removal of Witnesses

4. The request to remove witnesses is not opposed by the Prosecution, will economize judicial resources and is obviously consistent with the effective presentation of Defence evidence. The request is, therefore, granted.[7]

(iii) Addition of Witnesses

5. The Prosecution challenges the addition of witnesses on a number of fronts, including: (i) having "stood on its right" to request variation of the list at an earlier stage, the Defence cannot now request a variation; (ii) the Defence has not discharged its burden to show why the proposed witnesses were not contacted earlier; (iii) only one of the new witnesses is intended to replace removed witnesses; (iv) the timing of the motion amounts to unfair surprise which deprives the Prosecution of the opportunity to investigate and prepare effective cross-examinations; (v) the anticipated testimony of the new witnesses has not been demonstrated as material to the Defence case; and (vi) the witness list is already "bloated".

6. Rule 73 ter (B) (iii) (b) gives the Chamber discretion to

> "order that the Defence … file … [a] list of witness the Defence intends to call with … [a] summary of the facts on which each witness will testify".

This discretion was exercised on 14 October and 21 December 2004, with further explanation given on 16 May 2005, to the effect that the Defence was required to "provid[e] a factual summary and not merely the subject matter on which each witness will testify".[8] In respect of a previous amendment of the Defence witness list, the Chamber required the Defence to provide this information no later than "thirty-five days before the appearance of the witness".[9]

7. The Defence has provided a detailed summary of each witness's testimony and its relevance to the case. The matters on which they will testify are confined to well-defined material facts which are at the core of the Prosecution case. Although additional investigation into the background of the witnesses will be required, a reasonable delay in these witness's appearance will provide sufficient time for adequate preparations, particularly in light of the Prosecution's familiarity with the material facts on which they will testify, the circumscribed focus of the testimony, and the specificity of the identifying information provided. The Chamber cannot say that the failure to discover these witnesses earlier is unreasonable, or that the late-stage of the proceedings will make it more difficult for the Prosecution to conduct any necessary investigations. The addition of these witness will not extend the proceedings, in light of the Defence's undertaking to present these witnesses, whose testimony will take no more than five days, during the present session ending on 14 July. For these reasons, the Chamber considers that the interests of justice are served by permitting the addition of these twelve witnesses to the Defence witness list, with an adequate period of disclosure to permit Prosecution investigations.

(iv) Timing of Disclosure

8. No witness shall be permitted to appear less than thirty-five days after substantial disclosure of witness identifying information and a summary of their proposed testimony, unless the Prosecution waives the right to insist on this delay. In the absence of more particularized objections from the Prosecution, the Chamber is of the view that substantial disclosure was effected on 17 May 2006 in the annex to the motion.[10]

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion in its entirety;

Théoneste Bagosora et al., Order for Transfer of Defence Witness Jean Kambanda, 27 February 2006 (ICTR-98-41)

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED of the Bagosora "Requête en Extrême Urgence", etc., filed on 7 June 2006;

CONSIDERING the Ntabakuze "Response to Bagosora Request to Transfer Witness Jean Kambanda", etc., filed on 13 June 2006; and the Corrigendum thereto, filed on 14 June 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. The Bagosora Defence requests an order for the temporary transfer of one its witnesses, Jean Kambanda, to the Detention Unit of the Tribunal in Arusha for the purpose of testifying before the Chamber. Mr. Kambanda is serving a life sentence of this Tribunal in the Republic of Mali.[1] The Bagosora Defence wishes to call Mr. Kambanda before the end of the present trial session on 14 July 2006. Mr. Kambanda has previously indicated his willingness to testify on behalf of the Accused.[2]

2. Rule 90 bis (B) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence sets two conditions for such an order: first, that

> "the detained witness is not required for any criminal proceedings in progress in the territory of the requested State during the period the witness is required by the Tribunal";

and second, that the "[t]ransfer … does not extend the period of his detention as foreseen by the requested State." Furthermore, Article 4 of the agreement between the United Nations and the Republic of Mali specifically provides for the temporary transfer of a detained person for the purpose of giving testimony, provided that the detainee is not required for criminal proceedings in Mali.[3]

3. The Chamber has been advised by the Registry that Mr. Kambanda is not required for criminal proceedings in Mali during the proposed period of transfer. The first condition, therefore, is satisfied. As Mr. Kambanda is serving a life sentence, there is no scope for the application of the second condition.

4. The submissions filed by the Ntabakuze Defence are not relevant to Rule 90 bis, which governs the conditions for ordering the physical transfer of the witness. The substance of the Ntabakuze submissions is that the testimony of the witness would be prejudicial and that, accordingly, the testimony should either be excluded as against him, or that Kambanda should not be permitted to testify at all. These questions are not properly within the scope of Rule 90 bis and shall be addressed in a separate decision.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

ORDERS, conditional upon the agreement of the Government of Mali, that Jean Kambanda shall be temporarily transferred to the Detention Unit in on or about 15 June 2006, and returned no later than 30 July 2006, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules;

REQUESTS the Government of Mali to facilitate the transfer in cooperation with the Registrar and the Government of Tanzania;

INSTRUCTS the Registrar to:

(A) transmit this decision to the Governments of Mali and Tanzania;
(B) ensure the proper conduct of the transfer, including the supervision of the witnesses in the Tribunal's detention facilities;
(C) remain abreast of any changes which might occur regarding the conditions of detention provided for by the requested State and which may possibly affect the timing of the temporary detention, and as soon as possible, inform the Trial Chamber of any such change.

The witness was previously transferred to the Tribunal's detention facilities in anticipation of testifying during the last trial session. However, before he could testify, the Chamber was seized of a motion for severance by Kabiligi, Nsengiyumva and Ntabakuze, who opposed his appearance and requested a stay. On 27 March 2006, the Chamber issued its written reasons for denying severance. On 3 April 2006, the Defence filed a request for certification of that decision, and again requested a stay of Kambanda's testimony pending resolution of the matter. That motion was still under consideration when the trial session ended on 7 April 2006.

BEING SEIZED of the "Requête Confidentielle", etc., filed by the Bagosora Defence on 12 June 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. The Defence requests that Witness Z-06 be permitted to give his testimony by video-link. The witness's security situation is said to be particularly sensitive and he has refused to travel to Arusha in the absence of specific security measures which, despite efforts by the Defence, are apparently unavailable.

2. Video-link testimony may be authorized as a witness protection measure, pursuant to Rule 75 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, where the witness is in a particularly vulnerable situation and, on that basis, refuses to testify in Arusha.[1] In such cases, the Chamber requires the moving party to "make some showing that giving testimony [by video-link] is necessary to safeguard the witness's security".[2]

3. The Defence's confidential submissions have established to the Chamber's satisfaction that, because of the notoriety of his family associations, the witness is in a particularly vulnerable position. The Defence has made reasonable efforts to explain the security measures which would be provided, but the witness has still refused to testify here, claiming that he would be unsafe without a personal escort throughout his journey. The Chamber finds that a sufficient showing has been made that video-link testimony is necessary to safeguard the witness's security.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion;

DIRECTS the Registry, in consultation with the parties, to make all necessary arrangements in respect of the testimony of Witness Z-06 via video-conference, and to videotape the testimony for possible future reference by the Chamber.

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED of the Prosecution "Motion Requesting Witness List and Pre-Defence Brief from the Kabiligi Defence", filed on 12 December 2005;

CONSIDERING the oral submissions of the parties on 20 June 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. The Accused Bagosora, Nsengiyumva and Ntabakuze have been concurrently presenting their defences since 11 April 2005. Kabiligi was permitted to postpone the presentation of his defence, following the replacement of Lead Counsel on 24 January 2005[1]. As part of that decision, the Chamber ruled that Kabiligi was required to file his Pre-Defence Brief no less than 30 days before the beginning of his case. On April 2006, the Kabiligi Defence confirmed that it would be in a position to file its Pre-Defence Brief on 14 July 2006, in anticipation of the start of its defence on 14 August 2006[2]: The Prosecution submits that it needs more than thirty days to conduct its investigations before the start of the Kabiligi Defence, in light of the resource constraints arising from the summer recess.

2. The Chamber considers that it is in the interests of justice to require the Kabiligi Defence to file its Brief on Friday, 7 July 2006, being 38 days befor: the scheduled start of its case.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

ORDERS that the Kabiligi Pre-Defence Brief, which shall include witness identifying information and summaries of expected testimony, shall be filed no later than 7 July 2006.

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Ntabakuze Defence requests that the Chamber exclude from its consideration seventeen categories of evidence, elicited from numerous witnesses, as irrelevant to the Indictment.[1] The Defence argues that the Chamber may not, consistent with the rights of the Accused and the rules governing indictments, base a conviction on any of these unpleaded matters. Notice of material facts other than through the Indictment is said to be exceptional, and not justified in the case of these seventeen categories of evidence. The Prosecution opposes the motion or, alternatively, requests that it be permitted to amend the Indictment to correct any deficiencies.

Deliberations

(I) Applicable Principles

2. The Chamber has previously addressed a similar motion in its Decision on Exclusion of Testimony Outside the Scope of the Indictment ("the Kabiligi Exclusion Decision").[2] The Chamber provided a framework for analyzing this type of motion, and discussed the relationship between the argument that evidence should be excluded on the basis of "lack of notice", and admissibility of evidence:

> Rule 89 (C) provides that "[a] Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value". To be admissible, the "evidence must be in some way relevant to an element of a crime with which the Accused is charged." The present motion complains that the evidence has no relevance to anything in the Indictment, or that some paragraphs of the Indictment to which it might be relevant are too vague to be taken into account. Some recent Appeals Chamber judgements thoroughly discuss the specificity with which an indictment must be pleaded, and the significance of other forms of Prosecution disclosure of its case. Although the question addressed in those cases was whether a conviction should be quashed because of insufficient notice of a charge in the indictment, the analysis is equally relevant to the present question, namely, whether evidence is sufficiently related to some charge in the Indictment to be admissible.
> The rights of the Accused enshrined in Article 20 of the Statute impose, according to the Appeals Chamber in Kupreškić, "an obligation on the part of the Prosecution to state the material facts underpinning the charges in the indictment, but not the evidence by which such material facts are to be proven". Material facts may also be communicated to the Accused other than through the indictment:

---

[1] Motion, para. 57 ("The evidence is irrelevant and of no probative value in relation to the actual charges in the Indictment. Keeping it in the record creates great prejudice to the Accused Ntabakuze because evidence of the alleged criminal conduct, or other alleged improper conduct, for which he has not been charged, is 'similar fact evidence' or 'bad character evidence,' nothing more. The prejudicial effect of such evidence must outweigh its probative value, with respect to the acts alleged in the Indictment").
[2] Bagosora et al., Decision on Exclusion of Testimony Outside the Scope of the Indictment (TC), 27 September 2005.

> If an indictment is insufficiently specific, Kupreškić stated that such a defect 'may, in certain circumstances cause the Appeals Chamber to reverse a conviction.' However, Kupreškić left open the possibility that a defective indictment could be cured 'if the Prosecution provides the Accused with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her.' The question whether the Prosecution has cured a defect in the indictment is equivalent to the question whether the defect has caused any prejudice to the Defence or, as the Kupreškić Appeals Judgement put it, whether the trial was rendered unfair by the defect. Kupreškić considered whether notice of the material facts that were omitted from the indictment was sufficiently communicated to the Defence in the Prosecution's Pre-Trial Brief, during disclosure of evidence, or through proceedings at trial. In this connection, the timing of such communications, the importance of the information to the ability of the Accused to prepare its defence, and the impact of the newly-disclosed material facts on the Prosecution case are relevant. As has been previously noted, 'mere service of witness statements by the [P]rosecution pursuant to the disclosure requirements' of the Rules does not suffice to inform the Defence of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial.
> Whether vagueness in the indictment has been cured by subsequent disclosure involves consideration of the following factors: the consistency, clarity and specificity with which the material fact is communicated to the Accused; the novelty and incriminating nature of the new material fact; and the period of notice given to the Accused. Mention of a material fact in a witness statement does not necessarily constitute adequate notice: the Prosecution must convey that the material allegation is part of the case against the Accused. This rule recognizes that, in light of the volume of disclosure by the Prosecution in certain cases, a witness statement will not, without some other indication, adequately signal to the Accused that the allegation is part of the Prosecution case. The essential question is whether the Defence has had reasonable notice of, and a reasonable opportunity to investigate and confront, the Prosecution case.[3]

As described above, "curing" is the process by which vague or general allegations in an indictment are given specificity and clarity through communications other than the indictment itself. Only material facts which can be reasonably related to existing charges may be communicated in such a manner.[4]

3. The Appeals Chamber has specifically approved the use of curative materials by a Trial Chamber in assessing whether the Defence had sufficient notice of material facts.[5] The availability of curing at the Trial Chamber level was distinctly reaffirmed in the Appeals Chamber's most recent pronouncement on this question:

> In reaching its judgement, a Trial Chamber can only convict the accused of crimes which are charged in the indictment. If the indictment is found to be defective because it fails to plead material facts or does not plead them with sufficient specificity, the Trial Chamber must consider whether the accused was nevertheless accorded a fair trial. In some instances, where the accused has received timely, clear and consistent information from the Prosecution detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her, the defective indictment may be deemed cured and a conviction may be entered.[6]

[5] Ntakirutimana, Judgement (AC), para. 101 ("The Trial Chamber concluded that sufficient information was given regarding this allegation to the summary of Witness SS's testimony in Annex B to the Pre-Trial Brief and one of SS's prior witness statements, which was disclosed on 7 February 2001. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, this conclusion was correct").

A Trial Chamber "may", but is not required to, consider whether an indictment has been cured. Accordingly, Trial Chambers which have declined to hear evidence concerning material facts outside of the indictment have done so either because they did not believe that the Defence had sufficient notice thereof, or because they exercised their discretion not to permit the addition of material facts.[7] These decisions do not contradict the principle that a vague indictment may, in appropriate circumstances, be cured through subsequent communications.[8]

4. Curing has been described as "exceptional" where the Prosecution knows of material facts at the time the indictment is filed, but fails to plead them.[9] No such characterization has been made in respect of material facts which are subsequently discovered. Indeed, the Appeals Chamber has suggested that it is not imperative that every material fact be pleaded in an indictment. In response to an interlocutory appeal by the Prosecution requesting reversal of a Trial Chamber decision denying an amendment of an indictment so as to add material facts, the Appeals Chamber commented:

> The Appeals Chamber does not accept the Prosecution's argument that the denial of the amendments will necessarily result in the exclusion of evidence that relates to charges contained in the current indictment. If evidence is relevant to a charge in the current indictment and is probative of that charge, then subject to any other ground of exclusion that may be advanced by the Defence, that evidence should be admissible.[10]

5. Allegations of physical perpetration of a criminal act by an accused must appear in an indictment.[11] On the other hand,

> "less detail may be acceptable if the 'sheer scale of the alleged crimes makes it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity in such matters as the identity of the victims and the dates for the commission of the crimes'".[12]

Many acts attributed to an accused fall on the spectrum between these two extremes. Individual actions of an accused which contribute to crimes will require more specific notice than proof of the crimes themselves, where they are physically committed by others. The specificity of the notice required is proportional to the extent of the Accused's direct involvement.

6. Whether a defective indictment was cured depends on "whether the accused was in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him or her".[13] The presence of a material fact somewhere in Ntabakuze relies on the Appeals Chamber's failure to reverse this decision as confirming the correctness of this statement of law. The Appeals Chamber stated that "in finding that the failure to plead could not be remedied by the Pre-Trial Brief, disclosed witness statements or the Prosecution's opening statement, the Trial Chamber made specific reference to the jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber". Bizimungu et al., Decision on Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeals Against Decisions of the Trial Chamber on Exclusion of Evidence (AC), 25 June 2004, para. 18. In light of subsequent pronouncements by the Appeals Chamber, however, this statement cannot be understood as a repudiation of curing in general, and must be interpreted simply as an acceptance of the Trial Chamber's factual determination that, in the circumstances of that case, the Trial Chamber properly exercised its discretion. See e.g. Naletilic, Judgement (AC), paras. 26-27.

[9] Ntakirutimana, Judgement (AC), para. 125 ("The Appeals Chamber, having accepted many of the Appellant's complaints of a lack of notice resulting in prejudice, stresses to the Prosecution that the practice of failing to allege known material facts in an indictment is unacceptable and that it is only in exceptional cases that such a failure can be remedied, for instance, 'if the Prosecution provides the accused with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her'").

[10] Muvunyi, Decision on Prosecution Interlocutory Appeal Against Trial Chamber II Decision of 23 February 2005 (AC), 12 May 2005, para. 55. There is no suggestion earlier in the decision that the Appeals Chamber is talking only about facts which fall below the threshold of materiality.

the Prosecution disclosure does not suffice to give reasonable notice; what is required is notice that the material fact will be relied upon as part of the Prosecution case, and how.[14] In Naletilic, the Appeals Chamber distinguished between those sources of disclosure which are adequate, and those which are not:

> In assessing whether a defective indictment was cured, the issue to be determined is whether the accused was in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him or her. In making this determination, the Appeals Chamber has in some cases looked at information provided through the Prosecutor's Pre-Trial Brief or its opening statement. The Appeals Chamber considers that the list of witnesses the Prosecution intends to call at trial, containing a summary of the facts and the charges in the indictment as to which each witness will testify and including specific references to counts and relevant paragraphs in the indictment, may in some cases serve to put the accused on notice. However, the mere service of witness statements or of potential exhibits by the Prosecution pursuant to disclosure requirements does not suffice to inform an accused of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial. Finally, an accused's submissions at trial, for example, the motion for judgement of acquittal, final trial brief or closing arguments, may in some instances assist in assessing to what extent the accused was put on notice of the Prosecution's case and was able to respond to the Prosecution's allegations.[15]

The Appeals Chamber has, in effect, established a distinction between the Pre-Trial Brief and opening statement, on the one hand, which are permissible ways of giving notice of material facts; and the "mere service of witness statements", which are not.

7. Objections play an important role in ensuring that the trial is conducted on the basis of evidence which is relevant to the charges against the accused. The failure to voice a contemporaneous objection does not waive the Accused's rights, but results in a shifting of the burden of proof:

> In the case of objections based on lack of notice, the Defence must challenge the admissibility of evidence of material facts not pleaded in the indictment by interposing a specific objection at the time the evidence is introduced. The Defence may also file a timely motion to strike the evidence or to seek an adjournment to conduct further investigations in order to respond to the unpleaded allegation.
> [A]n accused person who fails to object at trial has the burden of proving on appeal that his appeal that his ability to prepare his case was materially impaired. Where, however, the accused person objected at trial, the burden is on the Prosecution to prove on appeal that the accused's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.[16]

This standard applies whenever the objection is not raised contemporaneously with the introduction of the evidence.[17]

8. The Defence argues that it has already objected, in two written motions in May and August 2002, to all of the impugned evidence. These motions challenged the inclusion of "new charges" in the Pre-Trial Brief. Furthermore, the Defence claims that it "did not see great utility in delaying proceedings by repeating the objection at every possible opportunity, which would not only have been pointless in light of the Chamber's ruling, but ran the risk of incurring the displeasure of the new Trial Chamber, and the President of the Tribunal".[18] However, the so-called "ruling" was simply a general remark by the Presiding Judge during an informal status conference that many issues concerning admissibility of documents could be addressed as arguments concerning the weight of the evidence rather than through time-consuming challenges to admissibility.[19]

9. The written motions in 2002 do not constitute a sufficient objection to any and all evidence which the Defence now characterizes as falling outside of the Indictment. As mentioned above, the Defence's obligation is to "interpos[e] a specific objection at the time the evidence is introduced".[20] The Defence's excuse of futility is contradicted by the frequent objections lodged by the Kabiligi Defence – and by the Ntabakuze Defence itself, on occasion – of lack of notice.[21] These objections were entertained and considered impartially by the Chamber. Accordingly, to the extent that the Defence has pointed to no specific objection concerning the evidence in question, the presumption shall be that the burden rests on the Defence to show that the lack of notice has been prejudicial to its ability to understand and respond to the evidence in question.

10. The Chamber's approach in the sections which follow may be summarized as follows. Where a material fact cannot be reasonably related to the Indictment, then it shall be excluded. Where the material fact is relevant only to a vague or general allegation in the Indictment, then the Chamber will consider whether notice of the material fact was given in the Pre-Trial Brief or the opening statement, so as to cure the vagueness of the Indictment.[22] Material facts which concern the actions of the Accused personally are scrutinized more closely than general allegations of criminal conduct. Other forms of disclosure, such as witness statements or potential exhibits, are generally insufficient to put the Defence on reasonable notice. The Chamber recognizes two exceptions to this principle: first, where the Prosecution filed a motion for the addition of a witness, which was subsequently granted by the Chamber, and which stated the material facts on which the witness would testify (Witness AAA); second, where a lengthy adjournment was ordered by the Chamber for the express purpose of allowing the Defence to meet newly discovered material facts (Witness DBQ).[23]

(II) APPLICATION: SPECIFIC EXCLUSION REQUESTS BASED ON LACK OF NOTICE

(a) Death Squads: Amasasu and Related Organizations

11. The Ntabakuze Defence seeks the exclusion of the testimony of Witnesses DCH, XAQ and ZF concerning the Accused's alleged involvement in death squads and Amasasu in 1992 and 1993.[24] The Defence raised a contemporaneous objection to the testimony of Witness DCH, but only on the basis of temporal jurisdiction, not notice.[25] Accordingly, the burden rests with the Defence to show that it was not in a reasonable position to understand and respond to testimony of these three witnesses.

12. Witness DCH testified that in 1992 and 1993, Ntabakuze was the leader of a clandestine group of soldiers called Amasasu within the Para-commando Battalion, which was "responsible for

Given the link that allegedly existed between the AMASASU and other clandestine organizations which may have continued their activities into 1994, the Chamber concluded at the time that the evidence regarding the AMASASU was relevant to events in 1994 and should therefore be heard. intimidating those who were opposed to the MRND".[26] Witness XAQ described the involvement of Corporal Munyankindi, a Para-commando soldier, in a death squad in 1992.[27] Witness ZF used a number of different names to describe communication networks and death squads:

> The zero network was a communications network. The death squad – rather, death squads, were small groups apparently of well-trained people who were in charge of executing the decisions of the members of these networks, while the dragons were supposed to be the names of these groups, the groups that were the masterminds – I do not know whether this word is the appropriate word – the groups that were behind those activities, that is, anti-enemy activities, activities directed against the accomplices. The groups were secret groups, closely-knit groups. The Abakozi was another name synonymous to dragon. The dragons and Abakozi meant the same thing.[28]

13. The Indictment makes no mention of these groups by name, but paragraphs 1.13 to 1.16 do refer to "prominent civilian and military figures", sharing an "extremist Hutu ideology", working together from as early as 1990 to pursue a "strategy of ethnic division and incitement to violence". Their strategy included "the preparation of lists of people to be eliminated" and "the assassination of certain political opponents".[29] The Indictment was accompanied by a document entitled "Supporting Materials" which consists of specific and focused excerpts from statements of prospective witnesses in relation to each paragraph of the Indictment. This document does not constitute a massive disclosure and would have provided the Defence with a clear indication of the material facts which it would present in relation to each paragraph of the Indictment. In relation to paragraph 1.12, an expert witness is quoted as saying that

> "one notes in particular [within the armed forces] the creation of the Amasasu in January 1993 which demanded the establishment of a cleansed army and the elimination of all RPF allies)".[30]

14. On this basis, the Chamber finds that the Accused was reasonably informed that this material fact was part of the case against him.

(b) Arrests in October 1990 Using Lists

15. The Defence objects to testimony of Witnesses DBQ and DBY that lists were used by Para-commando soldiers in 1990 to arrest Tutsi and perceived accomplices of the enemy.[31]

16. Paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment names Ntabakuze as part of a group of persons who, "[f]rom late 1990 until July 1994", devised a plan consisting of

> "among other things, recourse to hatred and ethnic violence, the training of and distribution of weapons to militiamen as well as the preparation of lists of people to be eliminated" (emphasis added).

The Accused clearly had notice of this material fact. The suggestion that the evidence cannot be relevant to any crime committed during the temporal jurisdiction of the Tribunal has already been [27] T. 23 February 2004 pp. 17-19. The Defence also objects that this evidence of Munyankindi's alleged membership in a death squad is inextricably linked to evidence which the Chamber has decided to exclude from this trial, namely the alleged involvement of the Accused in death squads linked to the attempted abduction of Prime Minister Nsengiyaremye in October 1992. However, whether the Accused was involved in death squads in general is very different from the allegation that he was involved in a 1992 event where a death squad may have been sent to abduct the former Prime Minister. The evidence is not inadmissible on this basis.

specifically rejected by the Chamber, and no grounds justifying review of that decision have been presented in the motion.[32]

(c) Orders by Accused to Para-commando Battalion at an Assembly at Camp Kanombe, 6 or 7 April

17. The Defence objects to the testimony of nine witnesses placing him at an assembly of soldiers at Camp Kanombe on either 6 or 7 April 1994, where he is alleged to have issued orders to kill civilians and made other incriminating statements.[33] Witnesses XAP, XAQ, XAI, and DBQ recalled this assembly occurring on the night of 6 April; Witnesses XAB, DP, BC, LN and DBN said that it happened on the morning of 7 April. Paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment gives a different date for the event:

> On 8 April 1994, at a general assembly, the Commander of the Paracommando Battalion, Aloys Ntabakuze, ordered his soldiers to "avenge the death of President Habyarimana by killing the Tutsi". Further, he encouraged his troops by confirming that certain Tutsi and their "politician accomplices" had been killed. Indeed, several opposition leaders had been assassinated the previous day.

The Defence argues that the evidence is outside the scope of the Indictment. No latitude should be granted for such an error as the testimony concerns acts of the Accused himself.

18. There is undoubtedly a discrepancy between the date in the Indictment and the dates in the Pre-Trial Brief summaries, which give the date of the assembly attended by the Accused as either the night of 6 April or the morning of 7 April.[34] A cursory review of the summaries, however, would have revealed this discrepancy and revealed that, regardless of the date, paragraph 6.27 is alleging the same event as is mentioned in the summaries. Four of the summaries (of Witnesses DBN, XAB, XAP and XAQ) describe the Accused specifically instructing the soldiers to "revenge" the death of the President, which is the exact sentiment attributed to the Accused in paragraph 6.27. None of the summaries suggest that there was more than one meeting of this nature. Rather than being "buried under a great mass of pre-trial disclosure", as is suggested by the Defence, the discrepancy would have been obvious from reading the Pre-Trial Brief itself.[35] This is not to say that the Prosecution should not have corrected the error once it was discovered; nonetheless, the Chamber is satisfied that, based on the material before it, the Defence would have been aware of the erroneous date in the Indictment, and of the actual dates to which the witnesses would testify the event occurred. The Defence had reasonable notice of the material fact on which the Prosecution would rely, despite the discrepancy between the Indictment and the Pre-Trial Brief summaries. Accordingly, the evidence is not excluded.

(d) Massacres in Akajagali

19. Ntabakuze objects to the testimony of nine witnesses concerning alleged massacres by Para-commando soldiers in the neighbourhood of Akajagali, near Camp Kanombe, soon after the assembly described in the previous section.[36] Witnesses XAP, XAQ, XAI, DBQ and DBN gave testimony of their observations of these events. Witnesses GS and XXJ described visiting Akajagali on the morning of 7 April, and seeing indications of these massacres by Para-commando soldiers. Witness XAB recalled hearing gunshots during the night of 6 April 1994 in Akajagali, from which he inferred that a unit of the Para-commando Battalion was involved in killings. Witness XXY claimed to have heard of civilian killings in the area around Camp Kanombe.

20. Paragraph 6.36 of the Indictment alleges that "starting on 7 April in Kigali … elements of the Presidential Guard, Para-commando Battalion and Reconnaissance Battalion murdered political opponents. Numerous massacres of the civilian Tutsi population took place in places where they had seek [sought] refuge". The Pre-Trial Brief summary for Witness DBQ states that immediately following the assembly at which Ntabakuze had given orders to eliminate the enemy, he sent a company of soldiers to "Kajagali", where they proceeded to kill civilians. Witness DBN's summary refers to killings around Camp Kanombe immediately after the assembly of soldiers on 7 April. Killings of Tutsi "around the President's residence" on 7 April are also mentioned in Witness GS's summary. In light of these and other indications in the Pre-Trial Brief, the Accused had reasonable notice of the allegations against him and their connection to the Indictment.[37]

(e) Meetings of Officers in Camp Kanombe

21. The Defence objects to the testimony of several witnesses who alleged that Ntabakuze attended meetings with Colonel Bagosora or others at Camp Kanombe after the crash of the Presidential plane on 6 April.[38] Witness DBQ testified to two meetings of Ntabakuze with Bagosora on 6 and 7 April 1994,[39] while Witness DBN described one on 8 April 1994. Witness LN testified to meetings of military officers, including Ntabakuze and Bagosora, on 6 and 7 April at the Kanombe Hospital and at Army Headquarters, respectively. Witness GS gave testimony that on the night of 6 April, Ntabakuze met with Major Ntibihora and Lt. Colonel Baransalitse and made certain anti-Tutsi statements.[40] No contemporaneous objection was made.[41]

22. Though the Indictment makes no mention of these meetings, the Pre-Trial Brief summary for Witness LN states that, on the night of the plane crash:

> [a]round midnight, Corporal Masitumu … told the witness that a meeting chaired by Colonel Bagosora was taking place inside the hospital, with the attendance of Lt. Colonel Baransaritse; Major Ntabakuze; Major Ntibihora; Major Mutabera.[42]

The summary for Witness DBQ indicates that on 6 April "Ntabakuze came back [to Camp Kanombe] around 23h. Then he went into a meeting with the officers at the camp".[43] These references provided a reasonable indication of the evidence.[44]

A colleague informed witness that many Tutsi had been killed, including witness's cousin and her two children."), and XAI ("[On April 6th] Witness heard Major Ntabakuze … [ordering soldiers] ... to go in various areas of Kigali, with the mission to kill the Tutsi and their accomplices … On 7 April 1994, a colleague informed witness that Major Ntabakuze ordered his soldiers to resume the massacres during the night …").

[44] The Ntabakuze Defence itself suggests that there may be non-incriminating explanations for these meetings. Referring to Witness DBQ's testimony of a 1 a.m. meeting in Ntabakuze's office, including Colonel Bagosora and other officers, the Defence writes, "there is no evidence of any relationship between this meeting and alleged criminal conduct, since all involved were military officers with legitimate reasons to confer following the apparent assassination of the President." Defence Motion, para. 97.

(f) Failing to Punish Nzabonariba and Handing Nyabyenda Over to Interahamwe

23. Ntabakuze objects to testimony by Witnesses DBN, XAP, LN and XAB concerning his alleged failure to punish one of his subordinates, Second Lieutenant Sylvestre Nzabonariba, for killing a Tutsi soldier.[45] Witness XAP also alleged that Ntabakuze handed a soldier named Nyabyenda to the Interahamwe to be killed for having protected Tutsi. No general or specific reference to this event is to be found in the Indictment or the Pre-Trial Brief. The event is described in the written statements of Witnesses XAP, LN and XAB.

24. The Prosecution responds that these incidents "do not constitute material facts of the prosecution case" and that they "do not go to any specific crime charged in the indictment".[46] Instead they were adduced to "to prove other facts at issue", in particular the "prevailing situation within the Para-commando Battalion" and the "state of mind of the soldiers of the Para-commando Battalion".[47] The Prosecution also argues that notice was given through disclosure of witness statements and that any claim of prejudice is contradicted by Defence submissions in its Pre-Defence Brief, in particular the summaries of Witnesses DH-51 and DH-62, which correctly identifies and contradicts this incident.[48] The Prosecution's argument may be understood to mean that the evidence should be considered admissible only in respect of the criminal conduct of the Para-commando soldiers, not the Accused himself.

25. The Chamber finds that for the purpose of demonstrating criminal conduct by Para-commando soldiers, the evidence is admissible. The general allegation concerning the criminal conduct of Para-commando soldiers in Kigali would encompass the incident described by these witnesses. The Defence registered no contemporaneous objection to the evidence on the basis of lack of notice and, accordingly, now bears the burden of showing that it was not in a reasonable position to understand the nature of the allegations being made by the witness, and that it suffered prejudice as a result.[49] That burden has not been discharged. For the purpose of showing the criminal conduct of soldiers of the Para-commando Battalion, the evidence is admissible. Based on the Prosecution's own submissions, the Chamber accepts that the evidence is not admissible, however, in respect of specific orders or knowledge of the Accused.

(g) Rape

26. The Defence argues that it had no notice of allegations by Witness DBQ that Para-commandos committed rape about fifty metres from IAMSEA, in Kajagali, and at the Christus Centre in April and May 1994, and by Witness XAB that such rapes were committed at Sobolirwa on or before 12 April 1994.[50] The Prosecution responds that the Chamber's Decision on Admissibility of Evidence of Witness DBQ, dated 18 November 2003 ("the DBQ Decision"), has already addressed the question of notice of these allegations. The Defence replies that the issue in that decision was only the admissibility of the evidence, not whether the Indictment could be informally amended.

[49] The Ntabakuze Defence did make an objection during the testimony of Witness LN as regards the shooting of Nzabonariba, but did not interpose a specific objection on the basis of notice to the general evidence of criminal conduct by Para-commando soldiers. T. 30 March 2004 p. 67 ("Mr. President, in the statement of the witness, Witness LN, the incident being testified to by the witness at present, that incident covers five lines, not more than five lines. And the time devoted to the examination-in-chief is totally disproportionate to the five lines that appear in the statement.")
[50] Motion, paras. 112-118.

27. The DBQ Decision squarely addressed the sufficiency of the Indictment and whether any vagueness had been cured by subsequent communications to the Defence. The DBQ Decision starts by analyzing the Indictment itself, finding that there were

> "broad allegations of criminal conduct throughout Kigali and the rest of Rwanda, including direct and superior responsibility for massacres and rapes".[51]

Paragraph 6.47 of the Indictment is quoted as saying that

> "rapes, sexual assaults and other crimes of a sexual nature were widely and notoriously committed throughout Rwanda … perpetrated by, among others, soldiers, militiamen and gendarmes …".

The Chamber proceeded to consider whether subsequent notice had cured this general allegation in the Indictment. Notice could be provided "in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, opening statement or witness statements".[52] Having found no references to Witness DBQ's specific allegations of rape in the Indictment or Pre-Trial Brief, the Chamber held that the will-say statements could provide adequate notice of the allegations, as long as the witness's appearance was postponed for a significant period.[53]

28. Since the DBQ Decision, the Appeals Chamber has held that

> "'mere service of witness statements by the [P]rosecution pursuant to the disclosure requirements' of the Rules does not suffice to inform the Defence of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial".[54]

On the other hand, those same Appeals Chamber decisions have affirmed that where "the evidence turns out differently than expected", the possible remedies include

> "amendment of the indictment, an adjournment, or the exclusion of evidence outside the scope of the indictment".[55]

This would seem to suggest that notice of a material fact may be conveyed through a witness statement, such as a will-say, provided that it is coupled with "an adjournment" of sufficient duration to allow the Defence to meet the charge. The key question is whether the Defence had clear and unambiguous notice that the material fact would be relied upon as part of the Prosecution case, and had sufficient opportunity to respond to the charge.

29. Although the law on notice may have shifted slightly since the DBQ Decision was rendered, the Chamber nevertheless finds that its conclusions were sound and that the Defence had adequate notice of these material facts. Not every new material fact need be incorporated into the indictment or excluded: a third option, as expressly recognized by the Appeals Chamber, is adjournment. As long as the Defence has unambiguous notice that the Prosecution proposes to rely on the new material fact, and that the adjournment is granted to give the Defence an opportunity to defend against the new material fact, then the fairness of the trial is preserved without sacrificing a reasonable measure of flexibility which can be important in lengthy and complex trials. Although no request was made to amend the Indictment, the Chamber exercised judicial control over the addition of these new material facts to the Prosecution case. The DBQ Decision carefully considered the relevance of the new material facts to the Indictment; its significance to the charges in the Indictment; the possible prejudice to the Accused; and the length of the adjournment which would be required.

[51] DBQ Decision, para. 15.
[52] DBQ Decision, para. 12.
[53] DBQ Decision, para. 11 ("Given the number of new incidents raised in the will-say statements, the seriously incriminating nature of the conduct alleged, and the remoteness of the new factual allegations from any incidents of which the Defence had notice, the Defence needed more time to be prepared than remained in that trial session").

[55] Ntakirutimana, Judgement (AC), para. 26; Naletilic, Judgement (AC), para. 25.

30. Under these circumstances, and for the reasons more fully set out in the DBQ Decision, the material facts concerning rape, as introduced through Witness DBQ, are properly admissible as relevant to the Indictment.[56] The DBQ Decision was specifically concerned with the admission of material facts through that witness, on the basis of the disclosure and the specific submissions by the Prosecution in relation to that witness.

31. The Chamber did not, by virtue of the DBQ Decision, authorize the admission of Witness XAB's testimony. The Defence, having failed to cite any contemporaneous objection to the testimony of Witness XAB, bears the burden of showing that it was not in a reasonable position to understand the charges and that it was materially impaired in its preparations.[57] The Defence argues that the failure to plead these material facts in the Indictment or other materials deprived it of notice, and that the facts alleged are incriminating of the Accused. The Prosecution made no submissions in response, other than relying on the DBQ Decision, to show that the Defence had notice of this evidence and was not materially impaired in its preparation. The Chamber finds that the Defence has discharged its burden, and that the evidence must be excluded.

(h) Killings By Para-commando Soldiers at IAMSEA, Remera, Kabeza and Environs

32. The Defence claims that Ntabakuze had insufficient notice of the testimony of seven witnesses concerning killing of civilians in Kigali by Para-commando soldiers, in particular at IAMSEA, Remera, and Kabeza.[58]

33. Paragraph 6.36 of the Indictment is, in itself, too vague to give sufficient notice of these events. It describes "elements of the Rwandan Army" committing massacres "in Kigali", and to the "Para-Commando Battalion" murdering political opponents. This vagueness is cured, however, by repeated references in the Pre-Trial Brief to specific crimes by Para-commando soldiers in and around Kigali. Witness XAB's summary refers to involvement by a Para-commando unit in massacres at Kicukiro. Killings at Kabeza are mentioned in Witness AH's summary, which also indicates that the witness met Ntabakuze on 8 April near Kabeza while "his troops were searching for and killing civilians". The Accused is alleged in Witness DBQ's summary to have told his men that "the enemy was there just outside the camp and that they should go and eliminate the enemy". One company of soldiers was sent to Kajagali, Kabeza, and Remera, respectively, and the soldiers went "house to house, checking ID's and any mention of Tutsi meant immediate death". Witness XAP's summary speaks generally of soldiers returning to the camp after looting and killing, implying that they were returning from the nearby neighbourhood of Remera.

34. The summary of Witness WB gives a detailed description of the killings at IAMSEA including the presence and orders of the Accused. The events at IAMSEA and conduct of Ntabakuze are also part of the DBQ Decision, whose significance was discussed in the previous section.[59]

35. Accordingly, the Chamber finds, on the basis of the Pre-Trial Brief and the DBQ Decision, that the Accused had timely, clear and consistent notice of these events and that he was in a position to reasonably understand that these material facts were relevant to paragraph 6.36 of the Indictment.

[56] The Chamber emphasizes that the disclosure of the will-say statements alone would not, in principle, be sufficient to put the Defence on notice of these new material facts. In the particular circumstances of Witness DBQ's testimony, however, the Defence did have sufficient notice because of, among other factors: the judicial oversight exercised by the Chamber; the unequivocal and specific submissions from the Prosecution as to the nature and use of the material facts; and the express purpose and duration of the adjournment which was granted.
[57] Motion, paras. 112-118; T. 6 April 2004 pp. 34-40. An objection was interposed concerning killings at IAMSEA, but not the nearby rapes.
[58] Motion, paras. 119-128.
[59] DBQ Decision, para. 16.

(i) ETO Refugees at Sonatube Intersection

36. The Defence objects to testimony that Para-commando soldiers at Sonatube intersection, in Ntabakuze's presence, re-directed refugees who were fleeing from the Ecole Technique Officielle ("ETO") towards Nyanza, where they were later killed.[60] Alison Des Forges' testimony indicated that the Accused was at Sonatube during the event.[61] Witnesses AFJ and Ruggiu gave evidence that Ntabakuze ordered his soldiers at Sonatube to send the refugees back to ETO.

37. Paragraph 6.19 of the Indictment states that Para-commandos in Kigali "set up roadblocks, reinforced with armoured vehicles, on the major roads, controlling people's movements". Paragraph 6.34 refers to Kigali as the place where the "elite units of the Rwandan Army were based" and that, consequently,

> "several of the military and civilian figures who had planned and organized the massacres played a leading role in carrying out the massacres in Kigali".

Paragraph 6.37 alleges that on 11 April,

> "soldiers, including elements of the Presidential Guard, and Interahamwe rounded up a group of refugees [from ETO] and moved them to Nyanza", where they were massacred. The summary of Witness XAB's testimony in the Pre-Trial Brief says that he was "told by elements of CRAP that they had taken part in massacres at the Ecole Technique Officielle".[62]

38. Although the Indictment is perhaps not as crystalline as it could be in relation to this event, the Chamber finds that the notice provided by the Indictment and Pre-Trial Brief was sufficient. Paragraph 6.37 does not mention Para-commando soldiers by name, but the reference to "soldiers" includes Para-commandos. The inclusive reference to Presidential Guard soldiers does not exclude Para-commando soldiers, particularly in light of other paragraphs of the Indictment, including paragraph 6.19, which indicate clearly that the Para-commandos were in Kigali at this time, and that they committed crimes. The reference in the Pre-Trial Brief would have made it clear that the "soldiers" in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment included Para-commandos. The failure to assert a contemporaneous objection may suggest that the incident was not as surprising as the Defence now claims. In any event, in the absence of such an objection, the Defence bears the burden of showing that it was not in a reasonable position to understand the material facts. In the Chamber's view, this burden has not been discharged by the generalized claims of lack of notice and prejudice. For these reasons, the exclusion of the evidence is not justified.

(j) Kabuga Mosque, Ruhanga Church and Masaka Incidents

39. Witness DCH's testimony describing the involvement of the Accused and Para-commando soldiers in killings at the Mosque and Brigade of Kabuga in June 1994, and at Ruhanga Church in April 1994 is challenged for lack of notice.[63] The Defence also objects to the testimony of Witness DBN describing a platoon of soldiers being sent to kill Tutsi at Masaka at the request of Anatole Nsengiyumva. The events are said to fall outside the scope of the Indictment, which mentions none of these locations by name.

40. Paragraph 6.36 of the Indictment refers generally to Para-commando soldiers massacring Tutsi at places where the latter had sought refuge. The Pre-Trial Brief summary for Witness DCH indicates that he would give testimony of massacres by soldiers in and around Kabuga in April 1994.[64] The Prosecution's opening statement, similarly, gave notice of the allegations of killings by soldiers at Ruhanga church.[65] Witness DBN's Pre-Trial Brief summary describes the mission to Masaka in detail.[66]

41. The Chamber finds that the Indictment and Pre-Trial Brief, taken together, reasonably informed the Defence that these material facts were relevant to paragraph 6.36 of the Indictment.

(k) Ntabakuze Ordering Killings at Kabusunzu; Para-commandos Loading Bodies at Kabusunzu; Misconduct of Soldiers at Nyakabanda and Knowledge of the Accused

42. Witness DBN testified that, during the period that the Para-commando Battalion was stationed at Kabusunzu, Ntabakuze ordered that a group of three Tutsis be taken away and killed.[67] He saw the three being led behind a building and then heard gunshots. The witness also saw Para-commando soldiers loading around fifteen dead bodies onto a truck while Ntabakuze stood ten metres away.[68]

43. Neither the Indictment nor the Pre-Trial Brief make any mention of these events, nor do they name the Kabusunzu area. The general allegation in paragraph 6.36 of the Indictment, standing alone, does not provide sufficient notice of this material fact. The Prosecution has failed to point to any curative references to this event in the Pre-Trial Brief or opening statement. On the other hand, the Defence has failed to cite any contemporaneous objection to the admission of this evidence on the basis of lack of notice, and the Prosecution did disclose a will-say statement some months before the witness's testimony which made direct reference to his testimony. The Pre-Defence Brief summaries of no less than seven witnesses directly contradict the allegation that Para-commando soldiers engaged in any criminal conduct.[69] Under the circumstances, the Chamber finds that the Defence has not discharged its burden of showing that it did not understand the material facts alleged against him and that the preparation of Ntabakuze's defence was materially impaired.

44. The Defence also objects to the testimony of Witness AAA alleging that Para-commando soldiers were involved in indiscriminate killings and rape of civilians in Nyakabanda sector in May and June 1994. The witness further testified that he had complained about the misconduct of the soldiers to Ntabakuze, who did nothing to intervene.[70] Though there is no mention of this event in the Indictment or Pre-Trial Brief, the Chamber authorized the addition of Witness AAA to the Prosecution Witness List on 21 May 2004, accepting the Prosecution's submission that the testimony would be material to the case against Ntabakuze.[71] The Prosecution motion, followed by the Chamber's ruling, was sufficient to clearly inform the Accused that the testimony of Witness AAA would be part of the case against him. The period during which the motion was pending, and between the date of the decision and the witness's appearance, constituted a de facto adjournment which gave the Defence sufficient time to investigate and challenge the witness's testimony, in accordance with the rights of a fair trial. The failure of the Prosecution to amend the Indictment in accordance with this newly discovered evidence did not render its admission unfair, in the circumstances.

(l) Rwampara

45. The Ntabakuze objects to the testimony of Witness DBQ describing killings by Para-commandos at St. André College and Nyamirambo in Rwampara.[72] For the reasons discussed in section (g) above in respect of alleged incidents of rape, the Chamber considers that the Defence had sufficient notice of these material facts and that they were properly admitted by the Chamber in accordance with the rights of the Accused.

(m) Kabgayi

46. The testimony of Witnesses XAI and XXY regarding events in Kabgayi is challenged for lack of notice.[73] They testified that Ntabakuze came to Kabgayi and encouraged soldiers to collaborate with the Interahamwe to kill refugees in the Kabgayi hospital. The Defence objects that none of these events are pleaded in the Indictment.

47. Though the Indictment makes no mention of this event, the Pre-Trial Brief summary for Witness XAI states that the witness heard Ntabakuze telling his soldiers to use Interahamwe to kill Tutsi at the Kabgayi hospital.[74] In the Chamber's view, this was sufficient to put the Defence on notice of killings at the hospital.

48. Witness XXY also claimed to have heard that Ntabakuze had sent Para-commando soldiers to reinforce Interahamwe at Gitarama, Kibuye and Ngororero. The Prosecution has failed to identify any curative references to these events in the Pre-Trial Brief or opening statement; on the other hand, having failed to interpose a specific contemporaneous objection, the Defence bears the burden of demonstrating that it did not understand the material facts alleged, and that its preparation was materially impaired. As no such showing has been made, the evidence cannot be excluded.

49. The Chamber does not accept the Prosecution argument that the evidence would be admissible, in the absence of adequate notice, under Rule 93 as establishing a "consistent pattern of conduct". Even assuming that the evidence could be relevant under Rule 93, this would not diminish the specificity with which a material fact must be pleaded.

(n) Planning of Guerrilla Warfare, August 1994

50. The Defence seeks to exclude the testimony of Witness ZF describing a post-war gathering of officers at Lac Vert in Goma, where the Accused took part in planning guerrilla warfare in Rwanda.[75] The challenge is based not on lack of notice or sufficient precision in pleading, but on manifest irrelevance to any of the crimes charged. The Prosecution argues that the events in Goma do not constitute crimes with which the Accused is charged; rather, the evidence is relevant as post-crime conduct to establish the Accused's intent for earlier crimes.

51. The Chamber cannot categorically exclude the relevance of this event and will defer consideration of this question until closing submissions.

(o) Allegations of Weapons and Ammunition Supply

52. Ntabakuze seeks to exclude the testimony of Witnesses XAB, DP, XAP, XAQ and XAI that he was involved in the distribution of fuel and weapons to the Interahamwe, often at Camp Kanombe.[76] Timely objections were raised with regard to Witnesses DP[77] and XAQ,[78] though in the latter case the Defence only objected to the reference to guns, not ammunition and fuel.

53. At paragraph 5.22, the Indictment pleads that Ntabakuze was generally involved in weapons distribution:

> Aloys Ntabakuze [and others] … distributed weapons to the militiamen and certain carefully selected members of the civilian population with the intent to exterminate the Tutsi population and eliminate its "accomplices".

Paragraph 6.45 also refers to the provision of weapons by soldiers to militiamen. The Supporting Materials to the Indictment specify that:

> After the presidential plane was shot down, a Warrant Officer called Rudakangwa distributed weapons to the Interahamwe at the roadblock on the Kanombe-Kigali road via Rubirizi. They distributed generally grenades and kakashnikovs [sic] along with ammunition. These weapons came from the Kanombe camp and were ordered by Ntabakuze.[79]

Finally, the Pre-Trial Brief summaries of Witnesses XAQ and XAB describe distribution of supplies and ammunitions to Interahamwe at Camp Kanombe or by the Para-commando Battalion, and mention specifically the involvement of Ntabakuze. As such, testimony concerning distribution of weapons to Interahamwe is properly admissible.

54. The testimony of Witness DCH concerning two specific incidents of weapons distribution is also challenged. The witness testified that the Accused gave a pistol to a certain Maga at a roadblock, who then killed the owner of a Mazda car. Ntabakuze then took the Mazda. On another occasion, the Accused gave weapons to the witness, Gasana, and Mwongereza for use in an attack on Ruhanga church. The Defence objected contemporaneously to the first of these incidents, concerning Maga, but not the distribution to Gasana. The summary of Witness DCH's testimony in the Pre-Trial Brief states that he > "saw Ntabakuze in a vehicule Mazda, transporting weapons which were distributed by Adjutant Gasana".

55. The Prosecution bears the burden of showing that the Defence had reasonable notice of the first event, and that its preparations were not materially impaired; the Defence bears the burden in relation to the second event. Neither party has discharged its burden. The Prosecution has failed to show that the Defence was not materially impaired. Even if such a showing had been made, an act of the Accused which constitutes part of the physical commission of a crime, as the Defence has argued here, must be pleaded in the Indictment. In the absence of such pleading, evidence of the distribution of weapons to Maga, and the Accused's alleged presence while the weapon was used to kill someone, is inadmissible.

56. The evidence of distribution of weapons to Gasana, however, did not constitute part of the physical commission of a crime by the Accused. In the absence of a contemporaneous objection, the [79] Supporting Material to Ntabakuze and Kabiligi Indictment, 3 August 1998, p. 741.

Defence has failed to discharge its burden of showing that it was not on reasonable notice of this evidence, and that its preparations were materially impaired. The evidence is not excluded.

(p) Meetings Before 6 April 1994

57. Ntabakuze objects to the testimony of three witnesses who allege that he participated in meetings with Bagosora and others before 6 April 1994 whose purpose was to plan the extermination of the Tutsi population.[80] Witness ZF referred to a clandestine meeting in 1992 at the Butotori Camp in Gisenyi Prefecture, attended by numerous officers and civilians. Witness DCH described Ntabakuze's participation in five meetings of Interahamwe at the house of Bagaragaza in Kabuga between March 1993 and 4 April 1994. Witness DBQ referred to a meeting of high-ranking officers, including Ntabakuze, at Camp Kanombe in 1993.

58. Paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment states that between late 1990 and 1994, Ntabakuze conspired with his co-accused and others "to work out a plan with the intent to exterminate the Tutsi population". The Defence argues that in the absence of dates and locations of meetings, and a correct list of participants, the Defence does not have adequate notice of this material fact. The Prosecution also points to paragraph 5.10, however, which alleges that several meetings of army officers including Ntabakuze and Bagosora took place "notably at Kanombe military camp" between 1 May 1992 and 31 August 1993.

59. Paragraphs 5.1 and 5.10, taken together, gave reasonable notice of Witness DBQ's testimony.[81] The Prosecution's opening statement also put the Defence on notice of Witness ZF's testimony that "certain clandestine meetings were held in Gisenyi".[82] No specific criminal conduct of the Accused is alleged. In these circumstances, the notice provided was sufficient.

60. No reasonable notice was given, however, of the five meetings involving Interahamwe leaders. This evidence is of a different character than meetings between the accused and his fellow military officers and could, in itself, be incriminating. The Prosecution has been unable to point to any references in the opening statement or Pre-Trial Brief concerning this event which would clarify the very general allegations in paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment. The Defence failed to interpose any objection and, accordingly, bears the burden of showing that it was not on reasonable notice of this evidence, and that its preparations were materially impaired by that lack of notice.[83] The Defence argues that the failure to plead these material facts in the Indictment or other materials deprived it of notice, and that the facts alleged are incriminating of the Accused.[84] The Prosecution has not shown that the Defence reasonably understood the nature of the allegations, or that it was not materially impaired in its preparations.[85] For these reasons, the Chamber finds that Witness DCH's evidence of Ntabakuze's participation in meetings with Interahamwe leaders at Kabuga's house before April 1994 is excluded.

(III) REMEDIES OTHER THAN EXCLUSION

[80] Addendum, paras. 19-24.
[81] Notice of Camp Kanombe meetings were given in the Pre-Trial Brief, e.g. the summary for Witness DQ ("Witness will state that while Camp MAYUYA (KANOMBE) was under the authority of BAGOSORA, meetings were organized by Bagosora attended by Unit Chiefs of Camp MAYUYA … Unit Chiefs that participated regularly were ... Major NTABAKUZE, Commander of the Paratrooper Commando Battalion …").

[83] T. 23 June 2004 pp. 1-3 (Witness DCH).
[84] Addendum, paras. 19-24.
[85] Prosecution Response, para. 168.

61. The Prosecution requests that evidence of which the Defence has had insufficient notice should be admitted as corroborative of other evidence which has been properly admitted. Alternatively, it requests permission to amend the Indictment to conform to the evidence presented.

62. The absence of notice cannot be remedied by arguing that the material fact is only indirectly relevant to the case, for example, through the doctrine of "similar fact evidence". Whether directly or indirectly relevant, the absence of notice of a material fact requires its exclusion.

63. Permitting amendment of the Indictment would, at this stage, be prejudicial to the Accused. This alternative remedy is rejected.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion in part;

DECLARES the following evidence inadmissible:

1. Witness XAB's testimony of rape committed by Para-commando soldiers at Sobolirwa on or before 12 April;
2. Witness DCH's testimony that the Accused distributed weapons to Maga;
3. Witness DCH's testimony that the Accused participated in five meetings with Interahamwe leaders in Kabuga.

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED of the Nsengiyumva "Motion Seeking a Directive to the Registry", etc., filed on 1 June 2006;

CONSIDERING the Registrar's Submission, filed on 9 June 2006 ; and the Defence Response thereto, filed on 15 June 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. Before the beginning of the testimony of Witness BRA-1 on 5 and 6 April 2006, the Chamber heard oral submissions on a motion filed by the Nsengiyumva Defence requesting that the witness be permitted to stay at a place of his own choosing rather than at the safe house provided by the Tribunal for the accommodation of protected witnesses. The Chamber ruled that a protected witnesses was entitled to make such a choice without thereby altering his or her protected status. However, the protected witness must be advised that, in so choosing, the Tribunal would not be in a position to provide the level of security that would be afforded at the safe house.[1] Witness BRA-1 then entered the courtroom; was advised by the Presiding Judge of the legal and factual situation; and then unequivocally indicated that he wished to remain a protected witness, even though he wished to stay elsewhere.[2] On 29 May 2006, after a period of adjournment, Witness BRA-1 completed his testimony.

2. The Defence submits that, after the completion of Witness BRA-1's testimony, the Registry violated this order by asking the witness to sign a form, attached to the motion as Annex-3, purporting to waive his protected status. The Defence asks the Chamber to direct the Registry to withdraw the use of the form and pay him the "full subsistence allowance", although without further defining how much that should be.

3. The Registry claims that before the end of his stay in Arusha, Witness BRA-1 requested that he receive the allowance to which unprotected witnesses are entitled, which is significantly higher than that received by protected witnesses. The Registry advised him that he would not be entitled to that sum unless he signed a form waiving his protected status. The witness refused to sign the form. On 2 June 2006, he was offered the sum to which he was entitled as a protected witness, except for expenses. The witness refused the amount, claiming that his request for the full subsistence allowance was before the Chamber. On 6 June 2006, the Registry went to the place where the witness had been staying to pay him the subsistence rate for protected witnesses plus expenses, in accordance with United Nations regulations. The witness was not found at that location.

Deliberations

4. The Defence witness protection orders do not provide for the voluntary waiver of protected status.[3] That status was originally invoked when the Nsengiyumva Defence designated Witness BRA-1 as a protected witness, in accordance with operative paragraph 1 of the witness protection order, and then reaffirmed by the witness himself before the beginning of his testimony. Only the Chamber is competent to change the status of a protected witness, and the Chamber made clear in its oral decision on 5 April 2006 that the witness's protected status was unchanged. Neither the Registry nor the witness himself may alter that legal status. Witness BRA-1 remains a protected witness and must be treated accordingly. This said, the risk arising from the witness's decision not to stay at the safe house cannot be attributed the Registry. The Registry has made clear that it cannot provide the same level of security for witnesses outside of the safe house, and that it advises any witness who makes such a decision of the increased risk that they are running.[4]

5. The exact sum to which witnesses are entitled under United Nations regulations falls primarily within the purview of the Registry. The Defence has not shown that the present application of these regulations is impairing the fairness of trial proceedings. In the absence of such showing, the Chamber has no basis for reviewing the Registry's interpretation thereof.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DECLARES that Witness BRA-1 remains a protected witness;

DENIES the motion in all other respects.

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. Upon arrival in Arusha, Witness YD-1 indicated to the Registry that he did not wish to stay at the place normally used for the accommodation of protected witnesses. The Registry acceded to the request, but only on condition that the witness signs a form purporting to waive his status as a protected witness.[1] The Defence subsequently sought the assistance of the Registry on behalf of the witness, who complained that he was encountering security problems. The Registry declined to intervene in the matter on the basis that, by signing the form, the witness had waived his protected status.

2. The Defence seeks a declaration that Witness YD-1 is a protected witness, and a direction to the Registry to treat the witness accordingly.

Deliberations

3. The Defence witness protection orders do not provide for the voluntary waiver of protected status.[2] That status was originally invoked when the Nsengiyumva Defence designated Witness YD-1 as a protected witness, in accordance with operative paragraph 1 of the witness protection order, and then reaffirmed by the witness himself before the beginning of his testimony. Two days after the purported waiver was signed, the Presiding Judge advised the witness before the beginning of his testimony that "you will be referred to as witness YD-1 in these proceedings".[3] Far from authorizing any waiver of the witness's protected status, the Chamber acknowledged that he was a protected witness and heard parts of his testimony in closed session. Only the Chamber is competent to change the status of a protected witness, and it did not do so in this case. Furthermore, the Chamber has held that refusal to stay in the accommodation provided by the Registry for protected witnesses does not alter their protected status.[4]

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Ntabakuze "Response to Bagosora Request to Transfer Witness Jean Kambanda, and Ancillary Request for Exclusion of Evidence", filed by the Ntabakuze Defence on 13 June 2006; and the Corrigendum thereto, filed on 14 June 2006;[1]

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 15 June 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. Ntabakuze requests that the anticipated testimony of Jean Kambanda, a prospective Bagosora witness, be excluded as against him. The witness's testimony is "Prosecution-oriented", and would not be heard but for the fact that Ntabakuze is being tried jointly with a co-accused who has a different view of the desirability of calling the witness. In any event, the witness is so devoid of credibility that his testimony will be of little or no evidentiary value. Having denied a previous request for severance, the Chamber must grant exclusion as the only possible way to mitigate the prejudicial effect of the witness's testimony, and to preserve the Accused's right under Rule 82 (A) to be accorded the "same rights as if he were being tried separately".

[1] The request for the witness's transfer was granted by Bagosora et al., Order for Transfer of Defence Witness Jean Kambanda (TC), 15 June 2006.

Deliberations

2. The grounds for the present request have, to a substantial degree, already been litigated. In denying a request for severance based on the alleged serious prejudice that the three accused other than Bagosora would suffer from Kambanda's testimony, the Chamber held:

> No such "serious prejudice" has been established. The fact that more evidence will be heard than would be the case if the three co-Accused had absolute control over the presentation of the defence does not constitute "serious prejudice", as is amply demonstrated by the jurisprudence concerning antagonistic defences. This is a normal incident of a joint trial which, in other respects, may be beneficial to the three co-Accused or to the administration of justice. The proposed testimony of Jean Kambanda is not even alleged to concern any of the co-Accused individually. Indeed, the motion emphasizes that the testimony is prejudicial to all four accused, demonstrating that there is a disagreement between the three co-Accused and the Bagosora Defence, rather than a conflict of interest. If evidence is adduced which, in the opinion of the co-Accused, is prejudicial to their interest, then they will have the opportunity, subject to the Chamber's control, to cross-examine the witness on any matter raised by the Prosecution and, where legally justified, to call additional rebuttal evidence. In short, the co-Accused have not demonstrated that there is any specific aspect of the witnesses' testimony which is particularly or unusually prejudicial so as to justify severance.[2]

Nothing in the present submissions alters the Chamber's view of the nature of the testimony, or the need to suppress it as against the accused other than Bagosora.

3. The Defence has made no showing that the evidence is irrelevant; falls within Rule 95 as having been "obtained by methods which cast substantial doubt on its reliability" or as being "antithetical to, and would seriously damage, the integrity of the proceedings"; or should for any other reason be excluded. Lack of credibility is not a basis for excluding a witness's testimony, nor is disagreement with the decision of another counsel to call a witness.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the motion.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Ntabakuze "Motion for Certification", etc., filed on 6 July 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. On 29 June 2006, the Chamber granted in part a motion by the Ntabakuze Defence for the exclusion of seventeen categories of evidence.[1] The Chamber partially excluded three of the challenged categories, but denied the request for exclusion in respect of the remaining fourteen areas.[2] Ntabakuze now requests leave to file an interlocutory appeal from the decision.

Deliberations

2. Leave to file an interlocutory appeal of a decision may be granted under Rule 73 (B) where it "involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of proceedings or the outcome of the trial" and where "immediate resolution may materially advance the proceedings".

(i) Fair and Expeditious Conduct of Proceedings

3. The Defence argues the fairness of the proceedings has been jeopardized because the Chamber has allowed the Prosecution

> "ex post facto, to amend its indictment, implicitly, as it went along with the presentation of its evidence".[3]

Although the Defence concedes in this request for certification that "it might have been possible to 'cure' the defect in the Indictment" to some extent, the Chamber has improperly permitted such curing in respect of the "vast majority of specific allegations of the against the Accused".[4] In the absence of clear guidance in the Indictment as to the purpose for which material facts are presented, the Accused remains in doubt as to the nature of the charges against him. This uncertainty places the Accused in the position of being "guided more by intuition and guesswork than juridical decision-making" in the presentation of his Defence, and leads to an unfair and unfocused trial.[5] This is said to interfere with both the fairness and expeditiousness of proceedings.

4. The Chamber disagrees that its decision authorizes ex post facto amendments of the Indictment. The question of proper notice of material facts is, however, of central importance to the fairness of trial proceedings. In light of the importance of the principles on which the decision is based, and the extent of the evidence whose exclusion is at stake,[6] the Chamber is convinced that the decision does involve an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of proceedings.

(ii) Materially Advance the Proceedings

5. The Defence argues that the decision places it in the position of not clearly and unambiguously knowing the Prosecution case, or the purpose for which certain material facts have been presented. This is said to prejudice the Defence, and is likely to lead to an unfocused presentation of the Defence case. The prejudice arises immediately, during trial proceedings, and cannot be subsequently remedied. Similar motions by other Defence teams are also pending, and would be similarly benefited by immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber. Any convictions based on this improperly admitted evidence would risk re-trial – a risk which can be obviated by an interlocutory appeal.[7] Furthermore, the Defence asserts that there is serious doubt as to the correctness of the legal principles applied by the Chamber, resolution of which would allow the remainder of the trial to proceed on a correct legal footing.[8]

[2] The Chamber also observed that the Prosecution had conceded the partial exclusion of a fourth category. Id., para. 25.
[3] Motion, para. 6.
[4] Motion, para. 7.
[5] Motion, paras. 10-13, 18.
[6] Certification may be appropriate where, in particular, "broad categories of evidence" are affected by a decision. Bagosora et al., Decision on Certification of Interlocutory Appeal Concerning Prosecution Disclosure of Defence Witness Statements (TC), 17 March 2006; Bagosora et al., Certification of Appeal Concerning Access to Protected Defence Witness Information (TC), 29 July 2005, para. 2.
[7] Motion, para. 16.
[8] Motion, paras, 17-24.

6. Some of the evidence which the Chamber has declined to exclude may form the basis of specific and distinct factual findings which could be quashed on a final appeal if the evidence is found to have been improperly considered.[9] On the other hand, some of the evidence may be considered together with other evidence, whose admissibility has not been challenged, to nourish broader factual findings. The Chamber accepts that if it were to base a conviction partly on evidence which is found on a subsequent appeal to have been inadmissible, and partly on admissible evidence, then finding an appropriate remedy at that stage might pose significant difficulties for the Appeals Chamber. In light of the complexity and importance of the issues involved, clarification of the principles applicable to this type of motion would materially advance the proceedings.

(iii) Precise Scope of Questions Certified

7. In light of the detailed factual questions involved in assessing each of the seventeen categories of evidence, the Chamber declines to certify the decision in its entirety. As the Appeals Chamber has stated, matters of admissibility of evidence are primarily for the trier of fact to determine, and should not be certified for interlocutory appeal.[10] On the other hand, the legal principles by which the Trial Chamber has been guided are an appropriate matter for the Appeals Chamber. Accordingly, the Chamber will certify the legal propositions in paragraph 10 of its decision, which reads as follows:

> The Chamber's approach in the sections which follow may be summarized as follows. Where a material fact cannot be reasonably related to the Indictment, then it shall be excluded. Where the material fact is relevant only to a vague or general allegation in the Indictment, then the Chamber will consider whether notice of the material fact was given in the Pre-Trial Brief or the opening statement, so as to cure the vagueness of the Indictment. Material facts which concern the actions of the Accused personally are scrutinized more closely than general allegations of criminal conduct. Other forms of disclosure, such as witness statements or potential exhibits, are generally insufficient to put the Defence on reasonable notice. The Chamber recognizes two exceptions to this principle: first, where the Prosecution filed a motion for the addition of a witness, which was subsequently granted by the Chamber, and which stated the material facts on which the witness would testify (Witness AAA); second, where a lengthy adjournment was ordered by the Chamber for the express purpose of allowing the Defence to meet newly discovered material facts (Witness DBQ).[11]

Certification is also appropriate in respect of the standard for determining whether an objection has been made, as set out in paragraph 7 of the decision. The Appeals Chamber may, of course, consider it necessary to evaluate these propositions in light of other portions of the decision; but these propositions of law are the matters certified for interlocutory appeal under Rule 73 (B).

8. The Defence argues that the Chamber failed to consider the "Defence Reply to the Prosecutor's Annex", filed on 29 May 2006 ("the Reply"). This is not correct. The Chamber did, in fact, take into account the Reply to the Prosecutor's Annex, as is clearly demonstrated by the Chamber's extensive

As the Appeals Chamber previously underscored, certification of an appeal has to be the absolute exception when deciding on the admissibility of the evidence. Consequently, as the matters in the Appeal are clearly for the Trial Chamber, as trier of fact, to determine in the exercise of its discretion, in the view of the Appeals Chamber, it does not justify such an exception and should not have been certified") (citations omitted).

[11] Bagosora et al., Decision on Ntabakuze Motion for Exclusion of Evidence (TC), 29 June 2006, para. 10. The Chamber possesses a discretion under Rule 73 (B) to certify only a portion of a decision for interlocutory appeal: Nyiramasuhuko et al., Decision on Pauline Nyiramasuhuko's Request for Reconsideration (AC), 27 September 2004 para. 7; Karemera et al., Decision on Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of Decision on Judicial Notice (AC), 16 June 2006, para. 13.

analysis of whether "curing" is open to a trial chamber, or whether it is reserved the Appeals Chamber.[12] That argument is to be found only in the Reply, not the original motion.[13] The failure to mention the Reply in the preamble of the decision was a simple oversight. In any event, as the consideration of replies is purely discretionary, failure to consider such a submission does not constitute an error of law or fact.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion in part;

CERTIFIES for interlocutory appeal the propositions of law articulated in paragraphs 7 and 10 of the "Decision on Ntabakuze Motion for Exclusion of Evidence", filed on 29 June 2006.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Urgent Motion Requesting the Chamber to Issue a Subpoena Compelling Major Jacques Biot to Appear Before the Trial Chamber for Oral Testimony", filed by the Nsengiyumva Defence on 7 July 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Nsengiyumva Defence requests that a subpoena be issued to compel the appearance of Major Jacques Biot, who was a UNAMIR observer based in Gisenyi in April 1994. On 21 April 2006, the Chamber granted the Defence's Article 28 request for assistance from the Kingdom of Belgium in order to interview Major Biot.[1] Based on that interview, which took place on 27 June 2006, the Defence submits that Major Biot has valuable information which is exculpatory of the Accused. Major Biot has, according to the Defence, refused to testify on the basis that he had "said all he could before the Examining Judge and had nothing to add".[2]

Deliberations

2. Rule 54 permits the issuance of a subpoena where "necessary for the purposes of an investigation or for the preparation or conduct of the trial". In the case of a subpoena to a prospective witness:

> The applicant seeking a subpoena must make a certain evidentiary showing of the need for the subpoena. In particular, he must demonstrate a reasonable basis for his belief that the prospective witness is likely to give information that will materially assist the applicant with respect to clearly identified issues in the forthcoming trial. To satisfy this requirement, the applicant may need to present information about such factors as the position held by the prospective witness in relation to the events in question, any relation the witness may have had with the accused which is relevant to the charges, any opportunity the witness may have had to observe or learn about those events, and any statements the witness made to the Prosecution or others in relation to them. The Trial Chamber is vested with discretion in determining whether the applicant succeeded in making the required showing, this discretion being necessary to ensure that the compulsive mechanism of the subpoena is not abused. As the Appeals Chamber has emphasized, "Subpoenas should not be issued lightly, for they involve the use of coercive powers and may lead to the imposition of a criminal sanction".[3]

In considering whether the prospective testimony will materially assist the applicant,

> "it is not enough that the information requested may be 'helpful or convenient' for one of the parties: it must be of substantial or considerable assistance to the Accused in relation to a clearly identified issue that is relevant to the trial".[4]

In this regard, the Chamber shall consider the specificity with which the prospective testimony is identified; whether the information can be obtained by other means;[5] and whether the party seeking the subpoena has made reasonable attempt to secure the voluntary cooperation of the prospective witness.[6]

3. The Defence submits that Major Biot is able to testify that he witnessed no killings while he was in Gisenyi from 6 to 13 April 1994; that the Butotori training facility was not used to train Interahamwe militia; and that the Accused was not involved in training or otherwise associated with militia groups.[7] Although the Defence could have described the position of the proposed witness with greater specificity, the Chamber accepts that Major Biot, as a member of the UNAMIR force, was in a position to neutrally observe events which are relevant to the present trial. Not only would his testimony be relevant, but it may be particularly valuable. In these circumstances, the Chamber finds that a sufficient showing has been made that the prospective witness's testimony would materially assist the Defence.

4. Government officials enjoy no immunity from a subpoena, even where the subject-matter of their testimony was obtained in the course of government service.[8] As the Defence has made reasonable efforts to secure the witness's voluntary appearance, a subpoena ad testificandum is both necessary and appropriate for the fair conduct of trial.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion;

ORDERS the Registrar to prepare a subpoena in accordance with this decision, addressed to Major Jacques Biot, requiring his appearance before this Chamber to give testimony in the present case, and to communicate it, with a copy of the present decision, to the Kingdom of Belgium;

DIRECTS the Registry to communicate the subpoena to Major Jacques Biot through appropriate diplomatic channels, accompanied by a copy of this Decision.

[8] Krstic Appeal Decision, para. 27 ("But it is abundantly clear from the passages already quoted from the Blaskic Subpoena Decision, and from paras. 23-24, supra, that the statement made in par 38 of that Decision – that "The Appeals Chamber dismisses the possibility of the International Tribunal addressing subpoenas to State officials acting in their official capacity" – can be justified only in relation to the production of documents in their custody in their official capacity. The Appeals Chamber did not say that the functional immunity enjoyed by State officials includes an immunity against being compelled to give evidence of what the official saw or heard in the course of exercising his official functions. Nothing which was said by the Appeals Chamber in the Blaskic Subpoena Decision should be interpreted as giving such an immunity to officials of the nature whose testimony is sought in the present case. No authority for such a proposition has been produced by the prosecution, and none has been found. Such an immunity does not exist. No issue arises for determination in this case as to whether there are different categories of State officials to whom any such immunity may apply, and it is unnecessary to determine such an issue here"). Judge Shahabuddeen issued a dissenting opinion, but only on the issue of whether such a subpoena could be issued for a pre-testimonial interview with the Defence. No such issue arises in the present case. Milosevic Decision, para. 16 ("a subpoena is the correct procedural mechanism for seeking to compel a state official to testify").

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, designated by the Chamber in accordance with Rule 73(A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence;

BEING SEIZED of the "Extremely Urgent Confidential Motion for Disclosure of Closed Session Testimony of Witnesses RM-14 and Unredacted Statements and Closed Session Testimony of AHB in Prosecutor v. Nahimana Ferdinand et al. (ICTR-99-52-T)", filed by the Defence for Nsengiyumva on 2 June 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. Anatole Nsengiyumva, an Accused in the Bagosora et al. trial, requests access to confidential material associated with the testimony of Witness RM-14 and Witness AHB, two protected witnesses in the Nahimana et al. trial. Nsengiyumva submits that their testimony is temporally and geographically connected to the events at issue in the Bagosora et al. case, and that the testimony would be of material assistance to his case, or would be exculpatory[1]. The Nsengiyumva Defence agrees to comply with the terms of the relevant Prosecution witness protection orders issued in Nahimana et al[2].

Deliberations

(i) Jurisdiction

2. Rule 75 (G) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence provides that:

> (G) A party to the second proceedings seeking to rescind, vary or augment protective measures ordered in the first proceedings must apply:
>
> (i) to any Chamber, however constituted, remaining seised of the first proceedings; or
> (ii) if no Chamber remains seised of the first proceedings, to the Chamber seised of the second proceedings.

3. Contrary to the Defence submission, there is a trial chamber which is still seized of the Nahimana et al. case. An appeal from the judgment in that case is still pending. During the pendency of an appeal, the trial chamber before which the trial was conducted remains seized of all matters not related to the appeal, including requests to modify witness protection orders[3]. Accordingly, the present application is properly before this Chamber under Rule 75 (G) (i).

(ii) Merits

4. Confidential inter partes material from one case may be disclosed to a party in another case, where the applicant demonstrates that the material sought "is likely to assist that applicant's case materially, or at least that there is a good chance that it would."[4] This standard can be met by showing that there is a factual nexus between the two cases, for example, if the cases stem from events alleged to have occurred in the same geographical area at the same time[5]. The Defence also requests disclosure of the material on the basis that it is exculpatory under Rule 68.

(a) Witness RM-14

5. Witness RM-14 testified about an occasion on which soldiers saved people at Umuganda stadium. Although the Defence has not made detailed submissions on the nature of the testimony or its precise overlap with the Bagosora et al. case, the Chamber is satisfied, in light of the position alleged to have been held by the Accused, that a sufficient temporal and geographic overlap does exist to say that there is a good chance that the witness's testimony would materially assist the Defence in the preparation of its case. The confidential materials may be relevant to understanding the publicly available testimony[6].

(b) Witness AHB

6. Nsengiyumva submits that the testimony of Witness AHB contradicts that of Witness XBM, a witness in the Bagosora et al. trial, in respect of two specific incidents. The overlap in the subject matter of their testimony relates to: the alleged distribution of weapons by Jean Bosco Barayagwiza in Mutura Commune, and the allegation that Witness AHB saw Barayagwiza coming to Mount Muhe on the occasion of the installation of the RTLM antenna in 1993. The Chamber accepts that, on this basis, there is a good chance that the testimony of Witness AHB would materially assist the Defence.

(iii) Modalities

7. Disclosure orders of this kind routinely require that the party in receipt of the confidential material shall be bound, mutatis mutandis, by the applicable witness protection orders[7]. The Chamber finds, however, that, in the absence of submissions as to whether any particular sensitivities or witness protection interests might be engaged by broader disclosure of these two witnesses' identities, those conditions may not be sufficient.

8. In such circumstances, the Appeals Chamber has additionally required that the party in receipt of the confidential material:

> shall not, without express leave of the Appeals Chamber based on a finding that it has been sufficiently demonstrated that third-party disclosure is necessary for the preparation of the defence of the Applicant: … (c) contact any witness whose identity was subject to protective measures[8].

9. The Chamber authorizes the other Accused in the Bagosora et al. trial to have the same access to this material, on the same conditions[9].

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion;

ORDERS the Prosecution to immediately identify and disclose to the Defence any confidential transcripts of, or exhibits entered during, the testimony of Witnesses RM-14 and AHB in the Nahimana et al. case;

DECLARES that the Nsengiyumva Defence and the Accused personally, and any other Accused and Defence team, shall be bound mutatis mutandis by the terms of the applicable witness protection orders upon receipt of the confidential material;

ORDERS that in addition to the existing witness protection measures, parties in receipt of material under this order shall not, without express leave of this Chamber based on a finding that it has been sufficiently demonstrated that third-party disclosure is necessary for the preparation of the defence of the Applicant, contact any witness whose identity was subject to protective measures.

Stanislav Galić, Decision on Momčilo Perišić's Motion Seeking Access to Confidential Material in the Galic Case, 16 February 2006 (IT-98-29)

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II, composed of Judge Seon Ki Park (the "Chamber");

BEING SEISED OF the "Extremely Urgent Confidential Motion for Disclosure of Closed Session Testimony of Witness OX and Witness Unredacted Statements and Exhibits in Prosecutor v. Ndindiliyimana (ICTR-00-56-T)" filed by the Defence for Anatole Nsengiyumva on 28 July 2006 (the "Motion");

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute"), and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), in particular Rule 74 (F) (i) of the Rules;

NOTING that the Prosecution has not filed a response;

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written submissions filed by the Defence for Nsengiyumva pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules.

1. Anatole Nsengiyumva, an Accused in the trial of The Prosecutor v. Bagosora et al. (also known as the Military I case), requests disclosure of the closed session transcripts, unredacted statements and exhibits in respect of protected Witness OX, who testified for the Prosecution in the present case. The Motion is brought pursuant to Rule 75 (G) (i)

2. The Chamber notes Rule 75 (F) (i) which provides that once protective measures have been ordered in respect of a victim or witness in any proceedings before the Tribunal, such protective measures shall continue to have effect in any other proceedings before the Tribunal unless and until they are rescinded, varied or augmented in accordance with the procedure set out in the Rules.

3. The Chamber further notes that confidential inter partes material may be disclosed to a party in another case provided that the applicant demonstrates that it "is likely to assist that applicant's case materially, or […] there is a good chance that it would." This standard can be met by showing that there is a factual nexus between the two cases.[1]

4. Nsengiyumva wishes to have access to the said material in order to prepare his defence. He submits that the testimony of Witness OX contradicts the testimony of several witnesses, who appeared as Prosecution witnesses in the Military I case. For instance, one witness in the Military I case maintained that he had stayed home between 7 and 13 April 1994, whereas Witness OX places him at an alleged meeting in the bus park in Gisenyi. Nsengiyumva therefore submits that it would be of interest not only to the Defence but also to the Trial Chamber in the Military I case to evaluate the testimony of the said witness in the context of other testimonies on related matters.

5. The Chamber is satisfied that the issues raised by the Nsengiyumva defence establish a sufficient factual nexus between the Military I case and the present case.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Motion;

ORDERS the Prosecution and the Registry to transmit to the Nsengiyumva Defence the closed session transcripts of Witness OX's testimony, his unredacted statements and any exhibit filed under seal during his testimony before this Chamber;

DECLARES that the Nsengiyumva Defence and the Accused shall be bound mutatis mutandis, upon receipt of the confidential material, by the terms of the witness protection orders issued in the present case[2];

ORDERS the Nsengiyumva Defence and the Accused not to disclose the closed session transcripts, unredacted statements or exhibits under seal, or any other potentially identifying information about the witness, to any third parties, including other Defence teams and witnesses at this Tribunal.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Urgent Memorandum to the Chamber to Correct Material Errors in Decision on Request for a Subpoena for Major Biot", filed by the Nsengiyumva Defence on 20 July 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion.

1. On 7 April 2006, the Nsengiyumva Defence filed an application for the Chamber to issue a request to the Kingdom of Belgium, pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute, to facilitate contact with a Belgian national identified as "Commander Biot Marc". The Chamber granted the application on 21 April 2006.[1] The Defence then filed a motion on 7 July 2006 requesting the Chamber to issue a subpoena compelling "Major Jacques Biot" to appear before the Chamber for oral testimony. On 14

[1] Bagosora et al., Decision on Request to the Kingdom of Belgium for Assistance Pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute (TC), 21 April 2006.

July 2006, the Chamber granted the motion and ordered the Registrar to issue a subpoena addressed to "Major Jacques Biot".[2]

2. The Defence subsequently filed a "memorandum" requesting the Chamber to amend its decision so as to identify the addressee of the subpoena as "Major Marc Biot". The Defence also claims that the decision incorrectly summarizes the nature of the evidence to be given by Major Biot, and that he was not a member of UNAMIR, but a "Belgian military technical assistant".[3] On 25 July 2006, the Chamber was informed by the Defence, through the Registry, that the correct name of the prospective witness was "Willy Biot".

3. On 20 July 2006, the Registry issued a subpoena addressed to "Major Willy Biot", which was transmitted to the Belgian authorities on 21 July 2006. The subpoena having now been issued to the properly identified addressee, the request to alter the Chamber's decision in this respect is moot. Furthermore, none of the alleged errors identified by the Defence are, at this stage, material.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DECLARES the request moot.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Bagosora Defence Amended Strictly Confidential and Ex Parte Request for Subpoena of Ambassador Mpungwe and Cooperation of the United Republic of Tanzania", filed on 7 July 2006, and the "Bagosora Defence Further Request for Timely Decision on Bagosora Defence Amended Motion Filed 7 July 2006", filed on 24 August 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. The Bagosora Defence wishes to interview Ambassador Ami R. Mpungwe, a former official of the Tanzanian government who is said to have acted as a facilitator in the negotiations leading to the Arusha Accords. The Bagosora Defence submits that it has reasonable grounds to believe that Ambassador Mpungwe may have information concerning Colonel Bagosora's attitude at the peace talks, which has been the object of potentially incriminating testimony by Prosecution witnesses. The motion details extensive efforts dating back to 28 April 2005 by both the Defence and the Registrar to arrange a meeting with Ambassador Mpungwe.[1] The remedy sought is a request to the Government of Tanzania to facilitate a meeting with the Ambassador and, "if necessary", the issuance of a subpoena to compel his attendance. The most recent information communicated to the Chamber is that the Ambassador is willing to meet with the Bagosora Defence, but believes that he must receive prior authorization from government authorities to do so.[2]

2. Article 28 of the Statute imposes an obligation on States to

[1] Motion, paras. 13-43; Further Request, para. 4.
[2] Further Request, para. 4.

> "cooperate with the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of committing serious violation of international humanitarian law".

This obligation extends not only to efforts by the Prosecution to obtain inculpatory evidence, but also efforts by the Defence to obtain exculpatory information. A request to a Chamber to make a request under Article 28 must set forth the nature of the information sought, its relevance to the trial, and the efforts that have been made to obtain it. The type of assistance requested should also be defined with particularity.[3]

3. The conditions for issuance of a request under Article 28 are satisfied. Both the Defence and the Registry have undertaken significant efforts to arrange the meeting requested. A sufficient basis has been established to suggest that Mr. Mpungwe may have information concerning the conduct of Colonel Bagosora during the Arusha negotiations, on which this Chamber has heard direct and potentially incriminating evidence. Further, the evidence relates to a specific allegation in paragraph 5.10 of the Indictment that the Accused

> "openly manifested his opposition to the concessions made by the Government representative … to the point of leaving the negotiation table. Colonel Théoneste Bagosora left Arusha saying that he was returning to Rwanda to 'prepare the apocalypse'".

The Defence has a reasonable basis to believe that Ambassador Mpungwe may have information which could be material to these allegations.

4. The Chamber does not consider it necessary, at this stage, to issue a subpoena addressed to Ambassador Mpungwe. It appears that he is willing to attend a meeting voluntarily, provided that he is given authorization to do so by the Tanzanian government. The Chamber observes, however, that the meeting must be held expeditiously. The trial is in its closing stages, and the Defence must be given a reasonable opportunity to ascertain the nature of the witness's knowledge and, if necessary, to call him as a witness.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion in part;

RESPECTFULLY REQUESTS the United Republic of Tanzania to give its permission to allow Ambassador Mpungwe to meet with the Bagosora Defence, and to otherwise provide any relevant assistance that may reasonably be required to facilitate this meeting as soon as possible;

DIRECTS the Registry to transmit this decision to the relevant authorities of the United Republic of Tanzania.

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Ntabakuze Defence "Request to Allow Witness Amadou Deme to Give Testimony via Video-Link", filed on 12 July 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 20 July 2006; and the Defence Reply, filed on 31 July 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Ntabakuze Defence requests the Chamber to allow Defence Witness Amadou Deme to give testimony by video-conference. The Defence states that the witness, a former information officer with UNAMIR, is primarily concerned that he will be denied re-entry to his country of residence and has received legal advice that he should not travel.[1] The Defence submits that the testimony of the witness is important, as it will address, among other issues, the existence of an alleged conspiracy to commit genocide, and whether killings of civilians took place near the airport in Kigali where Para-commando troops were stationed.[2]

[1] Motion, paras. 7-9; Ntabakuze Reply, para. 4.
[2] Motion, para. 10.

2. The Prosecution opposes the motion, arguing that the circumstances of this witness do not fulfil the criteria for authorization of testimony via video-conferencing.

Deliberations

3. Rule 90 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence provides that "witnesses shall, in principle, be heard directly by the Chambers". A Chamber may nevertheless order under Rule 54 that testimony be heard by video-conference provided that it is in the interests of justice to do so.[3] In making such an evaluation, the Chamber must weigh the importance of the testimony, the witness's inability or unwillingness to attend, and whether a good reason has been adduced for that inability or unwillingness.[4]

4. Mr. Deme, according to the Defence, will testify that he knows of no credible evidence that a conspiracy existed in January 1994 to commit genocide against Tutsis in Rwanda; that an informant who provided information that such a conspiracy existed was not credible; and that he received no reports of killings of civilians near Kigali airport, despite the presence of UNAMIR observers in the area. The testimony would, if credible, contradict Prosecution evidence which potentially incriminates the Accused.

5. The Defence has established that Mr. Deme genuinely refuses to travel and that this refusal is based, at least in part, on advice from his lawyer not to undertake foreign travel. Although the Defence has not particularized the issues which may imperil the witness's residency status, the Chamber accepts that a sufficient showing has been made that the witness genuinely believes that he has good reason not to travel, and that these reasons are objectively supported, in particular, by advice from his attorney.

6. The Chamber finds, having considered the totality of the circumstances, that it is in the interests of justice to permit the witness to testify by video-conference.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

AUTHORIZES the taking of the testimony of Witness Amadou Deme by video-conference from his country of residence;

INSTRUCTS the Registry, in consultation with the parties, to make all necessary arrangements in respect of the testimony of Witness Deme by video-conference during the upcoming trial segment from 4 September to 13 October 2006, and to videotape the testimony for possible future reference by the Chamber.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA,

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED of "Anatole Nsengiyumva's Extremely Urgent Motion for the Testimony of Mr. Alphonse Higaniro to be Taken by Video-Conference", etc., filed by the Nsengiyumva Defence on 3 July 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Nsengiyumva Defence requests that the testimony of one of its witnesses who is currently in detention in Belgium, Alphonse Higaniro, be heard by video-conference. Although Mr. Higaniro has expressed his willingness to testify, the Belgian authorities have indicated that Belgian law prohibits his physical transfer to give testimony in Arusha.

Deliberations

2. Under Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, a Chamber may authorize the hearing of testimony by video-conference in lieu of a physical appearance where it is "in the interests of justice".[1] In making this determination, the Chamber must consider: the importance of the testimony; the inability or unwillingness of the witness to attend; and whether good reason has been adduced for that inability or unwillingness.[2]

3. Mr. Higaniro's testimony is said to rebut the testimony of Witness XBH that the Accused met in Butare with Colonel Bagosora and others to discuss plans for genocide against the Tutsis, in particular, by preparing lists of prominent persons to be killed. Mr. Higaniro himself is alleged by Witness XBH to have been present at a meeting in Butare with the Accused during which an operation to kill Tutsis was discussed.[3] Accordingly, the Chamber accepts that the testimony is of potential importance. Further, the letter from the Belgian authorities annexed to the motion indicates that transfer of the witness to Arusha is not possible because of his detention in Belgium. In light of these considerations, the Chamber considers that it is in the interests of justice to permit Mr. Higaniro to testify by video-conference.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion;

ORDERS the Registry, in consultation with the Defence, to make all necessary arrangements to facilitate the testimony of Witness Alphonse Higaniro via video-conference, and to videotape the testimony for possible future reference by the Chamber.

BEING SEIZED OF the « Requête de la défense du Dr. Casmir Bizimungu en communication des audiences à huis clos et des exhibits des témoins protégés de la défense BDRl et LK2 », filed by the Bizimungu Defence on 10 July 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Defence of Casimir Bizimungu, currently being tried before Trial Chamber II, requests the disclosure of closed session transcripts and sealed exhibits pertaining to the testimony of Witnesses BDR-1 and LK-2. They appeared for the Nsengiyumva Defence in the Bagosora et al. trial on 14 and 15 April 2005 and 19, 20 and 21 April 2005, respectively[1]. The request is based on Rule 75 (G) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence.

2. The Bizimungu Defence submits that the two witnesses revealed that they testified before this Chamber in the Bagosora et al. case and have given their consent to disclosure of any confidential material arising therefrom[2]. The confidential information is said to be necessary to decide whether to call these witnesses and, if need be, in the preparation and presentation of their testimony[3]. The Defence agrees to comply with the relevant Defence witness protection orders issued in Bagosora et al[4].

Deliberations

3. In accordance with Article 21 of the Statute and Rule 75, the Chamber issued witness protection orders in the Bagosora et al. trial which authorizes non-disclosure to the public of any information that could be used to identify them[5]. Portions of the testimony of Witnesses BDR-I and LK-2 were so categorized and were, accordingly, held in closed Session[6]. Rule 75 (G) permits any party to a proceeding seeking to vary protective measures ordered in a different proceeding to apply to the Chamber "seised of the first proceeding".

4. Witnesses BDR-I and LK-2 have revealed to the Bizimungu Defence their status as protected witnesses in this case, and have furthermore apparently consented to the disclosure of the protected information. In these circumstances, no witness protection purpose would be sewed by denying the Defence access to the witnesses' confidential testimony. Indeed, since any person within the Office of the Prosecution may be designated to have access to protected information in any case before this Tribunal, such disclosure enhances trial fairness[7]. The Defence should not be denied similar access in respect of witnesses who have revealed their status[8].

5. The Bizimungu Defence and the Accused Bizimungu shall be bound, mutatis mutandis, by the terms of the witness protection orders for Nsengiyumva Defence witnesses in respect of Witnesses BDR-1 and LK-2[9].

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Prosecution "Confidential Motion Requesting a Subpoena Compelling Witness DAN to Attend for Defence Cross-Examination", filed on 19 June 2006;

CONSIDERING the Responses filed by the Ntabakuze and Bagosora Defence on 27 and 29 June 2006, respectively; and Replies filed by the Prosecution on 29 June 2006 and 4 July 2006; and the further Reply filed by the Bagosora Defence on 3 July 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Prosecution requests a subpoena for the appearance before the Chamber of one of its witnesses, Witness DAN. The Chamber admitted a written statement of the witness in lieu of oral testimony, as is permitted under Rule 92 bis where the statement does not concern "acts and conduct of the accused", but required her to appear for cross-examination.[1] Having failed to secure the witness's voluntary attendance, the Prosecution now requests a subpoena. Ntabakuze and Bagosora oppose the motion, arguing that the witness should have appeared before the close of the Prosecution case on 14 October 2004. Permitting the witness to testify at this stage would, according to the Defence, effectively allow the Prosecution to re-open its case.

Deliberations

2. Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence authorizes a Trial Chamber to issue

> "orders, summonses, subpoenas, warrants and transfer orders as may be necessary for the purposes of an investigation or for the preparation or conduct of the trial".

The applicant for a subpoena must show that (i) reasonable attempts have been made to obtain the voluntary cooperation of the witness; (ii) the witness's testimony can materially assist the applicant in respect of clearly identified issues; and (iii) the witness's testimony must be necessary and appropriate for the conduct and fairness of the trial.[2] It has been said that "subpoenas should not be issued lightly" and that a Chamber must consider "not only the usefulness of the information to the applicant but … its overall necessity in ensuring that the trial is informed and fair". [3]

3. The attempts to obtain Witness DAN's voluntary cooperation, as described in the Motion, have been reasonable. The first criterion is satisfied.

4. The witness's testimony concerns events at the Centre Christus between 6 April and 12 April 1994. In particular, her statement indicates that she saw civilians being attacked by men in military uniform using guns and grenades.[4] This information could, potentially corroborate Prosecution evidence of criminal acts by subordinates of the Accused. Under these circumstances, the witness's testimony is not only material to clearly identified issues in the trial, but is also necessary and appropriate for its conduct.

[4] Written statement of Witness DAN, Bagosora et al., doc. K0275572-K0275576.

5. The Chamber finds no merit in the Defence's argument that the issuance of a subpoena at this juncture would constitute a re-opening of the Prosecution case. The witness is being called for cross-examination by the Defence. Such cross-examinations have been permitted in the past at the request of the Defence.[5] Under these circumstances, there is no danger of the Prosecution case being re-opened or enlarged by requiring the witness to appear for cross-examination.

6. Although subpoenas are addressed to the prospective witness, the Chamber notes that the assistance of the Government of Rwanda may be desirable in order to facilitate the service of the subpoena and to secure the appearance of the witness.[6] Under Article 28 of the Statute of the Tribunal, the Chamber is empowered to solicit the cooperation of a state for the > "investigation and prosecution of persons accused of committing serious violations of international humanitarian law".

Thus, the Chamber requests the Government of Rwanda to assist, if necessary, in the service of the subpoena on the addressee, and to provide any assistance that may be requested by the Registry to facilitate the attendance of the witness.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion;

ORDERS the Registry to prepare a subpoena addressed to Witness DAN in accordance with this decision, and to transmit it to the Government of Rwanda, along with a copy of the present decision;

REQUESTS the Government of Rwanda to serve the subpoena on the addressee as soon as possible, and to provide any other assistance that may be requested by the Registry to facilitate the attendance of the witness.

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Kabiligi Motion for the Exclusion of Evidence in the Testimony of Prosecution Witness Alison des Forges", filed on 10 May 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 16 May 2006; and the Defence Reply, filed on 29 May 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. Dr. Alison Des Forges, an expert witness for the Prosecution, testified at the beginning of the present trial before any factual evidence had been heard or admitted. Portions of her testimony were based on, and provided a description of, an interrogation of the Accused Kabiligi by Prosecution investigators in July 1997. When the Prosecution subsequently sought to introduce transcripts of this interrogation, the Chamber found that Kabiligi had not been properly informed of his rights to the assistance of counsel and to remain silent. The remedy ordered was the exclusion of the transcripts.[1] The Defence argues that the expert testimony which is based on statements of the Accused during the interrogation must also be excluded. The motion requests the exclusion of eight specific excerpts of the expert's testimony.[2]

[1] Bagosora et al., Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion For the Admission of Certain Materials Under Rule 89 (C) (TC), 14 October 2004.
[2] Motion, para. 20.

Deliberations

2. This Chamber has already ruled that admission of the transcripts of the Kabiligi interview from July 1997 would be "antithetical to, and would seriously damage, the integrity of the proceedings".[3] The same logic must apply in respect of hearsay evidence as to the contents of the interview. Accordingly, the Chamber is of the view that expert testimony which describes the content of that interview must be excluded.

3. The Prosecution argues that objections to the admissibility of the testimony should have been made contemporaneously, and that the present motion is untimely.[4] The Chamber disagrees. The Defence did object to expert testimony being given before the factual basis for such testimony had been established by Prosecution evidence.[5] The Chamber permitted the expert witness to testify over these objections, noting that the procedure

> "in no way diminishe[d] [the Prosecution's] burden of proving all the facts substantiating the crime with which [it] has charged the Accused beyond a reasonable doubt".[6]

The Defence was entitled to defer its objection to the factual basis underpinning the expert's opinions until such time as the Prosecution sought to introduce the evidence upon which it was based.[7]

4. The parties disagree on the appropriate remedy. The Prosecution argues that the Chamber should not exclude expert opinions which are based partially on the Kabiligi interview and partially on other information.[8] The complexity of drawing such a distinction, it argues, requires the Chamber to defer consideration of the weight of that testimony until the end of the case, rather than to categorically exclude certain parts thereof.[9] The Defence responds that the expert gave specific conclusions based on the Kabiligi interview, and that no ambiguity or complexity exists which could justify allowing those conclusions, which are based on inadmissible evidence, to remain part of the record.[10] Accordingly, the Defence requests that the Chamber exclude "all references … to the 19 July 1997 interview … including, but not limited to" eight distinct excerpts from the transcripts.[11]

5. In the excerpts identified by the Defence, the expert witness gives clear indications as to the basis for her opinions or information. On occasion, her propositions are based not only on the Kabiligi interview, but also on some other source.[12] It would not be appropriate to categorically exclude propositions which are based, at least in part, on admissible evidence.[13] As the basis for the expert opinions are evident from the record, the Chamber considers it unnecessary to categorically exclude specific sections of the expert's testimony. It is more convenient and equally effective to simply declare, as in the Chamber's previous decision, that statements by the Accused during his custodial

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Kabiligi Defence "Motion on the Prejudice Caused by the Testimony of Prosecution Witnesses on Facts not Included in the Amended Indictment", filed on 5 April 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 16 May 2006; and the Kabiligi Reply, filed on 29 May 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Accused Kabiligi requests that the Chamber exclude from its consideration portions of the testimony of seven Prosecution witnesses: XAI, XXH, XXQ, AAA, ZF, XXY and LAI. The material facts in the testimony were not, according to the Defence, adequately pleaded in the Indictment or otherwise communicated so as to provide proper notice in accordance with the rights of the Accused and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence.

2. The present motion is, in effect, a request for reconsideration of the Chamber's "Decision on Exclusion of Testimony Outside the Scope of the Indictment", filed on 27 September 2005 ("the Kabiligi Exclusion Decision"). That decision excluded a portion of the testimony of Witness XAI and Witness DCH, but denied all the other requests for exclusion. Kabiligi now offers additional arguments favouring exclusion, in particular, the specific prejudice which the Defence has suffered as a result of the alleged lack of notice.

Deliberations

(I) APPLICABLE PRINCIPLES

3. The legal framework for determining whether evidence is inadmissible based on alleged lack of notice of a material fact was set out at length in the Kabiligi Exclusion Decision:

> Rule 89 (C) provides that "[a] Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value". To be admissible, the "evidence must be in some way relevant to an element of a crime with which the Accused is charged." The present motion complains that the evidence has no relevance to anything in the Indictment, or that some paragraphs of the Indictment to which it might be relevant are too vague to be taken into account. Some recent Appeals Chamber judgements thoroughly discuss the specificity with which an indictment must be pleaded, and the significance of other forms of Prosecution disclosure of its case. Although the question addressed in those cases was whether a conviction should be quashed because of insufficient notice of a charge in the indictment, the analysis is equally relevant to the present question, namely, whether evidence is sufficiently related to some charge in the Indictment to be admissible.
> The rights of the Accused enshrined in Article 20 of the Statute impose, according to the Appeals Chamber in Kupreškić, "an obligation on the part of the Prosecution to state the material facts underpinning the charges in the indictment, but not the evidence by which such material facts are to be proven". Material facts may also be communicated to the Accused other than through the indictment:

If an indictment is insufficiently specific, Kupreškić stated that such a defect 'may, in certain circumstances cause the Appeals Chamber to reverse a conviction.' However, Kupreškić left open the possibility that a defective indictment could be cured 'if the Prosecution provides the Accused with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her.' The question whether the Prosecution has cured a defect in the indictment is equivalent to the question whether the defect has caused any prejudice to the Defence or, as the Kupreškić Appeals Judgement put it, whether the trial was rendered unfair by the defect. Kupreškić considered whether notice of the material facts that were omitted from the indictment was sufficiently communicated to the Defence in the Prosecution's Pre-Trial Brief, during disclosure of evidence, or through proceedings at trial. In this connection, the timing of such communications, the importance of the information to the ability of the Accused to prepare its defence, and the impact of the newly-disclosed material facts on the Prosecution case are relevant. As has been previously noted, 'mere service of witness statements by the [P]rosecution pursuant to the disclosure requirements' of the Rules does not suffice to inform the Defence of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial.

> Whether vagueness in the indictment has been cured by subsequent disclosure involves consideration of the following factors: the consistency, clarity and specificity with which the material fact is communicated to the Accused; the novelty and incriminating nature of the new material fact; and the period of notice given to the Accused. Mention of a material fact in a witness statement does not necessarily constitute adequate notice: the Prosecution must convey that the material allegation is part of the case against the Accused. This rule recognizes that, in light of the volume of disclosure by the Prosecution in certain cases, a witness statement will not, without some other indication, adequately signal to the Accused that the allegation is part of the Prosecution case. The essential question is whether the Defence has had reasonable notice of, and a reasonable opportunity to investigate and confront, the Prosecution case.[1]

As described above, "curing" is the process by which vague or general allegations in an indictment are given specificity and clarity through communications other than the indictment itself. Only material facts which can be reasonably related to existing charges may be communicated in such a manner.[2]

4. Kabiligi asserts that the Trial Chamber erred in holding that it was permitted to consider whether the vagueness of a material fact had been cured by reference to communications other than the Indictment, such as the Pre-Trial Brief. He argues that the Appeals Chamber has reserved to itself the possibility of relying on curative communications in order to determine whether a conviction was fair. This option is not open to the Trial Chamber, which is bound to either exclude the evidence or to order that the Indictment be amended.[3]

5. A trial chamber not only has the power, but an obligation, to consider whether a vague provision in an indictment has been cured by timely, clear and consistent communications.[4] As stated by the Appeals Chamber in Naletilić:

> In reaching its judgement, a Trial Chamber can only convict the accused of crimes which are charged in the indictment. If the indictment is found to be defective because it fails to plead > material facts or does not plead them with sufficient specificity, the Trial Chamber must consider whether the accused was nevertheless accorded a fair trial. In some instances, where the accused has received timely, clear and consistent information from the Prosecution detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her, the defective indictment may be deemed cured and a conviction may be entered.[5]

In appropriate circumstances, Trial Chambers have exercised their discretion in favour of curing.[6] Decisions to do so have been expressly upheld by the Appeals Chamber.[7]

6. Failure to plead the physical perpetration of a criminal act by an accused under a count of the Indictment constitutes a defect.[8] On the other hand,

> "less detail may be acceptable if the 'sheer scale of the alleged crimes makes it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity in such matters as the identity of the victims and the dates for the commission of the crimes'".[9]

Many acts attributed to an accused fall on the spectrum between these two extremes. Individual actions of an accused which contribute to crimes will require more specific notice than proof of the crimes themselves, where they are physically committed by others. The specificity of the notice required is proportional to the extent of the Accused's direct involvement.[10]

7. Whether a defective indictment has been cured depends on "whether the accused was in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him or her".[11] The presence of a material fact somewhere in the Prosecution disclosure does not suffice to give reasonable notice; what is required is notice that the material fact will be relied upon as part of the Prosecution case, and how.[12] In Naletilić,

In the view of the Appeals Chamber, this conclusion was correct"), 108 ("The details in Annex B and the statement of Witness CC notified the Defence that the Prosecution would allege that Elizaphan Ntakirutimana transported attackers and pointed out Tutsi refugees near the Gishyita-Gisovu road. The Trial Chamber therefore committed no error in relying on this evidence and, consequently, this ground of appeal is dismissed").

An indictment lacking this precision may, however, be cured if the Prosecution provides the accused with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charge").

the Appeals Chamber distinguished between those sources of disclosure which are adequate, and those which are not:

> In assessing whether a defective indictment was cured, the issue to be determined is whether the accused was in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him or her. In making this determination, the Appeals Chamber has in some cases looked at information provided through the Prosecutor's Pre-Trial Brief or its opening statement. The Appeals Chamber considers that the list of witnesses the Prosecution intends to call at trial, containing a summary of the facts and the charges in the indictment as to which each witness will testify and including specific references to counts and relevant paragraphs in the indictment, may in some cases serve to put the accused on notice. However, the mere service of witness statements or of potential exhibits by the Prosecution pursuant to disclosure requirements does not suffice to inform an accused of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial. Finally, an accused's submissions at trial, for example, the motion for judgement of acquittal, final trial brief or closing arguments, may in some instances assist in assessing to what extent the accused was put on notice of the Prosecution's case and was able to respond to the Prosecution's allegations.[13]

The Appeals Chamber has, in effect, established a distinction between the Pre-Trial Brief and opening statement, on the one hand, which are permissible ways of giving notice of material facts; and the "mere service of witness statements", which are not.

8. The Appeals Chamber has also recognized that

> "defects in an indictment … may arise at a later stage of the proceedings because the evidence turns out differently than expected".

Where this is the case, the Chamber must

> "consider whether a fair trial required an amendment of the indictment, an adjournment, or the exclusion of the evidence outside the scope of the indictment".[14]

In accordance with this reasoning, the Chamber will also entertain the possibility that the filing of a motion for the addition of a witness provides adequate notice, provided that the motion is granted and there was a sufficient delay between the filing of the motion and the appearance of the witness.[15]

9. Objections play an important role in ensuring that the trial is conducted on the basis of evidence which is relevant to the charges against the accused. The failure to voice a contemporaneous objection does not waive the Accused's rights, but results in a shifting of the burden of proof:

> In the case of objections based on lack of notice, the Defence must challenge the admissibility of evidence of material facts not pleaded in the indictment by interposing a specific objection at the time the evidence is introduced. The Defence may also file a timely motion to strike the evidence or to seek an adjournment to conduct further investigations in order to respond to the unpleaded allegation.
>
> [A]n accused person who fails to object at trial has the burden of proving on appeal that his ability to prepare his case was materially impaired. Where, however, the accused person objected at trial, the burden is on the Prosecution to prove on appeal that the accused's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.[16]

The present motion is, in substance, an attempt by the Kabiligi Defence to discharge this burden.

(II) GROUNDS RAISED FOR REVIEWING PREVIOUS DECISION

(a) General Prejudice Suffered Due to Death of Potential Witnesses

10. Almost every material fact which the Chamber did not exclude in the Kabiligi Exclusion Decision is to be found in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, filed on 21 January 2002. This was four months before opening statements in the trial; almost eight months before the first witness; and more than seventeen months before any witness was heard other than the expert Alison Des Forges and Witness ZF.[17] Under these circumstances, to the extent that a material fact was disclosed in the Pre-Trial Brief, the Chamber reaffirms its previous finding that the Defence was in a reasonable position to understand the charges and material facts against him.

11. The Defence claims, however, that it has suffered general prejudice because a number of potential Defence witnesses died during the interval between the filing of the Indictment in August 1999 and

> "the first mention of some of the additional facts and allegation in the Prosecution case in 2003 and 2004".[18]

12. The prejudice of which the Defence complains is not related to vagueness in the Indictment. Any prejudice, if it can be so characterized, arises from the fact that the witnesses in question died before the beginning of the Kabiligi Defence. The interval between the filing of the allegedly vague Indictment in August 1999 and the filing of the curative Pre-Trial Brief in January 2002 has had no effect on delaying the beginning of the Defence. Nor is it clear how the taking of statements during that period would have assisted the Defence, as such statements would not, barring exceptional circumstances, have been admissible at trial as evidence. Accordingly, the alleged lack of notice has had no impact on the Defence's ability to call witnesses, and does not justify reconsideration of the Chamber's previous findings.

(b) Witness ZF

13. Kabiligi objects to testimony of Witness ZF naming the Accused as a member of a communications network called the "zero network", arguing that this evidence is nowhere to be found in the Pre-Trial Brief or the witness's statement. The first time the Defence had knowledge of this allegation is said to be during the witness's testimony.[19]

14. No contemporaneous objection was made to this testimony, in which the Accused was named as a member of the zero-network along with many other military and political figures.[20] Witness ZF used a number of different names to describe communication network, and to relate it to other organizations:

> The zero network was a communications network. The death squad – rather, death squads, were small groups apparently of well-trained people who were in charge of executing the decisions of the members of these networks, while the dragons were supposed to be the names of these groups, the groups that were the masterminds – I do not know whether this word is the [17] Opening arguments were made on 2 April 2002. Proceedings were then adjourned until 2 September 2002, when Prosecution expert witness Alison Des Forges took the stand. The first factual witness, Witness ZF, started his testimony on 26 November 2002. The second factual witness was not heard until 16 June 2003, when the Trial Chamber was re-constituted after the non-re-election of one judge, and the retirement of another.

[18] Motion, para. 29.
[19] Motion, paras. 35-37.

> appropriate word – the groups that were behind those activities, that is, anti-enemy activities, activities directed against the accomplices. The groups were secret groups, closely-knit groups. The Abakozi was another name synonymous to dragon. The dragons and Abakozi meant the same thing.[21]

15. The Indictment makes no mention of these groups by name, but paragraphs 1.13 – 1.16 do refer to "prominent civilian and military figures", sharing an "extremist Hutu ideology", working together from as early as 1990 to pursue a "strategy of ethnic division and incitement to violence". Their strategy included

> "the preparation of lists of people to be eliminated" and "the assassination of certain political opponents".[22]

Although the Accused is not expressly identified as a member of any group preparing such a strategy, the fact that the Accused is the indictee would reasonably suggest that he had some connection to an organization named in his indictment.

16. On this basis, and in light of the rather general character of the evidence, the Chamber finds that the Accused was reasonably informed that this material fact was part of the case against him.

(c) Witness XXH

17. The Kabiligi Defence objects to evidence that the accused personally shot and killed an unidentified military deserter at a roadblock in May 1994.[23] During XXH's testimony, the Defence raised a timely objection to the evidence on the basis that it fell outside the scope of the Indictment.[24] In the Kabiligi Exclusion Decision, the Chamber held:

> The testimony concerning a sixth element – that the Accused himself shot dead a suspected deserter – is not to be found in the Pre-Trial Brief or the witness statement disclosed to the Defence. As proof that the Accused committed a crime by killing the specified individual, the evidence is highly incriminating. On the other hand, the Prosecution argued that this evidence was relevant only to "the ability and willingness of this particular Accused to effect disciplinary measures upon soldiers". The Chamber is not satisfied, based on the submissions of the parties at this stage, that this testimony cannot be relied upon for lack of notice.

The Defence argues that this fact is not to be found in the Indictment, Pre-Trial Brief, or in any written statement of the witness. In its present submissions, the Defence emphasizes that this is the only evidence that the Accused personally killed anyone and is, for that reason, particularly prejudicial. The Prosecution responds that adequate notice of this event was provided by Witness XXH's Pre-Trial Brief summary, which says that "military deserters were killed on Kabiligi's orders in front of Kabiligi".[25] A will-say statement was disclosed the day before the witness's testimony to the effect that the accused "shot" soldiers.[26] The purpose of the evidence is to show the Accused's "ability and willingness … to effect disciplinary measures upon soldiers".[27] The Prosecution also argues that "the fact that [the Accused] selectively punished soldiers is highly relevant".[28]

[28] Prosecution Response, para. 91.

18. Although the Prosecution does not intend to use the testimony as direct evidence that the Accused physically committed a crime charged in the Indictment, the evidence is nevertheless highly prejudicial. If true, it would demonstrate brutality and zeal in punishing his soldiers, not merely that he had the means to do so. More broadly, the incident could be used to invite the inference that the Accused was undisciplined and erratic in discharging his duties as a senior officer. Even if not used as evidence of direct commission of a crime, the effect of the evidence is sufficiently incriminating and serious that the Defence ought to have had a reasonable opportunity to investigate and refute the evidence. Disclosure of a will-say the day before the testimony did not afford such an opportunity. Under these circumstances, the evidence is inadmissible.

(d) Witness XXQ

19. The Defence argues that Witness XXQ was improperly added to the Prosecution witness list without leave of the Chamber and that his testimony should be excluded on that basis in its entirety.[29] The Chamber rejects this argument. Any remedy for improperly adding a witness to the witness list should have been requested before the witness's appearance. Exclusion at this stage of the proceedings on the basis of adequacy of notice, is not an appropriate remedy for the procedural impropriety alleged by the Defence.

20. In the Kabiligi Exclusion Decision, the Chamber held:

> The Pre-trial Brief gives clear notice of Witness XXQ's testimony that Mr. Kabiligi, during a meeting over which he presided in February 1994, rejected the Arusha Accords and outlined various "strategies to win the war", which included "to arm civilians and incite them to fight against Tutsi and moderate Hutu". The testimony goes further, alleging that the Accused "told us that they had envisaged that war had to resume on the 23rd February", which was less than two weeks after the meetings. The witness elaborated that "this is a date that had been settled on, that had been fixed a long time before. It was the date on which the Rwandan government and the Burundian government had agreed to launch the genocide in the two countries."
> The allegation that the Accused was involved in fixing a specific date for the resumption of war, and that there was a conspiracy between the Rwandan and Burundian governments to initiate a genocide on that date, is not mentioned in the Pre-Trial Brief. One of the witness's prior statements does say "it was resolved to resume war and put an end to the Arusha Peace Accords" during the meeting. The prejudicial impact of the witness's use of the term "genocide" is ambiguous. On the basis of the information before the Chamber on this motion, the Chamber cannot be satisfied that no notice of this material fact has been given.[30]

21. The Accused had general notice that the witness would testify that he was somehow aware of a plot to recommence the war against the RPF, and that he announced the existence of this plan at a meeting in February 1994. The added elements that a specific date had been set, and that a genocide was planned, are ancillary to the more general allegation that the Accused was somehow aware of these plans. Accordingly, sufficient notice was given of the general allegation to place the Defence in a reasonable position to understand the material facts. Although the use of the term "genocide" is more prejudicial than the references in the Pre-Trial Brief and the witness's prior statement to "resuming the war", the Chamber finds that these are details which are best evaluated on the merits.

22. No other grounds have been raised to suggest that the Chamber erred in law or failed to appreciate the relevant facts in the Kabiligi Exclusion Decision. Accordingly, there is no basis to reconsider any other legal or factual finding made therein.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion in part;

DECLARES inadmissible Witness XXH's testimony that the Accused shot dead a suspected deserter.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Confidential and Extremely Urgent Motion for Leave to Amend the List of Defence Witnesses", filed on 1 September 2006, and the Corrigendum thereto, filed on 7 September 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Nsengiyumva Defence requests leave to add six witnesses to its list of witnesses: ICJ-1, EAC-1, DEF-2, ICC-1, HQ-1 and USA-1. The Defence states generally that it has been obliged to seek out new witnesses to replace others who have died, disappeared, or refuse to testify. The witnesses are all residents of Rwanda, which makes them difficult to contact, according to the Defence. The motion gives a detailed summary of each witness's testimony, the Prosecution evidence which they are expected to rebut, and indicates, in many cases, that the witnesses are not duplicating the testimony of Defence witnesses already heard. The Prosecution has made no submissions.

(i) Applicable Standard

2. Rule 73 ter (E) of the Rules provides that:

> After commencement of the Defence case, the Defence, if its considers it to be in the interests of justice, may move the Trial Chamber for leave to reinstate the list of witnesses or to vary its decisions as to which witnesses are to be called.

This standard has been previously been discussed in this case:

> In interpreting a similarly worded provisions applicable to Prosecution witnesses, this Trial Chamber has held that amendments of a witness list must be supported by "good cause" and be in the "interest of justice." Similar principles have been applied in assessing Defence motions to vary a witness list. The determination of whether to grant a request to vary a witness list requires a close analysis of each witness, including the sufficiency and time of disclosure of the witness's information; the materiality and probative value of the proposed testimony in relation to existing witnesses and the allegations in the indictment; the ability of the other party to make an effective cross-examination of the witness; and the justification offered by the party for the addition of the witness.[1]

Whether the addition of witnesses will result in "unfair surprise or prejudice" to the opposing party must be considered in light of the disclosure obligations of the moving party.[2]

(ii) Addition of Witnesses

3. The Defence has failed to offer specific justifications explaining when these witnesses were first discovered, or which witnesses they have replaced. The failure to do so makes it difficult to determine whether the attempt to add these witnesses at this late stage of the proceedings is justified. The lack of specificity in this respect weighs against the granting of the motion.

4. On the other hand, the potential importance of these witnesses is evident to the Chamber. Their testimony, as described in the motion, responds directly to Prosecution evidence of the conduct of the Accused. Some of the witnesses appear to be the only ones to rebut some elements of the Prosecution case. At least one of them, Witness HQ-1, knew the Accused well during the events in question and may be in a position to offer relevant evidence. Furthermore, the expected testimony appears to be well-defined and narrowly-circumscribed, and the Defence expects that the examination-in-chief of all six witnesses could be completed in nine hours.

5. The Defence submits that it disclosed the identity of five of these witnesses to the Prosecution on 24 August 2006, and that that concerning the sixth is disclosed with the motion. Previous decisions which have granted amendments of Defence witness lists have required a minimum notice of thirty-five days to the Prosecution. Accordingly, sufficient time remains before the close of the Nsengiyumva Defence case to hear these witnesses with adequate notice to the Prosecution. On the other hand, the inability to call these witnesses within the remaining time can in no way be used to justify a prolongation of the Defence case. The deadline for the close of the Nsengiyumva Defence case, including the testimony of the Accused should he choose to testify, is 13 October 2006. The opportunity to call these additional witnesses depends on the Defence's own ability to fit them within the existing judicial calendar.

6. In light of all the circumstances, an appropriate period of notice requires that these witnesses be called no earlier than 2 October 2006, subject to any waiver by the Prosecution.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the request of the Nsengiyumva Defence to add witnesses ICJ-1, EAC-1, DEF-2, ICC-1, HQ-1 and USA-1 to the witness list;

ORDERS, to the extent that it has not yet been provided, that any identifying information and summaries of their testimony be disclosed to the Prosecution;

DECLARES, subject to any waiver by the Prosecution, that the witnesses may not testify before 2 October 2006.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Motion for Severance on the Grounds of Serious Prejudice Caused By the Testimony of Bagosora Witness Jean Kambanda", filed jointly by Kabiligi, Nsengiyumva and Ntabakuze on 14 July 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 2 August 2006; the joint Reply, filed on 15 August 2006; and the submissions of the Bagosora Defence, filed on 21 August 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. On 11, 12 and 13 July 2006, Jean Kambanda, testified before this Chamber as a witness for Colonel Bagosora. Mr. Kambanda, who was the Prime Minister of Rwanda during the period from April to July 1994, is currently serving a life sentence of this Tribunal, having been convicted of genocide and other crimes.[1] In the course of his cross-examination by the Prosecution, Mr. Kambanda offered testimony to which the Kabiligi, Nsengiyumva and Ntabakuze Defences objected on the ground that it improperly re-opened the Prosecution case and, therefore, went beyond the proper scope of cross-examination as prescribed by the Rules and a previous decision of the Chamber concerning Mr. Kambanda's testimony. After several oral rulings allowing the testimony, the Kabiligi, Nsengiyumva and Ntabakuze Defence teams made an oral motion for severance from the joint trial, arguing that they had been irremediably prejudiced. Exclusion of the testimony was requested as an alternative remedy. After hearing the parties' oral arguments, the Chamber adjourned the remainder of Mr. Kambanda's testimony, and requested further submissions in writing on all of the areas of disputed evidence.

Deliberations

[1] The Prosecutor v. Kambanda, Case N°ICTR-97-23-S, Judgement and Sentence (TC), 4 September 1998. Mr. Kambanda contests the validity of the plea agreement on which the judgement was based; nevertheless, the judgement was confirmed on appeal. Kambanda v. The Prosecutor, Case N°ICTR 97-23-A, Judgement (AC), 19 October 2000.

(I) GENERAL PRINCIPLES

2. The parameters of the Prosecution cross-examination of Mr. Kambanda have already been addressed by the Chamber in its decision of 27 March 2006, in response to a previous motion for severance on the basis of his appearance ("the Kambanda Severance Decision"):

> The suggestion that the Prosecution case can be re-opened through cross-examination is unfounded. Rule 90 (G) (i) [of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules)] constrains the scope of cross-examination to three areas: the subject-matter of the examination-in-chief; matters affecting credibility; and, "where the witness is able to give evidence relevant to the case for the cross-examining party, to the subject-matter of the case". This last category must [be] read in light of Rule 85 (A) (i), which prescribes that "the trial shall be presented in the following sequence: (i) Evidence of the prosecution; (ii) Evidence for the defence; (iii) Prosecution evidence in rebuttal; (iv) Defence evidence in rejoinder …" This sequence implies that … matters on which no evidence was led during the Prosecution case do not form part of that case. Accordingly, the "case for the cross-examining party" must now be understood as defined and limited by the evidence presented during the Prosecution case. The Prosecution may adduce evidence during its cross-examination which corroborates or reinforces evidence presented during the presentation of its case, but may not, at this stage, venture into new areas.[2]

The parties do not contest this standard, but disagree as to its application in respect of the specific questions asked, or proposed, by the Prosecution. The Defence argues that the questions enter into new areas on which no evidence was led during the Prosecution case; the Prosecution responds that the questions merely corroborate or reinforce evidence heard during the case-in-chief. Furthermore, the Prosecution contends that its questions are proper to test the witness's credibility.

3. In the Chamber's view, no unfairness arises as long as the evidence adduced through Mr. Kambanda has already been substantially presented during the Prosecution's case. Testimony which broadens the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability, are inadmissible as they deviate from the order of proof prescribed by Rule 85. Such evidence would require the Defence to engage in additional investigations and the production of additional evidence which, in the context of this very complex and lengthy trial, would not be in the interests of justice. Whether a question broadens the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability is, of necessity, a fact-specific inquiry and requires a close comparison of the evidence which was presented during the Prosecution case with the proposed evidence. The party seeking to cross-examine the witness bears the burden of showing by specific references to the case-in-chief that the proposed questions do not broaden the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability.[3]

[2] Bagosora et al., Decision on Request for Severance of Three Accused (TC), 27 March 2006, para. 7 (citations omitted).

[3] The Chamber's view is supported by principles developed by trial chambers in deciding whether to allow the Prosecution to adduce rebuttal evidence under Rule 85 (A) (iii) of the Rules. Albeit not an identical situation, the general rule is that the Prosecution must present all of its evidence against the Accused by the close of its case. Ntagerura et al., Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Leave to Call Evidence in Rebuttal Pursuant to Rule 54, 73, and 85 (A) (iii) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (TC), 21 May 2003, para. 38 ("To permit the Prosecutor to supplement evidence she should have presented in her case-in-chief would be to violate one of the cardinal precepts preventing the prosecutor from splitting her proofs and condone the practice of presenting cases piecemeal for the Defence to answer. In such circumstances, the Chamber should exercise its discretion to exclude such evidence when offered in rebuttal."); Nahimana et al., Decision of 9 May 2003 on the Prosecutor's Application for Rebuttal Witnesses As Corrected According to the order of 13 may 2003 (TC), para. 50 (referring to the English Court of Appeal holding that if the Prosecution could reasonably have foreseen that a particular piece of evidence was necessary to prove its case it should have put it before the court as part of its case). See also Delalic et al., Decision on the Prosecution's Alternative Request to Reopen the Prosecution's Case (TC), 19 August 1998, paras. 18-22; Delalic et al., Judgement (AC), para. 275; Limaj et al., Decision on Prosecution's Motion to Admit Rebuttal Statements Via Rule 92 bis (TC), 7 July 2005, para. 6; Oric, Decision on the Prosecution Motion With Addendum and Urgent Addendum to Present Rebuttal Evidence Pursuant to Rule 86 (A) (iii) (TC), 9 February 2006. Similar principles follow from the practice of common law jurisdictions. R. v. Krause, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 466, para. 15 ("The general rule is that the Crown … will not be allowed to split its case. The Crown … must produce and enter in its own case all the clearly relevant evidence it has, or that it intends to rely upon, to establish its case with respect to all the issues raised in … the

(II) APPLICATION

(a) Command of Troops By Kabiligi

4. The Kabiligi Defence objects to a line of questioning which yielded, in its view, three distinct propositions. The transcripts reflect these three elements to be: that the real command of the Army was in the hands of General Kabiligi, rather than another officer, General Bizimungu;[4] that the powers of the office of G3 entailed commanding troops;[5] and that General Kabiligi, in his capacity as the G3, commanded "all troop movements".[6] The Prosecution argues that the testimony is not new, relying on the testimony of Witness XXJ who testified during the case-in-chief that:

> Yes, the G-3 superiors supervise all military operations on the national territory and, in view of the situation that prevailed, I believe that in his capacity as G-3 he was following even the events that were taking place elsewhere. But he was based in Kigali and he was, more specifically, in charge of the operations that took place in the city of Kigali, but he could also give orders for operations that were taking place elsewhere as he coordinated operations. He coordinated all the operations but, more specifically, he was in charge of operations in the city of Kigali.[7]

Reference is also made to the testimony of Witness XAI that

> "there was someone in charge of the chief of operations in the war front, and that person's name was Gratien Kabiligi",

and that "Gratien Kabiligi was in charge of the entire city of Kigali".[8]

5. The Chamber has carefully considered Mr. Kambanda's testimony in comparison with evidence introduced during the Prosecution case and finds that, in most respects, he merely repeats information which has already been substantially introduced during the case-in-chief. In one respect, the testimony does introduce a new element: that General Kabiligi had more power than General Bizimungu. This element of testimony does broaden the facts imputed to the Accused.

(b) General Kabiligi Was Informed That Solders Were Committing Massacres

6. The Defence objects to Kambanda's testimony that Kabiligi "was regularly told that soldiers were taking part in the massacres".[9] More accurately, the testimony was that Kambanda had, during some meetings with Generals Kabiligi and Bizimungu, informed them that soldiers or deserters were committing massacres. The Prosecution cites no evidence during its case reflecting this testimony. In the Chamber's view, the fact that the Prime Minister at the time informed the Accused of such actions would broaden the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability, even if there was evidence during the Prosecution case that others had provided such information.

indictment and any particulars … This rule prevents unfair surprise, prejudice and confusion which could result if the Crown or the plaintiff were allowed to split its case, that is, to put in part of its evidence – as much as it deemed necessary at the outset – then to close the case and after the defence is complete to add further evidence to bolster the position originally advanced. The underlying reason for this rule is that the defendant or the accused is entitled at the close of the Crown's case to have before it the full case for the Crown so that it is known from the outset what must be met in response.') *Shaw v. (c) General Kabiligi Created a Brigade to Control Renegade Soldiers

7. Mr. Kambanda testified that he was informed that

> "in Kigali town a special brigade had been set up specifically to control those so-called uncontrolled elements of the army"

which were committing massacres of civilians.[10] The Prosecution has failed to refer to any such evidence during its case.

(d) General Kabiligi Exercised Command After Fleeing Into Exile

8. Mr. Kambanda testified that after the flight of the interim government into exile, "practically the same command structure was maintained in exile", implying that General Kabiligi continued to exercise command over troops.[11] The Prosecution relies on the testimony of Witness ZF, who said that after General Kabiligi fled into exile, he lived in south Goma "where a division he was commanding was. It was the southern Division". The testimony of Mr. Kambanda would, in effect, potentially broaden the command responsibility of the Accused beyond the southern Division, mentioned by Witness ZF, to a larger number of troops. Accordingly, the testimony broadens the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability.

(e) The Military Had More Power Than Politicians

9. Mr. Kambanda testified that "in any situation of war, it is the people who bear arms who have the real power, that is true".[12] The Defence teams object to this testimony as new evidence. In the Chamber's view, this is not a fact which broadens the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of their culpability. It constitutes no more than an inference or an opinion based upon unspecified facts or information.

(f) Procurement of Arms in Goma for "Into Gisenyi and Into the Rest of Rwanda", and the Transfer of Weapons From Gisenyi Military Camp To Butare Military Camp, June 1994

10. The Prosecution has indicated that it wishes to elicit testimony from the witness concerning "the procurement of arms and the movement of arms into Rwanda from – from Goma into Gisensyi and the rest of Rwanda" by the Accused Nsengiyumva.[13] It also did lead evidence that weapons were transferred from Gisenyi Military Camp to the Butare Military Camp in June 1994, for subsequent distribution as part of the civil defence program.[14] The Prosecution argues that evidence was led during its case concerning Nsengiyumva's involvement in the distribution of arms in Gisenyi, and his role in bringing weapons from Goma across the border into Rwanda. The Prosecution has failed, however, to point to any evidence during its case that the Accused was involved in the distribution of weapons to civilians or soldiers throughout Rwanda, or that he obtained weapons in Goma for that purpose. The testimony that he was involved in supplying weapons to civilians in Gisenyi does not justify the introduction of evidence that he was involved in a national scheme to supply a national civil defence program. The testimony introduces new elements which broaden the facts imputed to the Accused and the nature of his culpability.

[14] T. 12 July 2006 pp. 41-50.

(g) Paracommando Soldiers Killings Opponents of the MRND Using a List Given by the Accused Ntabakuze

11. The Prosecution relies on evidence that Paracommando soldiers committed massacres of civilians an area adjacent to Camp Kanombe on the night of 6 April 1994 as justification for leading evidence from Mr. Kambanda that Paracommando soldiers killed opponents of the MRND party on the night of 6 April 1994 on the basis of a list of a names given to them by the Accused Ntabakuze.[15]

12. As characterized by the Prosecution, the testimony which it seeks to adduce through Mr. Kambanda introduces several new elements: that the Accused personally distributed a list of names of civilian targets to his soldiers; that the targets were specifically identified as opponents of the MRND political party; and that his soldiers committed massacres on the basis of this particular list. The Prosecution has failed to offer specific references from its case showing that this evidence would not broaden the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability.

(III) REMEDY

13. The Defence requests three alternative remedies: severance of the trial of the three co-Accused; exclusion of the entirety of Jean Kambanda's testimony from consideration as against the three co-Accused; or exclusion of the specifically impugned portions of testimony as against the three co-Accused.[16]

14. The Chamber observes that severance and exclusion do not represent sharply different alternatives in the circumstances of the present case. Even after severance, the three Accused would continue to be tried by the same bench, and on the basis of all of the evidence which has been heard in the joint trial up until the moment of severance. On the other hand, severance now would have the unfortunate and potentially anomalous effect of bifurcating the evidence heard between now and end of the case, including those other than Kambanda. The Chamber has previously discussed the benefits of a joint trial.[17] Where a less drastic remedy is available, it should be chosen. Excluding the improper evidence offers a remedy which is no less effective than the alternatives available in the present case. Accordingly, the Chamber shall declare inadmissible evidence which broadens the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability.

(IV) EVIDENCE INTRODUCED FOR CREDIBILITY

15. The Prosecution argues that the matters on which it has asked, or wishes to ask, questions are independently justified by the need to test the witness's credibility, and are "built upon the prior statements" of the witness.[18]

16. In order for questions on cross-examination to be permitted on this basis, there must be some basis to believe that the prior statements are, in fact, inconsistent with the witness's testimony. None of the questions can be so justified. As an initial matter, of the testimony which has been elicited so far, only the proposition about the setting up of a special brigade in Kigali is arguably inconsistent

[15] Response, para. 30 ("The Prosecution submits that issue of Para Commando soldiers killings opponents of the MRND on the night of 6 to 7 April using a list of names Ntabakuze gave his soldiers is not a "new" area or "new" evidence. Trial Chamber has head evidence of the killings perpetrated by members of the Para Commando Battalion during the night of 6 to 7 April 1994 in the Akajali neighbourhood near the Kanombe Military Camp").
[16] Motion, p. 8.
[17] Kambanda Severance Decision, para. 3 ("A joint trial relieves the hardship that would otherwise be imposed on witnesses, whose repeated attendance might not be secured; enhances fairness as between the accused by ensuring a uniform presentation of evidence and procedure against all; and minimizes the possibility of inconsistencies in treatment of evidence, sentencing, or other matters, that could arise from separate trials").
[18] Response, para. 33.

with Mr. Kambanda's prior statements.[19] In all other respects, the testimony given by the witness appears to be consistent with his prior statements. As to the areas on which questions have not yet been asked, there is no indication that the witness gave inconsistent testimony in respect of those matters during his examination-in-chief by the Defence, either expressly or implicitly. Indeed, his testimony did not venture close to the matters on which the Prosecution wishes to pose questions to test the witness's credibility. Allowing the Prosecution to venture into any matter discussed by the witness in his voluminous prior statements to the Prosecution would, in effect, lead to an unlimited cross-examination whose effect is to introduce substantive evidence on a wide range of matters. Such an approach would undermine the order of proof prescribed by Rule 85 and, as the questioning on that basis so far indicates, has little value in establishing the witness's credibility. The probative value of questions which are unrelated the examination-in-chief, or for which there is no indication of a potential inconsistency, are outweighed by their prejudicial effect.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

EXCLUDES the evidence of Mr. Kambanda that: (i) General Kabiligi had more power than General Bizimungu as a commander in the Rwandan Army during the period at issue in this trial; (ii) Kabiligi and General Bizimungu were informed by Kambanda that active or deserting soldiers were committing massacres; (iii) Kabiligi set up a special brigade to discipline uncontrolled elements of the Rwandan Army which were committing massacres; (iv) Kabiligi was in charge of all troops of the Rwandan Army after the flight of those forces from Rwanda; (v) Nsengiyumva procured weapons in Goma for national distribution throughout Rwanda; (vi) Paracommando soldiers killed opponents of the MRND party on the night of 6 April 1994 on the basis of a list of a names given to them by the Accused Ntabakuze.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Requête de la défense de Bagosora visant l'émission d'un subpoena", including its confidential annex, filed by the Bagosora Defence on 6 June 2006;

CONSIDERING the Ntabakuze Response, including the Corrigendum thereof, filed on 12 and 14 June 2006 respectively; the Prosecution "Response to Various Bagosora Defence Motions", filed on 15 June 2006; and the Nsengiyumva "Reply to Bagosora's Request", filed on 26 June 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Bagosora Defence requests that a subpoena be issued to the current Minister of Defence of the Government of Rwanda, General Marcel Gatsinzi, requiring his appearance before the Chamber as a witness. The Defence claims that General Gatsinzi was the Chef d'Etat-Major de l'Armée Rwandaise between 7 and 17 April 1994 and that, accordingly, he has unique and specific knowledge concerning certain material facts relevant to the case against the Accused.[1]

2. The Ntabakuze and Nsengiyumva Defence oppose the granting of a subpoena, arguing that the witness will give unreliable testimony which is favourable to the Prosecution. Any probative value that the witness's testimony might have will be outweighed by its prejudicial effect. Ntabakuze also argues that he is entitled to same rights as if were being tried separate from the other Accused and that, accordingly, this testimony, which would not have been elicited in a trial of his own, should be excluded as against him.

Deliberations

(i) Alleged Prejudicial Effect of the Testimony

3. The Chamber has ruled twice on arguments similar to those now presented by Ntabakuze and Nsengiyumva in relation to a different Bagosora Defence witness, Jean Kambanda. In those decisions, the Chamber has ruled that the rights of one Accused are not violated merely because another Accused calls a witness whom the first Accused would not wish to appear in the joint trial.[2] However, the Prosecution is limited in its cross-examination to matters which were raised during the examination-in-chief of the witness or which were already substantially presented during the Prosecution's case-in-chief. Testimony which broadens the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability, are inadmissible.[3] Within these constraints, the rights of the Accused are respected and, accordingly, there is no basis to exclude his testimony or refuse a subpoena for his appearance.

(ii) Issuance of a Subpoena

4. Government officials enjoy no immunity from the normal legal processes available to compel the testimony of a private individual.[4] It makes no difference whether the official's knowledge was obtained in the course of official duties or not.[5] In a recent case, a Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for Yugoslavia dismissed claims of immunity asserted by the serving Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, Tony Blair, and a former Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, Gerhard Schröder.[6] Furthermore, the Chamber held that a subpoena, issued to them

The Appeals Chamber did not say that the functional immunity enjoyed by State officials includes an immunity against being compelled to give evidence of what the official saw or heard in the course of exercising his official functions. Nothing which was said by the Appeals Chamber in the Blaskic Subpoena Decision should be interpreted as giving such an immunity to officials of the nature whose testimony is sought in the present case. No authority for such a proposition has been produced by the prosecution, and none has been found. Such an immunity does not exist. No issue arises for determination in this case as to whether there are different categories of State officials to whom any such immunity may apply, and it is unnecessary to determine such an issue here"). Judge Shahabuddeen issued a dissenting opinion, but only on the issue of whether such a subpoena could be issued for a pre-testimonial interview with the Defence. No such issue arises in the present case.

personally, was the appropriate mechanism for requiring a government official to testify, rather than an order for state cooperation under Article 28 of the Statute.[7]

5. Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence authorizes a Trial Chamber to issue

> "orders, summonses, subpoenas, warrants and transfer orders as may be necessary for the purposes of an investigation or for the preparation or conduct of the trial".

The applicant for a subpoena must show that (i) reasonable attempts have been made to obtain the voluntary cooperation of the witness; (ii) the witness's testimony can materially assist the applicant in respect of clearly identified issues; and (iii) the witness's testimony must be necessary and appropriate for the conduct and fairness of the trial.[8] It has been said that "subpoenas should not be issued lightly" and that a Chamber must consider

> "not only the usefulness of the information to the applicant but … its overall necessity in ensuring that the trial is informed and fair".[9]

In discussing the application of these requirements, the Appeals Chamber has stated:

> The applicant seeking a subpoena must make a certain evidentiary showing of the need for the subpoena. In particular, he must demonstrate a reasonable basis for his belief that the prospective witness is likely to give information that will materially assist the applicant with respect to clearly identified issues in the forthcoming trial. To satisfy this requirements, the applicant may need to present information about such factors as the position held by the prospective witness in relation to the events in question, any relation the witness may have had with the accused which is relevant to the charges, any opportunity the witness may have had to observe or learn about those events, and any statements the witness made to the Prosecution or others in relation to them. The Trial Chamber is vested with discretion in determining whether the applicant succeeded in making the required showing, this discretion being necessary to ensure that the compulsive mechanism of the subpoena is not abused. As the Appeals Chamber has emphasized, "Subpoenas should not be issued lightly, for they involve the use of coercive powers and may lead to the imposition of a criminal sanction".[10]

Chambers have considered factors such as the specificity with which the prospective testimony is identified and whether the information can be obtained by other means.[11]

6. The Defence has set out in detail the issues on which General Gatsinzi will be able to testify, and their relevance to specific paragraphs of the Indictment against the Accused. Amongst those issues are: an alleged telegram sent to Rwandan Army units from the Etat-Major instructing them to request the assistance of the Interahamwe in identifying and eliminating Tutsi civilians; the involvement of the Rwandan Army in massacres in Kigali; the topics of discussion at daily meetings at the Etat-Major; and the process by which the Interim Government was installed after the death of President Habyarimana.[12] The Defence submits that General Gatsinzi was in a privileged position to know of these and other events, and that he is one of the few people still alive with such information.

[7] Id. para. 27 ("… where, as here, [the Trial Chamber] is seized of an application for an interview with and testimony from a specific state official--as opposed to an application for information from a state which does not seek to summon a specific official as a witness--the appropriate procedural mechanism for summoning the official to interview and testify is a subpoena addressed to the individual official and not a binding order addressed to the official's state").

[11] Id., Milosevic Decision, paras. 30, 33.

7. The Chamber does not lightly issue a subpoena to a serving Minister of a State. Nevertheless, the Defence has shown by specific submissions that the testimony of General Gatsinzi is likely to be material to specific matters of importance in the present case. The Defence has also made a sufficient showing that the evidence cannot reasonably be obtained elsewhere, and that it has made reasonable efforts to secure the witness's voluntary cooperation, without success.

8. Accordingly, in the present case, a subpoena requiring the personal appearance of the witness is both necessary and appropriate for the conduct of the trial. The Registry shall prepare a subpoena addressed to General Marcel Gatsinzi, requiring his appearance before this Chamber in the present trial at a date and time to be agreed upon between the Registry and the witness, in consultation with the parties.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion;

ORDERS the Registrar to prepare a subpoena in accordance with this decision, addressed to General Marcel Gatsinzi, requiring his appearance before this Chamber to give testimony in the present case;

DIRECTS the Registry to communicate the subpoena to General Gatsinzi through appropriate diplomatic channels, accompanied by a copy of this Decision.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Requête de la Défense de Bagosora visant la modification de sa liste de témoins", filed on 31 August 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 1 September 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Bagosora Defence requests leave to add two new witnesses to its witness list, and to remove fifteen others. The Defence claims that it learned of the existence of these two witnesses only recently. Their testimony is said to rebut specific Prosecution evidence and the time required for examination of both witnesses is estimated to be only three-and-a-half hours.[1]

2. The Prosecution does not oppose the motion, stating that it "takes no position" on whether the motion should be granted. It does argue, however, that the Defence is not required to request leave to remove witnesses from its witness list and that, indeed, they have already been removed by virtue of a letter from Lead Counsel to the Chamber dated 12 April 2006.

Deliberations

(i) Applicable Standard

3. Rule 73 ter (E) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence provides that:

> After commencement of the Defence case, the Defence, if it considers it to be in the interests of justice, may move the Trial Chamber for leave to reinstate the list of witnesses or to vary its decision as to which witnesses are to be called.

This standard has previously been addressed in this case:

> In interpreting a similarly worded provision applicable to Prosecution witnesses, this Trial Chamber has held that amendments of a witness list must be supported by "good cause" and be in the "interests of justice". Similar principles have been applied in assessing Defence motions to vary a witness list. The determination of whether to grant a request to vary the witness list requires a close analysis of each witness, including the sufficiency and time of disclosure of the witness' information; the materiality and probative value of the proposed testimony in relation to existing witnesses and allegations in the indictment; the ability of the other party to make an effective cross-examination of the witness; and the justification offered by the party for the addition of the witness.[2]

[1] Motion, paras. 27, 36.
[2] Bagosora et al., Decision on Prosecution Motion for Addition of Witnesses Pursuant to Rule 73 bis (E) (TC), 26 June 2003, para. 14 (references omitted).

Whether the addition of witnesses will result in "unfair surprise or prejudice" to the opposing party must be considered in light of the disclosure obligations of the moving party.[3]

(ii) Removal of Witnesses

4. The request to remove witnesses is not opposed by the Prosecution, will economize judicial resources and is obviously consistent with the effective presentation of Defence evidence. The request is, therefore, granted.[4]

(iii)Addition of Witnesses

5. In light of all of the factors enumerated above, the Chamber considers that it is in the interests of justice to allow the Defence to add Witnesses X-06 and X-07 to its witness list. The testimony of these two witnesses appears to be narrowly defined and focused to rebut to specific Prosecution evidence.

6. The present request is only the second filed by the Bagosora Defence, which demonstrates that they have acted diligently to minimize changes to its roster of witnesses and the consequent disruption to trial preparations. The testimony of these witnesses appears to have been discovered only in late July, which suggests that the Defence has brought the present motion as soon as practicable. Furthermore, the limited time required to hear these witnesses suggests that the orderly appearance of witnesses within the time scheduled before the end of the Prosecution case will not be disturbed, particularly in light of the withdrawal of a number of other witnesses. No basis arises from the present motion to alter the present trial schedule, which requires the Bagosora Defence to call all of its factual witnesses by the end of the present session on 13 October 2006.

7. The original disclosure obligation incumbent on the Defence was to file its witness list, along with summaries of the testimony of prospective witnesses by 3 January 2005.[5] In respect of subsequent amendments to Defence witness lists, the Chamber has required disclosure of this information "thirty-five days before the appearance of the witness".[6] Disclosure of the details of these two witnesses was given to the Prosecution on 24 and 28 August 2006. In light of the limited number of witnesses involved, the Chamber considers the latter of the two dates of disclosure to be the effective date of notice for both witnesses. Accordingly, subject to any waiver by the Prosecution, Witnesses X-06 and X-07 may testify no earlier than 2 October 2006.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the request of the Bagosora Defence to add witness X-06 and X-07 to the witness list;

ORDERS, to the extent that it has not yet been provided, that any identifying information and summaries of their testimony be disclosed to the Prosecution;

DECLARES, subject to any waiver by the Prosecution, that the witnesses may not testify before 2 October 2006.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Mose, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Motion for Severance on the Grounds of Serious Prejudice Caused By the Testimony of Bagosora Witness Jean Kambanda", filed jointly by Kabiligi, Nsengiyumva and Ntabakuze on 14 July 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 2 August 2006; the joint Reply, filed on 15 August 2006; and the submissions of the Bagosora Defence, filed on 21 August 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. On 11, 12 and 13 July 2006, Jean Kambanda, testified before this Chamber as a witness for Colonel Bagosora. Mr. Kambanda, who was the Prime Minister of Rwanda during the period from April to July 1994, is currently serving a life sentence of this Tribunal, having been convicted of genocide and other crimes[1]. In the course of his cross-examination by the Prosecution, Mr. Kambanda offered testimony to which the Kabiligi, Nsengiyumva and Ntabakuze Defences objected on the ground that it improperly re-opened the Prosecution case and, therefore, went beyond the proper scope of cross-examination as prescribed by the Rules and a previous decision of the Chamber concerning Mr. Kambanda's testimony. After several oral rulings allowing the testimony, the Kabiligi, Nsengiyumva and Ntabakuze Defence teams made an oral motion for severance from the joint trial, arguing that they had been irremediably prejudiced. Exclusion of the testimony was requested as an alternative remedy. After hearing the parties' oral arguments, the Chamber adjourned the remainder of Mr. Kambanda's testimony, and requested further submissions in writing on all of the areas of disputed evidence.

Deliberations

(i) General Principles

2. The parameters of the Prosecution cross-examination of Mr. Kambanda have already been addressed by the Chamber in its decision of 27 March 2006, in response to a previous motion for severance on the basis of his appearance ("the Kambanda Severance Decision"):

> The suggestion that the Prosecution case can be re-opened through cross-examination is unfounded. Rule 90 (G) (i) [of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules)] constrains the scope of cross-examination to three areas: the subject-matter of the examination-in-chief; matters affecting credibility; and, "where the witness is able to give evidence relevant to the case for the cross-examining party, to the subject-matter of the case". This last category must [be] read in light of Rule 85 (A) (i), which prescribes that "the trial shall be presented in the following sequence: (i) Evidence of the prosecution; (ii) Evidence for the defence; (iii) Prosecution evidence in rebuttal; (iv) Defence evidence in rejoinder . ..." This sequence implies that ... matters on which no evidence was led during the Prosecution case do not form part of that case. Accordingly, the "case for the cross-examining party" must now be understood as defined and limited by the evidence presented during the Prosecution case. The Prosecution may adduce evidence during its cross-examination which corroborates or reinforces evidence presented during the presentation of its case, but may not, at this stage, venhlre into new areas[2].

[1] The Prosecutor v. Kambanda, Case N°ICTR-97-234, Judgement and Sentence (TC), 4 September 1998. Mr. Kambanda contests the validity of the plea agreement on which the judgement was based; nevertheless, the judgement was confirmed on appeal. Kambanda v. The Prosecutor, Case N°ICTR 97-23-A, Judgement (AC), 19 October 2000.
[2] Bagosora el al., Decision on Request for Severance of Three Accused (TC), 27 March 2006, para. 7 (citations omitted).

The parties do not contest this standard, but disagree as to its application in respect of the specific questions asked, or proposed, by the Prosecution. The Defence argues that the questions enter into new areas on which no evidence was led during the Prosecution case; the Prosecution responds that the questions merely corroborate or reinforce evidence heard during the case-in-chief. Furthermore, the Prosecution contends that its questions are proper to test the witness's credibility.

3. In the Chamber's view, no unfairness arises as long as the evidence adduced through Mr. Kambanda has already been substantially presented during the Prosecution's case. Testimony which broadens the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability, are inadmissible as they deviate from the order of proof prescribed by Rule 85. Such evidence would require the Defence to engage in additional investigations and the production of additional evidence which, in the context of this very complex and lengthy trial, would not be in the interests of justice. Whether a question broadens the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability is, of necessity, a fact-specific inquiry and requires a close comparison of the evidence which was presented during the Prosecution case with the proposed evidence. The party seeking to cross-examine the witness bears the burden of showing by specific references to the case-in-chief that the proposed questions do not broaden the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability[3].

(ii) Application

(a) Command of Troops By Kabiligi

4. The Kabiligi Defence objects to a line of questioning which yielded, in its view, three distinct propositions. The transcripts reflect these three elements to be: that the real command of the Army was in the hands of General Kabiligi, rather than another officer, General Bizimungu[4]; that the powers of the office of G3 entailed commanding troops[5]; and that General Kabiligi, in his capacity as the G3,

[3] The Chamber's view is supported by principles developed by trial chambers in deciding whether to allow the Prosecution to adduce rebuttal evidence under Rule 85 (A) (iii) ofthe Rules. Albeit not an identical situation, the general rule is that the Prosecution must present all of its evidence against the Accused by the close of its case. Ntagerura et al., Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Leave to Call Evidence in Rebuttal Pursuant to Rule 54, 73, and 85 (A) (iii) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (TC), 21 May 2003, para. 38 ("To permit the Prosecutor to supplement evidence she should have presented in her case-in-chief would be to violate one of the cardinal precepts preventing the prosecutor from splitting her proofs and condone the practice of presenting cases piecemeal for the Defence to answer. In such circumstances, the Chamber should exercise its discretion to exclude such evidence when offered in rebuttal".); Nahimana et al., Decision of 9 May 2003 on the Prosecutor's Application for Rebuttal Witnesses As Corrected According to the order of 13 may 2003 (TC), para. 50 (referring to the English Court of Appeal holding that if the Prosecution could reasonably have foreseen that a particular piece of evidence was necessary to prove its case it should have put it before the court as part of its case). See also Delalic et al., Decision on the Prosecution's Alternative Request to Reopen the Prosecution's Case (TC), 19 August 1998, paras. 18-22; Delalic et al., Judgement (AC), para. 275; Limaj et al., Decision on Prosecution's Motion to Admit Rebuttal Statements Via Rule 92 bis (TC), 7 July 2005, para. 6; Oric, Decision on the Prosecution Motion With Addendum and Urgent Addendum to Present Rebuttal Evidence Pursuant to Rule 86 (A) (iii) (TC), 9 February 2006. Similar principles follow from the practice of common law jurisdictions. R. v. Krause, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 466, para. 15 ("The general rule is that the Crown ... will not be allowed to split its case. The Crown ... must produce and enter in its own case all the clearly relevant evidence it has, or that it intends to rely upon, to establish its case with respect to all the issues raised in ... the indictment and any particulars ... This rule prevents unfair surprise, prejudice and confusion which could result if the Crown or the plaintiff were allowed to split its case, that is, to put in part of its evidence – as much as it deemed necessary at the outset – then to close the case and after the defence is complete to add further evidence to bolster the position originally advanced. The underlying reason for this rule is that the defendant or the accused is entitled at the close of the Crown's case to have before it the full case for the Crown so that it is known from the outset what must be met in response".) Shaw v. The Queen, 85 C.L.R. 365, 379 (High Court of Australia, 1952); Archbold, Criminal Pleading. Evidence and Practice (London: Sweet and Maxwell, 2002), s. 4-335 (England); *Griffith v. commanded "all troop movements"[6]. The Prosecution argues that the testimony is not new, relying on the testimony of Witness XXJ who testified during the case-in-chief that:

> Yes, the G-3 superiors supervise all military operations on the national territory and, in view of the situation that prevailed, I believe that in his capacity as G-3 he was following even the events that were taking place elsewhere. But he was based in Kigali and he was, more specifically, in charge of the operations that took place in the city of Kigali, but he could also give orders for operations that were taking place elsewhere as he coordinated operations. He coordinated all the operations but, more specifically, he was in charge of operations in the city of Kigali[7].

Reference is also made to the testimony of Witness XAI that

and that "Gratien Kabiligi was in charge of the entire city of Kigali"[8].

5. The Chamber has carefully considered Mr. Kambanda's testimony in comparison with evidence introduced during the Prosecution case and finds that, in most respects, he merely repeats information which has already been substantially introduced during the case-in-chief. In one respect, the testimony does introduce a new element: that General Kabiligi had more power than General Bizimungu. This element of testimony does broaden the facts imputed to the Accused.

(b) General Kabiligi Was Informed That Solders Were Committing Massacres

6. The Defence objects to Kambanda's testimony that Kabiligi "was regularly told that soldiers were taking part in the massacres"[9]. More accurately, the testimony was that Kambanda had, during some meetings with Generals Kabiligi and Bizimungu, informed them that soldiers or deserters were committing massacres. The Prosecution cites no evidence during its case reflecting this testimony. In the Chamber's view, the fact that the Prime Minister at the time informed the Accused of such actions would broaden the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability, even if there was evidence during the Prosecution case that others had provided such information.

(c) General Kabiligi Created a Brigade to Control Renegade Soldiers

7. Mr. Kambanda testified that he was informed that

> "in Kigali town a special brigade had been set up specifically to control those so-called uncontrolled elements of the army"

which were committing massacres of civilians[10]. The Prosecution has failed to refer to any such evidence during its case.

(d) General Kabiligi Exercised Command After Fleeing Into Exile

8. Mr. Kambanda testified that after the flight of the interim government into exile, "practically the same command structure was maintained in exile", implying that General Kabiligi continued to exercise command over troops[11]. The Prosecution relies on the testimony of Witness ZF, who said that after General Kabiligi fled into exile, he lived in south Goma "where a division he was commanding was. It was the southern Division". The testimony of Mr. Kambanda would, in effect, potentially broaden the command responsibility of the Accused beyond the southern Division, mentioned by Witness ZF, to a larger number of troops. Accordingly, the testimony broadens the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability.

(e) The Military Had More Power Than Politicians

9. Mr. Kambanda testified that "in any situation of war, it is the people who bear arms who have the real power, that is true"[12]. The Defence teams object to this testimony as new evidence. In the Chamber's view, this is not a fact which broadens the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of their culpability. It constitutes no more than an inference or an opinion based upon unspecified facts or information.

(f) Procurement of Arms in Goma for "Into Gisenyi and Into the Rest of Rwanda", and the Transfer of Weapons From Gisenyi Military Camp To Butare Military Camp, June 1994

10. The Prosecution has indicated that it wishes to elicit testimony from the witness concerning

> "the procurement of arms and the movement of arms into Rwanda from – from Goma into Gisensyi and the rest of Rwanda" by the Accused Nsengiumva[13]. It also did lead evidence that weapons were transferred from Gisenyi Military Camp to the Butare Military Camp in June 1994, for subsequent distribution as part of the civil defence program[14]. The Prosecution argues that evidence was led during its case concerning Nsengiyumva's involvement in the distribution of arms in Gisenyi, and his role in bringing weapons from Goma across the border into Rwanda. The Prosecution has failed, however, to point to any evidence during its case that the Accused was involved in the distribution of weapons to civilians or soldiers throughout Rwanda, or that he obtained weapons in Goma for that purpose. The testimony that he was involved in supplying weapons to civilians in Gisenyi does not justify the introduction of evidence that he was involved in a national scheme to supply a national civil defence program. The testimony introduces new elements which broaden the facts imputed to the Accused and the nature of his culpability.

(g) Paracommando Soldiers Killings Opponents of the MRND Using a List Given by the Accused Ntabakuze

11. The Prosecution relies on evidence that Paracommando soldiers committed massacres of civilians an area adjacent to Camp Kanombe on the night of 6 April 1994 as justification for leading evidence from Mr. Kambanda that Paracommando soldiers killed opponents of the MRND party on the night of 6 April 1994 on the basis of a list of a names given to them by the Accused Ntabakuze[15].

[15] Response, para. 30 ("The Prosecution submits that issue of Para Commando soldiers killings opponents of the MRND on the night of 6 to 7 April using a list of names Ntabakuze gave his soldiers is not a "new" area or "new" evidence. Trial Chamber has head evidence of the killings perpetrated by members of the Para Commando Battalion during the night of 6 to 7 April 1994 in the Akajali neighhourhood near the Kanombe Military Camp").

12. As characterized by the Prosecution, the testimony which it seeks to adduce through Mr. Kambanda introduces several new elements: that the Accused personally distributed a list of names of civilian targets to his soldiers; that the targets were specifically identified as opponents of the MRND political party; and that his soldiers committed massacres on the basis of this particular list. The Prosecution has failed to offer specific references from its case showing that this evidence would not broaden the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability.

(iii) Remedy

13. The Defence requests three alternative remedies: severance of the trial of the three co-Accused; exclusion of the entirety of Jean Kambanda's testimony from consideration as against the three co-Accused; or exclusion of the specifically impugned portions of testimony as against the three co-Accused[16].

14. The Chamber observes that severance and exclusion do not represent sharply different alternatives in the circumstances of the present case. Even after severance, the three Accused would continue to be tried by the same bench, and on the basis of all of the evidence which has been heard in the joint trial up until the moment of severance. On the other hand, severance now would have the unfortunate and potentially anomalous effect of bifurcating the evidence heard between now and end of the case, including those other than Kambanda.The Chamber has previously discussed the benefits of a joint trial[17]. Where a less drastic remedy is available, it should be chosen. Excluding the improper evidence offers a remedy which is no less effective than the alternatives available in the present case. Accordingly, the Chamber shall declare inadmissible evidence which broadens the facts imputed to the Accused or the nature of his culpability.

(iv) Evidence Introduced for Credibility

15. The Prosecution argues that the matters on which it has asked, or wishes to ask, questions are independently justified by the need to test the witness's credibility, and are "built upon the prior statements" of the witness[18].

16. In order for questions on cross-examination to be permitted on this basis, there must be some basis to believe that the prior statements are, in fact, inconsistent with the witness's testimony. None of the questions can be so justified. As an initial matter, of the testimony which has been elicited so far, only the proposition about the setting up of a special brigade in Kigali is arguably inconsistent with Mr. Kambanda's prior statements[19]. In all other respects, the testimony given by the witness appears to be consistent with his prior statements. As to the areas on which questions have not yet been asked, there is no indication that the witness gave inconsistent testimony in respect of those matters during his examination-in-chief by the Defence, either expressly or implicitly. Indeed, his testimony did not venture close to the matters on which the Prosecution wishes to pose questions to test the witness's credibility. Allowing the Prosecution to venture into any matter discussed by the witness in his voluminous prior statements to the Prosecution would, in effect, lead to an unlimited crossexamination whose effect is to introduce substantive evidence on a wide range of matters. Such an approach would undermine the order of proof prescribed by Rule 85 and, as the questioning on that basis so far indicates, has little value in establishing the witness's credibility. The probative value of questions which are unrelated the examination-in-chief, or for which there is no indication of a potential inconsistency, are outweighed by their prejudicial effect.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

EXCLUDES the evidcnce of Mr. Kambanda that: (i) General Kabiligi had more power than General Bizimungu as a commander in the Rwandan Army during the period at issue in this trial; (ii) Kabiligi and General Bizimungu were informed by Kambanda that active or deserting soldiers were committing massacres; (iii) Kabiligi set up a special brigade to discipline uncontrolled elements of the Rwandan Army which were committing massacres; (iv) Kabiligi was in charge of all troops of the Rwandan Army after the flight of those forces from Rwanda; (v) Nsengiyumva procured weapons in Goma for national distribution throughout Rwanda; (vi) Paracommando soldiers killed opponents of the MRND party on the night of 6 April 1994 on the basis of a list of a names given to them by the Accused Ntabakuze.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Ntabakuze "Motion for Request of Cooperation from the Government of France Pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute", and the Addendum and Amendment thereto, filed on 8 March and 28 August 2006, respectively;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. On 8 March 2006, the Ntabakuze Defence filed a motion asking the Chamber to issue a request for cooperation to the Government of France, in particular, to > "facilitate a meeting and an interview with Colonel Grkgoire de St. Quentin with a view to calling him as a witness"[1].

The Defence and the Registry subsequently advised the Chamber that progress was being made towards arranging an interview. On 5 May and 27 June 2006, a representative of the Ntabakuze Defence interviewed Colonel de St. Quentin in accordance with procedures required by the Government of France. The Addendum and Amendment to the motion now requests an > "order to the Government of France to provide all necessary cooperation and assistance to facilitate the immediate attendance ... of Colonel Gregoire de St. Quentin, to appear as a witness before this Trial Chamber"[2].

2. Article 28 of the Statute imposes an obligation on States to > "cooperate with the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of committing serious violations of international humanitarian law".

A request to a Chamber to make an order under Article 28 must set forth the nature of the information sought; its relevance to the trial; and the efforts that have been made to obtain it. The type of assistance sought should also be defined with particularity[3].

3. The Government of France has indicated its willingness to make Colonel de St. Quentin available for a deposition by video-conference pursuant to Rule 71 (D) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence rather than allowing him to travel to Arusha to testify viva voce as is requested by the Defence[4]. France indicates that it is difficult to make Colonel de St. Quentin available on short notice, as he is the commander of a military unit on active duty[5]. The Defence acknowledges the French position, but does not support the request for a deposition, arguing that Rule 71 (A) requires that there be "exceptional circumstances". As the Defence knows of no such circumstances, it does not believe that such an application would succeed. Furthermore, Rule 71 (A) states that a deposition may be granted "at the request of either party"; the Defence argues that in the absence of such a request, no deposition may be ordered[6].

Deliberations

4. Where possible, a Trial Chamber should take the legitimate concerns of a state into account in fashioning requests pursuant to Article 28. The Government of France submits that Colonel de St. Quentin remains on active duty as the head of a military unit and that his absence would be disruptive of its proper functioning. On the other hand, the trial calendar prescribes that the presentation of the Ntabakuze case be completed by 13 October 2006.

5. The Defence correctly observes that a deposition under Rule 71 may only be granted "at the request of either party". As no party has made such a request, the Chamber may not make such an order.

6. The Chamber does, however, have the power under Rule 54 to order the hearing of testimony by video-conference where it is "in the interests of justice". This power, and the "interests of justice" standard, was first recognized before the ICTY in the Tadić case, a precedent which this Tribunal has followed[7]. The criteria for determining whether videoconference testimony is in the "interests of justice" include: the importance of the testimony; the inability or unwillingness of the witness to attend; and that a good reason has been adduced for that inability or unwillingness[8]. Rule 54 specifically provides that an order thereunder may be made by the Chamber proprio motu[9].

7. The submissions of the Government of France indicate that Colonel de St. Quentin's appearance in Arusha on short notice would interfere with the functioning of the military unit which he commands. This concern constitutes a good reason for Colonel de St. Quentin's inability to appear. Under these circumstances, and in light of the Defence's insistence on the importance of the testimony, it is in the interests of justice that the testimony be heard by video-conference. Although the Defence has made no such request, the Chamber considers this to be an appropriate mechanism for respecting the legitimate concerns of the Government of France, while ensuring that the testimony is heard in accordance with the trial schedule. Accordingly, the order shall be made proprio motu.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

RESPECTFULLY REQUESTS the Government of France to make Colonel de St. Quentin available to provide testimony in the present case by way of video-conference;

DIRECTS the Registry to transmit this decision to the relevant authorities of the Government of France and, in consultation with the parties and the Government of France, to arrange for the taking of a deposition by video-conference in accordance with this decision.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Kabiligi Defence "Motion to Exclude the Testimony of Witness XAI Relating to an Alleged Order to Kill Prisoners at Nyakenke", filed on 15 May 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 16 May 2006; and the Kabiligi Reply, filed on 29 May 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. The present motion is, in effect, a request for reconsideration of one specific element of the Chamber's "Decision on Exclusion of Testimony Outside the Scope of the Indictment" of 27 September 2005. In that decision, the Chamber excluded testimony that three RPF infiltrators were arrested and killed on the implicit orders of the Accused, but declined to exclude testimony that he > "gave a speech to soldiers under his command in which he warned of RPF infiltrators dressed as civilians and encouraged the soldiers to be 'vigilant so that the infiltrators can be captured'".[1]

2. The Defence argues that the Chamber should reconsider its decision primarily on the basis that it erred by taking into account communications other than the Indictment in deciding whether sufficiently detailed notice had been given of the evidence.[2] In the alternative, the Defence argues that

[1] Kabiligi Exclusion Decision, para. 9.

[2] Motion para. 9 ("the Trial Chamber took the position that vagueness in an Indictment can somehow by 'cured' during the trial by subsequent disclosure"); para. 11 ("The Prosecution cannot be allowed to amend its case against the Accused through even if such communications may be considered by the Chamber, no submissions were made indicating the paragraph of the Indictment to which the material fact would be relevant.[3]

3. The Defence has not raised any convincing basis for reconsideration. As to the applicable legal principles, the Appeals Chamber has recently re-affirmed that a Trial Chamber has not only a discretion, but a duty, to examine communications other than the Indictment in determining whether adequate notice of a material fact was provided:

> In reaching its judgement, a Trial Chamber can only convict the accused of crimes which are charged in the indictment. If the indictment is found to be defective because it fails to plead material facts or does not plead them with sufficient specificity, the Trial Chamber must consider whether the accused was nevertheless accorded a fair trial. In some instances, where the accused has received timely, clear and consistent information from the Prosecution detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her, the defective indictment may be deemed cured and a conviction may be entered.[4]

This in no way detracts from the importance of an indictment as the sole accusatory instrument. It does recognize, however, that in large, complex cases, not every detail of every element of evidence which will be adduced throughout a lengthy trial need be mentioned in an indictment. On the other hand, lack of specificity in an indictment may only be cured through timely, clear and consistent notice of the details of material facts which are alleged against the Accused.

4. The Trial Chamber properly directed itself to the criteria for assessing whether adequate notice was given to the Defence for this evidence to be admitted, based upon the applicable jurisprudence of both the Appeals Chamber and this Trial Chamber.[5] Contrary to the Defence submission, the Pre-Trial Brief Revision did indicate that this witness's testimony, as summarized in the Pre-Trial Brief, related to paragraphs 5.1 and 6.46 of the Indictment. Although those paragraphs are vague in relation to the evidence, the summary provided additional detail which cured the deficiency.

5. No basis has been raised to suggest that the Chamber erred in law, or misapplied that law to the facts of the case, or that the facts of the situation have changed so as to justify reconsideration.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the motion.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the Nsengiyumva Defence "Motion for the Exclusion of Evidence of Allegations Falling Outside the Indictment Pursuant to Articles 17 and 18 of the Statute of the International Tribunal and Rules 47, 50, 53 bis and 62 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence", filed on 9 May 2006; and the "Corrigendum", filed on 16 May 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 19 May 2006; and the Nsengiyumva Reply, filed on 7 June 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Nsengiyumva Defence requests that the Chamber exclude from its consideration twenty categories of Prosecution evidence on the basis that they fall outside the scope of the Indictment.[1] The Defence argues that these matters are not mentioned in the Indictment with sufficient specificity to be admissible against the Accused. The Defence accepts that vagueness in an indictment may be cured through subsequent communications from the Prosecution, but asserts that such occasions are exceptional and did not take place here.[2]

2. The Prosecution submits that the evidence in question is relevant to the Indictment. To the extent that paragraphs in the Indictment are vague in relation to the evidence, the Prosecution relies on other communications such as the Particulars of the Indictment, the Supporting Materials, and the Pre-Trial Brief to show that any such defects were cured. Additional details were provided through disclosure of witness statements and at least one motion for leave to vary the Prosecution witness list. Furthermore, the Defence should not now be able to request exclusion of evidence where it failed to register a contemporaneous objection. The Prosecution also argues that the Defence has suffered no prejudice from the alleged vagueness of the Indictment, having made submissions and presented evidence which responds directly and precisely to the Prosecution evidence which it now seeks to exclude.[3]

DELIBERATIONS

(I) Applicable Principles

3. The legal framework for determining whether evidence is inadmissible based on alleged lack of notice of a material fact has been discussed on four previous occasions by the Chamber in response to Defence motions similar to that now under consideration.[4] The first of these decisions laid the foundation for analyzing such a motion:

> Rule 89 (C) provides that "[a] Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value". To be admissible, the "evidence must be in some way relevant to an element of a crime with which the Accused is charged." The present motion complains that the evidence has no relevance to anything in the Indictment, or that some paragraphs of the Indictment to which it might be relevant are too vague to be taken into account. Some recent Appeals Chamber judgements thoroughly discuss the specificity with which an indictment must be pleaded, and the significance of other forms of Prosecution disclosure of its case. Although the question addressed in those cases was whether a conviction should be quashed because of insufficient notice of a charge in the indictment, the analysis is equally relevant to the present question, namely, whether evidence is sufficiently related to some charge in the Indictment to be admissible.

The rights of the Accused enshrined in Article 20 of the Statute impose, according to the Appeals Chamber in Kupreškić, "an obligation on the part of the Prosecution to state the material facts underpinning the charges in the indictment, but not the evidence by which such material facts are to be proven". Material facts may also be communicated to the Accused other than through the indictment:

If an indictment is insufficiently specific, Kupreškić stated that such a defect 'may, in certain circumstances cause the Appeals Chamber to reverse a conviction.' However, Kupreškić left open the possibility that a defective indictment could be cured 'if the Prosecution provides the Accused with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her.' The question whether the Prosecution has cured a defect in the indictment is equivalent to the question whether the defect has caused any prejudice to the Defence or, as the Kupreškić Appeals Judgement put it, whether the trial was rendered unfair by the defect. Kupreškić considered whether notice of the material facts that were omitted from the indictment was sufficiently communicated to the Defence in the Prosecution's Pre-Trial Brief, during disclosure of evidence, or through proceedings at trial. In this connection, the timing of such communications, the importance of the information to the ability of the Accused to prepare its defence, and the impact of the newly-disclosed material facts on the Prosecution case are relevant. As has been previously noted, 'mere service of witness statements by the [P]rosecution pursuant to the disclosure requirements' of the Rules does not suffice to inform the Defence of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial.

Whether vagueness in the indictment has been cured by subsequent disclosure involves consideration of the following factors: the consistency, clarity and specificity with which the material fact is communicated to the Accused; the novelty and incriminating nature of the new material fact; and the period of notice given to the Accused. Mention of a material fact in a witness statement does not necessarily constitute adequate notice: the Prosecution must convey that the material allegation is part of the case against the Accused. This rule recognizes that, in light of the volume of disclosure by the Prosecution in certain cases, a witness statement will not, without some other indication, adequately signal to the Accused that the allegation is part of the Prosecution case. The essential question is whether the Defence has had reasonable notice of, and a reasonable opportunity to investigate and confront, the Prosecution case.[5]

As described above, "curing" is the process by which vague or general allegations in an indictment are given specificity and clarity through communications other than the indictment itself. Only material facts which can be reasonably related to existing charges may be communicated in such a manner.[6]

4. A trial chamber not only has the power, but an obligation, to consider whether a vague provision in an indictment has been cured by timely, clear and consistent communications.[7] As stated by the Appeals Chamber in Naletilić:

In reaching its judgement, a Trial Chamber can only convict the accused of crimes which are charged in the indictment. If the indictment is found to be defective because it fails to plead material facts or does not plead them with sufficient specificity, the Trial Chamber must consider whether the accused was nevertheless accorded a fair trial. In some instances, where the accused has received timely, clear and consistent information from the Prosecution detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her, the defective indictment may be deemed cured and a conviction may be entered.[8]

In appropriate circumstances, Trial Chambers have exercised their discretion in favour of curing.[9] Decisions to do so have been expressly upheld by the Appeals Chamber.[10]

5. Failure to plead the physical perpetration of a criminal act by an accused under a count of the Indictment constitutes a defect.[11] On the other hand, "less detail may be acceptable if the 'sheer scale of the alleged crimes makes it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity in such matters as the identity of the victims and the dates for the commission of the crimes'".[12] Many acts attributed to an accused fall on the spectrum between these two extremes. Individual actions of an accused which contribute to crimes will require more specific notice than proof of the crimes themselves, where they are physically committed by others. The specificity of the notice required is proportional to the extent of the Accused's direct involvement.[13]

6. Whether a defective indictment has been cured depends on "whether the accused was in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him or her".[14] The presence of a material fact somewhere in the Prosecution disclosure does not suffice to give reasonable notice; what is required is notice that the material fact will be relied upon as part of the Prosecution case, and how.[15] In Naletilić, the Appeals Chamber distinguished between those sources of disclosure which are adequate, and those which are not:

> In assessing whether a defective indictment was cured, the issue to be determined is whether the accused was in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him or her. In making this determination, the Appeals Chamber has in some cases looked at information provided through the Prosecutor's Pre-Trial Brief or its opening statement. The Appeals Chamber considers that the list of witnesses the Prosecution intends to call at trial, containing a summary of the facts and the charges in the indictment as to which each witness will testify and including specific references to counts and relevant paragraphs in the indictment, may in some cases serve to put the accused on notice. However, the mere service of witness statements or of potential exhibits by the Prosecution pursuant to disclosure requirements does not suffice to inform an accused of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial. Finally, an accused's submissions at trial, for example, the motion for judgement of acquittal, final trial brief or closing arguments, may in some instances assist in assessing to what extent the accused was put on notice of the Prosecution's case and was able to respond to the Prosecution's allegations.[16]

The Appeals Chamber has, in effect, established a distinction between the Pre-Trial Brief and opening statement, on the one hand, which are permissible ways of giving notice of material facts; and the "mere service of witness statements", which are not.[17]

7. The Appeals Chamber has also recognized that

> "defects in an indictment … may arise at a later stage of the proceedings because the evidence turns out differently than expected".

Where this is the case, the Chamber must

> "consider whether a fair trial required an amendment of the indictment, an adjournment, or the exclusion of the evidence outside the scope of the indictment".[18]

In accordance with this reasoning, the Chamber will also entertain the possibility that the filing of a motion for the addition of a witness provides adequate notice, provided that the motion is granted and there was a sufficient delay between the filing of the motion and the appearance of the witness.[19]

8. Objections play an important role in ensuring that the trial is conducted on the basis of evidence which is relevant to the charges against the accused. The failure to voice a contemporaneous objection does not waive the Accused's rights, but results in a shifting of the burden of proof:

> In the case of objections based on lack of notice, the Defence must challenge the admissibility of evidence of material facts not pleaded in the indictment by interposing a specific objection at the time the evidence is introduced. The Defence may also file a timely motion to strike the evidence or to seek an adjournment to conduct further investigations in order to respond to the unpleaded allegation.

> [A]n accused person who fails to object at trial has the burden of proving on appeal that his ability to prepare his case was materially impaired. Where, however, the accused person objected at trial, the burden is on the Prosecution to prove on appeal that the accused's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.[20]

Accordingly, to the extent that the Defence has pointed to no specific objection concerning the evidence in question, the presumption shall be that the burden rests on the Defence to show that the lack of notice has been prejudicial to its ability to understand and respond to the evidence in question.[21]

9. The Chamber's approach in the sections which follow may be summarized as follows. Where a material fact cannot be reasonably related to the Indictment, then it shall be excluded. Where the material fact is relevant only to a vague or general allegation in the Indictment, then the Chamber will consider whether notice of the material fact was given in the Pre-Trial Brief or the opening statement, so as to cure the vagueness of the Indictment. Notice of a material fact anywhere in the Pre-Trial Brief would inform the Defence of the need to address and investigate the allegation, regardless of the specific witness who is said to be the source of the information.[22] The Pre-Trial Brief is a means of giving additional particulars concerning the Prosecution case, not only the content of individual witness's testimony. Material facts which concern the actions of the Accused personally are scrutinized more closely than general allegations of criminal conduct. Other forms of disclosure, such as witness statements or potential exhibits, are generally insufficient to put the Defence on reasonable notice. The Chamber recognizes two exceptions to this principle: first, where the Prosecution filed a motion for the addition of a witness, which was subsequently granted by the Chamber, and which stated or drew attention to the material facts on which the witness would testify; second, where a lengthy adjournment was ordered by the Chamber for the express purpose of allowing the Defence to meet newly discovered material facts.[23]

(II) APPLICATION: SPECIFIC EXCLUSION REQUESTS BASED ON LACK OF NOTICE

(a) The Butare, Rubavu and Mudende Incidents (Witnesses XBH, XBG and XBM)

10. The Defence objects to testimony from Witness XBH that: (i) the Accused attended a meeting in Butare with Colonel Bagosora and Captain Nizeyimana where they drew up a list of people to be killed; (ii) Tutsis on that list were targeted on a priority basis during killings in the commune of Nyamyumba, Butare préfecture; and (iii) the Accused handed over Tutsis to Interahamwe in Rubavu commune in or near Gisenyi Town who led them away to be killed.[24]

11. Witness XBH was the object of three written motions before and after his testimony: a Prosecution motion requesting leave to add his name to the witness list under Rule 73 bis (E); a Defence motion requesting that his proposed testimony concerning the drawing up of lists be excluded in advance; and finally, a Defence motion requesting that Witness XBH be recalled for further cross-examination on the basis of a statement given by the witness after his testimony, upon which the Defence wished to question the witness.[25] The combined effect of the Chamber's decisions on the first two motions was to allow the Prosecution to call Witness XBH, and to authorize questions, in particular, concerning the drawing up of lists in Butare. The Chamber found that no prejudice would arise from such questioning in light of the period of notice of the witness's testimony, and that the addition of the witness was in the interests of justice under Rule 73 bis (E). Furthermore, the Chamber specifically held that the testimony concerning the drawing up of lists was relevant to paragraphs 5.1, 5.25 and 5.29 of the Indictment.[26] The Chamber is of the view that disclosure of a witness statement in conjunction with a motion for leave to allow that witness to appear before the Chamber, places the Defence on notice that the matters mentioned in the statement may be elicited during the witness's testimony.[27] Disclosure of a witness statement under these circumstances is entirely different from a massive disclosure of witness statements without any guidance as to the relevance of those statements to the trial.

[22] Although the Pre-Trial Brief is 168 pages long, it does not constitute the type of disclosure which could lead to material facts being buried amongst a great mass of detail.
[23] Paras. 8 and 9 of the present decision substantially correspond to paras. 7 and 10 of the Bagosora et al., Decision on Ntabakuze Motion for Exclusion of Evidence (TC), 29 June 2006. An interlocutory appeal on these points is now pending before the Appeals Chamber. Bagosora et al., Decision on Request for Certification of Decision on Exclusion of Evidence (TC), 14 July 2006. The Chamber has considered the parties' submissions concerning the Prosecution's alleged non-compliance with a previous decision in this trial requiring the Prosecution to provide further particulars to the Indictment. Motion, paras. 11-20; Response, paras. 6-8; Reply, paras. 16-21. The Chamber does not consider it necessary to resolve this issue; the requests for exclusion will be examined in light of the principles enunciated in this section.
[24] Motion, paras. 50-53.

12. The Chamber considers that notice of all three material facts objected to by the Defence was sufficient. Even if notice was for some reason inadequate at the time of the witness's first appearance, the witness was recalled for further questioning more than two years later.[28] If the Defence believed that it had suffered any prejudice due to lack of notice at the time of his first appearance, the occasion of his recall offered an opportunity to cross-examine the witness in light of subsequent investigations on these matters. Indeed, an adjournment is precisely one of the remedies foreseen by the Appeals Chamber to ensure that > "the Defence has had reasonable notice of, and a reasonable opportunity to investigate and confront, the Prosecution case".[29]

The Defence having had an ample opportunity to investigate and confront the material facts offered by Witness XBH, the evidence is admissible.

13. The Defence also objects to the testimony of Witnesses XBG and XBM concerning the Accused's involvement in massacres at Mudende University.[30] Witness XBG testified that Nsengiyumva sent soldiers and gendarmes to the University to encourage the killing of Tutsis.[31] Witness XBM stated that Nsengiyumva arrived at the University in a military jeep, gave orders for Hutus to clear the campus and left before the subsequent massacre of Tutsi students.[32]

14. The Prosecution motion for leave to add Witnesses XBG and XBM to the witness list makes specific reference to their expected testimony concerning the Accused's role in massacres at Mudende University. This provided clear and unequivocal notice that the Prosecution intended to rely on these material facts as proof of the allegations in paragraphs 6.11 and 6.22 of the Indictment concerning the Accused's involvement in killing civilian Tutsis, and that he gave orders to militias to carry out such killings. On this basis, the Chamber finds this evidence to be admissible.

(b) Busasamana Killings

15. The Defence objects to testimony of Witness XBG that the Accused was personally involved in a massacre at Busasamana Parish which allegedly took place shortly after the massacre at Mudende University in May 1994.[33] The witness testified that the Accused arrived at Busasamana, addressed a group of approximately 2,000 Interahamwe and then stayed on the scene giving orders as the Interahamwe attacked the chapel.[34]

16. The Prosecution's opening statement substantially conveys the content of this testimony:

> In Gisenyi, you will hear evidence of an efficiently executed scorched earth programme of killing Tutsis, personally supervised by Lieutenant-Colonel Nsengiyumva … You will hear evidence of killings done at the Catholic diocesan parish of Nyundo … You will hear similar stories of killings done by Interahamwe and soldiers in the parish of Busasamana.[35]

The statement of Witness XBG, which was communicated to the Defence in conjunction with the Prosecution motion discussed above for amendment of its witness list, placed the Defence on notice of more precise details as to the nature of this material fact. These communications gave the Defence sufficiently specific notice of the material facts which are relevant to the general allegations in paragraphs 6.11 and 6.22 of the Indictment concerning the Accused's involvement in killing civilian Tutsis, and his orders to militias to engage in such killings. On this basis, the evidence is admissible.

(c) Bisesero Killings

17. The Defence seeks to exclude the testimony of Witnesses Omar Serushago and ABQ concerning allegations that the Accused sent Interahamwe to Bisesero Hills in Kibuye to attack Tutsi refugees.[36]

18. Paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment alleges that Nsengiyumva was ordered by Edouard Karemera to send troops to the Bisesero area in Kibuye. The Indictment was accompanied by a document entitled "Supporting Material", which consists of specific and focused excerpts from statements of prospective witnesses in relation to each paragraph of the Indictment. This document provided the Defence with a clear indication of the material facts which the Prosecution would present at trial. It reproduces the letter from Karemera in its entirety as well as a summary of anticipated testimony for Witness FF, which describes the killing of Tutsi civilians in Bisesero Hills.[37] In addition, Omar Serushago's summary of anticipated testimony in the Pre-Trial Brief indicates that he would testify to Nsengiyumva's involvement in a meeting to discuss an intervention in Kibuye.[38]

19. The Defence argues that paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment and the proposed testimony of Omar Serushago refer to "troops", not Interahamwe.[39] However, paragraph 4.5 of the Indictment does allege generally that the Accused had "authority over the MRND militia, the Interahamwe, and the CDR militia, the Impuzamugambi" by virtue of his rank, previous positions, and personal relations. The Chamber does not accept, in light of the totality of the Indictment, that the Defence would have been prejudiced in its investigations or that it would have misapprehended the nature of the material facts alleged against the Accused. The Supporting Material and Pre-Trial Brief provide additional detail on the involvement of Interahamwe in these events. On this basis, the evidence is admissible.

(d) Killings at Roadblocks in Kiyovu

20. The Defence objects to testimony by Witness DAS that Nsengiyumva appeared at roadblocks in the Kiyovu neighbourhood of Kigali while killings were being carried out by soldiers and Interahamwe.[40] The testimony contains no allegation that Nsengiyumva actually participated in the killings or gave orders to kill, but Witness DAS gave no indication that the Accused took exception to the behaviour he was witnessing.[41]

21. The Chamber rejects the Prosecution assertion that a reading of the Indictment as a whole provided notice to the Accused of these allegations. The amended version of paragraph 6.22 of the Indictment alleges that the Accused

> "ordered militiamen, in a continuous and ongoing fashion, to eliminate Tutsis at roadblocks and to track them down and exterminate them".[42]

The Pre-Trial Brief furnished further detail, stating that Witness DAS would testify to killings at roadblocks in Kiyovu and his observations of the Accused during these killings. The Chamber finds that the Indictment is sufficiently specific in respect of these allegations; even if this were not the case, the Pre-Trial Brief would have cured any vagueness in the Indictment.[43] Accordingly, the evidence is admissible.

(e) Meetings to Plan and Preparation of Lists

22. The Defence seeks to exclude the testimony of Witnesses XBH, ABQ, DO, XXQ and HV regarding the production and use of lists of people to be killed.[44] Witness XBH testified that the Accused had actual involvement in the creation of such lists and that he distributed copies of the lists to several named individuals.[45] Witness ABQ recounted a meeting at which Nsengiyumva read Tutsi names from a list and ordered that these individuals be killed.[46] Witness DO gave testimony about individuals who were killed pursuant to a list given by the Accused.[47] Witness XXQ talked about the Accused's involvement in a group known as AMASASU and a list drafted by the group defining the enemy.[48] Finally, Witness HV described masked soldiers reading names from a list and asking those persons named to come forward.[49]

23. Paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment alleges that, between 1990 and 1994, the Accused conspired with Bagosora and others to plan the extermination of Tutsis, a plan which included "the preparation of lists of people to be eliminated". Nsengiyumva is alleged under paragraph 5.26 to have had responsibility for supervising the establishment of these lists and for updating them. Paragraph 5.29 alleges that military and Interahamwe carried out massacres of Tutsis and moderate Hutus on the basis of these pre-established lists.

24. Further precision in respect of the direct involvement of the Accused was provided by subsequent communications to the Defence. For the reasons discussed in section (a) above, the Chamber finds that the Accused had sufficient notice of Witness XBH's allegations, not only concerning the drawing up of a list, but also its use in the killing of Tutsis in Gisenyi.[50] It would have been evident from this information and references in the Pre-Trial Brief that the Accused was involved in the distribution of these lists, not only their preparation. Witness DO's testimony is also admissible on that basis.[51] The testimony of Witness ABQ is also admissible. Indeed, the Prosecution submits that the meeting described by Witness ABQ is alleged at paragraph 6.16 of the Indictment.[52] The Supporting Material provided additional details, through a statement attributed to Witness OQ:

> The next day, April 7, 1994 I saw Colonel Anatole Nsengiyumva come to the house of one man who was our neighbour called Barnabe Samvura … Colonel Anatole Nsengiyumva had a list of names of people who had to be killed immediately in Gisenyi. I saw him hold the list and he read and distributed the list to some of the CDR Party leaders. I heard Colonel Nsengiyumva instruct CDR people to start killing people. He said "start the work" [sic] Colonel Anatole Nsengiyumva parked his military car in front of Barnabe's home near my family house. I heard him say "start the work here." That "here" was … house. I saw him pointing at … house. Colonel Nsengiyumva gave orders for the killings to start … house. After Colonel Anatole Nsengiyumva gave the orders, CDR members and some other Interahamwe who joined the meeting later, started blowing whistles. As the crowd got bigger, I managed to escape. That day, CDR members killed … Together, six ... were killed in the presence of Colonel Anatole Nsengiyumva. I was hiding in a house near by and saw him standing there near our house.[53]

The specificity provided in both the Indictment and Supporting Material was further reinforced in the Prosecutor's motion to add Witness ABQ to its witness list.[54] On this basis, the Chamber finds that sufficient notice was given of the material facts concerning the involvement of the Accused in the preparation and distribution of lists, as described by these witnesses. The evidence is admissible.

25. In respect of evidence specifically concerning AMASASU, although the Indictment does not mention the group by name, paragraphs 1.13 to 1.16 refer to "prominent civilian and military figures", sharing an "extremist Hutu ideology", working together from as early as 1990 to pursue a "strategy of ethnic division and incitement to violence". According to paragraph 1.15, their strategy included "the preparation of lists of people to be eliminated" and "the assassination of certain political opponents". In addition, the Supporting Material quotes an expert witness as saying that

> "one notes in particular [within the armed forces] the creation of the AMASASU in January 1993 which demanded the establishment of a cleansed army and the elimination of all RPF allies".[55]

Consequently, and given the rather general character of Witness XXQ's evidence, the Chamber finds the testimony to be admissible.

(f) Masaka Killings

26. The Defence seeks to exclude the testimony of Witness DBN, who stated that the Accused travelled to Camp Kanombe, obtained soldiers from Ntabakuze and then oversaw killings at Masaka.[56]

---

[51] To the extent that notice of "distribution" as distinct from the creation of such lists would have been helpful to the Defence, this element was communicated, for example, through the Pre-Trial Brief, Summary of Witness OQ: "Witness saw a list of names of people who had to be killed being distributed by Colonel Nsengiyumva to members of the CDR political party and the Interahamwe."

The Chamber granted the Prosecutor's request to add Witness ABQ, finding it to be in the "interests of justice". [55] Supporting Material, pp. 13-14 (excerpt from report of André Guichaoua).

[56] Motion, para. 68.

27. Paragraphs 6.33 and 6.36 of the Indictment plead that the Accused, by virtue of his position, exercised authority over members of the Forces Armées Rwandaises (FAR), their officers and militiamen, and that these subordinates committed massacres with Nsengiyumva's knowledge. The Pre-Trial Brief provides more detail through a summary of Witness DBN's anticipated testimony:

> Saw Nsengiyumva at the camp. He came to ask Ntabakuze for some soldiers to eliminate some people suspected of being Inkontanyi in Masaka forest. Few minutes later soldiers went to Masaka forest. On their return soldiers said they had found Tutsi in the banana plantation and that they were killed by soldiers.[57]

28. The Indictment and the Pre-Trial Brief, taken together, reasonably informed the Defence of this allegation, and the evidence is admissible.

(g) Killings of Tutsi Women at Gisenyi Roadblock

29. The Defence states in its motion that "the allegations by Witness DCH concerning the alleged killings of Tutsi women at a roadblock in Gisenyi are not pleaded in the Indictment."[58]

30. The Defence pleading is deficient. The testimony in question – at least at the reference provided by the Defence – makes no allegation that the Accused was personally involved in the event described.[59] Under these circumstances, the Chamber considers that paragraph 6.21 of the Indictment provides adequate notice of this material fact. Even if the evidence were to more directly implicate the Accused, the Chamber notes that the Indictment alleges in paragraphs 6.21 and 6.22 that roadblocks were set up in Gisenyi préfecture between April and July 1994 and that killings took place there under the supervision of the Accused. Particulars in support of paragraph 6.22 further allege that the Accused "ordered militiamen, in a continuous and ongoing fashion, to eliminate Tutsis at roadblocks…"

(h) Documents Linked to Planning

31. The Nsengiyumva Defence objects to the testimony of Prosecution expert Alison Des Forges concerning to sets of documents referred to as the "MELVERN Documents" and the "FARZZZ Documents". The Defence argues that "her particulars are not mentioned in the indictment or in the expert report" and that her testimony was "outside her field of expertise and in respect of which she lacks first-hand knowledge".[60]

32. The Chamber considers that the arguments raised in the motion concern the probative value of the expert's testimony, rather than exclusion. No proper basis for exclusion having been articulated, the request is rejected.

(i) Death Squads and Networks

33. The Defence seeks the exclusion of the testimony of Witnesses Filip Reyntjens, ZF, XXQ and XBM concerning the Accused's alleged involvement in death squads and networks such as the AMASASU.[61]

34. Although the Indictment makes no reference to death squads and networks by name, paragraphs 1.13 to 1.16 do mention "prominent civilian and military figures", who shared an "extremist Hutu ideology" and who worked together from as early as 1990 to pursue a "strategy of ethnic division and incitement to violence", which included the use of lists to target and kill political opponents. Further detail was provided in the Supporting Material: one expert witness discussed the group AMASASU, of which the Accused is alleged to have been a member,[62] and Witness OA claimed that "[e]veryone knows that Anatole Nsengiyumva was one of the leaders of the death squad …"[63] On the basis of the Indictment and the Supporting Material, the Chamber finds that the Accused was reasonably informed that these general allegations were part of the case against him and admits the testimony of Witnesses Reyntjens, ZF, XXQ and XBM in this regard.

(j) Sending Interahamwe to Kigali by Bus

35. The Defence objects to the testimony of Witness DCH, who saw Nsengiyumva at a stadium in Gisenyi as Interahamwe were loaded onto buses bound for Kigali.[64]

36. The Indictment pleads generally that Nsengiyumva was involved in the training and supervision of militia groups in Gisenyi, including the Interahamwe.[65] In support of paragraph 5.16 of the Indictment, the Supporting Material discloses the following information, based on a statement of Witness ON:

> Anatole Nsengiyumva was also the co-ordinator of the Interahamwe in the préfecture. He allegedly supervised the distribution of weapons to administrative authorities and civilians well before the genocide. Moreover, his work as co-ordinator also consisted of recruiting militiamen. At a certain point, the young recruits whom everyone knew, went to receive paramilitary training in weapon handling. They were taken to the Gishwati forest and to Mutura commune. My Hutu colleague were among those who received the training … On several occasions, I saw Anatole Nsengiyumva accompany bus convoys of Interahamwe going to their training grounds.[66]

37. The Pre-Trial Brief contains numerous references to the Accused's involvement in the training and deployment of Interahamwe.[67] Taken together, the Indictment, Supporting Material and Pre-Trial Brief provided the Accused with adequate notice that such allegations would form part of the case against him and need not be pleaded with greater specificity. Moreover, the presence of the Accused at the stadium is not, in itself, highly incriminating. Consequently, the evidence is admissible.

(k) Meetings to Plan the Killings of Tutsis and Meeting of Survivors

38. The Defence requests exclusion of three categories of evidence related to this general topic: (i) Witness ABQ's testimony concerning a meeting at Samvura's house, chaired by the Accused, on 7 April at which the participants received orders to attack Tutsis which led immediately thereafter to an attack on the home of a certain Mbungo; (ii) testimony of Witness XBG, OAF and OAB concerning the role of the Accused at meetings in Gisenyi where people were encourage to kill Tutsis; and (iii) testimony of Witness ABQ concerning a meeting of Tutsi survivors at Umuganda Stadium in Gisenyi, attended by Nsengiyumva, whose purpose was to expose the survivors to further attacks.[68]

For paragraph 5.16 of the Indictment, additional information was provided by means of particulars to the effect that the Accused's involvement in the training consisted of "providing military instructors" and that trainings took place between 1 June 1993 and 31 July 1994 at Gishwati, Bigogwe, in Mutara Commune and at the Umuganda Stadium. Particulars, para. 5.16.

[68] Motion, paras. 81-87 ; T. 6 September 2004 pp. 8-9, 14-19.

39. The Indictment alleges at paragraphs 5.1 that the Accused and Samvura conspired to exterminate Tutsis and "organized, ordered and participated in the massacres". Paragraph 6.16, which the Prosecution asserts is the same meeting discussed by Witness ABQ, further pleads:

> At one of those meetings, Anatole Nsengiyumva gave the order to start the massacres, designating a specific location where a Tutsi family had sought refuge. In the minutes that followed that order, the militiamen executed the members of the family in Anatole Nsengiyumva's presence.

The excerpts in the Supporting Material in relation to paragraph 6.16 state that the meeting was held on 7 April at Samvura's house, and that the Accused instructed "CDR people to start killing people".[69] Furthermore, the motion to add Witness ABQ to the Prosecution witness list, which was subsequently granted by the Chamber, offered a detailed account of the witness's expected testimony concerning the conduct of the Accused at a meeting at Samvura's house on 7 April, including his role in the subsequent attack.[70] The Indictment itself provided sufficiently specific notice of this allegation. To the extent that there is any lack of specificity, the additional materials provided clear, consistent and timely notice of the testimony, and its relevance to the Indictment.

40. Paragraph 6.16 states that the Accused "chaired meetings at which he ordered the militiamen to kill the Tutsi." Paragraph 6.22 states that "[b]etween 8 April and mid-July 1994, Anatole Nsengiyumva ordered militiamen and soldiers to exterminate the civilian Tutsi population and its 'accomplices'". Paragraph 6.14 makes specific reference to the distribution of weapons. The Supporting Material offers further details concerning specific meetings at which the Accused is alleged to have been present and his conduct. The summaries of testimony of Witnesses OAB and XAS in the Pre-Trial Brief give more details about specific meetings. The motion for the addition of Witness ABQ offers a detailed summary of the testimony expected from the witness, and the charges in the Indictment to which it is relevant.[71] That motion, which was subsequently granted by the Chamber, indicates that Witness ABQ would be called to give testimony about a meeting at Samvura's house on the morning of 7 April, at which the Accused is alleged to have exhorted the participants to kill Tutsis more quickly. The motion for the addition of Witness XBG indicates that the witness's expected testimony concerns "distribution of weapons to the militia, the Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi".[72] The Indictment itself provided sufficiently specific notice of this allegation. To the extent that there is any lack of specificity, the additional materials provided clear, consistent and timely notice of the testimony, and its relevance to the Indictment.

41. The same cannot be said, however, concerning Witness ABQ's evidence concerning a meeting at Umuganda Stadium in May 1994 to which Tutsi civilians were lured with promises of security. According to Witness ABQ, Nsengiyumva spoke to the refugees. Shortly after his departure, a group of Interahamwe arrived and took the Tutsis away to their deaths.[73] A specific contemporaneous objection was raised by the Defence, and was noted by the Chamber.[74]

42. The Chamber is of the view that this evidence is inadmissible. Although the Indictment does make general allegations about the Accused's role in killings of civilians, there is no allegation resembling this meeting or this particular type of conduct. Furthermore, the Prosecution failed to point to any timely, clear and consistent communications which would cure the vagueness of the Indictment in relation to this evidence. The Prosecution's reference to evidence of Defence witnesses does not, in the circumstances, provide an adequate indication that the Defence had sufficient notice of this material fact.[75] This evidence is excluded.

(l) Meetings at Gisenyi Scouts Camp and Butotori Site

43. The Defence objects to testimony of Witness DCH that the Accused participated in three meetings in Gisenyi: two meetings in 1992 or 1993 involving the Accused and other high-ranking army officers and politicians at Butotori and then, the next day, at the Hotel Meridien; and a meeting in June 1994 at the Gisenyi Scouts Camp during which Minister Rafiki Hyacinthe issued orders to kill Tutsis.[76] Aside from alleging Nsengiyumva's presence at these meetings, Witness DCH did not attribute any orders or behaviour to him. On the other hand, the presence of the Accused at these meetings might imply agreement with some of the views expressed during those meetings.

44. The paragraphs of the Indictment cited by the Prosecution are only vaguely relevant to the evidence in question. Further, the Prosecution has been unable to point to any reference in the Supporting Material to the Indictment, the Pre-Trial Brief, or the opening statement which gives notice of these events with any greater specificity. The Prosecution relies on references to this evidence in a statement of Witness DCH and a statement of Witness ZF, both of which appear to have been routinely disclosed by the Prosecution in accordance with their obligations under the Rules. The only connection between these statements and the Pre-Trial Brief is that the "Pre-Trial Brief Revision" indicates that Witness DCH and other witnesses will testify concerning paragraph 6.33 of the Indictment, which refers to a conspiracy amongst political and military authorities to exterminate the Tutsi population. The summary of Witness DCH's testimony, annexed to the Pre-Trial Brief, contains no reference to these meetings.

45. The Chamber concludes that the vagueness of the Indictment in relation to these meetings has not been cured by timely, clear and consistent notice of the material fact to which Witness DCH testified.

(m) Killings at Mutura Commune

46. The Defence seeks to exclude the testimony of Witnesses XBM and XBG concerning killings that occurred across Mutura Commune.[77]

47. For the reasons expressed in section (a) above, this request is denied.

(n) Killing of Bagogwe Tutsis

48. The Defence objects to the testimony of Witnesses DCH and HV about killings of Bagogwe Tutsis.[78] Witness DCH asserted that the Accused was present when bodies of Bagogwe Tutsis were displayed in a vehicle outside the Gisenyi préfecture office.[79] This incident took place sometime between 1992 and 1993.[80] Witness HV testified that, on 8 April 1994, a crowd of people descended onto the campus of Mudende University with machetes, sharpened bamboo and clubs and killed the Bagogwe Tutsis who had taken refuge there.[81]

[78] Motion, paras. 94-95.
[79] T. 23 June 2004 pp. 41-43. According to the witness, the bodies were displayed to "serve as a lesson" to Hutus of the value of Tutsi lives.
[80] T. 23 June 2004 pp. 38, 43.
[81] T. 23 September 2004 pp. 25-26.

49. Though the Indictment mentions the Bagogwe Tutsis as a group targeted by civilian and military authorities, it makes no specific reference to the particular incident described by Witness DCH.[82] The Pre-Trial Brief, however, provides additional details in the form of the summaries of the testimony of Witness OAB and OD, both of which mention the killings of Bigogwe Tutsi prior to 1994 as part of the Prosecution case.[83] Specifically, the summary of Witness OAB states that the witness "saw bodies of Tutsi massacred in Bigogwe and transported in a pickup escorted by Bizimana's soldiers".[84] Consequently, the Chamber finds that the Accused had notice of this allegation and admits the evidence. As previously discussed, the fact that the summary of Witness DCH does not also contain this allegation does not diminish the notice given by virtue of the Pre-Trial Brief. Such notice of a material fact anywhere in the Pre-Trial Brief would inform the Defence of the need to address and investigate the allegation, regardless of the specific witness from whom the Prosecution elicits the evidence in support thereof.

50. The testimony of Witness HV is also admissible.[85] Although no mention of massacres at Mudende University can be found in the Indictment, the summary for Witness HV contained in the Pre-Trial Brief provided the following information:

> Witness will state that following the announcement of the President's death, smoke engulfed the entire campus and the witness saw villagers running to take refugee [sic] at campus. On 8th April 1994 the witness saw soldiers armed with guns and wearing red caps and multicoloured but predominantly green clothes together with villagers armed with machetes, sticks, clubs and sharp bamboo, storm into classes where Tutsi had taken refuge and massacred all of them.[86]

To the extent that allegations in the Indictment concerning the Accused's alleged role in the killing of Tutsi civilians are vague, the Pre-Trial Brief provided timely, clear and consistent information that the Prosecution intended to rely on this material fact.

(o) Installation of the Radio RTLM Antenna and Incitement Messages

51. The Defence seeks to exclude the testimony of Witnesses XBM and DBN concerning the installation of an RTLM antenna and its subsequent broadcasts.[87] Witness XBM testified that the Accused urged people "to separate the wheat from the chaff" at the inauguration of the new RTLM antenna.[88] Witness DBN then described messages broadcast on RTLM, which were aimed at inciting the population to violence against the Tutsi population.[89]

52. The Indictment alleges that incitement of the population to hatred of the Tutsi was a fundamental part of the plan of genocide.[90] As part of the plan, prominent figures from the President's circle set up RTLM to ensure widespread dissemination of calls to violence.[91] The Prosecution further elaborated upon this allegation in its opening statement:

[84] Pre-Trial Brief, Appendix A, p. 105.

> Your honours, they gave support and assistance to the hate radio, RTLM, in its propaganda of fear and hatred of Tutsis and Hutus opposed to the MRND party. They also gave support and assistance to the hate radio RTLM in its incitement of attacks against these civilian targets.[92]

53. The Pre-Trial Brief further suggested that RTLM would be an important issue in the case. It alleged that Nsengiyumva was a shareholder in RTLM and that RTLM was a "central instrument in the genocide as it happened and before".[93] Summaries of anticipated testimony of Witnesses DBN and Kambanda in the Pre-Trial Brief as well as potential exhibits all make reference to RTLM.[94] Furthermore, the Prosecution motion for the addition of Witness XBM to the witness list indicates that he would testimony concerning anti-Tutsi statements by the Accused "during public meetings and rallies held in Gisenyi".[95] Although there is no explicit reference to the inauguration of the RTLM antenna, the Defence would at least have been placed on notice that it should look closely at the statement of the proposed statement to understand the material facts to which the proposed witness would testify. Page 5 of Witness Statement XBM-1 provides a detailed description of the Accused's conduction on that occasion, and there can be no doubt that, in responding to the Prosecution motion and its subsequent preparations, that the Defence would have understood that this evidence was part of the Prosecution case, and its relevance to the Indictment.

54. In the Chamber's view, the Indictment is itself sufficiently specific concerning the significance of RTLM broadcasts for the evidence to be admissible on that basis alone. To the extent that there may any vagueness concerning the Accused's speech at the inauguration of the RTLM antenna, adequate notice was provided by other communications as to justify its admission.

(p) Orders to Kill Former Director of School Printing House

55. The Defence challenges the testimony of Witness OAB that the Accused issued orders in June 1994 to have the former director of the school printing house executed.[96]

56. The Indictment makes general allegations that the Accused issued orders to militiamen and soldiers to exterminate Tutsis in paragraphs 6.16, 6.22, and 6.23.[97] Paragraph 6.28 alleges that in June 1994, Nsengiyumva participated in a meeting in Gisenyi at which "Joseph Nzirorera and Juvénal Uwilingiyimana took note of the names of the Tutsi and moderate Hutu who had come from other prefectures. They drew up a list of people to eliminate, which they handed over to the Interahamwe." Amongst the Supporting Material underlying this paragraph is a statement from Omar Serushago, which states in particular that during the meeting "we were given a list of people to be killed including Stanis Simbizi, the manager of the school print shop in Kigali". The Chamber does not consider the Indictment to be defective in relation to the evidence and, even if it were, the notice provided by the Supporting Materials would have provided timely, clear and consistent notice of the material fact so as to cure any deficiency.

(q) Training of Militia

57. The Defence seeks to exclude the testimony of Witnesses XBM and ABQ concerning the Accused's personal involvement in the training of militia.[98] Witness XBM stated that the Accused provided the programme for trainings and spoke as part of these trainings.[99] Witness ABQ also heard the Accused speak as part of a training program.[100]

58. Paragraphs 5.14 to 5.16 of the Indictment describe Nsengiyumva's close involvement in and supervision of the training of militia groups.[101] The Supporting Material provided further detail regarding Nsengiyumva's training activities in Gisenyi:

> Anatole Nsengiyumva was also the co-ordinator of the Interahamwe in the préfecture. He allegedly supervised the distribution of weapons to administrative authorities and civilians well before the genocide. Moreover, his work as co-ordinator also consisted of recruiting militiamen. At a certain point, the young recruits whom everyone knew, went to receive paramilitary training in weapon handling. ... On several occasions, I saw Anatole Nsengiyumva accompany bus convoys of Interahamwe going to their training grounds. Most of the militiamen were dressed in civilian clothes and wore hats with CDR insignia.[102]

59. The Indictment and Supporting Material gave the Accused sufficient notice that his direct involvement in the training of militia groups would form part of the case against him. Consequently, the evidence is admissible.

(r) Distribution of Weapons

60. The Defence asks the Chamber to exclude the testimony of five witnesses relating to Nsengiyumva's alleged involvement in the distribution of weapons at various times and locations.[103] Witness XBM testified that Nsengiyumva, along with Jean-Bosco Barayagwiza, took firearms from his vehicle and distributed them to approximately 50 people.[104] Witness Omar Serushago testified that the Accused was in command of a camp in Gisenyi where he handed out weapons to Interahamwe.[105] Witness XXQ indicated that the AMASASU group, of which the Accused was allegedly a member, was involved in the distribution of weapons as part of the planning for the genocide.[106] Witness ZF described weapons brought from the Seychelles and distributed to militia at Gisenyi stadium.[107] Witness OAF testified that Nsengiyumva was present while boxes of grenades were unloaded and distributed by civilians and soldiers.[108]

61. The Indictment refers repeatedly to the Accused's direct participation in the distribution of weapons, including several specific occasions when he allegedly gave weapons to Interahamwe and militiamen.[109] The Supporting Material provided additional detail on these allegations, as based on statements given by Witnesses ON, EB, DO, OX, OY and ZF.[110] Numerous witness summaries in the Pre-Trial Brief also mentioned the Accused's alleged involvement in the distribution of weapons, [110] Supporting Material, pp. 59, 62-63, 97, 99, and 104. Witness ON would purportedly say that the Accused "supervised the distribution of weapons" before the events of 1994. Witnesses EB, DO, OX, and OY described events where the Accused allegedly unloaded weapons for later distribution, gave orders for distribution of weapons, and distributed weapons himself.

including many eyewitness observations of the Accused.[111] These allegations are sufficiently detailed to give notice to the Accused of the testimony of Witnesses Serushago, XXQ and ZF.

62. Sufficient notice of the testimony of Witness OAF, where distribution of weapons is alleged in the presence of Nsengiyumva, was provided by the Supporting Material to paragraph 6.16 of the Indictment:

> [O]n the same April 7, 1994, Colonel Anatole Nsengiyumva called a meeting at the taxi park in Gisenyi … There were so many Interahamwe at this meeting. There were boxes and [sic] boxes of grenades and guns at this meeting place. I saw them. Later, I saw Captain Bizimuremyi open boxes of guns and grenades with Colonel Nsengiyumva, Bernard Munyagishari, Omari and the rest of the people present. I saw Bernard Munyagishari, Omari Thomas, Colonel Nsengiyumva etc hand over so many guns and grenades to the Interahamwe at this meeting. Captain Bizimuyemyi and Colonel Nsengiyumva supervised the distribution of these arms in general may be because they were military officers and knew all about arms. After thes[e] arms and grenades were distributed, the Interahamwe went out and started killing Tutsis and moderate Hutus.[112]

63. Notice was also provided for the testimony of Witness XBM through the Prosecution's motion to add the witness, which stated that the witness had first-hand information about Bagosora and Nsengiyumva distributing weapons to the militia.[113] All of the evidence in this category is admissible as relevant to the Indictment.

(s) Rape Allegations

64. The Defence objects to the testimony of Witness ZF that several members of the Interahamwe, including Omar Serushago, had a house where they brought young Tutsi girls to rape and then kill.[114]

65. The Indictment makes allegations of sexual assaults and other crimes in several places.[115] Specifically, paragraph 6.24 states:

> Between April and July 1994, Bernard Munyagishari, his group of militiamen and Omar Serushago's group of militiamen abducted, confined, raped, sexually assaulted and committed other crimes of sexual nature against Tutsi woman [sic] and girls.

66. The Supporting Material elaborated on this paragraph with the anticipated testimony of Witness ZF:

> As regards sex crimes, I can tell you that it was common knowledge that several militiamen would rape Tutsi girls and then kill them … I also remember that Damas, one of the militiamen I mentioned earlier, has [sic] a house in Gisenyi where he took and kept girls for a while before executing them… He said … that the house was used by himself, Omar and Thomas … for keeping people, some of them young, and rape them before executing them …[116]

The summaries of witnesses OAB, OAE, OB, OF, PA, XXA, XXF and Serushago describe the distribution of weapons, while those of Witnesses OJ, OO, OQ, OY, PC, PW, XAS and Ruggiu describe personal observations of the Accused engaged in the distribution of weapons.

67. Additional detail was also provided in the Pre-Trial Brief through the anticipated testimony of Witnesses EB, OAM, OAO, and Omar Serushago.[117] Through the Indictment, Supporting Material and Pre-Trial Brief, the Accused had sufficient notice that this allegation would form part of the case against him, and the evidence is admissible.

(t) Killings of Other Persons

68. The Defence requests the exclusion of testimony by Witnesses OAB, OAF, and ZF, each of whom gave testimony that the Accused gave orders on a specific occasion for precisely identified individuals to be killed.[118] The three individuals concerned are Saad; Thomas, and Tegeli.

69. Where the Accused is alleged to have given precise orders for the killing of specific individuals, the obligation to provide precisions as to the circumstances thereof is at its highest. The Prosecution has failed to provide any references to sufficiently detailed paragraphs of the Indictment, or to communications outside of the Indictment, which would have given the Defence notice of the specific occasions in question. Accordingly, the Chamber excludes the evidence.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion in part.

DECLARES the following evidence pieces of evidence inadmissible:

1. Witness ABQ's testimony that the Accused participated in a meeting of survivors at Umuganda Stadium in May 1994 and that the survivors were later killed by Interahamwe;
2. Witness DCH's testimony about two meetings in Gisenyi in 1992 or 1993 of top political and military leaders, the first held at Butotori and the second held at the Hotel Meridien;
3. Witness DCH's testimony concerning a meeting in June 1994 at the Gisenyi Scouts Camp during which Minister Rafiki Hyacinthe issued orders to kill Tutsis;
4. Witness XBM's testimony about meetings in Gisenyi préfecture, with the exception of a meeting at Méridien Hotel in May 1994 which is admissible; and
5. The testimonies of Witnesses OAB, OAF, and ZF that the Accused issued orders for the killing of Saad, Thomas, and Tegeli, respectively.

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States Between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively), is seized of the "Ntabakuze Interlocutory Appeal on Questions of Law Raised by the 29 June 2006 Trial Chamber I 'Decision on Ntabakuze Motion for Exclusion of Evidence'", filed by Aloys Ntabakuze on 20 July 2006 ("Interlocutory Appeal" and "Appellant", respectively).

I. Procedural History

2. On 28 March 2006, the Appellant filed a "Motion for the Exclusion of Evidence of Allegations falling outside the Scope of the Indictment" ("Motion"),[1] requesting that Trial Chamber I exclude from its consideration seventeen categories of evidence as irrelevant to the Indictment. On 29 June 2006, the Trial Chamber granted the Motion in part, partially excluding three of the challenged categories of evidence, but denying the request for exclusion in respect of the remaining fourteen categories.[2]

3. On 6 July 2006, the Appellant requested leave to file an interlocutory appeal from the Impugned Decision.[3] On 14 July 2006, the Trial Chamber granted in part the Motion for Certification.[4]

4. The Appellant filed his Interlocutory Appeal on 20 July 2006. The Prosecution responded on 31 July 2006,[5] and the Appellant replied on 4 August 2006.[6]

II. Scope of The Appeal

5. The Interlocutory Appeal is limited by the Certification Decision to questions relating to "the propositions of law articulated in paragraphs 7 and 10" of the Impugned Decision.[7] These paragraphs read as follows:

> 7. Objections play an important role in ensuring that the trial is conducted on the basis of evidence which is relevant to the charges against the accused. The failure to voice a contemporaneous objection does not waive the Accused's rights, but results in a shifting of the burden of proof:

The Reply was received by the Tribunal in time on 4 August 2006 but due to a fire in the Tribunal premises, the Reply could not be filed before 7 August 2006. In the circumstances, the Appeals Chamber will consider the Reply as validly filed.

> In the case of objections based on lack of notice, the Defence must challenge the admissibility of evidence of material facts not pleaded in the indictment by interposing a specific objection at the time the evidence is introduced. The Defence may also file a timely motion to strike the evidence or to seek an adjournment to conduct further investigations in order to respond to the unpleaded allegation.

> [A]n accused person who fails to object at trial has the burden of proving on appeal that his appeal [sic] that his ability to prepare his case was materially impaired. Where, however, the accused person objected at trial, the burden is on the Prosecution to prove on appeal that the accused's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.
> This standard applies whenever the objection is not raised contemporaneously with the introduction of the evidence.[8]
> 10. The Chamber's approach in the sections which follow may be summarized as follows. Where a material fact cannot be reasonably related to the Indictment, then it shall be excluded. Where the material fact is relevant only to a vague or general allegation in the Indictment, then the Chamber will consider whether notice of the material fact was given in the Pre-Trial Brief or the opening statement, so as to cure the vagueness of the Indictment. Material facts which concern the actions of the Accused personally are scrutinized more closely than general allegations of criminal conduct. Other forms of disclosure, such as witness statements or potential exhibits, are generally insufficient to put the Defence on reasonable notice. The Chamber recognizes two exceptions to this principle: first, where the Prosecution filed a motion for the addition of a witness, which was subsequently granted by the Chamber, and which stated the material facts on which the witness would testify (Witness AAA); second, where a lengthy adjournment was ordered by the Chamber for the express purpose of allowing the Defence to meet newly discovered material facts (Witness DBQ).[9]

6. In his Interlocutory Appeal, the Appellant submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its enunciation of the legal principles in both paragraphs. The Appeals Chamber will consider first the principles outlined in paragraph 10 of the Impugned Decision.

III. Curing defects in the indictment (paragraph 10 of the Impugned Decision)

A. Submissions of the Parties

7. The Appellant submits that the Trial Chamber erred in eight respects in paragraph 10 of the Impugned Decision in its description of the standards to apply in determining whether or not to exclude evidence on the basis of lack of notice of the material facts to which the evidence relates:[10]

- First, the Trial Chamber failed to take into account the exceptional nature of "curing" the indictment, essentially transforming the exception into the rule;[11]
- Second, the Trial Chamber failed to consider that the admission of large amounts of evidence outside the indictment could render the trial unfair since this has the effect of replacing the case in the original indictment with a completely different one, and since the accused never knows precisely the case he has to meet;[12]

Emmanuel Ndindabahizi*, Case N°ICTR-2001-71-T, Judgement and Sentence of 15 July 2004 ("Ndindabahizi Trial Judgement"), para. 29.

[9] References omitted. In footnote 22 of the Impugned Decision, the Trial Chamber adds that, in one case, it will also rely on the material supporting the Indictment itself to determine whether notice of the material fact was given so as to cure the vagueness in the Indictment.

- Third, the Trial Chamber failed to define the degree of specificity required in the indictment, in particular with respect to the mode of liability and the locations where the crimes were committed;[13]
- Fourth, the Trial Chamber failed to recognize that evidence of a material fact should be excluded if the latter is not mentioned in the indictment in any form; contrary to what the Trial Chamber found, it is not sufficient that the material fact be "reasonably related to the indictment";[14]
- Fifth, the Trial Chamber "understat[ed] th[e] imperative" that material facts which concern the personal actions of the accused be specifically and clearly pleaded in the indictment;[15]
- Sixth, the Trial Chamber erroneously considered that the Prosecution could include new material facts in the charges against the accused through the filing of a motion for the addition of a witness rather than by seeking to amend the indictment;[16]
- Seventh, the Trial Chamber erred in finding that a lengthy adjournment could be sufficient to allow the Defence to meet newly discovered material facts because, although the adjournment may permit the Defence to better prepare for cross-examination of the witness, "it does not permit the Defence to know whether the Prosecution also intends to add new charges to the indictments [sic]; the Defence is still left in the dark as to the potential use of the newly discovered evidence";[17]
- Eighth, while the Trial Chamber correctly stated that vagueness in the indictment may be cured when additional information is provided in the pre-trial Brief or the opening statement and that other forms of disclosure such as witness statements and potential exhibits are generally insufficient to put the Defence on reasonable notice, it erred in its application of these principles in the case at hand.[18]

8. The Prosecution responds that most of the arguments made by the Appellant fall outside the scope of the issues for which certification was granted.[19] The Prosecution also contends that the Trial Chamber has discretion in determining which evidence to admit and in deciding on the general conduct of the proceedings, but that the Appellant has not identified any discernable error or abuse in the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion.[20] The Prosecution submits that the guiding principles identified by the Trial Chamber at paragraph 10 of the Impugned Decision are consistent with the jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber and were properly applied.[21]

9. In the Prosecution's view, "[t]he Appellant's erroneous arguments appear to stem from the fact that he equates or mischaracterizes material facts with new charges, claiming that they are allegations outside the scope of the indictment and necessarily cause him material prejudice."[22] The Prosecution recalls that the count or charge is the alleged legal prohibition infringed whereas the materials facts are the acts and omissions of the accused that give rise to that allegation of infringement of a legal prohibition.[23] The Prosecution argues that while communication of timely information cannot cure the omission of a charge in an indictment, it is settled law that it can cure vagueness or imprecision respecting a charge that appears in the indictment.[24] Thus, the failure to plead a material fact in the indictment does not necessarily mean that the Prosecution must seek an amendment to the indictment; the omission of material facts from the indictment can be cured by the provision of timely, clear and consistent information to the Defence.[25] The Prosecution maintains that the Trial Chamber's framework in paragraph 10 of the Impugned Decision follows these principles: when the Trial Chamber required that the material facts be reasonably related to the indictment, it simply required that the material fact be related to a charge in the indictment, as opposed to a charge omitted from it.[26]

10. The Prosecution also submits that the Appellant's argument regarding the "exceptional nature of curing" is unconvincing because, even in cases where some of the material facts at issue were known at the time the indictment was filed (and in the present case, this has not been demonstrated), vagueness in the indictment can still be cured by subsequent communications to the Defence.[27] In response to the Appellant's argument that the defects in this case were too numerous to be cured, the Prosecution responds that the essential question is not the number of alleged defects that have been cured, but whether the Defence had clear and unambiguous notice that the material facts would be relied upon as part of the Prosecution's case, and had sufficient opportunity to respond to the charge, so that the fairness of the trial is preserved.[28] Finally, to the Appellant's contention that the Trial Chamber ignored the requirement that material facts which concern the personal actions of the accused be specifically and clearly pleaded in the indictment, the Prosecution responds that the Impugned Decision leaves no doubt that physical perpetration of a criminal act by an accused must be pleaded in the indictment, and that when it was not, the Trial Chamber ruled the evidence inadmissible.[29]

11. The Appellant replies that the question before the Appeals Chamber is not whether the Trial Chamber properly exercised its discretion in admitting or excluding evidence, but rather whether the Trial Chamber correctly formulated the standards to apply in the exercise of that discretion.[30] He adds that if the Appeals Chamber were to find that the Trial Chamber erred in its articulation of these standards, then the Trial Chamber would have to reconsider its previous decision.[31]

12. The Appellant notes the admission of the Prosecution that the Indictment in this case lacked specificity, and submits that in light of this admission, the Prosecution "had an absolute obligation to rectify the lack of 'specificity' regarding the Accused Ntabakuze before the Defence was put to its case," something which it failed to do.[32]

13. The Appellant denies having confused material facts with new charges,[33] and submits that "many of the new specific events that emerged in the evidence, which were never mentioned in any form in the Indictment, do, indeed, constitute new 'charges', and are not merely 'material facts' underpinning broad generalities already in the Indictment."[34]

B. ANALYSIS

14. The Appeals Chamber will briefly recall the general principles of admissibility of evidence and sufficiency of the indictment. It will then consider each of the errors alleged to have been committed by the Trial Chamber except the eighth error alleged by the Appellant – that although the Trial Chamber correctly outlined certain relevant principles, it erred in its application of them – as this clearly goes beyond the scope of the certification.

1. Preliminary Question: Standard of Review

15. The Prosecution submits that

> "[t]he reconsideration envisaged in the Interlocutory Appeal is unwarranted and amounts to an impermissible attempt to overcome the Trial Chamber's discretionary power to admit evidence, during the course of the trial."[35]

16. The Appeals Chamber disagrees. The present appeal does not concern the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion in admitting particular categories of evidence, but rather the correctness of the legal principles which it identified as applicable to the exercise of its discretion to admit the disputed evidence. As the final arbiter of the law, the Appeals Chamber will overturn a Trial Chamber's decision if it is established that the Trial Chamber committed an error of law.[36]

2. Admissibility of Evidence of Material Facts Insufficiently Pleaded in the Indictment

17. It is well established that an accused has a right to be informed in detail of the charges against him or her, and that as a corollary the Prosecution is obliged "to state the material facts underpinning the charges in the indictment, but not the evidence by which material facts are to be proven."[37] No conviction against the accused can be entered on the basis of material facts omitted from the indictment or pleaded with insufficient specificity, unless the Prosecution has cured the defect in the indictment by provision to the accused of "timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her."[38]

18. When the Defence is of the view that the Prosecution introduces evidence of material facts of which it had no notice, it can make an objection to the admission of such evidence for lack of notice.[39] If the Trial Chamber agrees with the Defence that insufficient notice has been given, it should exclude the challenged evidence in relation to the unpleaded material facts,[40] require the Prosecution to amend

The Prosecutor*, Case N°ICTR-97-21-AR73, "Decision of the Appeals by Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Arsène Shalom Ntahobali on the 'Decision on Defence Urgent Motion to Declare Parts of the Evidence of Witnesses RV and QBZ inadmissible'", 2 July 2004, para. 15; *Pauline Nyiramasuhuko v. the indictment, grant an adjournment to allow the Defence adequate time to respond to the additional allegations,[41] or take other measures to preserve the rights of the accused to a fair trial.[42]

3. Alleged Failure to Recognize Relevant Principles

19. The Appellant alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in its articulation of the applicable legal standard at paragraph 10 of the Impugned Decision because it failed to recognize certain relevant principles (first, second and third errors alleged). However, the mere fact that the Trial Chamber did not expressly mention all the applicable principles in paragraph 10 of the Impugned Decision does not necessarily mean that it ignored them. As the first sentence of paragraph 10 explains, the paragraph is merely a summary of the approach the Trial Chamber will take in the rest of its decision. The Trial Chamber was under no obligation to repeat word for word all the statements made by the Appeals Chamber on the subjects of the specificity required in an indictment and the circumstances in which a defective indictment will be deemed cured. Further, the fact that the Trial Chamber was clearly aware of the extent of the jurisprudence established by the Appeals Chamber is demonstrated by its numerous references to the relevant case law in the paragraphs prior to paragraph 10 in the Impugned Decision.[43] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Appellant has shown that the Trial Chamber erred simply by failing to comprehensively mention all of the relevant jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber at paragraph 10 of the Impugned Decision. With this in mind, the Appeals Chamber now considers the specific arguments raised by the Appellant.

(a) First Error Alleged

20. The Appellant submits that the Trial Chamber failed to take into account the exceptional nature of "curing" the indictment, essentially transforming the exception into the rule.

21. The ICTY Appeals Chamber has explained that > in some instances, a defective indictment can be cured if the Prosecution provides the accused with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her. Nevertheless, in light of the factual and legal complexities normally associated with the crimes within the jurisdiction of this Tribunal, there can only be a limited number of cases that fall within that category.[44]

Thus, "curing" is likely to occur only in a limited number of cases. In this connection, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced by the Trial Chamber's suggestion, at paragraph 4 of the Impugned Decision, that a distinction should be made between cases "where the Prosecution knows of material facts at the time the indictment is filed, but fails to plead them" (in which cases curing would be exceptional) and cases where the material facts "are subsequently discovered" (in which cases curing would not be characterized as exceptional). Indeed, the risk of prejudice to the accused is the same in Prosecutor, Case N°ICTR-98-42-AR73, "Decision on Pauline Nyiramasuhuko's Request for Reconsideration", 27 September 2004, para. 12; Muvunyi Decision, para. 55 ("If evidence is relevant to a charge in the current indictment and is probative of that charge, then subject to any other ground for exclusion that may be advanced by the Defence, that evidence should be admissible.").

[41] Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 92; Kvočka et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 31; Naletilić and Martinović Appeal Judgement, para. 25.

[42] For instance, in certain circumstances, the Trial Chamber could allow the Defence to recall witnesses for cross-examination after the Defence has completed further investigations: see The Prosecutor v. Édouard Karemera et al., Case N°ICTR-98-44-AR73, "Decision on Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal Against Trial Chamber III Decision of 8 October 2003 Denying Leave to File an Amended Indictment", 19 December 2003 ("Karemera Decision"), para. 28.

[43] See Impugned Decision, paras 2-7 and corresponding footnotes.

[44] Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 114. See also Cyangugu Appeal Judgement, para. 114.

both types of cases.[45] In both types of cases, the defect in the indictment may be deemed cured only by the provision of timely, clear and consistent information to the accused.

22. This being said, the Appeals Chamber notes that, at paragraphs 2, 3 and 6 of the Impugned Decision, the Trial Chamber referred at length to the jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber and correctly identified the relevant legal principles in determining whether the defects in the indictment have been cured: the Trial Chamber properly stated that a defect in the indictment can only be deemed cured if the Prosecution has provided timely, clear and consistent information to the accused, which puts him or her in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him or her. Thus, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the error made by the Trial Chamber in paragraph 4 of the Impugned Decision led it to "transform the exception into the rule" or to misapply the relevant legal principles.

23. The Appeals Chamber also emphasizes that,

> "if the indictment is found to be defective because it fails to plead material facts or does not plead them with sufficient specificity, the Trial Chamber must consider whether the accused was nevertheless accorded a fair trial."[46]

Thus, the mere fact that a Trial Chamber considers in a number of instances, as the Trial Chamber did here, whether defects in the indictment have been cured, is not contrary to the principle that there are a limited number of cases wherein a defective indictment will actually be considered to have been cured.

(b) Second Error Alleged

24. The Appellant also contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that the admission of large amounts of evidence outside the indictment could render the trial unfair. In the words of the Appellant:

> even if individual defects in the indictment might be said to be "cured" by disclosure, a vast number of such instances in a single trial would render such a "cure" meaningless, because the sheer volume of evidence outside the indictment, which has the effect of replacing one Prosecution case with a completely different case than that set out in the indictment, makes the trial inherently unfair.
> […] the Trial Chamber thus erred [in] applying a standard which permits the Prosecution to argue a completely different case than that in the indictment, inasmuch as the allegations falling outside the scope of the indictment significantly outnumber those that are actually mentioned therein. To permit those allegations to stand, without formal amendment of the indictment, by only engaging in an incident by incident analysis without taking into account the totality of new evidence, is to allow the Prosecution to utterly transform the indictment by stealth and stages through the trial, so that the Accused can never really know with any assurance exactly what case he has to meet.[47]

25. In support of this argument, the Appellant refers to paragraph 114 of the Cyangugu Appeal Judgement. There, the Appeals Chamber expressed its concern as to the extent of the defects in the indictment that the Prosecution argued had been cured by post-indictment submissions. The Appeals Chamber explained that, even if all defects in the indictment had been deemed cured, it would have

[45] The only difference concerns the "level of blame" on the Prosecution: As stated in the Ntakirutimana Appeal Judgement (para. 125), "the practice of failing to allege known material facts in an indictment is unacceptable."
[46] Naletilić and Martinović Appeal Judgement, para. 26 (emphasis added). See also Kvočka et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 33, and Cyangugu Appeal Judgement, para. 28.
[47] Interlocutory Appeal, paras 21-22.

had to consider whether the extent of the defects in the indictment, in itself, did not lead to an unfair trial.[48]

26. The Appeals Chamber agrees that when the indictment suffers from numerous defects, there may still be a risk of prejudice to the accused even if the defects are found to be cured by post-indictment submissions. In particular, the accumulation of a large number of material facts not pled in the indictment reduces the clarity and relevancy of that indictment, which may have an impact on the ability of the accused to know the case he or she has to meet for purposes of preparing an adequate defence. Further, while the addition of a few material facts may not prejudice the Defence in the preparation of its case, the addition of numerous material facts increases the risk of prejudice as the Defence may not have sufficient time and resources to investigate properly all the new material facts. Thus, where a Trial Chamber considers that a defective indictment has been subsequently cured by the Prosecution, it should further consider whether the extent of the defects in the indictment materially prejudice an accused's right to a fair trial by hindering the preparation of a proper defence. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber failed to do so in the Impugned Decision and therefore, instructs the Trial Chamber to reconsider the Impugned Decision on this basis.

(c) Third Error Alleged

27. The Appellant submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to define the degree of specificity required in the indictment, in particular with respect to the modes of liability and the locations where the crimes were committed. As explained above, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that the Appellant has shown that the Trial Chamber erred by failing to define at paragraph 10 of the Impugned Decision the requisite degree of specificity required in the indictment.[49] The Trial Chamber was aware of the jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber on this question. The Appeals Chamber does not consider that it is necessary here to repeat at length this jurisprudence.[50] Nevertheless, to address some of the specific arguments of the Appellant on this point, the Appeals Chamber would like to emphasize the following:

> 1-An indictment that fails to "indicate in relation to each individual count precisely and expressly the particular nature of the responsibility alleged" may be ambiguous and could be found defective.[51] In particular, it is essential that the indictment specifies on what legal basis of the Statute an individual is being charged (Article 6 (1) and/or 6 (3));[52]

La Chambre d'appel doit se montrer préoccupée par la démarche du Procureur dans la présente affaire. Elle ne saurait trop rappeler que l'acte d'accusation, seul instrument de mise en accusation, doit exposer la thèse du Procureur de manière circonstanciée. Si, dans certains cas, un acte d'accusation vicié peut être réputé « purgé », la Chambre d'appel réitère qu'il ne peut exister qu'un nombre limité d'affaires qui entrent dans cette catégorie. Dans le cas d'espèce, la Chambre d'appel est troublée par l'ampleur avec laquelle le Procureur cherche à recourir à cette exception. Même si les arguments du Procureur selon lesquels les Actes d'accusation avaient été purgés de leurs vices s'étaient révélés prospères dans chacun des cas, il aurait malgré tout été du devoir de la Chambre d'appel de considérer si l'ampleur des vices identifiés n'aurait pas rendu le procès inéquitable en soi (no official translation available yet, footnote omitted).

situations in which the specific location of criminal activities cannot be listed, such as where the accused is charged as having effective control over several armed groups that committed crimes in numerous locations. In cases concerning physical acts of violence perpetrated by the accused personally, however, location can be very important."[54]

3-Any vagueness or ambiguity in the above respects may be cured in certain cases by the provision of timely, clear and consistent information to the Defence.[55]

4. Alleged Errors in the Statements made in Paragraph 10 of the Impugned Decision

(a) Fourth Error Alleged

28. The Trial Chamber stated that "[w]here a material fact cannot be reasonably related to the Indictment, then it shall be excluded."[56] The Appellant submits that this is an incorrect standard. The Appellant argues that "[a] material fact should be excluded if it is not mentioned in the indictment at all in any concrete form", and that "the failure to mention an accusation in the indictment is a defect that can not be remedied."[57]

29. The Appeals Chamber is not convinced by the arguments of the Appellant on this point. The Appeals Chamber first recalls the distinction between counts or charges ("accusations" in French) and "material facts":

> The count or charge is the legal characterisation of the material facts which support that count or charge. In pleading an indictment, the Prosecution is required to specify the alleged legal prohibition infringed (the count or charge) and the acts or omissions of the Accused that give rise to that allegation of infringement of a legal prohibition (material facts).[58]

It is clear that the omission of a count or charge from the indictment cannot be "cured" by the provision of timely, clear, consistent information.[59] Indeed, since the indictment is the only charging instrument,[60] the addition of counts or charges is possible only through amendment, as set out in Rule 50 of the Rules. However, it is also clear that the omission of a material fact underpinning a charge in the indictment can, in certain cases, be cured by the provision of timely, clear and consistent information.[61]

30. In this connection, the Appeals Chamber stresses that the possibility of curing the omission of material facts from the indictment is not unlimited. Indeed, the "new material facts" should not lead to a "radical transformation" of the Prosecution's case against the accused.[62] The Trial Chamber should always take into account the risk that the expansion of charges by the addition of new material facts may lead to unfairness and prejudice to the accused. Further, if the new material facts are such that they could, on their own, support separate charges,[63] the Prosecution should seek leave from the Trial Chamber to amend the indictment and the Trial Chamber should only grant leave if it is satisfied that it would not lead to unfairness or prejudice to the Defence.[64]

31. The Trial Chamber statements in paragraph 10 of the Impugned Decision are in conformity with the principles outlined above. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Appellant has not shown an error on the part of the Trial Chamber.

(b) Fifth Error Alleged

32. The Appellant submits that, by stating that

> "[m]aterial facts which concern the actions of the Accused personally are scrutinized more closely than general allegations of criminal conduct,"[65]

the Trial Chamber "understated the imperative" that material facts which concern the personal actions of the accused must be specifically and clearly pleaded in the indictment.[66]

33. The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Appellant that material facts which concern the personal actions of the accused have to be clearly and specifically pleaded in the indictment.[67] However, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the Trial Chamber suggested otherwise at paragraph 10 of the Impugned Decision. In addition, the statement at paragraph 10 must be read together with paragraph 5 of the Impugned Decision, where the Trial Chamber stated:
