7. Prosecution submits that it would have complied with all its obligations once it discloses to the Defence, as soon as possible, the documents that are in its possession and to which the footnotes of the expert report refer.

8. Finally, the Prosecution refers to an oral ruling in the Bagosora et al. case of 4 September 2004, in which Trial Chamber I held that it was incumbent upon the Defence to get hold of "materials that may, or may not, arise from footnotes" and that it was not the Prosecution's obligation to provide those documents.[2]

Deliberations

9. The Chamber notes that the Defence for Nzuwonemeye has not cited any Rule, jurisprudence or other authority in support of its Motion. The Defence's only contention is that the documents mentioned in the footnotes of Dr. Des Forges' report are "crucial" for its cross-examination of the expert witness.

[2] Le Procureur c. Bagosora et autres, Affaire N ICTR-98-41-T, Transcription du 4 Septembre 2002, page 28.

10. The Chamber recalls Rule 94 bis (A) which governs the disclosure of reports of expert witnesses:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of Rule 66 (A) (ii), Rule 73 bis (B) (iv) (b) and Rule 73 ter (B) (iii) (b) of the present Rules, the full statement of any expert witness called by a party shall be disclosed to the opposing party as early as possible and shall be filed with the Trial Chamber not less than twenty-one days prior to the date on which the expert is expected to testify.

11. The Chamber notes that Rule 94 bis (A) is addressed to the Parties and that witnesses, be they factual or expert, are not party to the proceedings and therefore under no disclosure obligations.

12. The Chamber notes that in the Nahimana et al. case, Trial Chamber I instructed the Defence to disclose, in addition to the expert report, the curriculum vitae of expert witnesses "as verification or in support of their expert status".[3] This finding was subsequently adopted in the Bizimungu et al. case.[4] The Chamber notes that in the instant case, the Prosecution filed with the registry Dr. Des Forges' report in English together with a curriculum vitae on 13 June 2006, more than three months prior to the expected testimony of the Witness.

13. Therefore the issue before the Chamber is to determine whether the right of the Accused to cross-examine a witness as stipulated in Article 20 (4) (e) of the Statute is infringed upon if the Defence is not in possession of the said 'third category' documents. The Chamber recalls the Decision of 28 September 2004 in the Bagosora case where Trial Chamber I held that it is the disclosure of the expert report itself that ensures that "the opposing party has sufficient notice of the content of the expert witness's testimony to effectively prepare for cross-examination".[5] The Chamber recalls that the inclusion of footnotes in the report is done to put the opposing party on notice of what documents the expert used as the basis of her opinion.[6] However the documents mentioned in the footnotes themselves are not part of her report or her expected testimony and therefore not part of the case against the Accused.

14. Accordingly, the Chamber concludes that the disclosure of the expert report, inclusive of footnotes and a curriculum vitae, more than three months prior to the expected date of the expert's testimony is sufficient for the Defence to prepare for cross-examination and to guarantee the rights of the Accused under Article 20 (4) (e).

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Defence Motion.

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written submissions filed by the Parties pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules.

Submissions by the Parties

The Prosecution

1. The Prosecution requests the Chamber to allow Witness Roméo Dallaire to testify by video-conference.

2. The Prosecution submits that General Dallaire's activities as a member of the Canadian Senate and his participation in the UN Secretary General's Advisory Committee on the Prevention of Genocide now make it impossible for him to be absent from Canada for the period during which he would be required to testify in Arusha. However, the Prosecution submits that Roméo Dallaire could be available to testify at any hour of the day or night on the following dates: 23, 24, 25, 26, 30 and 31 October 2006, as well as 1, 2, 3, 6, 7 and 8 November 2006. The Prosecution further submits that the Canadian Department of National Defence is willing to do whatever may be necessary to facilitate General Dallaire's testimony by video-conference.

[1] "Prosecution Request, in the Interests of Justice and Pursuant to Rules 71 and 98 of the Rules and Procedure, to allow Prosecution Witness Roméo Dallaire to testify by video-link" (Unofficial Translation).
[2] Response by the Defence for Augustin Bizimungu to the "Prosecution Request, in the Interests of Justice and Pursuant to Rules 71 and 98 of the Rules and Procedure, to allow Prosecution Witness Roméo Dallaire to testify by video-link" (Unofficial Translation).
[3] Response [by the Defence for Augustin Ndindiliyimana] to the "Prosecution Request, in the Interests of Justice and Pursuant to Rules 71 and 98 of the Rules and Procedure, to allow Prosecution Witness Roméo Dallaire to testify by video-link" (Unofficial Translation).

3. The Prosecution refers to Rule 71 (D) which allows for a witness to be heard by video-link and submits that this procedure would not affect the Chamber's ability to control the proceedings.

4. The Prosecution contends that General Dallaire's testimony is indispensable for the manifestation of the truth.

5. Finally, the Prosecution submits that General Dallaire could be both a Prosecution and a Defence Witness.

Bizimungu's Response

6. The Defence for Bizimungu opposes the Motion and contends that the reasons advanced by General Dallaire are not sufficient to allow him to be heard by video-link.

7. The Defence submits that General Dallaire is able to travel to Arusha since he is willing to testify day or night during the dates mentioned in the Motion. The Defence for Bizimungu further submits that the letter by Mr. Yaroski on behalf of General Dallaire, which is the only material in support of the Motion, has no probative or legal value since it is not dated nor does it indicate whether Mr. Yaroski has a mandate to represent General Dallaire. Furthermore, the Defence submits that there is no direct or indirect proof of General Dallaire's inability to travel other than the explanations in the said letter.

8. The Defence refers to Article 20 (4) (d) and (e) of the Statute and contends that an Accused has a fundamental right to personally confront his principal accusers.

9. Finally, the Defence submits that the Accused should not suffer prejudice as a result of the Prosecution's strategic decision to call General Dallaire at this stage of the proceedings given that the Motion does not indicate whether any efforts have been made to call the witness at an earlier date.

Ndindiliyimana's Response

10. The Defence for Ndindiliyimana prays the Chamber to dismiss the Motion.

11. In addition to the submissions made by the Defence for Bizimungu concerning General Dallaire's inability to travel to Arusha, the Defence for Ndindiliyimana contends that as a practical matter, testimony by video-link would make it impossible for the Defence to confront the witness with any of the numerous United Nations or Rwandan government documents in its possession, which would be chosen depending on the content of General Dallaire's testimony.

12. The Defence further submits that since there is no witness statement, it is not in a position to know the areas that the testimony of General Dallaire will cover and therefore to select any document in advance.

Deliberations

13. The Chamber recalls the general principle articulated in Rule 90 (A), that "witnesses shall […] be heard directly by the Chamber." Nonetheless, the Chamber has the discretion to grant the hearing of testimony by video-conference in lieu of physical appearance for purposes of witness protection under Rule 75, or where it is in the interests of justice. In determining the interests of justice, the Chamber has to assess: (i) the importance of the testimony; (ii) the inability or unwillingness of the witness to travel to Arusha; and iii) whether a good reason has been adduced for that inability and unwillingness.[4] The burden of proof lies with the Party making the request.[5]

14. With respect to the first criterion, the Chamber is satisfied that General Dallaire's testimony as former UNAMIR Commander, who was based in Kigali between September 1993 and July 1994, might be important to the present case.

15. With respect to the second and third criteria, the Chamber notes the letter sent by General Dallaire's legal representative stating the reasons for Dallaire's inability to travel to Arusha to testify in person. The Chamber notes that the letter contains no further explanations as to why General Dallaire's activities as a member of the Canadian Senate and his participation in the UN Secretary General's Advisory Committee on the Prevention of Genocide would prevent him from travelling to Arusha in the next few months, and why he is not in a position to travel during the dates suggested for the video-link. The Chamber therefore considers that no good reason has been adduced in support of the inability of the Witness to testify in person. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the exceptional circumstances required to authorise a testimony by video-link have not been established.

16. Finally, the Chamber notes that it has not been served with the waiver of immunity from the UN-Headquarters in respect of General Dallaire's testimony requested by the Prosecutor on 26 July 2006.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Motion.

NOTING that the "Réponse de la Défense d'Augustin Bizimungu au soutien de la Requête d'Innocent Sagahutu intitulée 'Requête aux fins de la descente sur les lieux'"[5] was filed out of time on 29 September 2006;

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute"), and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), in particular Rules 4 and 89 (D) of the Rules;

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written submissions filed by the Parties pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules.

Submissions

1. The Defence for Innocent Sagahutu requests that the Chamber visit certain sites in Kigali that are identified in paragraph 4 of the Motion. It submits that a visit to these sites will enable the Chamber to understand the configuration of the crime sites mentioned by the Prosecution witnesses and, at the same time, assist the Chamber to better evaluate the evidence of those witnesses. Furthermore, the Defence argues that a visit to these sites will serve the interests of justice and its own case.

2. The Accused Ndindiliyimana, Nzuwonomeye and Bizimungu each filed pleadings in support of Sagahutu's motion. In addition to the sites listed in Sagahutu's Motion, the Defence for Ndindiliyimana requests the Chamber to visit several additional sites in Kigali, Gitarama, Gikongoro and Nyaruhengeri préfectures.

3. Nzunomeye's Defence indicated its intention to file further submissions relating to other sites that the Trial Chamber should visit, and with respect to the modalities of the visit. It requests a status conference for the latter purpose.

4. Bizimunugu's Defence urged the Chamber to accept its late filing because it was pre-occupied with the cross-examination of a Prosecution expert witness. The Defence requests the Trial Chamber for an opportunity at the end of the Prosecution case, to provide a list of sites that the Chamber should visit in the interest of Bizimungu's defence, especially in the préfectures of Ruhengeri and Gitarama.

Deliberations

5. The Chamber notes that the Defence for Bizimungu has not shown good cause for its late filing. The Chamber expects all Parties to sufficiently organize their internal workings to enable them to respect timelines set for the filing of pleadings. Otherwise, the rights of the Accused to trial without undue delay would be violated.

6. The Chamber notes Rule 4 of the Rules which provides that > "[a] Chamber or a Judge may exercise their functions away from the Seat of the Tribunal, if so authorized by the President in the interests of justice."

[4] "Sagahutu's Reply to the Prosecutor's Response to Sagahutu's Motion for a Site Visit", Unofficial Translation.
[5] "Augustin Bizimungu's Response in Support of Sagahutu's Motion for a Site Visit", Unofficial Translation.

7. Pursuant to this provision, this Tribunal has considered the issue of site visits to various locations in the Republic of Rwanda.[6] The jurisprudence establishes that the need for a site visit must be considered in light of the particular circumstances of each case. With respect to the timing of such a visit, the jurisprudence holds that a site visit should be conducted at a time when it will be instrumental to the discovery of the truth and the determination of the matter before the Chamber.[7]

8. The Chamber notes that in this case, the Prosecution is approaching the end of the presentation of its evidence. The Chamber has heard evidence from many Prosecution witnesses about various sites in Rwanda, and received photographic and sketch images of some of these locations. As indicated in the various Defence submissions, other sites and locations are likely to be mentioned in the course of presentation of the remainder of the Prosecution case, or, during the Defence cases. Similarly, the Chamber may receive further evidence about the sites listed by the various Defence teams, thereby eliminating the need to visit those sites. In the circumstances of the present case therefore, it is the Chamber's view that a site visit to Rwanda at this stage of the proceedings would not be instrumental in the discovery of the truth and the determination of the matter before the Chamber.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Defence Motion.

In The Prosecutor v.Bagosora et al, supra, at para. 4, the Chamber considered the timing of the proposed site visit, the costs and logistics involved and concluded that a site visit in the circumstances of the case would not be instrumental in the discovery of the truth and the determination of the matter before the Chamber. Similarly, in The Prosecutor v. Aloys Simba, supra, para. 3, the Trial Chamber held that a site visit during the course of the presentation of the evidence was not appropriate in the circumstances of that case, and denied the Defence request without ruling out the possibility that the Defence could, if it thought fit, re-file the motion at a later stage of the proceedings.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute"), and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), in particular Rule 54;

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written submissions filed by the Parties pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules.

The Prosecution

1. The Prosecution requests that a subpoena be issued to Annonciata Kavaruganda. The Prosecution claims that because Madame Kavaruganda was the wife of late Joseph Kavaruganda, former President of the Constitutional Court in Rwanda at the beginning of the genocide in April 1994, she has a unique and special knowledge of the events leading to the abduction and killing of her husband by Rwandan Armed Forces on 7 April 1994.

2. Referring to paragraphs 22, 25, 48, 49 and 50 of the Amended Indictment, the Prosecution submits that Madame Kavaruganda's testimony is necessary to prove the existence and execution of a common scheme by the accused persons in collaboration with others mentioned in the Indictment to eliminate certain members of opposition parties and other important actors with a view to obstructing the implementation of the Arusha Accords. According to the Prosecution, this information will significantly corroborate prosecution evidence of a deliberate and systematic targeting and elimination of those political and other actors by the Rwandan Armed Forces in the early days of the genocide in April 1994.

3. The Prosecution further submits that Madame Kavaruganda is uniquely positioned to provide a useful insight into the activities of her husband within the framework of the implementation of the Arusha Accords and to inform the Court of her husband's activities.

4. Finally, the Prosecution submits that substantial and serious attempts have been made to secure the voluntary attendance of Madame Kavaruganda but to no avail.

Nzuwonemeye's Response

5. The Defence for Nzuwonemeye opposes the Motion and submits that the Prosecution has not addressed the reasons put forward by Madame Kavaruganda for her refusal to testify in this case, that is, that she does not hold the accused persons accountable for the death of her husband.

6. The Defence further submits that the Prosecution has omitted to mention that, according to Madame Kavaruganda, Major Protais Mpiranya from the Presidential Guard and Major Kabera, Officer d'Ordonnance of President Habyarimana, were involved in the killing of her husband. The Defence argues that there is no connection between the Presidential Guard and the Reconnaisance Battalion.

7. Finally, the Defence submits that leading this evidence with respect to Major Protais Mpiranya and the Presidential Guard, would only waste court time and delay the end of the Prosecution case.

Sagahutu's Response

8. The Defence for Sagahutu submits that the testimony of Madame Kavaruganda would not assist the Prosecution at all since Major Mpiranya and Major Kabera, whom the witness believes are responsible for the death of her husband, have not been tried and any attempt to convince the Chamber of a conspiracy is a waste of time.

9. The Defence further submits that Madame Kavaruganda's testimony is not necessary since it has no direct or indirect link to any of the accused persons in the present case and prays the Chamber to dismiss the Motion.

Ndindiliyimana's Response

10. The Defence for Ndindiliyimana adopts the submissions made by Nzuwonemeye's Defence and further submits that the Prosecution has not shown that Madame Kavaruganda is best placed to describe the contents of the Arusha Accords since she did not participate in their negotiation and the Prosecution has not indicated any public or political functions that Madame Kavaruganda held in Rwanda in 1994 that may have enabled her to form an opinion about the full details of the Arusha Accords and the obstacles to their implementation.

11. The Defence argues that Madame Kavaruganda would not assist in ascertaining the truth, in particular since the paragraphs of the Indictment on which the Prosecution tries to lead evidence through this witness, have been cited with regard to the testimonies of several other witnesses and will be the subject of General Dallaire's testimony.

Bizimungu's Response

12. The Defence for Bizimungu adopts the submissions made by Nzuwonemeye and Ndindiliyimana's Defence and, recalling the Chamber's decision of 24 November 2005, further submits that it had already on that occasion opposed the appearance of Madame Kavaruganda arguing that this witness's testimony could not go to proof of the count of conspiracy to commit genocide or to Bizimungu's superior responsibility.

Deliberations

13. The Chamber recalls Rule 54 of the Rules which authorizes a Trial Chamber to issue

> "orders, summonses, subpoenas, warrants and transfer orders as may be necessary for the purposes of an investigation or for the preparation of the trial."

According to the jurisprudence of both this Tribunal and the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY), an applicant for subpoena must show that (i) reasonable attempts have been made to obtain the voluntary cooperation of the witness; (ii) the witness's testimony can materially assist the applicant in respect of clearly identified issues; and (iii) the witness's testimony must be necessary and appropriate for the conduct and fairness of the trial.[1] The Chamber recalls that "subpoenas should not be issued lightly" and that it must consider

> "not only … the usefulness of the information to the applicant but … its overall necessity in ensuring that the trial is informed and fair."[2]

In this respect, it may also be considered whether the information sought can reasonably be obtained elsewhere.[3]

14. After having carefully read the material disclosed by the Prosecution in respect of this witness, the Chamber is satisfied that Madame Kavaruganda holds a special position with respect to the events leading to death of her husband and that she may provide insight into the activities of her husband within the framework of the implementation of the Arusha Accords. The Chamber notes paragraphs 48 and 50 of the Amended Indictment of 23 August 2004 which refer to the killing of Joseph Kavaruganda and the alleged obstruction of the implementation of the Arusha Accords. The Chamber further notes paragraph 49 of the Indictment which alleges that the Gendarmerie was, inter alia, responsible for protecting Joseph Kavaruganda. Finally, the Chamber notes paragraph 22 of the Indictment which describes Major Mpiranya as a co-conspirator of the accused persons. Based on the aforementioned, the Chamber concludes that Madame Kavaruganda's testimony can materially assist the Prosecution case.

15. The Chamber is further satisfied that Madame Kavaruganda's evidence cannot be reasonably obtained elsewhere and, based on the material annexed to the Motion, that the Prosecution has made reasonable efforts to secure her voluntary cooperation, without success.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Motion;

ORDERS the Registrar to prepare a subpoena, in accordance with this decision, and to serve it, through appropriate channels in the Kingdom of Belgium, pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute, to Annonciata Kavaruganda, requiring her appearance before this Chamber to testify in the present case;

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II, composed of Judge Asoka de Silva, Presiding, Judge Taghrid Hikmet and Judge Seon Ki Park (the "Chamber");

BEING SEISED OF "Nzuwonemeye's Motion to Exclude the Exhibits Tendered through Alison Des Forges' Testimony and Related to Jean Kambanda", filed on 4 October 2006;

HAVING RECEIVED AND CONSIDERED the "Prosecutor's Response to Nzuwonemeye's Motion to Exclude the Exhibits Tendered through Alison Des Forges' Testimony and Related to Jean Kambanda", filed on 9 October 2006;

RECALLING its Oral Decision of 21 September 2006 admitting into evidence Exhibits P117A and P117B (the "Oral Decision of 21 September 2006")

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute"), and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), in particular Rule 89 (C) of the Rules;

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written submissions filed by the Parties pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules.

Introduction

1. On 21 September 2006, in the course of the examination-in-chief of expert witness Alison Des Forges, the Prosecution sought to tender two documents respectively entitled "Les circonstances entourant mon arrestation le 18 juillet 1997 à Nairobi au Kenya, ma détention en Tanzanie, mon transfert aux Pays-Bas et mon procès en appel", and "Éléments de défense de Jean Kambanda, Le Procureur c/ Jean Kambanda, N°ICTR-97-23-DP". The were said to have been tendered as Exhibits during appellate proceedings in the case of Jean Kambanda v. The Prosecutor. The Defence objected to the admission of the documents as exhibits on the ground that the documents were never admitted in the Kambanda proceedings and urged the Chamber to reserve its ruling until it could establish as a matter of certainty whether or not these documents were so admitted. Having considered the oral submissions of the Parties, the Chamber ruled that the documents were admissible and marked them as Exhibits P117A and 117B respectively.

Submissions

2. The Defence requests the Chamber to reconsider its Oral Decision of 21 September 2006 on the ground that it has received confirmation from the ICTR Registry that exhibits P117A and P117B were never admitted in the Kambanda proceedings; that there are serious questions about the provenance and authenticity of the said documents; and that admitting them as exhibits would violate the right to a fair trial guaranteed under the Statute.

3. In its Response, the Prosecution submits that the issues raised are res judicata because they were all ventilated during the Defence's oral submissions on 21 September 2006, and were considered by the Chamber which nonetheless proceeded to admit the documents as exhibits.

4. In the alternative, the Prosecution submits that the said documents were properly admitted pursuant to the Chamber's broad discretion under Rule 89 (C) and that the only requirement for admissibility of evidence under that sub-rule, is that the evidence must be relevant. The Prosecution further argues that the said documents are relevant to the present trial because they constitute part of the sources that Prosecution expert witness Alison des Forges relied upon to form her opinion. Furthermore, the Prosecution submits that matters of authenticity go to the weight to be attached to the documents, rather than to the Chamber's consideration relating to admissibility.

Deliberations

5. The Chamber notes that most of the arguments raised by the Defence Motion were already heard by the Chamber during oral hearings on 21 September 2006. Having heard those arguments and ruled that the documents were admissible as exhibits, the Defence cannot reopen those issues except where it can demonstrate that good cause exists for the Chamber to reconsider its prior decision.

6. The jurisprudence recognizes that a Trial Chamber may reconsider and modify its prior decision if it is persuaded that the decision was made in error because a new fact has come to light, which, if it had been known to the Chamber, would have led to a different outcome; that there has been a material change in circumstances; or that the decision could occasion a miscarriage of justice.[1]

7. The Chamber considers that the only ground raised by the Motion for reconsideration is that exhibits P117A and P117B were not admitted in the Kambanda proceedings. This implies that the Defence relies upon a presumed lack of authenticity of exhibits P117A and P117B to challenge their admissibility. The Chamber notes that the authenticity of evidence, while important in the Chamber's assessment of weight at the end of the trial, is not a criterion for admissibility.[2]

8. Furthermore, the Chamber recalls the provisions of Rule 89 (C) which give the Chamber discretion to admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value. Based on the plain language of that sub-rule, there is no other requirement for admissibility of evidence before the Tribunal.

9. The Chamber notes that exhibits P117A and P117B are part of a large number of documentary sources that informed the opinion and testimony of Prosecution expert Witness Alison Des Forges. As such, the documents are relevant to the trial even if only for the limited purpose of evaluating her testimony and determining what weight to attach to it at the end of the trial.

10. The Chamber therefore concludes that the criteria for reconsideration have not been satisfied.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written submissions filed by the Parties pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules.

Introduction

1. On 15 September 2006, the Chamber rendered a decision denying the Prosecution request for Witness Romeo Dallaire to give testimony by video-link. The Chamber held that the reasons brought forward by the Prosecution for General Dallaire's inability to travel to Arusha did not meet the criteria established by the jurisprudence of the Tribunal to grant a request for a video-link. On 5 October 2006 the Prosecution filed the present Motion praying the Chamber to reconsider its previous decision and to allow Witness Romeo Dallaire to testify by video-link, or, in the alternative, to order proprio motu and in the interest of justice his testimony by the same means.

2. The Prosecution essentially submits that the overriding factor in General Dallaire's inability to travel to Arusha is related to his present health condition. Referring to a letter by General Dallaire's counsel and a medical certificate prepared by General Dallaire's personal physician, the Prosecution contends that living again the horrible events of 1994, both in the process involved in preparing his testimony, and in actually testifying, would be most stressful and would take a serious toll on General Dallaire's health. The Prosecution concedes that this situation would be the same even if the testimony were taken by video-link. However, adds the Prosecutor, if allowed to testify by video-link from Canada, General Dallaire would have available to him professional support and resources that could not be available in Arusha.

3. Finally, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber may reconsider its Decision of 15 September 2006 in the exercise of its discretion and urges the Chamber to grant the Motion in the interests of justice and pursuant to Article 21 of the Statute and Rules 71, 75 and 90 of the Rules.

4. All four Defence teams oppose the Motion and submit that the criteria for reconsideration, as established by the jurisprudence the Tribunal, have not been met by the Prosecution. The Defence argues in particular that General Dallaire's health situation does not constitute a new fact since it was known well before the Prosecution filed its initial Motion on 23 August 2006.

5. The Defence teams submit further that the medical certificate provided by Romeo Dallaire's physician is contradictory to the General's various activities as Canadian Senator and his engagements in the campaigns to eradicate child soldiers in Africa and to have the International Community intervene effectively in Darfur.

6. The Defence for Ndindiliyimana and the Defence for Bizimungu additionally request to be permitted to cross-examine General Dallaire, inter alia, on his health condition and pray the Chamber to differ any decision on the Prosecution Motion until the conclusion of such a cross-examination and until the Chamber has the benefit of all facts.

Deliberations

7. The reconsideration of a previous decision is warranted if the moving party demonstrates the discovery of a new fact, which, if known by the Chamber before making its decision, would have led to a different outcome; or if there has been a material change in circumstances; or finally, when the previous decision was erroneous and therefore prejudicial to either party.[1]

8. The Chamber notes the medical certificate annexed to the Motion which explains that since May 1999, General Dallaire has been under treatment for a health condition arising from his experience in Rwanda in 1994. The Chamber further notes that according to the treating physician, testimony by video-link from Canada, although inadvisable, would be preferable to testimony in Arusha.

9. The Chamber agrees with the Defence submission that the health situation of General Dallaire is not a new fact or circumstance that would warrant reconsideration of the Chamber's prior Decision. As conceded by the Prosecution, this information is publicly known, and the Prosecution could therefore have included it in the earlier motion had it exercised due diligence. Nonetheless, it is the Chamber's considered view that the Defence request to cross-examine General Dallaire on his health situation prior to the commencement of his testimony, is neither necessary nor practical; such cross-examination would require that the witness be made available to testify which is the very issue to the Chamber has to determine.

10. The Chamber, however, notes the opinion of General Dallaire's physician that during his testimony, the General may require specialist professional care and resources which would not be readily available in Arusha. Taking this fact into account, the Chamber hereby reconsiders its Decision of 15 September 2006 and allows General Dallaire to testify by video -link.

11. Finally, the Chamber notes that it has now been served with the waiver of immunity from the UN-Headquarters in respect of General Dallaire's testimony.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Motion;

ORDERS that the testimony of General Dallaire be taken by video-link from Canada;

ORDERS the Registrar, in consultation with the Prosecution, to organize a video-link conference for the testimony of Romeo Dallaire to be heard from 15 November 2006 to 8 December 2006;

ORDERS that all examinations of the witness shall be conducted from the courtroom in Arusha;

ORDERS the Parties to make available to the Registry not less than seven days prior to the commencement of General Dallaire's testimony, all documents they intend to tender as exhibits during their respective examinations of the witness;

Introduction

1. On 15 September 2006, the Chamber issued a Decision denying the Prosecution Motion for General Roméo Dallaire's evidence to be heard by video-link from Canada. On the basis of a Prosecution Motion for reconsideration, the Chamber issued another Decision on 20 October 2006, in which it reconsidered its prior Decision on the ground that General Dallaire's health situation would require that he receives specialist professional care and resources in the course of his testimony, and that unlike Canada, such resources are not available in Arusha. The Chamber granted the Motion for reconsideration and ordered that General Dallaire's testimony will be heard by video-link from Canada, from 15 November to 8 December 2006.

2. On 25 October, the Prosecution filed the current Motion seeking a variation of the dates upon which General Dallaire would testify.[1] Based on correspondence from General Dallaire's lawyer, the Prosecution submits that it is impossible for the General to free himself from certain prior commitments, and that he would therefore be unavailable for testimony from 15 to19 November, and from 27 November to 4 December inclusive. In the circumstances, the Prosecution requests that

[1] "Prosecutor's Extremely Urgent Motion for a Rescheduling Order", field on 25 October, 2006.

General Dallaire's testimony be heard from 20 to 24 November, and from 5 to 8 or 15 December 2006, if necessary. The Defence for Ndindiliyimana, Bizimungu and Nzuwonomeye each filed a Response in which they opposed the Motion; the Prosecutor filed a Reply.[2]

Deliberations

3. The only issue raised by the Motion is whether the dates of General Dallaire's testimony by video-link should be varied from those indicated in the Decision of 20 October 2006. The Chamber notes that the newly proposed dates imply that General Dallaire's evidence must be heard within 9 or 13 half-day sessions, rather than 18 half-day sessions as stated in the 20 October Decision. The Chamber notes the submission of the Defence teams that if General Dallaire is allowed to testify on the proposed new dates, they may not have enough time to adequately cross-examine him, and that the right of the Accused to a full and complete defence would be violated.

4. The Chamber notes that whilst the 20 October Decision indicated that General Dallaire's evidence would be heard from 15 November to 8 December, there is nothing in that Decision to suggest that the entirety of that period would be required for the General's testimony. The period of 18 half-day sessions indicated an upper limit, the maximum time that, in the Chamber's view, would be required for all Parties to conduct their respective examinations of General Dallaire. The Chamber notes that the 9 to 13 days proposed in the Motion, fall squarely within the period envisaged in the Decision of 20 October.

5. The Chamber recognizes the right of the Accused to adequate time and facilities for the preparation of their Defence, including the right to cross-examine all witnesses called to testify for the Prosecution as enshrined in Article 20 (4) of the Statute. The Chamber notes, however, that these rights must be exercised in the context of the Chamber's duty to control the proceedings, including the manner of cross-examining witnesses, so as to ascertain the truth and avoid needless consumption of time.[3]

6. The Chamber reminds all Parties that it must operate within the limits of the temporal and material resources available to it. The Prosecution has indicated that it would not require more than eight or nine hours (or two half-day sessions), to conduct the examination-in-chief of General Dallaire. This will leave a minimum of seven half-days for the Defence to conduct cross-examination. The Defence must properly organize itself to cross-examine the witness during the said period. The Chamber recognizes that it is sometimes hard to accurately predict the course of examination-in-chief or cross-examination, but urges all Parties to sufficiently organize their respective examinations so as to ensure the most efficient utilization of the available time.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Prosecution Motion and

Innocent Sagahutu, Decision on Ndindiliyimana's Motion for Certification to Appeal the Chamber's Decision Dated 15 June 2006, 14 July 2006 (ICTR-2000-56)

Introduction

1. On 15 September 2006, the Chamber rendered a decision denying the Prosecution request for Witness Roméo Dallaire to give testimony by video-link. The Chamber held that the reasons brought forward by the Prosecution for General Dallaire's inability to travel to Arusha did not meet the criteria established by the jurisprudence of the Tribunal to grant a request for a video-link.[1] On 20 October 2006, the Chamber granted a Prosecution request to reconsider its Decision of 15 September 2006. The Chamber took particular note of the opinion of General Dallaire's physician that the General may require specialist professional care and resources during his testimony which would not be readily available in Arusha and, on that basis, allowed Witness Roméo Dallaire to give his testimony by video-link.[2] On 26 and 27 October 2006 the Defence for Augustin Ndindiliyimana and the Defence for Augustin Bizimungu respectively filed the present Motions[3] asking the Chamber to grant certification of Appeal from its Decision of 20 October 2006 (the "Impugned Decision").

2. The Defence teams submit that the Chamber, after having found in the Impugned Decision that General Dallaire's health condition does not amount to a new fact, contradicts itself by granting the motion for reconsideration on the basis that during his testimony, the General may require specialist care and resources which would not be readily available in Arusha. The Defence teams argue that since Dallaire's health situation was already known, the incidental fact that he may need professional care was also known and could therefore not be a basis for reconsideration.

3. The Defence teams further submit that there is no evidence that such specialist care is not available in Arusha and therefore there is no basis for denying the applicants' right to cross-examine the witness in person.

4. Referring to Dallaire's testimony in the Military 1 case, the Defence for Ndindiliyimana brings to the Chamber's attention that the General appeared neither distressed nor actually in need of specialist care, despite a lengthy and intense cross-examination, and he was not accompanied by a medical specialist on that occasion.

5. Finally, the Defence for Ndindiliyimana submits that it is in the interests of a more efficient, effective and speedy trial for General Dallaire to testify in person, since it would avoid all the problems associated with testimony by video-link and prays the Chamber to restore "in the interests of justice" its Decision of 15 September 2006.

Deliberations

6. The Chamber recalls Rule 73 (B) which reads as follows:

> Decisions rendered on such motions are without interlocutory appeal save with certification by the Trial Chamber, which may grant such certification if the decision involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and for which, in the opinion of the Trial Chamber, an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings.

7. The Chamber has on several occasions discussed the criteria for certification under Rule 73 (B).[4] In particular, the Chamber stresses the principle that decisions under Rule 73 are "without interlocutory appeal" and that certification to appeal is an exception that the Chamber may grant, if the two criteria under Rule 73 (B) are satisfied.

8. Having reviewed the submissions of the applicants, the Chamber notes that the Defence teams essentially reargue the Impugned Decision and reiterate some of the arguments brought forward prior to the rendering of the said Decision rather than demonstrating that the conditions required for certification under Rule 73 (B) are met. In fact, the Defence for Ndindiliyimana explicitly prays the Chamber to restore "in the interests of justice" its Decision of 15 September 2006 and, as such, requests the Chamber to reconsider its Decision a second time. This is not the purpose of Rule 73 (B).

9. The Motions therefore fail.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Defence Motions.

Introduction

1. On 15 September 2006, the Chamber denied the Prosecution request for Witness Roméo Dallaire to give testimony by video-link. On 20 October 2006, the Chamber reconsidered its earlier Decision and ordered that Witness Roméo Dallaire's testimony would be taken by video-link from Canada between 15 November and 8 December 2006.[1] On 3 November 2006 and upon a request by the Prosecution, the Chamber varied the dates of General Dallaire's testimony and ordered that his testimony be taken from 20 to 24 November and from 5 to 8 December 2006.[2] The Chamber also ordered that the Prosecution should have a maximum of two half-days within which to conduct the examination-in-chief of General Dallaire and that each of the Defence teams should have two half-days within which to cross-examine the witness. The Chamber further held that it would, at a later stage, decide whether additional time would be required for further cross-examination or reexamination.

2. On 8 November 2006, the Defence for Augustin Ndindiliyimana filed a Motion[3] asking the Chamber to grant certification of Appeal from its Decision of 3 November 2006 (the "Impugned Decision"). On 9 and 13 November 2006 the Defence for Innocent Sagahutu and the Defence for Augustin Bizimungu respectively filed Motions[4] requesting the Chamber to reconsider its Decision of 3 November 2006. The Prosecution did not respond to any of the Motions.

Submissions

3. The Defence for Ndindiliyimana submits that the artificial time limitation imposed on the Defence by the Impugned Decision goes to the heart of the rights of the Accused to have a fair trial, to cross-examine witnesses and to ascertain the truth as set out in the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"). The Defence argues that the Impugned Decision has the effect of denying the Applicant's right to make full answer and defence to the charges against him and therefore goes to the very outcome of the trial.

4. The Defence further submits that an immediate resolution of this issue by the Appeals Chamber would materially advance the proceedings since a favourable decision would make it easier to authenticate the many UN documents that have been filed as identification [ID] documents in the course of the proceedings. The Defence contends that without enough time for cross-examination, it would be necessary to call several other UN military officers and administrative personnel and other witnesses to speak to matters and issues which could be better dealt with more expeditiously and efficiently by General Dallaire.

5. Both the Defence for Sagahutu and for Bizimungu question also the sufficiency, thus the fairness of the time allocated for cross-examination. They pray the Chamber to revisit the issue and allocate more time to enable a full defence.

Deliberations

6. Since al1 three Motions relate to the Scheduling Order of 3 November 2006, judicial economy requires that they be dealt with in one single Decision.

(i) Request for Certification

7. The Chamber has on several occasions discussed the criteria for certification under Rule 73 (B).[5] In particular, the Chamber stresses the principle that decisions under Rule 73 are "without interlocutory appeal" and that certification to appeal is an exception that the Chamber may grant, if the two criteria under Rule 73 (B) are satisfied.

8. The Chamber agrees with the Ndindiliyimana Defence that the right to cross-examine witnesses is a cornerstone of the Accused's right to a fair trial. The Chamber recalls however the Decision of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Prlić case, in which the Appeals Chamber found that the Trial Chamber's allocation to each of the six Defence Counsel of one sixth of the time allocated to the Prosecution, with sufficient flexibility to adjust the timeframes, complies with the right to cross-examine witnesses as stipulated under Article 2[0] (4) of the Statute.[6] In reaching that Decision, the Appeals Chamber considered in particular that > "time and resource constraints exist in all judicial institutions and that a legitimate concern ... is to ensure that the proceedings do not suffer undue delays and that the trial is completed within a reasonable time, which is recognized as a fundamental right of due process under international human rights law."[7]

9. In light of the Chamber's directive to the effect that each Defence team shall have, for cross-examination, the same amount of time as allocated to the Prosecution and its indication that it may, where appropriate, consider granting additional time, the Chamber does not see how deferring the defence grievances to the Appeal Chambers would advance any further the proceedings in the instant case.

(ii) Requests for Reconsideration

10. The Chamber is of the opinion that there is no basis to reconsider its Decision in the present case. No new material fact has been brought to the attention of the Chamber and the decision rendered on 3 November 2006 was neither erroneous nor prejudicial to the Defence, since it complied with the relevant guidelines set forth by the Appeals Chamber in Prlić. Furthermore, the Chamber considers that the Defence requests to allocate additional time for cross-examination are moot since the Chamber has already indicated its disposition to consider such an extension under appropriate circumstances.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES Ndindiliyimana's request for certification;

DENIES the requests for reconsideration filed by the Defence for Sagahutu and Bizimungu.

LE TRIBUNAL PÉNAL INTERNATIONAL POUR LE RWANDA,

SIEGEANT en la Chambre de première instance II, composée des juges Asoka de Silva, Président de Chambre, Taghrid Hikmet et Seon Ki Park (la « Chambre »),

SAISI de la requête de Nzuwonemeye intitulée « Motion Requesting the Cooperation from the Government of The Netherlands Pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute » (la « Requête »), déposé le 25 janvier 2006,

NOTANT que le Procureur n'a pas déposé de réponse à la Requête,

VU le Statut du Tribunal (le « Statut ») et le Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »), en particulier l'article 28 du Statut et l'article 54 du Règlement,

STATUE sur la Requête en vertu de l'article 73 (A) du Règlement, sur la base des arguments écrits de la Défense.

Arguments de la Défense

1. La Défense de Nzuwonemeye demande à la Chambre de rendre une ordonnance en vue d'obtenir la coopération et l'assistance du Gouvernement néerlandais pour faciliter un entretien avec le Major Robert Alexander Van Putten[1]. L'équipe de la Défense souhaite interroger le Major Van Putten sur différentes questions relatives à son rôle comme soldat de la MINUAR au Rwanda en 1994, notamment (a) sa perception des événements survenus au Rwanda en 1994 ; (b) sa perception de la situation militaire au Rwanda et le rôle de la MINUAR ; (c) les réunions auxquelles il a assisté avec des officiers supérieurs rwandais les 6 et 7 avril 1994 ; (d) la mort de 10 casques bleus belges de la MINUAR le 7 avril 1994 ; et (e) le meurtre de l'ancienne Première Ministre du Rwanda, Agathe Uwilingiyimana[2].

2. La Défense fait valoir qu'elle a reçu une lettre du Sous-Secrétaire Général aux affaires juridiques de l'Organisation des Nations Unies indiquant que l'Organisation n'avait aucune objection à cette rencontre et à cet entretien, à condition que ne soit abordée aucune question « liée (i) à des informations confidentielles fournies à l'ONU par un tiers ou un Etat, (ii) au déroulement de réunions à huis clos ou de consultations informelles tenue par le Conseil de Sécurité ou (iii) à des informations dont la divulgation risquerait de mettre des vies en danger »[3] [traduction].

3. La Défense affirme que le 28 novembre 2005, elle a adressé une lettre au Ministre néerlandais de la défense pour lui demander l'autorisation d'obtenir les coordonnées du major Robert Alexander Van Putten et de rencontrer ce témoin potentiel[4]. Le 19 décembre 2005, le Ministre a rejeté la demande de la Défense, en expliquant dans sa lettre, entre autres, qu'en raison de la nécessité d'un emploi judicieux des ressources, les Pays-Bas ont pour politique de ne pas donner suite aux requêtes relatives au mandat des Tribunaux spéciaux qui n'ont pas un caractère contraignant. Le Ministre a toutefois indiqué que le Gouvernement néerlandais donnerait suite à une ordonnance de la Chambre de première instance lui demandant de produire le Major Van Putten en qualité de témoin[5].

4. La Défense fait valoir qu'elle ne peut déterminer si le Major Van Putten sera appelé comme témoin sans d'abord s'être entretenue avec celui-ci. Elle soutient enfin que, selon la jurisprudence des deux Tribunaux spéciaux, lorsque la Défense ne connaît pas la nature précise et la pertinence des éléments de preuve qu'un témoin éventuel peut fournir, il est dans l'intérêt de la justice de lui permettre de rencontrer le témoin et apprécier la valeur de son témoignage[6].

Délibération

5. La Chambre rappelle que l'article 28 du Statut fait obligation aux Etats de « collabore[r] avec le Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda à la recherche et au jugement des personnes accusées d'avoir commis des violations graves du droit international humanitaire ». Le paragraphe 2 dudit article énumère de manière non exhaustive les types de demande de coopération ou d'assistance que le Tribunal peut adresser aux Etats. Selon la jurisprudence du Tribunal, les pouvoirs conférés à la Chambre par l'article 28 du Statut peuvent s'étendre à toute demande ou ordonnance pouvant assister

[1] Requête, par. 1.
[2] Requête, par. 3.

[4] Requête, par. 4 annexe 2.

le Tribunal dans son mandat[7]. De plus, la Chambre rappelle que l'article 54 du Règlement l'autorise à délivrer les ordonnances nécessaires aux fins de l'enquête, de la préparation ou de la conduite du procès. Ainsi habilitée par l'article 28 du Statut et l'article 54 du Règlement, la Chambre de première instance I a récemment délivré une ordonnance demandant la coopération d'un Etat dans la présente espèce[8].

6. La Chambre rappelle que selon la jurisprudence du Tribunal, la Partie qui sollicite une ordonnance en vertu de l'article 28 du Statut doit préciser autant que possible la nature et le but de l'assistance demandée à l'Etat en question, et indiquer la pertinence de sa demande par rapport à l'espèce. Elle doit également établir qu'elle a fait des efforts pour obtenir cette assistance mais qu'elle n'y est pas parvenue[9].

7. La Chambre note que le paragraphe 3 de la requête précise la nature des informations recherchées ainsi que leur pertinence par rapport à l'espèce. Il ressort de l'annexe 2 jointe à la requête que la Défense a fait des efforts raisonnables pour obtenir la coopération du Gouvernement néerlandais en demandant l'autorisation de rencontrer l'ancien soldat de la MINUAR. La Chambre relève également que les efforts de la Défense n'ont pas été couronnés de succès en raison de la politique des Pays-Bas consistant à ne pas donner suite aux requêtes relatives au mandat des Tribunaux spéciaux si celles-ci n'ont pas un caractère contraignant. La Chambre conclut que les conditions pour obtenir la délivrance d'une ordonnance de demande de coopération en vertu de l'article 28 du Statut sont donc réunies.

8. De plus, la Chambre s'accorde avec la jurisprudence des Tribunaux spéciaux selon laquelle lorsque la Défense ne connaît pas la nature précise et la pertinence des éléments de preuve qu'un témoin éventuel peut fournir, il est dans l'intérêt de la justice de lui permettre de rencontrer le témoin et d'apprécier la valeur de son témoignage[10].

9. Toutefois, en délivrant l'ordonnance de demande de coopération, la Chambre est consciente de ce que le Sous-Secrétaire général aux affaires juridiques de l'Organisation des Nations Unies a consenti moyennant le respect de certaines conditions, à la tenue des rencontres proposées.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

FAIT DROIT à la Requête ;

PRIE le Gouvernement néerlandais de fournir toute l'assistance requise à l'équipe de la Défense de Nzuwonemeye pour lui permettre de rencontrer le Major Van Putten et de s'entretenir avec lui à un endroit qui conviendrait à toutes les parties ;

LE TRIBUNAL PENAL INTERNATIONAL POUR LE RWANDA (le « Tribunal »),

SIEGEANT en la Chambre de première instance II, composée des juges Asoka de Silva, Président de Chambre, Taghrid Hikmet et Seon Ki Park (la « Chambre »),

SAISI de la requête de Nzuwonemeye intitulée « Motion for Request of Cooperation from the Government of Ghana and the Government of Togo Pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute » (la « Requête »), déposée le 25 janvier 2006,

NOTANT que le Procureur n'a pas déposé de réponse à la Requête,

VU le Statut du Tribunal (le « Statut ») et le Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »), en particulier l'article 28 du Statut et l'article 54 du Règlement,

STATUE sur la Requête en vertu de l'article 73 (A) du Règlement, sur la base des arguments écrits de la Défense.

Arguments de la Défense

1. La Défense de Nzuwonemeye demande à la Chambre de rendre une ordonnance en vue d'obtenir la coopération et l'assistance du Gouvernement ghanéen pour faciliter un entretien avec les personnes ci-après : le sergent Aboagye, le général de corps d'armée Henry Kuame Ayidiho ainsi que les capitaines Amoako, Kwesi Doe et Samdow Zambulugu[1]. L'équipe de la Défense souhaite interroger ces personnes sur différentes questions relatives à leur rôle comme soldats de la MINUAR au Rwanda en 1994, en l'occurrence (a) leur perception des événements survenus au Rwanda en 1994; (b) leur perception de la situation militaire au Rwanda et le rôle de la MINUAR; (c) les réunions auxquelles elles ont avec des officiers supérieurs rwandais les 6 et 7 avril 1994; (d) la mort de dix casques bleus belges de la MINUAR le 7 avril 1994 et (e) le meurtre de l'ancienne Première ministre du Rwanda, Agathe Uwilingiyimana[2].

2. La Défense fait valoir qu'elle a reçu une lettre du Sous-Secrétaire général aux affaires juridiques de l'Organisation des Nations Unies indiquant que l'organisation n'avait aucune objection à cette rencontre et cet entretien, à condition que ne soit abordée aucune question « liée (i) à des informations confidentielles fournies à 1'ONU par un tiers ou un Etat, (ii) au déroulement de réunions à huis clos ou de consultations informelles tenues par le Conseil de sécurité, ou (iii) à des informations dont la divulgation risquerait de mettre des vies en danger »[3] [traduction].

3. La Défense affirme que le 29 novembre 2005, elle a adressé une lettre au Ministre ghanéen de la défense pour lui demander l'autorisation de rencontrer les anciens soldats de la MINUAR susmentionnés et d'obtenir les adresses de ceux-ci[4]. Elle déclare qu'elle n'a toujours pas reçu de réponse bien qu'elle ait envoyé une lettre de rappel au Ministre de la défense le 19 décembre 2005. Elle craint donc que sa demande ne soit rejetée[5].

4. La Défense fait enfin valoir que le Procureur va probablement achever la présentation de ses moyens à charge cette année et elle n'a donc plus beaucoup de temps devant elle pour mener ses enquêtes. Il devient par conséquent urgent pour l'Equipe de la Défense de pouvoir rencontrer ces témoins, de les interroger et d'apprécier la pertinence de leurs témoignages. La Défense estime qu'une ordonnance de la Chambre pourrait contribuer à accélérer la procédure[6].

Délibération

5. La Chambre rappelle que l'article 28 du Statut fait obligation aux Etats de « collabore[r] avec le Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda à la recherche et au jugement des personnes accusées d'avoir commis des violations graves du droit international humanitaire », Le paragraphe 2 dudit article énumère de manière non exhaustive les types de demande de coopération ou d'assistance que le Tribunal peut adresser aux Etats. Selon la jurisprudence du Tribunal, les pouvoirs conférés à la Chambre par l'article 28 du Statut peuvent s'étendre à toute demande ou ordonnance pouvant assister le Tribunal dans son mandat[7]. De plus, la Chambre rappelle que l'article 54 du Règlement l'autorise à délivrer les ordonnances nécessaires aux fins de l'enquête, de la préparation ou de la conduite du procès. Ainsi habilitée par l'article 28 du Statut et l'article 54 du Règlement, la Chambre de première instance II a récemment délivré une ordonnance demandant la coopération d'un Etat dans la présente espèce[8].

6. La Chambre rappelle que selon la jurisprudence du Tribunal, la partie qui sollicite une ordonnance en vertu de l'article 28 du Statut doit préciser autant que possible la nature et le but de l'assistance demandée à l'Etat en question, et indiquer la pertinence de sa demande par rapport à l'espèce. Elle doit également établir qu'elle a fait des efforts pour obtenir cette assistance mais qu'elle n'y est pas parvenue[9].

7. La Chambre note que le paragraphe 3 de la requête précise la nature des informations recherchées ainsi que leur pertinence par rapport à l'espèce. Il ressort de l'annexe 2 jointe à la requête que la Défense a fait des efforts raisonnables pour obtenir la coopération du Gouvernement ghanéen en demandant l'autorisation de rencontrer les anciens soldats de la MINUAR en question. La Chambre relève également que les efforts de la Défense n'ont pas été couronnés de succès, et que malgré une lettre de rappel adressée au Ministre ghanéen de la défense, elle n'a toujours pas reçu de réponse. La Chambre conclut que les conditions pour obtenir la délivrance d'une ordonnance de demande de coopération en vertu de l'article 28 du Statut sont donc réunies.

8. De plus, la Chambre s'accorde avec la jurisprudence des Tribunaux spéciaux selon laquelle lorsque la Défense ne connait pas la nature précise et la pertinence des éléments de preuve qu'un témoin éventuel peut fournir, il est dans l'intérêt de la justice de lui permettre de rencontrer le témoin et d'apprécier la valeur de son témoignage[10].

LE TRIBUNAL PENAL INTERNATIONAL POUR LE RWANDA (le « Tribunal »),

SIÉGEANT en la Chambre de première instance II, composée des juges Asoka de Silva, Président de Chambre, Taghrid Hikmet et Seon Ki Park (la « Chambre »),

SATSI de la requête de Nzuwonemeye intitulée « Motion for Request of Cooperation from the Kingdom of Belgium Pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute » (la « Requête »), déposée le 18 mai 2006,

NOTANT que le Procureur n'a pas déposé de réponse à la Requête,

VU le Statut du Tribunal (le « Statut ») et le Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »), en particulier l'article 28 du Statut et l'article 54 du Règlement,

STATUE sur la Requête sur la base des arguments écrits de la Défense, déposés conformément à l'article 73 (A) du Règlement.

Arguments de la Défense

1. La Défense de Nzuwonemeye demande à la Chambre de rendre une ordonnance en vue d'obtenir la coopération et l'assistance du Gouvernement belge pour faciliter un entretien avec le major Maggen et le colonel Joseph Dewez[1]. La Défense souhaite les interroger sur différentes questions concernant leur rôle en tant que soldats de la MINUAR (Mission des Nations Unies pour l'assistance au Rwanda) au Rwanda en 1994, en l'occurrence (a) leur perception des événements survenus au Rwanda en 1994 ; (b) leur perception de la situation militaire au Rwanda et du rôle de la MINUAR; (c) les réunions auxquelles ils ont participé avec des officiers supérieurs rwandais les 6 et 7 avril 1994; (d) la mort de dix casques bleus belges de la MINWAR le 7 avril 1994 et (e) le meurtre de l'ancien Premier Ministre du Rwanda, Agathe Uwilingiyimana[2].

[1] Requête, par. 8.
[2] Ibid., par. 3.

2. La Défense fait valoir qu'elle a reçu une lettre du Sous-secrétaire général aux affaires juridiques de l'organisation des Nations Unies indiquant que l'organisation n'avait aucune objection à cette rencontre et à cet entretien, à condition que ne soit abordée aucune question « se rapportant (i) à des informations confidentielles fournies à 1'ONU par un tiers ou un État, (ii) au déroulement de réunions à huis clos ou de consultations informelles tenues par le Conseil de sécurité, ou (iii) à des informations dont la divulgation risquerait de mettre des vies en danger »[3].

3. La Défense affirme que le 28 novembre 2005, elle a adressé une lettre au Ministre belge de la défense dans laquelle elle demandait l'adresse de ces anciens soldats de la MINUAR et sollicitait l'autorisation de les rencontrer[4]. Le 4 janvier 2006, elle a reçu une lettre du Ministre belge de la défense indiquant que la demande avait été transmise au Ministère de la justice[5]. Le 10 février 2006, la Défense a reçu une lettre du Ministère de la justice l'informant qu'elle n'était pas autorisée à rencontrer le major Maggen et le colonel Dewez, au motif que le Ministre considérait que l'article 28 du Statut ne s'appliquait qu'aux demandes émanant du Bureau du Procureur ou du Tribunal, et que par conséquent il ne pouvait accéder à la requête de la Défense[6]. Le Ministère indiquait cependant qu'il pourrait faire droit à cette demande sur ordonnance du Tribunal[7].

4. La Défense déclare enfin qu'elle n'est pas en mesure d'apprécier pleinement la nature et la pertinence de ces témoins potentiels, et qu'il est donc dans l'intérêt de la justice qu'elle soit autorisée à rencontrer le major Maggen et le colonel Dewez afin de pouvoir apprécier la pertinence de leurs témoignages[8].

Délibération

5. La Chambre rappelle qu'aux termes de l'article 28 du Statut, les États sont tenus de « collabore[r] avec le Tribunal international pour le Rwanda à la recherche et au jugement des personnes accusées d'avoir commis des violations graves du droit international humanitaire ». Au paragraphe 2 de l'article 28, figure une liste non-exhaustive des types de demande de coopération ou d'assistance que le Tribunal peut adresser à un État. Selon la jurisprudence du Tribunal, les pouvoirs conférés à la Chambre par l'article 28 du Statut peuvent s'étendre à toute demande ou toute ordonnance visant à assister le Tribunal dans l'exercice de son mandat[9]. La Chambre rappelle par ailleurs l'article 54 du Règlement qui l'autorise à délivrer, à la demande d'une des parties ou de sa propre initiative, toute ordonnance qu'elle juge nécessaire aux fins de l'enquête, de la préparation ou de la conduite du procès. Agissant en vertu de l'article 28 du Statut et de l'article 54 du Règlement, la Chambre a récemment rendu quatre ordonnances enjoignant à des États de collaborer avec le Tribunal en l'espèce[10].

6. La Chambre rappelle également la jurisprudence du Tribunal selon laquelle la partie sollicitant une ordonnance en application de l'article 28 du Statut doit préciser, dans la mesure du possible, la nature et le but de l'assistance sollicitée et sa pertinence au regard du procès. Elle doit également établir qu'elle a fait des efforts pour obtenir cette assistance, mais que ceux-ci ont été vains[11].

7. La Chambre relève que dans la Requête[12], la Défense précise la nature des informations sollicitées tout comme leur pertinence au regard du procès. Le document joint en annexe 2 de la Requête montre que la Défense a fait des efforts raisonnables pour obtenir l'assistance du gouvernement belge, en demandant l'autorisation de rencontrer les anciens soldats de la MINUAR dont il est question. La Chambre ajoute que l'annexe 3 montre que les efforts de la Défense ont été vains, Elle conclut donc que les critères requis pour faire droit à une demande d'ordonnance en vue d'obtenir la coopération d'un État conformément à l'article 28 ont été remplis. Qui plus est, les autorités belges ont indiqué qu'elles étaient disposées à répondre à cette demande à condition qu'elle soit présentée sous la forme d'une ordonnance délivrée par le Tribunal.

8. Par ailleurs, la Chambre fait sienne la jurisprudence des deux Tribunaux ad hoc selon laquelle lorsque la Défense ne connaît pas la nature précise et la pertinence des éléments de preuve qu'un témoin éventuel peut fournir, il est dans l'intérêt de la justice de lui permettre de rencontrer le témoin et d'évaluer sa déposition[13].

9. Néanmoins, en rendant l'ordonnance de coopération en l'espèce, la Chambre est consciente que le Sous-Secrétaire général aux affaires juridiques de l'organisation des Nations Unies avait consenti à la rencontre susmentionnée en y mettant un certain nombre de conditions.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

FAIT DROIT à la Requête,

Appeals Chamber

Judges : Mohamed Shahabuddeen, Presiding Judge ; Mehmet Güney; Liu Daqun ; Theodor Meron ; Wolfgang Schomburg

Sylvestre Gacumbitsi – Appellant challenges a series of interlocutory decisions made by the Trial Chamber but none of the errors alleged was pleaded properly in the Notice of Appeal : consideration of the arguments advanced in the Appeal Brief, Vague dates in the Indictment : no prejudice to the Accused regarding the fact that none of the Appellant's convictions depended on the incidents of those dates, Defence team difficulties : reversal of a Trial Chamber's scheduling decision only upon a showing of abuse of discretion resulting in prejudice, In absence of a timely motion from the party opposing an expert a Trial Chamber is obligated to admit expert testimony or to accept a witness's qualification as an expert, Procedure by which an expert's report can be accepted into evidence without that expert testifying, Trial Chamber's discretion regarding the qualification of an expert witness, Same person might be qualified as an expert in one case and not in another – Genocide, Typographical error in the trial judgement which the Appeals Chamber corrects the error proprio motu, Legal characterization of the dolus specialis, Genocidal intent can be proven through inference from the facts and circumstances of a case : intent must usually be inferred, Inferential approach does not relieve the Prosecution of its burden to prove each element of its case, No serious contention raised by the Defence that the Trial Chamber's findings of fact were insufficient to support an inference of genocidal intent, Lack of specificity of the Indictment in Respect of the Murder of a Tutsi civilian : indictement defective, Material facts concerning a particular incident not pleaded in the indictment but included in a chart of witnesses that set forth the facts to which each witness would testify and clearly identified the charges in the indictment to which those facts corresponded : Indictment cured by timely, clear, and consistent information, Definition of the term "committed" in Article 6 (1) of the Statute, In the context of genocide "direct and physical perpetration" need not mean physical killing, Modes of liability used by the Trial Chamber to categorize the Accused's conduct ("ordering" and "instigating") do not fully capture the Appellant's criminal responsibility – Extermination as a Crime against Humanity, Requisite Intent for the Crime of Extermination : accused must have acted with knowledge of the broader context of the attack and with knowledge that his act formed part of the widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population, Proof of a plan or policy is not a prerequisite to a conviction for extermination, Individual identification of the victims of the crime of extermination not required – Rape as a Crime against Humanity, Elucidation of the "widespread or systematic" requirement, Acquaintance between Witness and her assailant does not mean that her rape cannot constitute a crime against humanity, Instigation of the crime : sufficient to demonstrate that the instigation was a factor substantially contributing to the conduct of another person committing the crime, Superior liability (art. 6 (3)), Convictions should not be entered under both Articles 6 (1) and 6 (3) of the Statute for the same crime based on the same conduct, Question of whether the Appellant had effective control over the perpetrators, Non-consent and the knowledge are elements of the crime of rape, Proof of the non-consent by proving the existence of coercive circumstances under which meaningful consent is not possible : not necessary to introduce evidence concerning the words or conduct of the victim or the victim's relationship to the perpetrator, Knowledge of non-consent may be proven by establishing beyond reasonable doubt that the accused was aware or had reason to be aware of the coercive circumstances that undermined the possibility of genuine consent – Murder as a Crime against Humanity, Permissible to base a conviction on circumstantial evidence and/or hearsay evidence – Authority for Ordering, Ordering does not require the existence of a formal superior-subordinate relationship, Actus reus of "ordering" is that a person in a position of authority instruct another person to commit an offence – Joint Criminal Enterprise, Liability for murder, genocide, extermination and rape, Absence of the words "joint criminal enterprise" of the Indictment. does not in and of itself indicate a defect, Words "acted in concert with" do not suffice, Necessity to refer to concerted action among a plurality of persons in support of a common scheme, strategy or plan to exterminate the Tutsi – Witness' credibility, Mere existence of inconsistencies between the testimonies of Witnesses does not necessarily undermine either witness's credibility, Not inappropriate per se for the parties to discuss the content of testimony and witness statements with their witnesses, Broad discretion of the Trial Chamber to determine the weight to be given to discrepancies between a witness's testimony and his prior statements – Assessment of the Evidence, Vocal distortion due to the use of a megaphone, Assessment of the Indictment as a whole – Trial and Appeals Chambers have a duty to consider all of the implications of the evidence presented, and to render judgment based on all theories of culpability disclosed in the pleadings and on the evidence – Sentencing : Appeals Chamber's prerogative to substitute a new sentence when the one given by the Trial Chamber cannot be reconciled with the principles governing sentencing at the Tribunal, Trial Chamber erred in not holding the Appellant liable for ordering the crimes committed not only by the police but also by the "other perpetrators", Trial Chamber erred in considering that the good relationships of the Appellant's family with its neighbors constituted a factor in mitigation – Sentence upheld to life imprisonment

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively) is seized of appeals by Sylvestre Gacumbitsi ("Appellant") and the Prosecution against the Judgement rendered by Trial Chamber III on 17 June 2004 in the case of The Prosecutor v. Sylvestre Gacumbitsi ("Trial Judgement").[1]

I. Introduction

A. Background

2. The Appellant, Sylvestre Gacumbitsi, was born in 1943 in Kigina Sector, Rusumo Commune, Kibungo Préfecture, Rwanda.[2] The Appellant was bourgmestre of Rusumo Commune in April 1994, a position he had held since 1983.[3] As such, he was the highest-ranking local administrative official.[4]

3. The Appellant was tried on the basis of an indictment dated 20 June 2001 ("Indictment"), which charged him with individual criminal responsibility for certain crimes committed against the Tutsi population of Kibungo Préfecture between 6 and 30 April 1994.[5] The Trial Chamber found the Appellant guilty of genocide (Count 1),[6] and dismissed the alternative charge of complicity in genocide (Count 2).[7] It also convicted him of extermination and rape as crimes against humanity (Counts 3 and 5, respectively),[8] but acquitted him of murder as a crime against humanity (Count 4).[9] It imposed a single sentence of thirty years' imprisonment.[10]

B. The Appeals

4. The Appellant appeals his convictions and challenges his sentence.[11] He divides his allegations of error into five categories; the Appeals Chamber will refer to these as "grounds of appeal" and the specific alleged errors as "sub-grounds". The Appellant alleges errors in certain interlocutory decisions of the Trial Chamber (Ground 1); and errors relating to his convictions for genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, and rape as a crime against humanity (Grounds 2, 3, and 4, respectively). The Appellant submits that his sentence should be reduced to fifteen years in the event that his convictions are not quashed on

It should be noted that, pursuant to an order of the Pre-Appeal Judge dated 24 March 2005, the Appellant was to file his reply no later than 29 March 2005. Order, 24 March 2005. The reply was thus filed late. The Appellant did not attempt to show good cause for this delay. Nevertheless, the Prosecution did not object to the Gacumbitsi Reply on this basis. Considering the concrete circumstances present in this instance, and in the interest of justice, the Appeals Chamber will take into account the submissions made in the reply. The Appeals Chamber emphasizes, however, that it proceeds in this manner exceptionally, and that this exception should not be interpreted to suggest that filing deadlines will not be strictly enforced in other cases.

appeal (Ground 5). The Prosecution responds that all grounds of appeal raised by the Appellant should be dismissed.[12]

5. The Prosecution presents six grounds of appeal.[13] It avers that the Trial Chamber erred in various respects in sentencing (Ground 1), in acquitting the Appellant of murder as a crime against humanity (Ground 2), in failing to find him criminally responsible for certain rapes (Ground 3), in its enunciation of the elements of rape (Ground 4), in refusing to consider joint criminal enterprise ("JCE") as a mode of liability because it had not been pleaded adequately in the Indictment (Ground 5), and in holding that the Appellant lacked authority to order participants in the attack in Rusumo Commune other than communal policemen (Ground 6). The Appellant objects to all grounds of appeal raised by the Prosecution, except Ground 4 (elements of rape), with respect to which the Appellant does not take a position.[14]

C. STANDARDS OF APPELLATE REVIEW

6. The Appeals Chamber now recalls some of the applicable standards of appellate review pursuant to Article 24 of the Statute of the Tribunal ("Statute"). The Appeals Chamber reviews only errors of law which invalidate the decision of the Trial Chamber and errors of fact which have occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

7. As regards errors of law, the Appeals Chamber has recently stated:

> Where a party alleges that there is an error of law, that party must advance arguments in support of the submission and explain how the error invalidates the decision. However, if the appellant's arguments do not support the contention, that party does not automatically lose its point since the Appeals Chamber may step in and, for other reasons, find in favour of the contention that there is an error of law.[15]

8. As regards errors of fact, it is well established that the Appeals Chamber will not lightly overturn findings of fact made by a Trial Chamber.

> Where the Defence alleges an erroneous finding of fact, the Appeals Chamber must give deference to the Trial Chamber that received the evidence at trial, and it will only interfere in those findings where no reasonable trier of fact could have reached the same finding or where the finding is wholly erroneous. Furthermore, the erroneous finding will be revoked or revised only if the error occasioned a miscarriage of justice.[16]

9. A party cannot merely repeat on appeal arguments that did not succeed at trial, unless it can demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's rejection of those arguments constituted an error warranting the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.[17] Arguments which do not have the potential to cause the impugned decision to be reversed or revised may immediately be dismissed by the Appeals Chamber and need not be considered on the merits.[18]

[13] Prosecution's Amended Notice of Appeal, filed on 16 December 2004 pursuant to the Appeals Chamber's Décision relative à la requête du Procureur en modification de son acte d'appel, issued on 15 December 2004 ("Prosecution Notice of Appeal"); Appellant's Brief, filed on 28 September 2004 ("Prosecution Appeal Brief"); Prosecution's Reply to Defence's Response, filed on 19 January 2005 ("Prosecution Reply").
[14] Respondent's Brief, filed confidentially in French on 10 January 2005 ("Gacumbitsi Response"). Because the French translation of the Prosecution Appeal Brief was communicated to the Defence only on 1 December 2004, notwithstanding its being filed on 17 November 2004, See Gacumbitsi Response, para. 31, the Appeals Chamber considers that there was good cause for the delay in the filing of the Response Brief beyond the forty days allowed by Rule 112 of the Rules. The Appeals Chamber notes that in its reply, the Prosecution did not argue that the Gacumbitsi Response was untimely.

10. In order for the Appeals Chamber to assess the appealing party's arguments, the appealing party must provide precise references to relevant transcript pages or paragraphs in the decision or judgement to which the challenge is being made.[19] Further,

> "the Appeals Chamber cannot be expected to consider a party's submissions in detail if they are obscure, contradictory, vague or suffer from other formal and obvious insufficiencies."[20]

Finally, the Appeals Chamber has inherent discretion in selecting which submissions merit a detailed reasoned opinion in writing and will dismiss arguments which are evidently unfounded without providing detailed reasoning.[21]

II. The Appeal of Sylvestre Gacumbitsi

A. Interlocutory Decisions (Ground of Appeal 1)

11. The Appellant challenges, on various grounds, a series of interlocutory decisions made by the Trial Chamber.[22] None of the errors he alleges was pleaded properly in his Notice of Appeal, which merely lists the decisions challenged and states, with respect to each one, that there is an "erreur de droit [et/ou] de fait à développer".[23] The notice thus fails to "indicate the substance of the alleged errors and the relief sought" as required by Rule 108 of the Tribunal's Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules"). The Prosecution does not object to this failure, however. Instead it argues that the Appeal Brief itself suffers from similar shortcomings. In light of this, the Appeals Chamber will consider the Appellant's arguments as advanced in his Appeal Brief.[24]

1. Decision on the Indictment

12. The Appellant challenges a decision issued on 25 July 2002, in which the Trial Chamber, inter alia, rejected his argument that the dates specified in the Indictment were insufficiently specific.[25] He argues that references to acts committed "on or about" a certain date violated his rights under Article 20 (4) (a) of the Statute.[26] He further contends that subsequent witness testimony specifying the dates did not cure this lack of notice.[27]

13. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber was reasonable in holding that the trial could proceed fairly on the basis of the Indictment as drafted. The dates of specific incidents alleged in the Indictment are for the most part provided with considerable precision,[28] and the use of the phrase "on or about", to which the Appellant objects, is not enough to undermine the notice that was given to the Appellant.

The Appeals Chamber will not consider the other aspects of the Decision on Indictment because the Appellant makes no specific argument against them.

[28] See, e.g., Indictment, paras. 5, 6, 7, 11, 12, 14, 15, 21, 38, 39. In each of these paragraphs the Indictment gives the exact date or range of two to three days during which each incident took place, but uses the expression "on or about", as in "on or about 15 April 1994".

14. It is true that the dates included in paragraphs 32 and 33 of the Indictment ("On a date uncertain during April 1994") as well as in paragraph 36 ("On a date uncertain during April-June 1994") are even less specific. But none of the Appellant's convictions depended on the incidents described in these paragraphs, so any vagueness in this regard, even if constituting a defect, has not prejudiced him. The Trial Chamber held that the Prosecution had not proven the incidents described in paragraphs 32 and 33.[29] As to paragraph 36, it found that the Appellant had expelled his tenants, but held that he was not criminally responsible for their subsequent murder.[30] The Trial Chamber did mention this last incident as one indicator of the Appellant's mens rea for crimes against humanity.[31] The Appeals Chamber finds that this reference did not affect the verdict, as the other evidence of the Appellant's mens rea cited by the Trial Chamber was ample.[32] Furthermore, the Appellant does not contest the Trial Chamber's holding that the Pre-Trial Brief, which provided further details of the incident, cured any vagueness in paragraph 36 of the Indictment.[33]

15. Accordingly, this sub-ground of appeal is dismissed.

2. Decisions of 28 July 2003 and 28 August 2003

16. On 23 May and 10 July 2003, the President of the Tribunal ("President") held two informal conferences with the parties to determine the starting date of the Appellant's trial.[34] The date of 28 July 2003 was selected, with the Prosecution expected to finish presenting its evidence by the end of August 2003 and the Appellant expected to start his defence on 6 October 2003. On 22 July 2003, the Appellant submitted a motion seeking the postponement of his trial.[35] On 28 July 2003, after hearing the parties on the issue,[36] the Trial Chamber dismissed the Motion to Postpone.[37]

17. The Appellant's trial thus started as planned, on 28 July 2003, and by the end of August 2003 the Prosecution finished presenting its case. In a status conference held on 28 August 2003, the Appellant requested the Trial Chamber to postpone the commencement of the Defence case until 6 December 2003.[38] This request was denied by the Trial Chamber.[39] The Appellant now asks the Appeals Chamber to reverse the Decisions of 28 July and 28 August 2003.[40]

18. The Appellant asserts that at both of the informal conferences, his counsel informed the President that his team had encountered difficulties, including having been prevented from going on mission since October 2002, that prevented it from being ready for the start of the trial on 28 July 2003. On both occasions, the President proposed the same solution: adding a co-counsel and an additional assistant to his team.[41] Nonetheless, the Appellant asserts, his co-counsel was not appointed until 14 July 2003, and as of 22 July 2003, the additional assistant had still not been appointed and his investigators had still not returned from mission.[42] The Appellant submits that the Trial Chamber's failure to postpone the proceedings violated his right to have adequate time and facilities to prepare his defence as provided by Article 20 (4) (b) of the Statute.[43] He further argues that, in its Decision of 28 August 2003, the Trial Chamber erroneously attributed to his counsel a statement that Defence investigators had met with approximately 200 potential witnesses;

this statement had in fact been made by the representative of the Defence Counsel Management Section ("DCMS") of the Registry of the Tribunal.[44]

19. The Appeals Chamber notes that trial scheduling is subject to the Trial Chamber's discretion.[45] The accused of course has a right, under Article 20 (4) (b) of the Statute, to "adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his or her defence". But it is the Trial Chamber that is best positioned to consider the demands of trial preparation in each particular case and to set a schedule that respects that right while also avoiding undue delay in the administration of justice.[46] The Appeals Chamber thus will only reverse a Trial Chamber's scheduling decision upon a showing of abuse of discretion[47] resulting in prejudice, that is, rendering the trial unfair.[48] The Appellant has not made such a showing, as will be demonstrated below.

(a) Decision of 28 July 2003

20. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Appellant has not shown that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in rejecting his Motion to Postpone. First, the Appellant does not contest that, prior to 28 July 2003, he had been in contact with more than 200 potential witnesses. He states that not all of these contacts were fruitful and that the Defence had problems finding credible witnesses,[49] but he does not demonstrate that these problems were the result of inadequate time being allotted or that they impaired his defence. Second, although the Appellant contends that he twice mentioned to the President problems that were affecting his preparation for the trial, he does not dispute that, as the Trial Chamber found, on both occasions he nonetheless ultimately agreed to the starting date of 28 July 2003. Under the circumstances, the Trial Chamber acted within its discretion to determine that the Appellant's rights under Article 20 (4) (b) of the Statute were not impaired.

21. Moreover, even if the Trial Chamber's decision had amounted to an abuse of discretion, the Appellant has not demonstrated that it caused him any prejudice. He does not, for instance, point to any way in which he would have defended himself differently had he had more time to prepare.[50] Moreover, the Decision of 28 July 2003 included safeguards to ensure the fairness of the proceedings. For instance, the Trial Chamber left open the possibility that the Appellant could > "recall back Prosecution witnesses to interview or cross-examine them on specific issues if the Defence justify that before the Chamber".[51]

Further, the Decision of 28 July 2003 was concerned principally with the commencement of the Prosecution's case. The Trial Chamber left open the possibility for the Defence to request that the start of its own case be postponed, and the Defence later did so.[52] For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses this sub-ground of appeal.

(b) Decision of 28 August 2003

22. The Appeals Chamber is likewise not convinced that the Decision of 28 August 2003 amounted to an abuse of discretion. First, the errors to which the Appellant points are of no consequence. It was, indeed, a representative of DCMS who stated that the Defence had contacted more than 200 potential witnesses – but that figure was based on information provided by the Appellant, and the Appellant did not challenge its accuracy at the time it was brought up. It is also true that the Appellant did initially object, during the 10 July 2003 conference, to the 6 October 2003 start date for the Defence case. But after he was told that co-counsel and an assistant would be appointed, he agreed to that start date.[53] The promised appointments were made after the conference.[54]

23. Second, the Appellant has shown no reason to question the Trial Chamber's conclusion that, under the circumstances, the Defence had "had sufficient time and resources to prepare its case and to draw up a list of witnesses to testify for Defence as of 6th October 2003".[55] Counsel had been appointed in October 2001, and since then the Defence team had billed more than 7,500 hours of preparatory work.[56] Further, the Appellant demonstrates no error in the Trial Chamber's finding that the Defence team's difficulties in contacting witnesses in Rwanda did not merit postponement of the trial.[57] Finally, he again fails to demonstrate any way in which his defence was materially impaired.[58] For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses this sub-ground of appeal.

3. Decision of 1 August 2003

24. On 14 July 2003, the Defence filed a motion seeking further information concerning certain Prosecution witnesses.[59] The Prosecution responded that the information in question was not subject to disclosure pursuant to Rule 70 (A) of the Rules, but nonetheless agreed to provide it, and did so in Annex A to its Response to Motion for Disclosure.[60] The Defence replied that the information in Annex A suggested that the Prosecution possessed further material relating to proceedings commenced by the Rwandan authorities against the witnesses.[61]

25. On 1 August 2003, the Trial Chamber rendered a decision ordering the Prosecution, "if the information contained in Annex A is based on specific materials," to allow the Defence to inspect such materials within forty-eight hours.[62] The Appellant now challenges this decision.[63] He submits that the Trial Chamber erred in rendering a "conditional decision" because Annex A of the Response to the Motion for Disclosure showed that the Prosecution had knowledge of the material requested.[64] The Appellant also contends that the Prosecution never complied with the decision, and that this was brought to the attention of the Trial Chamber on several occasions, to no effect.[65]

26. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Appellant has demonstrated no error on the Trial Chamber's part. There is no evidence that the material in question even existed, nor that the Prosecution had the material in its possession but failed to disclose it. Accordingly, this sub-ground of appeal is dismissed.

4. Decisions of 11 and 18 November 2003

27. On 6 October 2003, the Defence filed the first version of a proposed expert report written by Mr. Pascal Ndengejeho.[66] On 17 October 2003, the Prosecution filed a notice of objection to the proposed expert report.[67] During the presentation of the Defence case, Judge Reddy fell ill, and, on 21 October 2003, the hearing was adjourned until 17 November 2003, pursuant to Rule 15 bis of the Rules.[68] On 3 November 2003, the Prosecution filed a motion arguing that Mr. Ndengejeho did not qualify as an expert witness, and seeking his removal from the list of Defence experts.[69] On the same day, the Prosecution filed a notice in which it communicated its acceptance of the report of expert witnesses Prof. Dominique Lecomte and Dr. Walter Vorhauer, informed the Trial Chamber that it did not intend to cross-examine these experts, and asked the Trial Chamber to admit the report into evidence without calling the expert witnesses to appear.[70]

28. On 11 November 2003, the Trial Chamber rendered a decision (1) admitting into evidence the report of Prof. Lecomte and Dr. Vorhauer and holding that it was not necessary that these experts be heard at trial; and (2) denying the status of expert witness to Mr. Ndengejeho, but allowing him to testify as a fact witness.[71] On 13 November 2003, unaware of the Decision of 11 November 2003, the Defence filed a response to the Motion for Exclusion of Expert, arguing that (1) the response was timely filed as counsel had only received the motion on 10 November 2003, and (2) the motion should be rejected as untimely.[72] On 17 November 2003, the Defence filed a request for reconsideration of the Decision of 11 November 2003.[73] The Trial Chamber dismissed this request on 18 November 2003.[74]

29. The Appellant challenges the Decisions of 11 and 18 November 2003 on several grounds.[75] He argues that the Prosecution did not object to Mr. Ndengejeho's qualification as an expert until well after fourteen days past the filing of his report, violating Rule 94 bis of the Rules; that the Trial Chamber granted the Motion for Exclusion of Expert without giving the defence a chance to respond to it; and that the decisions violated his right to call expert witnesses to counter the Prosecution experts, and thereby prejudiced him, contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding in the Decision of 18 November 2003.[76] The Appellant adds, in his reply, that (1) Mr. Ndengejeho was recognized as an expert in the Semanza and Simba cases;[77] (2) the Trial Chamber took its decision "on the basis of the information […] brought to the Chamber's attention," without indicating its sources of information;[78] and (3) while the Trial Chamber allowed Mr. Ndengejeho to testify as a fact witness, it knew that Mr. Ndengejeho was not in Rusumo in April and May 1994,[79] and it unfairly limited the duration of his testimony to two hours.[80]

30. The Appeals Chamber observes that while the Motion for Exclusion of Expert was filed on 3 November 2003, it appears that Defence counsel received it on 10 November 2003. According to Rules 7 ter and 73 (E) of the Rules, the Defence had five days from that date to file its response, and the Response to the Motion for Exclusion of Expert was thus timely filed. However, there is no indication that the Trial Chamber was aware of the delay in transmission of the motion to the Defence and a decision had to be rendered before the resumption of trial on 17 November 2003 to allow the Registry to make the necessary arrangements. Under these circumstances, the Trial Chamber did not err in rendering its Decision of 11 November 2003.[81] Moreover, the views of the Appellant were eventually heard: after it learned of the transmission delay, the Trial Chamber admitted, and considered the merits of, the Request for Reconsideration.[82]

31. The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Appellant that the Prosecution's Motion for Exclusion of Expert itself was untimely. However, nothing in Rule 94 bis of the Rules implies that, absent a timely motion from the party opposing an expert, a Trial Chamber is obligated to admit expert testimony or to accept a witness's qualification as an expert. Rule 94 bis only sets forth a procedure by which an expert's report can be accepted into evidence without that expert testifying.[83] In other respects, the admission of expert testimony is governed only by the general provision of Rule 89, which entrusts the Trial Chamber with broad discretion to employ rules of evidence that

> "best favour a fair determination of the matter before it and are consonant with the spirit of the Statute and the general principles of law."[84]

The determination of whether an expert witness is qualified is subject to the Trial Chamber's discretion.[85]

32. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber agrees with the Trial Chamber's holding that it had the discretion to reject Mr. Ndengejeho as an expert witness proprio motu even if no timely motion was filed opposing him.[86] Moreover, the Trial Chamber did not abuse its discretion in deciding that Mr. Ndengejeho did not qualify as an expert. The Trial Chamber correctly recalled that

> "in contributing special knowledge to assist the Chamber, the expert must do so with the utmost neutrality and with scientific objectivity."[87]

It then found:

> The Chamber is of the opinion that certain elements in the report submitted by Ndengejeho are not relevant to the instant case and cannot constitute an expert's contribution to justice. Furthermore, on the basis of the information about Mr. Ndengejeho brought to the Chamber's attention, his curriculum vitae and his report, the Chamber is of the opinion that Ndengejeho is not an expert within the meaning of Rule 94 bis of the Rules.[88]

The Appellant does not show any error in this analysis. The fact that Mr. Ndengejeho is a professor and a former Rwandan minister does not automatically qualify him as an expert witness; it was left to the Trial Chamber's discretion to determine whether, based on the circumstances of the particular case, his background gave him a special insight.[89] Likewise, it is not relevant that he may have been recognized as an expert in the Semanza and Simba trials. Inherent in the notion of discretion is that different Trial Chambers are permitted to reach different decisions within that sphere of discretion, even if they are each presented with the same question.[90] Moreover, the questions faced by the Trial Chambers were not in fact the same. A witness's qualification as an expert turns on the contribution he or she can make to a Trial Chamber's analysis of a particular case. Thus, the same person might be qualified as an expert in one case and not in another.

[89] Here, the Appellant points to no reason to believe that Mr. Ndengejeho had any particular expertise relative to this case. His academic degrees and teaching appointments were apparently in the field of education, and he served as Rwanda's minister of information; neither these qualifications nor anything else on his curriculum vitae demonstrates any obvious basis for specialized knowledge regarding the events in Rusumo Commune during April 1994. See Curriculum Vitae of Pascal Ndengejeho, appended to the Motion for Exclusion of Expert.

33. Moreover, the Appellant has not demonstrated that the challenged decisions prejudiced him. He asserts that Mr. Ndengejeho's testimony would have had an impact on the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence provided by Prosecution experts, but provides no explanation of what effect it might have had. Indeed, the Appellant does not even explain how the conclusions reached by Mr. Ndengejeho in his report differed from those offered by the Prosecution experts.[91]

34. Finally, the Appellant submits that Prof. Lecomte and Dr. Vorhauer should have been allowed to testify at trial.[92] In its Notice Accepting Expert Report, the Prosecution accepted the report of these experts and waived its right to cross-examine them. The Appellant filed no response to this notice. In accordance with Rule 94 bis (C) of the Rules, the Trial Chamber thus admitted the report into evidence and found that it was not necessary for the experts to appear at trial.[93] The Appeals Chamber finds no error in this.[94] Moreover, the Appellant does not appear to have raised his present objection at trial, and thus cannot do so on appeal.

35. Accordingly, this sub-ground of appeal is dismissed and the appeal under this ground is dismissed in its entirety.

B. GENOCIDE (GROUND OF APPEAL 2)

36. The Trial Chamber convicted the Appellant of planning, instigating, ordering, committing, and aiding and abetting the crime of genocide pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute.[95] The Appellant asserts that this conviction was based on errors in law and in fact. Specifically, he argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law in its legal characterization of the dolus specialis for genocide; that his conviction for committing genocide should be vacated because the Indictment did not allege his personal participation in the killing with sufficient specificity; and that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence in a number of respects. The Appeals Chamber will consider each of these contentions in turn.

37. The Appeals Chamber notes that in paragraphs 293 and 295 of the Judgement, the Trial Chamber stated that it was convicting the Appellant for genocide under Articles 2 (3) (a) and 2 (3) (b) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber considers that this was evidently a mistaken reference on the Trial Chamber's part. The Trial Chamber could not have intended to convict the Appellant of conspiracy to commit genocide, which is the crime listed under Article 2 (3) (b) of the Statute; just a few paragraphs earlier, it had correctly noted that conspiracy to commit genocide was not charged in the Indictment and thus declined to make any findings in respect of it.[96] The Trial Chamber's references in paragraphs 293 and 295 should therefore have been to Articles 2 (2) (a) and 2 (2) (b) of the Statute, which specify underlying acts of genocide. The Appellant was charged under Count 1 of the Indictment with genocide through "killing or causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the Tutsi population", a reference to Articles 2 (2) (a) and 2 (2) (b) of the Statute, and the Trial Chamber plainly intended to convict him under both of these provisions.[97] The Appellant has not raised this point in his appeal. The Appeals Chamber corrects the error proprio motu, but considers that it did not affect the verdict.

1. Legal Characterization of the Mens Rea Element of the Crime of Genocide

38. The Appellant challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment of the question of mens rea for genocide.[98] He observes that the Trial Chamber held that genocidal intent can sometimes, as here, be inferred from the accused's acts and their factual context.[99] The Appellant suggests that the inferential approach is inconsistent with the notion of dolus specialis or specific intent because it removes from the Prosecution the burden of proving that the offender sought to destroy, in whole or in part, a protected group as such.[100] The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber's inferential approach was consistent with well established legal principles and amply supported by the evidence and factual findings in this case, including those connecting the Appellant to other perpetrators of the genocide.[101]

39. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber correctly recognized that genocide is a crime requiring "specific intent".[102] The Prosecution is required, under Article 2 (2) of the Statute, to prove that the accused possessed the specific "intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such".

40. The Tribunal's jurisprudence conclusively establishes that genocidal intent can be proven through inference from the facts and circumstances of a case. By its nature, intent is not usually susceptible to direct proof. Only the accused himself has first-hand knowledge of his own mental state, and he is unlikely to testify to his own genocidal intent. Intent thus must usually be inferred. Here, the Trial Chamber stated:

> It is possible to infer the genocidal intent inherent in a particular act charged from the perpetrator's deeds and utterances considered together, as well as from the general context of the perpetration of other culpable acts systematically directed against that same group, notwithstanding that the said acts were committed by the same offender or by others. Other factors, such as the scale of atrocities committed, their general nature, in a region or a country, or furthermore, the fact of deliberately and systematically targeting victims on account of their membership in a particular group, while excluding members of other groups, can enable the Chamber to infer the genocidal intent of a particular act.[...] Evidence of genocidal intent can be inferred from "the physical targeting of the group or their property; the use of derogatory language toward members of the targeted group; the weapons employed and the extent of bodily injury; the methodical way of planning, the systematic manner of killing."[103]

41. This approach is consistent with the Appeals Chamber's previous holdings. For instance, the Rutaganda Appeal Judgement states:

> The Appeals Chamber concurs with the Appellant that in order to find a person guilty of genocide, it must be established that such a person was personally possessed of the specific intent to commit the crime at the time he did so. Nonetheless, as stated by the Appeals Chamber in Kayishema/Ruzindana, "explicit manifestations of criminal intent are [...] often rare in the context of criminal trials". In the absence of explicit, direct proof, the dolus specialis may therefore be inferred from relevant facts and circumstances. Such an approach prevents perpetrators from escaping convictions simply because such manifestations are absent.[104]

Specifically, relevant facts and circumstances could include

> "the general context, the perpetration of other culpable acts systematically directed against the same group, the scale of atrocities committed, the systematic targeting of victims on account of their membership of a particular group, or the repetition of destructive and discriminatory acts."[105]

The Appeals Chamber emphasizes that the inferential approach does not relieve the Prosecution of its burden to prove each element of its case, including genocidal intent, beyond reasonable doubt. Rather, it is simply a different means of satisfying that burden.

42. In this case, in support of its finding that the Appellant possessed the requisite genocidal intent, the Trial Chamber cited the Appellant's urging of the conseillers de secteur in his commune, at a meeting on 9 April 1994, "to incite the Hutu to kill the Tutsi"; the Appellant's similar statements made directly to the Hutu population on three separate occasions on 13 and 14 April 1994; his instigation of the rape of Tutsi women and girls on 17 April 1994; and his personal killing of a Tutsi named Murefu on 15 April 1994, which signalled "the beginning of the attack at Nyarubuye Parish".[106] The Trial Chamber also referred to its earlier findings of fact. For instance, it found that at the 9 April 1994 meeting, the Appellant instructed the conseillers to return to their secteurs and organize meetings at which they were to instruct the Hutu "to separate themselves from the Tutsi" and then "to kill all the Tutsi, so that the Inkotanyi would no longer have any accomplices."[107] It also found that on 14 April 1994, at Rwanteru commercial centre, the Appellant "addressed about one hundred people and incited them to arm themselves with machetes and to participate in the fight against the enemy, specifying that they had to hunt down all the Tutsi."[108] And it found that later that same day, at Gisenyi trading centre, the Appellant urged about forty people "to kill all the Tutsi and throw their bodies into the River Akagera."[109]

43. The Appellant raises certain challenges to these and other findings, which will be discussed below. But he submits no serious contention that the Trial Chamber's findings of fact, if valid, were nonetheless insufficient as a matter of law to support an inference of genocidal intent. The Appellant offers no reasonable alternative explanation for the above-described actions and utterances. His repeated exhortations to crowds of people that they should kill all the Tutsis, even considered apart from his other actions, leave room for no other reasonable inference.

44. The Appellant further argues that the Trial Chamber improperly relied on the "acts of other perpetrators" to prove the Appellant's genocidal intent without establishing a nexus between those perpetrators and the Appellant.[110] This contention is without merit. In establishing the Appellant's mental state the Trial Chamber relied principally on the Appellant's own actions and utterances – which, as detailed above, provided ample evidence of his mindset – and not those of others. The only aspect of the Trial Chamber's analysis that relates to the actions of others is its reference to "the scale of the massacres", which the Trial Chamber cited in support of its finding that the Appellant "acted with intent to destroy a substantial part of the targeted group."[111] In the Appeals Chamber's view, it is appropriate and consistent with the Tribunal's jurisprudence to consider, in determining whether the Appellant meant to target a sufficiently substantial part of the Tutsi population to amount to genocide, that the Appellant's actions took place within the context of other culpable acts systematically directed against the Tutsi population.[112] The Trial Chamber's findings discussed above clearly establish that the Appellant was an active participant in those culpable acts.

45. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses this sub-ground of appeal.

2. Specificity of the Indictment in Respect of the Murder of Mr. Murefu

46. The Appellant's second legal challenge to his conviction for genocide pertains to the Trial Chamber's finding that he personally killed a Tutsi civilian, Mr. Murefu. The Appellant argues that this killing was not alleged in the Indictment and, as such, should not have been the basis of a conviction. He observes that the Trial Chamber recognized this when it acquitted him of the crime of murder, and suggests that it should also have done so in the context of genocide.[113]

47. As a threshold matter, the Appellant's argument concerning the omission of the killing of Mr. Murefu from the Indictment does not appear to be specifically set forth in his Notice of Appeal. The Prosecution did not, however, object on this basis to the inclusion of the argument in the Appellant's Appeal Brief, and it has fully responded to it. Under these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber will consider the Appellant's argument despite the inadequacy of the Notice of Appeal.

48. The Prosecution does not dispute that the killing was not specifically alleged in the Indictment, although it observes that Count 1 of the Indictment alleges as a general matter "that he was responsible for killings of members of the Tutsi population".[114] It concedes that "the better practice" would have been for the specific killing of Mr. Murefu to be pleaded as a material fact.[115] It contends, however, that any pleading defect with regard to this killing could not have affected the outcome of the trial because it was only one fact among many supporting the Appellant's genocide conviction.[116]

49. The charges against an accused and the material facts supporting those charges must be pleaded with sufficient precision in the Indictment so as to provide notice to the accused. The Appeals Chamber has held that

> "criminal acts that were physically committed by the accused personally must be set forth in the indictment specifically, including where feasible 'the identity of the victim, the time and place of the events and the means by which the acts were committed.'"[117]

An indictment lacking this precision may, however, be cured if the Prosecution provides the accused with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charge.[118] When an appellant raises a defect in the indictment for the first time on appeal, then he bears the burden of showing that his ability to prepare his defence was materially impaired.[119] In cases where an accused has raised the issue of lack of notice before the Trial Chamber, in contrast, the burden rests on the Prosecution to demonstrate that the accused's ability to prepare a defence was not materially impaired.[120]

50. The Indictment, taken alone, does not allege the killing of Mr. Murefu. In the Statement of Facts ("Statement") related to the genocide count, it states that "Sylvestre Gacumbitsi killed persons by his own hand", but provides no further details.[121] The Statement goes on to describe the massacre at Nyarubuye Parish, but does not mention Mr. Murefu and does not suggest that the Appellant participated personally in the killing there.[122] Count 4 of the Indictment (Murder) does allege that the Appellant killed a number of individuals in several separate incidents, but Mr. Murefu is not among them. The Appellant could not reasonably have known, on the basis of the Indictment alone, that he was being charged with the killing of Mr. Murefu. While in certain cases, "the sheer scale of the alleged crimes 'makes it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity in such matters as the identity of the victims and the dates for the commission of the crimes'",[123] this is not such a case. The Prosecution should have expressly pleaded the killing of Mr.

Murefu, particularly as it had this information in its possession before the Indictment was filed.[124] The Appeals Chamber thus finds by majority, Judge Shahabuddeen and Judge Schomburg dissenting, that the Indictment was defective in this respect.

51. The Prosecution further contends, however, that the Appellant waived any objection on grounds of vagueness by failing to object at trial to the testimony concerning the killing of Mr. Murefu.[125] Whether an accused raised a timely objection at trial affects the burden of proof on appeal concerning the prejudice caused by a defective indictment. As the Appeals Chamber stated in the Niyitegeka case:

> In general, "a party should not be permitted to refrain from making an objection to a matter which was apparent during the course of the trial, and to raise it only in the event of an adverse finding against that party." Failure to object in the Trial Chamber will usually result in the Appeals Chamber disregarding the argument on grounds of waiver. In the case of objections based on lack of notice, the Defence must challenge the admissibility of evidence of material facts not pleaded in the indictment by interposing a specific objection at the time the evidence is introduced. The Defence may also choose to file a timely motion to strike the evidence or to seek an adjournment to conduct further investigations in order to respond to the unpleaded allegation.[...]
> The importance of the accused's right to be informed of the charges against him under Article 20 (4) (a) of the Statute and the possibility of serious prejudice to the accused if material facts crucial to the Prosecution are communicated for the first time at trial suggest that the waiver doctrine should not entirely foreclose an accused from raising an indictment defect for the first time on appeal. Where, in such circumstances, there is a resulting defect in the indictment, an accused person who fails to object at trial has the burden of proving on appeal that his ability to prepare his case was materially impaired. Where, however, the accused person objected at trial, the burden is on the Prosecution to prove on appeal that the accused's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired. All of this is of course subject to the inherent jurisdiction of the Appeals Chamber to do justice in the case.[126]

52. In this case, the transcripts of the testimony of Witnesses TAQ and TAO, who testified as to Mr. Murefu's killing, indeed show no record of a Defence objection at the relevant time.[127] However, the omission of the killing from the Indictment was brought to the Trial Chamber's attention on multiple other occasions. First, in its Rule 98 bis motion for acquittal on certain charges (including murder, but not genocide) filed at the close of the Prosecution's case, the Defence addressed the sufficiency of the evidence concerning the killing of Mr. Murefu in the context of the murder charge.[128] The Prosecution responded by stating that the killing had not been pleaded in the Indictment, and stated that it did "not seek a conviction for murder based on these facts.[...] At the close of trial the Prosecutor will be relying on these murders as evidence in support of other charges, and as evidence of a similar pattern of conduct pursuant to Rule 93 of the Rules."[129] It did not specify which of the "other charges" the murders would be used to support, nor did it suggest that the lack of a Defence objection at trial entitled it to rely on incidents not charged in the Indictment. In its reply, the Defence addressed the issue of lack of notice, and specifically argued that the Prosecution should not be given the opportunity at the close of the trial to fill in the gaps in the Indictment by relying on the evidence in support of other charges.[130]

53. Subsequently, in his Final Trial Brief, the Appellant argued that the Indictment had not mentioned the killing of Mr. Murefu, that the allegation of his murder had emerged for the first time at trial, and that the Appellant should not be convicted for this uncharged offence.[131] The Trial Chamber was clearly aware of the Appellant's argument – and the Prosecution's concession – that Mr. Murefu's killing had not been alleged in the Indictment. It expressly relied on this omission in declining to base a murder conviction on that killing.[132]

54. Although the Niyitegeka Appeal Judgement referred to the accused's obligation to interpose a timely objection to a pleading defect when evidence is introduced at trial, it did so in the context of deciding whether and under what conditions it was appropriate for an appellant to challenge such a defect for the first time on appeal. This case presents a different situation. The Appellant repeatedly brought the issue to the Trial Chamber's attention in its briefing, and the Prosecution never suggested that he had waived his objection by not raising it earlier. And the Trial Chamber actually decided the issue, albeit in the context of murder alone and not genocide. In Ntakirutimana, the Appeals Chamber recognized that where the Trial Chamber has treated a challenge to an indictment as being adequately raised, the Appeals Chamber should not invoke the waiver doctrine.[133] In light of these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber holds that the Appellant did not waive his objection to the pleading defect. It therefore remains the Prosecution's burden to prove that the Appellant's defence was not materially impaired by the defect.

55. The question remains whether the vagueness of the Indictment was cured by the Prosecution's other filings. As the ICTY Appeals Chamber explained in Kupreškić:

> [I]n some instances, a defective indictment can be cured if the Prosecution provides the accused with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her. Nevertheless, in light of the factual and legal complexities normally associated with the crimes within the jurisdiction of this Tribunal, there can only be a limited number of cases that fall within that category.[134]

Here, the Prosecution contends that the vagueness was cured by the witness statement of Witness TAQ, which provided the date and place of the killing as well as the name of the victim,[135] and by a summary of the anticipated testimony of Witness TAQ that was appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief.[136] The Appellant argues that the Indictment should have been amended accordingly but was not.[137]

56. In advance of the trial, the Prosecution disclosed to the Appellant the witness statement of Witness TAQ, which set forth, inter alia, the date and place of the killing as well as the name of one victim, Mr. Murefu. That statement was also included in summary form in the chart of witnesses, appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief. The summary of the anticipated testimony of Witness TAQ reads:

> On or around 15 April 1994, Karamage arrived at Nyarabuye church with a large group of Hutu attackers armed with sticks. Not long after, Sylvestre Gacumbitsi arrived with a pick-up truck full of machetes. He was accompanied by a vehicle full of Interahamwe armed with firearms and grenades. At first, the refugees rejoiced when they saw Gacumbitsi, but he warned them: "If any Hutu has made the mistake of entering that church, let them come out immediately." Gacumbitsi then instructed the Hutus and the Interahamwe: "Get machetes! Start killing and surround the church so that no one escapes." An elderly Tutsi teacher named Murefu rose up and asked Gacumbitsi what the Tutsis had done to deserve that fate. Gacumbitsi grabbed a machete and slashed his neck, killing him instantly. Within moments, grenades were being tossed into the church, and shots were fired.[138]

That statement is included in a chart that shows the charges to which each witness's testimony was expected to correspond. The chart makes clear that Witness TAQ's anticipated testimony related to the charge of genocide, specifically referring to paragraphs 4, 15, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, and 23 of the Indictment.[139]

Paragraph 4 of the Indictment, which was part of the "Concise Statement of Facts for Counts 1 and 2", indicates that the Appellant personally participated in killings.[140]

57. The ICTY Appeals Chamber was recently confronted with similar circumstances in the Naletilić and Martinović case: the material facts concerning a particular incident were not pleaded in the indictment, but were included in a chart of witnesses that set forth the facts to which each witness would testify and clearly identified the charges in the indictment to which those facts corresponded. The Appeals Chamber held that this "rather detailed information [...] was sufficient to put Martinović on notice of what specific incident was being alleged", and thus cured the defect in the indictment.[141] And it did not, contrary to the Appellant's suggestion here, hold that the Prosecution was obligated to formally amend the indictment to correspond with the clarifying information it subsequently provided. Likewise, in Ntakirutimana, the Appeals Chamber held that a witness statement, when taken together with "unambiguous information" contained in a Pre-Trial Brief and its annexes, was sufficient to cure a defect in an indictment.[142]

58. By majority, the Appeals Chamber holds, Judge Liu and Judge Meron dissenting, that the circumstances in this case are materially indistinguishable from those in Naletilić and Martinović, and that the summary of Witness TAQ's testimony was sufficient to clarify the general statement, already included in the genocide section of the Indictment, that "Sylvestre Gacumbitsi killed persons by his own hand". The summary clearly alleged the killing of Mr. Murefu and connected it to the genocide, did not conflict with any other information that was provided to the Appellant, and was provided in advance of the trial. It therefore unambiguously constituted "timely, clear, and consistent information" sufficient to put the Appellant on notice that he was being charged with committing genocide through the killing of Mr. Murefu.[143]

59. In addition, by a differently composed majority, the Appeals Chamber holds, Judge Güney dissenting, that even if the killing of Mr. Murefu were to be set aside, the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the Appellant "committed" genocide would still be valid. The Trial Chamber convicted the Appellant of "ordering" and "instigating" genocide on the basis of findings of fact detailing certain conduct that, in the view of the Appeals Chamber, should be characterized not just as "ordering" and "instigating" genocide, but also as "committing" genocide.

60. As the Trial Chamber observed, the term "committed" in Article 6 (1) of the Statute has been held to refer "generally to the direct and physical perpetration of the crime by the offender himself."[144] In the context of genocide, however, "direct and physical perpetration" need not mean physical killing; other acts can constitute direct participation in the actus reus of the crime.[145] Here, the accused was physically present at the scene of the Nyarubuye Parish massacre, which he "directed" and "played a leading role in conducting and, especially, supervising".[146] It was he who personally directed the Tutsi and Hutu refugees to separate – and that action, which is not adequately described by any other mode of Article 6 (1) liability, was as much [142] Ntakirutimana Appeal Judgement, para. 48.

[143] In addition to his argument concerning the Indictment, the Appellant also challenges the evidentiary basis for the finding that he killed Mr. Murefu. His challenges to the credibility of Witness TAQ and the consistency of that witness's testimony with other testimony given at trial are considered elsewhere in this Judgement. His statement that the "Prosecutor failed to prove that [Mr. Murefu] existed" is a bare assertion that does not provide any reason to doubt the Trial Chamber's conclusion to the contrary; it merits no further discussion. See Gacumbitsi Appeal Brief, para. 217.

[145] For instance, it has been recognized that selection of prisoners for extermination played an integral role in the Nazi genocide. See, e.g., Judgment of the International Military Tribunal for the Trial of German Major War Criminals, Nuremberg, 30th September and 1st October, 1946, p. 63 (London: His Majesty's Stationary Office, 1946) (Reprinted Buffalo, New York: William S. an integral part of the genocide as were the killings which it enabled.[147] Moreover, these findings of fact were based on allegations that were without question clearly pleaded in the Indictment.[148]

61. The Appeals Chamber is persuaded that in the circumstances of this case, the modes of liability used by the Trial Chamber to categorize this conduct – "ordering" and "instigating" – do not, taken alone, fully capture the Appellant's criminal responsibility. The Appellant did not simply "order" or "plan" genocide from a distance and leave it to others to ensure that his orders and plans were carried out; nor did he merely "instigate" the killings. Rather, he was present at the crime scene to supervise and direct the massacre, and participated in it actively by separating the Tutsi refugees so that they could be killed. The Appeals Chamber finds by majority, Judge Güney dissenting, that this constitutes "committing" genocide.

62. The Appeals Chamber unanimously dismisses this sub-ground of the Appellant's appeal.

3. Assessment of the Evidence Supporting the Genocide Conviction

63. The Appellant raises a number of challenges to the findings of fact underlying his conviction for genocide. The Appeals Chamber notes that in this part of his appeal, the Appellant repeatedly points to evidence he introduced at trial that contradicts the findings made by the Trial Chamber without attempting to demonstrate why the Trial Chamber's decision to instead credit the evidence introduced by the Prosecution was in error. In such instances, the Appeals Chamber will exercise its prerogative not to address the Appellant's submissions in detail.

(a) Alleged Errors Pertaining to Witness TAW

64. The Appellant raises various objections to the Trial Chamber's reliance on the testimony of Witness TAW, who testified as to the Appellant's actions between 7 and 13 April 1994. Other than describing him as "crucial" and alleging that several of his statements were uncorroborated by other witnesses, the Appellant does not explain in what way the Trial Chamber's findings concerning his liability for genocide would have differed absent reliance on Witness TAW's testimony.[149] Nonetheless, in light of the fact that the Trial Chamber did rely on this witness in several respects, the Appeals Chamber will briefly address the Appellant's arguments.

65. Several of the Appellant's contentions amount to no more than observations that Witness TAW's testimony contradicted evidence introduced by the Defence. First, Witness TAW testified that the Appellant met on several occasions with Major Ndekezi, commander of the Rwanteru military camp, and conspired with him to plan genocide; the Defence submitted that Major Ndekezi was at the time serving with UNAMIR in Kigali and therefore could not have met with the Appellant, and that it was implausible that Rwanteru camp would not have been headed by someone of a higher rank than major.[150] The Trial Chamber did not specifically address these Defence arguments. However, it is well established that the Trial Chamber is not obligated to "explain in its judgement every step of its reasoning."[151] Here, the Trial Chamber could reasonably have concluded that Witness TAW's testimony was credible on the point. The Appellant does not point to any evidence supporting his assertion that Major Ndekezi was located elsewhere other than a document dated 5 March 1994, which, even if it were accurate and referred to the correct Major Ndekezi, could not provide evidence of his location in April 1994.[152] The Appellant also cites no evidence in support of the assertion that a military camp could not be commanded by a major.

66. Witness TAW testified that the Appellant attended a meeting on 8 April 1994 with various officials and Interahamwe leaders. The Appellant does not deny this fact, but argues that the meeting concerned security matters and that, contrary to what Witness TAW asserted, it was the prefect of Kibungo who chaired the meeting, not Colonel Rwagafirita.[153] The first point is consistent with the Trial Judgement and with Witness TAW's testimony. As to the second point, the Appellant has demonstrated no error. First, he merely offers a different account of the meeting without explaining why any reasonable trier of fact would have preferred it to that of Witness TAW. The Appellant does not point to any evidence in the record to support his further contention that there was no Colonel Rwagafirita in the Rwandan armed forces on 8 April 1994.[154] And even if Witness TAW incorrectly identified the person who chaired the meeting (which the Appeals Chamber need not decide), this point is irrelevant to the findings of liability and would not imply that a reasonable Trial Chamber would have rejected Witness TAW's evidence in its entirety.

67. The Appellant points to discrepancies between the testimonies of Witnesses TAW and TBH. The first noteworthy discrepancy concerns a meeting that took place on 9 April 1994, which Witness TAW did not attend himself; his testimony was based on what Witness TBH had told him. Witness TBH stated that the distribution of weapons was not discussed at this meeting, while Witness TAW stated that it was.[155] On this point, the Appeals Chamber interprets the Trial Judgement as being in agreement with the Appellant that Witness TBH's account should prevail. The English translation of the Trial Judgement reads:

> Since the evidence of Witness TAW, who did not attend the meeting, was not corroborated and contradicted the evidence of a direct witness, Witness TBH, the Chamber can only find that the issue of weapons distribution was discussed during the meeting of 9 April 1994.[156]

In light of the rationale expressed in the first part of this sentence, the Appeals Chamber notes that the conclusion appears illogical. However, this was not an error on the Trial Chamber's part. Rather, it is an error of translation. The original French version reads (emphasis added):

> Le témoignage de TAW, qui n'a pas assisté à la réunion, n'étant pas corroboré et s'opposant à celui d'un témoin direct, TBH, la Chambre ne peut conclure qu'une discussion sur la distribution d'armes a eu lieu lors de la réunion du 9 avril 1994.

The Appeals Chamber considers that the best interpretation of this language indicates that the Trial Chamber held that it could not find that weapons distribution was discussed, rather than that it could "only" so find. This interpretation is supported by the Trial Judgement's subsequent references to the 9 April 1994 meeting, which do not mention weapons distribution being discussed there.[157] And there is no indication that the Trial Chamber based any aspect of the genocide conviction on the discussion of weapons distribution at that meeting. Thus, the Trial Chamber's analysis is consistent with that urged by the Appellant, and is not in error.[158]

68. The Appellant maintains, however, that if Witness TAW's account of the discussion of weapons distribution at the 9 April 1994 meeting is discredited, his claim that weapons were thereafter distributed on 10 April 1994 cannot safely be relied upon.[159] This is because on 10 April 1994 at Kibungo military camp, Witness TAW only saw a large number of boxes being loaded onto several vehicles; he did not actually see what was in the boxes.[160] The witness deduced that the boxes contained weapons "on the basis of information received the previous day from a participant at the meeting held at the commune office".[161] The Appellant contends that that participant was Witness TBH, and that in any event, if contrary to Witness TAW's testimony the weapons distribution had not been discussed at the 9 April 1994 meeting, Witness TAW's inference concerning the contents of the boxes was insupportable.[162]

[162] Gacumbitsi Appeal Brief, paras. 164, 168.

69. The Appellant appears to misunderstand the basis of the Trial Chamber's holding that the boxes contained weapons. In addition to his statement concerning what he had learned from a participant in the previous day's meeting, Witness TAW also testified that he spoke to Mr. Léonidas Gacondo, the cellule official for Kavuzo, Kigina secteur, who was one of the recipients of the boxes. According to Witness TAW, Mr. Gacondo confided that the boxes contained weapons.[163] The Trial Chamber stated that the "circumstances of delivery, as well as the information collected by Witness TAW from one of the consignees of the boxes, lead the Chamber to find that they contained weapons, without being able to determine which type."[164] It thus cited what Witness TAW had learned from Mr. Gacondo, not what he had learned from a participant in the 9 April 1994 meeting. The Appellant does not challenge the reliability of this information. Nor does he dispute the Trial Chamber's holding that the "circumstances of delivery" – viz., the overall genocidal campaign then unfolding – also supported the inference that the boxes contained weapons. The Appeals Chamber holds that it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the Appellant distributed weapons on 10 April 1994.

70. As a general matter, the mere existence of inconsistencies between the testimonies of Witnesses TBH and TAW does not necessarily undermine either witness's credibility. The Appeals Chamber defers to the Trial Chamber's judgements on issues of credibility, including its resolution of disparities among different witnesses' accounts, and will only find that an error of fact was committed when it determines that no reasonable trier of fact could have made the impugned finding.[165] Here, the Trial Chamber reasonably concluded that any inaccuracies in Witness TAW's account resulted from the fact that he was relying on what others had told him and did not fundamentally undermine his credibility. Notably, the witness was forthright in acknowledging the limits of his direct knowledge.[166]

71. The Appellant argues that Witness TAW is biased against the Appellant because he blames the Appellant for the death of his family members and the failure to protect his property.[167] The Trial Chamber declined to find that this allegation of bias affected the witness's credibility, citing his apparently truthful demeanour, and noting that he "refrained from exaggerating his account of events in order to hurt the Accused."[168] The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's assessment of credibility is reasonable and defers to it. It bears noting that the mere fact that a witness or his family was a victim of an accused does not necessarily imply a bias that discredits that witness's testimony. This Tribunal, like criminal courts everywhere, routinely relies on the testimony of victims of crime, who, one would assume, are as motivated as anyone to see that justice is done with accuracy. It is for the trier of fact to determine whether a particular witness may have an incentive to distort the truth, and here the Appellant has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber's assessment was in error.

72. Finally, the Appellant submits that the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness TAW in concluding, inter alia, that weapons were distributed was in error because the evidence was uncorroborated and circumstantial.[169] It is well established that a Trial Chamber has the discretion to rely on uncorroborated, but otherwise credible, witness testimony.[170] Moreover, it is also permissible to rely on circumstantial evidence to prove material facts.[171] The Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence in this regard.

(b) Credibility of Witness TBH

73. In addition to the above-mentioned arguments concerning inconsistencies between the testimonies of Witnesses TAW and TBH, the Appellant contends that the Trial Chamber erred in crediting the testimony of Witness TBH. He maintains that the witness was personally biased because the Appellant had previously removed him from an official position. Furthermore, he claims that the witness also had an incentive to agree to testify against the Appellant because it allowed him to leave prison in Rwanda, where he had been serving a sentence for genocide, in order to stay in Arusha for approximately one month while preparing his testimony. The Appellant further states that Witness TBH's own testimony illustrates that he was coached by the Prosecution: the witness clarified and added to testimony he had given earlier, explaining that he had been advised in discussions with the Prosecution that his testimony had been incomplete. Last, the Appellant alleges that Witness TBH falsely testified that he had implicated the Appellant in the written record of his guilty plea in Rwanda.[172]

74. The Trial Chamber acknowledged Witness TBH's prior dismissal as well as his genocide conviction, and assessed his testimony with caution as a result:

> The Chamber recalls that Witness TBH is an alleged accomplice of the Accused. It also recalls that the Accused removed Witness TBH from an official position, as the witness acknowledged. Thus, the Chamber assessed his evidence with caution. Having carefully examined Witness TBH's evidence, the Chamber finds, however, that his account of the meeting of 9 April 1994 and of the subsequent events implicating the Accused is credible and reliable, and that his testimony does not appear to have been born of any resentment towards the Accused.[173]

To be sure, the Trial Chamber did not specifically address all of the Appellant's arguments.[174] But it can be assumed to have been aware of the arguments presented to it and was not obligated to discuss all of them.[175] Moreover, the Appellant has not shown that no reasonable Trial Chamber could have deemed the witness credible. He has provided no evidence, for instance, that Witness TBH's trip to Arusha was conditioned on the content of his testimony, and no reason to believe that the incentive of a single month's sojourn outside prison was so powerful as to make it unreasonable to conclude that he was telling the truth. The passage of Witness TBH's testimony concerning the alleged prosecutorial coaching demonstrates no impropriety.[176] It is not inappropriate per se for the parties to discuss the content of testimony and witness statements with their witnesses, unless they attempt to influence that content in ways that shade or distort the truth. And the Appellant does not explain why the alleged discrepancy between Witness TBH's trial testimony and his written plea statement in Rwanda discredits him. The Trial Chamber has broad discretion to determine the weight to be given to discrepancies between a witness's testimony and his prior statements.[177]

75. Moreover, even if the Trial Chamber had erred in crediting Witness TBH's testimony, the Appellant has not shown how relying on it caused a miscarriage of justice. The Trial Chamber relied on the largely corroboratory accounts of Witnesses TBH and TAW. As noted above, Witness TAW was credible and the Appellant does not establish that reliance on his testimony alone, absent corroboration, would have been unsafe or would have resulted in a different verdict.[178]

(c) Credibility of Witnesses TAS, TBI, TBJ, and TBK

76. The Appellant contends that the Trial Chamber committed a logical error when it found, on the basis of Witness TAS's and TAW's testimony, that the Appellant exhorted a crowd consisting of a Hutu majority [178] The Trial Chamber expressly relied on Witness TBH's testimony and not Witness TAW's with respect to the discussion of weapons distribution at the 9 April 1994 meeting. But as to that point, the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness TBH's version of events favoured the Appellant.

at Nyakarambi market to "let no one escape". He reasons that some Tutsis must have been present, and yet there is no allegation that anyone was killed at Nyakarambi on that day.[179] This is a non sequitur. The Trial Chamber did not hold that the Appellant was giving instructions for immediate killings, but rather that he was seeking "to prepare the Hutu population for the elimination of the Tutsi."[180]

77. The Appellant further notes that the Witnesses TBI, TBJ, and TBK have all been arrested and/or sentenced in Rwanda for genocide.[181] He does not explain the implications of this observation for the witnesses' credibility or for the Trial Judgement. As noted above, the Trial Chamber explained with respect to Witness TBH that his genocide conviction did not preclude reliance on his testimony; the Appellant does not explain why a similar conclusion would not have been reasonable with respect to the other three witnesses. In light of the Appellant's failure to demonstrate an error meriting reversal, no further discussion is warranted.[182]

(d) Alleged Factual Errors Concerning the Attacks at Nyarubuye Parish

78. Finally, the Appellant challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment of the testimony of Prosecution Witnesses TAO, TAQ, and TAX concerning the attacks at Nyarubuye Parish from 15 through 17 April 1994.[183] These attacks were the central facts underlying the Appellant's genocide conviction. The Trial Chamber found that he had planned, instigated, ordered, committed, and aided and abetted the killings of thousands of Tutsi refugees, who had fled various surrounding areas and sought shelter at Nyarubuye, in multiple massacres over the course of those three days.[184]

79. First, the Appellant points to various minor variations among the testimonies of different witnesses, such as whether the Appellant spoke "aloud" or "through a megaphone", and whether the Interahamwe chanted "Let's exterminate them" or "Let's massacre them".[185] He also notes that Witness TAO first stated that he "saw" the Appellant and six police officers arrive at the parish, but then clarified on cross-examination that he in fact heard the car arrive, and shortly thereafter saw the Appellant and the officers.[186] In the Appeals Chamber's view, these discrepancies are minor, and the Trial Chamber was certainly reasonable in deeming the witnesses credible despite them. As the Trial Chamber noted, their testimonies largely corroborated one another and "[n]o major inconsistency or discrepancy was noted in their evidence. The discrepancies noted can be explained by the time that has elapsed since the massacres, the fact that they witnessed the massacres from different locations and at different times, and the considerable stress they were subjected to."[187]

80. The Appellant also points to disparities in what the various Prosecution witnesses observed.[188] For instance, on 16 April 1994, Witness TAQ did not see the Appellant at Nyarubuye Parish, while Witness TAO did. On 17 April 1994, Witness TAX heard the Appellant exhort the Interahamwe to kill the few surviving Tutsi refugees, using a metaphor of "striking at a snake". Witnesses TAQ and TAO did not hear these remarks. Some witnesses did not mention looting following the massacre, while others did. The Appeals Chamber finds that these contrasts do not amount to inconsistencies, but simply reflect the fact that [182] The Appellant's other observations in this subsection are also without merit. He asserts that Witness TAS was "coached and sent by IBUKA", but provides no further explanation or evidence. He contends that one witness testified that he did not find the Appellant in Kigarama; it is unclear which witness he means, and several witnesses testified that the Appellant did lead a crowd to Kigarama. The Appellant's contentions concerning the interlocutory decision of 1 August 2003 are considered in section II.A.

different people in different vantage points saw and heard different things.[189] The Trial Chamber so found, and the Appellant has not demonstrated that its conclusions were unreasonable.[190]

81. Finally, the Appellant states that the Trial Chamber's findings of fact were contradicted by evidence introduced by the Defence, including the Appellant's own diary from 1994, which does not detail his participation in the massacres.[191] The Appellant does not show that the Trial Chamber improperly ignored any of this evidence. Rather, the Trial Chamber simply concluded that to the extent the evidence presented by the Defence and that presented by the Prosecution conflicted, the latter was more credible.[192] When faced with competing versions of events, it is the prerogative of the trier of fact to determine which is more credible.[193] The Appellant has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber made an error.

(e) Conclusion

82. For the foregoing reasons the Appeals Chamber dismisses this sub-ground of appeal.

C. CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY: EXTERMINATION (GROUND OF APPEAL 3)

83. The Trial Chamber convicted the Appellant of planning, instigating, ordering, and aiding and abetting extermination as a crime against humanity.[194] It referred to its earlier factual findings on the Appellant's role in the massacre at Nyarubuye Parish,[195] and found that the Appellant had the requisite mens rea for extermination in that he intended to participate in that massacre and had knowledge of the widespread and systematic attack against Tutsi civilians in Rusumo in April 1994.[196] The Appellant challenges this conviction.[197]

1. The Requisite Intent for the Crime of Extermination

84. The Appellant first appears to submit that the Trial Chamber applied an incorrect legal standard on the requisite intent for crimes against humanity.[198] In the Appellant's view, "[t]he mental element must be proved by the existence of a widespread practice, which implies planning and tolerance of such act by the State."[199] The Appeals Chamber rejects this contention. As stressed by the Trial Chamber,[200] the existence of a policy or plan can be evidentially relevant, but it is not a separate legal element of a crime against humanity.[201] In particular, the ICTY Appeals Chamber has emphasized that proof of a plan or policy is not a prerequisite to a conviction for extermination.[202] The same can be said of "tolerance of such act by the State."

Paragraph 314 of the English version of the Trial Judgement refers to "inciting" extermination whereas Article 6 (1) of the Statute employs the term "instigated". Paragraph 314 of the authoritative French version of the Trial Judgement uses the term "incité", which is also the term employed in the French version of Article 6 (1) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber has already noted that "[t]here is a glaring disparity between the English text and the French text" of Article 6 (1) of the Statute and held that, for the purposes of Article 6 (1) of the Statute, "instigated" (in the English version) and "incite" (in the French version) are synonymous (Akayesu Appeal Judgement, para. 478).

[197] Although the Gacumbitsi Notice of Appeal (para. 40) is vague in setting forth the errors alleged, the Prosecution does not object to it, and the Appeals Chamber will therefore consider the errors as elucidated in the Appeal Brief.

[202] Krstić Appeal Judgement, para. 225.

85. The Appellant further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in fact in finding that he had the requisite intent for the crime of extermination.[203] He avers that the Prosecution has not shown that he took any action to plan the extermination of Tutsis.[204] In particular, he contends that the meetings of 8 and 9 April 1994 only dealt with security issues and that Witness TBH (who testified as to the meeting of 9 April 1994) was manipulated by the Prosecution.[205] The Appellant also argues that he refuted the existence of the weapons allegedly distributed.[206] He alleges that he could not have planned the extermination of Tutsis at the same time as he was arresting the people harming the Tutsis and their property,[207] and that if he had planned to exterminate the Tutsis "he would not have waited for seven days" to do so when he had the capacity to do so earlier.[208]

86. The Appeals Chamber holds that the Trial Chamber applied the correct mens rea requirement for the crime of extermination. In accordance with the case-law of the Tribunal,[209] the Trial Chamber explained that for crimes against humanity

> "the accused must have acted with knowledge of the broader context of the attack, and with knowledge that his act formed part of the widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population."[210]

While the Trial Chamber did not expressly outline the mens rea requirement specific to the crime of extermination, it implicitly applied the correct requirement by finding that the actions of the Appellant revealed his "intention to participate in a large scale massacre in Nyarubuye."[211] As the Appeals Chamber recently explained:

> the crime of extermination requires proof that the accused participated in a widespread or systematic killing or in subjecting a widespread number of people or systematically subjecting a number of people to conditions of living that would inevitably lead to death, and that the accused intended by his acts or omissions this result.[212]

87. Moreover, the Appellant's argument is premised on a misinterpretation of the facts. The Trial Chamber did find that the Appellant took steps to plan the genocide and extermination of Tutsis in Rusumo Commune,[213] a conclusion that was reasonable, as discussed earlier.[214]

88. The actions of the Appellant in planning the extermination of Tutsis from 8 through 15 April 1994, as well as his subsequent actions from 15 through 17 April 1994, show that the Appellant had the intent to massacre a large number of individuals, and that he knew that his acts furthered a widespread and systematic attack against the Tutsis. Therefore, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in assessing the Appellant's mens rea.[215]

2. Victims Named in the Indictment

89. The Appellant argues that the Trial Chamber should not have convicted him for extermination because the Prosecution had failed to prove that the individuals specifically mentioned in paragraph 28 of the Indictment were killed at Nyarubuye Parish.[216] The Appeals Chamber disagrees; such a showing was not required for an extermination conviction. Paragraph 28 of the Indictment reads:

> As direct consequences of orders or instructions from Sylvestre Gacumbitsi at Nyarabuye paroisse, there were numerous killings of family members and entire families, including Uwiragiye, Mugiraneza and Tuyiringire, three children. The identity of each victim and the proximate number of fatalities and the exact circumstances of each death cannot be detailed exhaustively due to the overwhelming devastation of the massacres.

Although this paragraph lists certain specific victims, this is only by way of example. The Appellant was not convicted of personally "committing" extermination. The material fact for his conviction for planning, instigating, ordering, and aiding and abetting that crime was the fact that many refugees were killed as a consequence of the Appellant's orders or instructions. And, indeed, the Trial Chamber found "that many Tutsi who found refuge at Nyarubuye Parish were killed there between 15 and 17 April 1994."[217] The Appellant has not shown that this finding was unreasonable.

90. Next, the Appellant claims that the Trial Chamber should not have relied on the killing of Mr. Murefu and two others for the conviction as those individuals were not mentioned in the Indictment. The Appeals Chamber has considered this argument above in the context of the genocide charge.[218] In any event, however, any pleading failure with respect to the killing of Mr. Murefu would not affect the conviction for extermination. Because, as noted, the Appellant was not convicted for "committing" extermination, his conviction does not depend on the individual killing of Mr. Murefu or any other specific person. Accordingly, this sub-ground of appeal is dismissed.

3. Factual Basis for the Conviction

91. The Appellant contends that the Trial Chamber erred in fact and in law in relying on the evidence of several Prosecution witnesses (TAQ, TAX, TAO, Fergal Keane, and Alison Des Forges) and in discrediting that of several Defence witnesses (UHT, NG2, ZHZ, ZIZ).[219]

92. First, the Appellant submits that Witness TAQ was not credible.[220] He reiterates some of the arguments already raised under Ground 2 of his appeal,[221] and adds that Witness TAQ contradicted herself as to whether she heard the Appellant ask Hutus to separate themselves from the Tutsis refugees[222] and that Witness TAX heard no such request.[223] The Appeals Chamber finds that the supposed contradictions are in fact simply references to different events taking place on different dates. Witness TAQ testified that, after Mr. Murefu was killed on 15 April 1994, she ran to hide nearby and, once there, heard the Appellant ask the Hutus to separate themselves from the other refugees.[224] The other excerpt of her testimony cited by the Appellant concerns the witness's flight from Nyarutunga on 14 April 1994.[225] Likewise, discrepancies between what Witnesses TAQ and TAX heard are of no importance; the two were not similarly situated at the relevant time (Witness TAQ was outside,[226] while Witness TAX was in the convent[227]). Finally, the Appellant's further assertion that Witness TAQ held a grudge against him is unexplained and unsupported, and merits no further discussion.[228]

At the Appeal Hearing, the Appellant made a similar argument with respect to paragraph 12 of the Indictment (relating to Counts 1 and 2). See T. 8 February 2006 pp. 27-31. However, since the Trial Chamber found that the allegations contained in paragraph 12 of the Indictment had not been proved, it is not necessary to examine this question. 93. The Appellant next contends that Witness TAO's testimony concerning what the Appellant stated when he arrived at Nyarubuye Parish on 15 April 1994 contradicts an alleged prior statement.[229] The Appeals Chamber finds that it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to accept Witness TAO's testimony despite some inconsistencies with his prior statement, of which the Trial Chamber was aware.[230] As noted above, the Trial Chamber has wide discretion to determine whether discrepancies discredit a witness's testimony.[231] In this case, Witness TAO was asked about the inconsistencies in his statements, and responded that his answers to the questions of the investigators had been transcribed by many persons and that now that he was before the Trial Chamber, he could answer questions directly.[232] Likewise, the Appeals Chamber sees no significance in the Appellant's further argument that while Witness TAO said that he saw the Appellant with a person named Rubaguka, Witness TAQ saw only Rubaguka.[233] The Trial Chamber reasonably concluded that this alleged "discrepancy may be explained by the fact that the two witnesses witnessed the event at different times from different locations."[234]

94. As to Witness TAX, the Appellant submits that she was eleven years old at the time of the events in 1994 and that she lied about the number of days she hid among the corpses before being saved by the RPF.[235] The Appeals Chamber finds that it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to accept Witness TAX's testimony despite her young age at the time of the events. There is no rule requiring a Trial Chamber to reject per se the testimony of a witness who was a child at the time of the events in question, and the Appellant did not demonstrate that Witness TAX was not reliable or credible. Further, uncertainty as to the number of days Witness TAX hid among the corpses before being saved by the RPF does not affect the relevant aspects of her testimony.

95. With respect to both Fergal Keane and Alison Des Forges, the Appellant argues that their estimates of the number of people killed at Nyarubuye Parish were inflated because the RPF had brought more corpses to Nyarubuye Parish before the documentary was filmed.[236] But even if this were true (which the Appeals Chamber need not decide), this would not cast doubt on the occurrence of the attacks to which both Prosecution and Defence witnesses testified. Nor does the Appellant demonstrate that the difference in the estimates would have affected the Judgement in any other way.

96. The Appellant next contends that the Trial Chamber exhibited bias in finding Defence Witness UHT not credible on the basis of vagueness and contradictions while excusing similar variations in the accounts of the Prosecution witnesses.[237] The Appeals Chamber disagrees. The Trial Chamber's conclusion that Witness UHT was not credible was reasonable,[238] as was its assessment of the credibility of the Prosecution witnesses. The Appellant has not shown that the Trial Chamber applied differing standards in the assessment of the evidence.

97. The Appellant also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting the testimony of Defence Witnesses NG2, ZHZ, and ZIZ that the Appellant was not at Nyarubuye on 15 April 1994, especially since

According to the Appellant, Witness TAO recognized that, in a prior statement, he said that the Appellant tried to reassure the refugees before the police opened fire (the Appellant refers to T. 31 July 2003 pp. 14, 15), whereas at trial Witness TAO said that the Appellant told the refugees to not advance further because the Tutsi's hour had come (the Appellant refers to T. 30 July 2003 p. 54).

[235] Gacumbitsi Appeal Brief, paras. 288, 289. The Appellant also asserts that Fergal Keane used her to make publicity for a documentary, but does not explain why this would impugn her credibility.
[236] Gacumbitsi Appeal Brief, paras. 291-297. The Appellant further asserts that Fergal Keane was an agent for the RPF; this claim is unsubstantiated and does not suffice to impugn his testimony.
[237] Gacumbitsi Appeal Brief, paras. 308 (referring to Trial Judgement, para. 160), 309, 310.
[238] See Trial Judgement, para. 160. The Trial Chamber found Witness UHT "not very credible" because: 1) while he "testified that during the six hours he spent with the attackers at the parish on 16 April 1994, amongst corpses and survivors, he did not take part in finishing off the wounded […] he could not testify as to what he did, apart from staying with his brother-in-law, being shocked and frightened"; and 2) Witness UHT was unclear as to the second vehicle that he saw at the parish. Ibid.

the Trial Chamber had not disputed the credibility of these witnesses.[239] But as the Trial Chamber stated, it was "quite aware" of these witnesses' testimonies.[240] It simply found that, in light of the "consistent and specific" evidence placing the Appellant at Nyarubuye Parish on 15 April 1994, the Defence evidence did not raise a reasonable doubt as to his participation in the massacre.[241] The Appellant has not shown that this was unreasonable.

98. For the foregoing reasons, this sub-ground of appeal is dismissed and the appeal under this ground is dismissed in its entirety.

D. CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY: RAPE (GROUND OF APPEAL 4)

99. The Trial Chamber found that, on 17 April 1994, the Appellant publicly instigated the rape of Tutsi girls, declaring that sticks should be inserted into their genitals if they resisted.[242] It then found that the rapes of Witness TAQ and seven other Tutsi women were a direct consequence of the Appellant's instigation, and convicted the Appellant for those rapes.[243] The Appellant challenges his conviction for rape as a crime against humanity.[244]

1. Were the Rapes Part of a Widespread or Systematic Attack?

100. The Appellant submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in convicting him of rape as a crime against humanity because the rapes in question were not committed in the course of a widespread and systematic attack. He submits that "systematic attack within the meaning of Article 3 (g) of the Statute implies a deliberate act or plan" and that this element was not established here because the Prosecution did not prove the existence of preparatory meetings.[245]

101. The Trial Chamber stated:

> The attack must be widespread or systematic. The concept of "widespread" attack refers to the scale of the attack and multiplicity of victims. The attack must be "massive or large scale, involving many victims". The concept of "systematic" attack, within the meaning of Article 3 of the Statute, refers to a deliberate pattern of conduct, but does not necessarily include the idea of a plan. The existence of a policy or plan may be evidentially relevant, in that it may be useful in establishing that the attack was directed against a civilian population and that it was widespread or systematic. However, the existence of such a policy or plan is not a separate legal element of the crime.[246]

This elucidation of the "widespread or systematic" requirement is in accordance with the case law of this Tribunal and that of the ICTY, and the Appeals Chamber sees no error in it.[247]

102. The Appellant also argues that Article 3 (g) of the Statute is directed at crimes of a collective nature, whereas the evidence in this case established, at most, individual or isolated acts.[248] At the outset, it bears noting that it is not rape per se that must be shown to be widespread or systematic, but rather the attack itself (of which the rapes formed part).[249] In the case at hand, the Trial Chamber reasonably concluded that there was a widespread and systematic attack against Tutsis in Rusumo Commune.[250] Its further conclusion that the rapes formed part of this attack[251] was also reasonable in light of the finding that

> "the victims of rape were chosen because of their Tutsi ethnic origin, or because of their relationship with a person of the Tutsi ethnic group".[252]

103. The Appellant specifically contends that the rape of Witness TAQ was isolated because she had known her attacker previously.[253] But this fact does not mean that her rape was isolated from the widespread and systematic attack. Indeed, the genocide and extermination campaign in Rwanda was characterized in significant part by neighbours killing and raping neighbours.[254] Moreover, as the ICTY Appeals Chamber has recognized, even in the event that

> "personal motivations can be identified in the defendant's carrying out of an act, it does not necessarily follow that the required nexus with the attack on a civilian population must also inevitably be lacking."[255]

Whether or not the perpetrator and victim are acquainted, the question is simply whether the totality of the evidence proves a nexus between the act and the widespread or systematic attack. The Appellant has not shown that the Trial Chamber erred in holding that this requirement was satisfied here.

104. Accordingly, this sub-ground of appeal is rejected.

2. Assessment of the Evidence

105. The Appellant submits that the Prosecution witnesses who testified as to rapes were not credible.[256] As the Trial Chamber acquitted the Appellant in relation to the rapes recounted by Witnesses TAO, TAS, and TAP, it is not necessary to discuss the contentions of the Appellant with respect to these witnesses. As to Witness TAQ, the Appellant refers to his arguments under his third ground of appeal, which have already been dismissed.[257] He adds that the witness did not see him on 17 April 1994, but only heard his voice through a megaphone, which causes vocal distortion; moreover, this difficulty was compounded by the fact that there were three persons talking at the same time.[258] Finally, he reiterates that Witness TAQ knew her assailant, which, he suggests, means that her rape was not triggered by the Appellant's instigation.[259] In his Reply, the Appellant adds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding a causal link between his statements and the rapes, and that no reasonable trier of fact would have relied only on Witness TAQ's testimony to prove such a link with respect to the rape of seven other women.[260]

106. With respect to the Appellant's argument concerning vocal distortion, the Trial Chamber concluded that "the witness knew the Accused sufficiently well, because of their relationship, to be able to recognize his voice over the megaphone without seeing him."[261] The Appellant has not shown that this conclusion was unreasonable, nor has he shown that the fact that there were other individuals also speaking made it unreasonable to rely on Witness TAQ's testimony. Moreover, there is no cogent reason why the Trial

Chamber should only have accepted Witness TAQ's account of her own rape and not that of the rapes she witnessed. As noted above, the Trial Chamber reasonably concluded that Witness TAQ was credible.

107. As noted above, the acquaintance between Witness TAQ and her assailant does not mean that her rape cannot constitute a crime against humanity. Likewise, it does not demonstrate that the Appellant could not have instigated the attack. The critical question is whether the Appellant's words substantially contributed to the commission of the rape. As to that question, the Trial Chamber found:

> on 16 April 1994, around 9 a.m., the Accused, who was driving around in Rubare cellule, Nyarubuye secteur, using a megaphone, asked that Hutu young men whom […] girls had refused to marry should be looked for so that they should have sex with the young girls, adding that "in the event [that] they [the young girls] resisted, they had to be killed in an atrocious manner". Placed in context, and considering the attendant audience, such an utterance from the Accused constituted an incitement, directed at this group of attackers on which the bourgmestre had influence, to rape Tutsi women. That is why, immediately after the utterance, a group of attackers attacked Witness TAQ and seven other Tutsi women and girls with whom she was hiding, and raped them.[262]

Given these factual findings, which have not been shown to be unreasonable, it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that the Appellant's words substantially contributed to the rapes of Witness TAQ, as well as that of the seven other Tutsis.[263]

108. Accordingly, this ground of appeal is dismissed in its entirety.

E. SENTENCING (GROUND OF APPEAL 5)

109. The Appellant submits that his sentence should be reduced to fifteen years, in the event that the Appeals Chamber does not quash his convictions.[264] Pointing to the Trial Chamber's reliance on his position as bourgmestre as an aggravating factor, he claims that he was convicted only because of that position, and that his responsibility for the crimes was never proven.[265] As to mitigating circumstances, the Appellant contends that, on 11 and 12 April 1994, he used his authority as bourgmestre to have the perpetrators arrested and incarcerated.[266] The Appellant also asserts that he helped some persons to escape the massacres,[267] and that he was himself a victim as he had been threatened and had to go into hiding on 13 April 1994.[268] Finally, he contends that the sentence should be reduced in light of his advanced age and the normal life expectancy in Africa.[269]

110. The Prosecution responds that the Appellant did not demonstrate how the Trial Chamber failed to follow the applicable law or abused its discretion in imposing a sentence.[270] In reply, the Appellant states that "[i]t is dumbfounding to think that when the Accused requests a reduction in his sentence, he is formulating a ground of appeal" and that "the heading 'Sentence' is not at all a ground of appeal. The proof is that the Defence has nowhere made mention of any error."[271] Rather, the Appellant requests that the Appeals Chamber, "[c]onforming to the humanist idea of countries like France where the famous prisoner Maurice PAPON, was admitted to spend his last days in his home because of his advanced age," reduce his sentence to fifteen years.[272]

111. Given that, as the Appellant expressly concedes in his Reply Brief, he has not raised any error of the Trial Chamber in relation to the sentence imposed,[273] the Appeals Chamber rejects the request to reduce the sentence. It is well established that the Appeals Chamber will not substitute its own sentence for that imposed by the Trial Chamber absent a showing that the Trial Chamber has committed a discernible error in exercising its discretion or has failed to follow applicable law.[274]

III. The appeal of the prosecution

A. Murder as a Crime against Humanity (Ground of Appeal 2)

112. The Prosecution challenges the Appellant's acquittal for murder as a crime against humanity, with which he was charged pursuant to Articles 3 (a), 6 (1), and 6 (3) of the Statute.[275] The Trial Chamber found that, on 13 April 1994, the Appellant expelled two of his Tutsi tenants, Marie and Béatrice, from their home, and that they were killed later that night.[276] However, the Trial Chamber considered these findings insufficient to establish the Appellant's responsibility for these killings.[277] The Prosecution contends, first, that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact by failing to conclude that the Appellant ordered these killings; and, second, that it erred in law by failing to consider the alternative theory that the Appellant aided and abetted the killings.[278]

1. Alleged Errors in Not Finding that the Appellant Ordered the Murder of Marie and Béatrice

113. At trial, Prosecution Witness TAS testified that, during the evening of 13 April 1994, she had heard a policeman named Kazoba tell someone that by noon the next day there would no longer be any Tutsi alive because the Appellant had ordered that all Tutsis be killed, starting with Marie and Béatrice.[279] She had seen Kazoba in the Appellant's company earlier that day.[280] The Trial Chamber found that this evidence was uncorroborated hearsay and declined to rely on it to establish that the Appellant had, indeed, ordered the murders.

114. On appeal, the Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to take into account evidence establishing the wider genocidal campaign to which the Appellant contributed in a number of ways: meeting with and instructing conseillers, arranging for weapons distribution, and inciting violence through his public speeches.[281] The Prosecution maintains that this circumstantial evidence, as well as the evidence that the Appellant expelled his tenants notwithstanding the grave danger they faced, corroborates Witness TAS's hearsay testimony.[282] It contends that, in light of this combination of evidence, any reasonable Trial Chamber would have entered a conviction, and adds that the Trial Chamber failed to specify a standard by which the sufficiency of corroborative evidence was to be assessed.[283] The Prosecution characterizes the alleged error as legal as well as factual, claiming that the Trial Chamber misunderstood the requirements for corroboration.[284]

115. It is well established that, as a matter of law, it is permissible to base a conviction on circumstantial evidence and/or hearsay evidence.[285] The Appeals Chamber recalls that, even if the law does not require evidence to be corroborated, a Trial Chamber, as the trier of fact, can decide that under particular circumstances corroboration is necessary.[286] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber made a factual finding specific to the evidence in this case:

> "the hearsay evidence of Witness TAS is insufficient, failing corroboration, to establish that the Accused ordered the murder of Marie and Béatrice."[287]

Moreover, the Trial Chamber evidently did not ignore the evidence alleged by the Prosecution as corroborative of Witness TAS's hearsay evidence; it relied on this evidence to convict the Appellant of genocide and extermination.[288] Although the Trial Chamber did not specifically discuss this evidence in the context of the murder count, it was not obligated to set forth every step of its reasoning or to cite every piece of evidence that it considered.[289]

116. Moreover, it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude – taking into account the hearsay testimony of Witness TAS as well as the circumstantial evidence – that it was not established beyond reasonable doubt that the Appellant ordered the murders of Marie and Béatrice. The Appellant's involvement in various aspects of the genocidal campaign might reasonably be taken as support for the credibility of the hearsay testimony that he ordered these particular murders, as might the fact that he expelled Marie and Béatrice with little regard for the obvious danger to their lives. But none of this evidence provides such unambiguous proof that he issued such an order that a reasonable Trial Chamber would have had to convict him on that basis.

117. This sub-ground of appeal is dismissed.

2. Alleged Failure to Consider Other Modes of Liability

118. As an alternative to its ordering theory, the Prosecution argues that the Appellant should have been convicted for aiding and abetting the murders of Marie and Béatrice.[290] It maintains that the Trial Chamber's findings that the Appellant expelled his tenants in full knowledge of the risk that they would be killed, and that they were then in fact killed, are sufficient to establish that he aided and abetted the murders.[291] The Prosecution also claims that the Appellant should have been held responsible under this count pursuant to a joint criminal enterprise theory, an argument considered below in Section III.D.[292]

119. The Trial Chamber did not expressly discuss the possibility that the Appellant was liable for the murders of Marie and Béatrice as an aider and abetter. The Appellant suggests, however, that this is because the Prosecution had failed to plead or argue this mode of liability.[293]

120. The preamble to Count 4 of the Indictment (Murder) states that the Appellant is charged under Article 6 (1) of the Statute "by virtue of his affirmative acts in planning, instigating, ordering, committing, or otherwise aiding and abetting the planning, preparation or execution of the crime charged".[294] Subsequent paragraphs under that count detail the specific allegations. Paragraph 36 of the Indictment is relevant to the killing of Marie and Béatrice; it reads as follows:

> On a date uncertain during April - June 1994, Sylvestre Gacumbitsi personally ordered the tenants in one of his homes to vacate the premises. After announcing that his home was not CND, a reference to the cantonment of RPF soldiers in Kigali, Sylvestre Gacumbitsi ordered the killing of his former tenants.

[292] Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 103.
[293] See Gacumbitsi Response, para. 137.
[294] Indictment, Count 4.

121. The Prosecution contends that the Appellant would suffer no prejudice if the Appeals Chamber were to consider liability for aiding and abetting, as this mode of liability and all relevant material facts were pleaded in the Indictment, all the witnesses who testified to those facts were cross-examined by the Defence, and the Defence would not have altered its cross-examination or called any additional evidence.[295] The Prosecution further argues that the Trial and Appeals Chambers have a duty to consider all of the implications of the evidence presented, and to render judgment based on all theories of culpability disclosed in the pleadings and on the evidence.[296]

122. The question for the Appeals Chamber is whether the allegations in the Indictment were sufficient to give the Appellant clear and timely notice that he was being charged with the killings of Marie and Béatrice for aiding and abetting. As recently noted by the Appeals Chamber:

> it has long been the practice of the Prosecution to merely quote the provisions of Article 6 (1) of the Statute in the charges, leaving it to the Trial Chamber to determine the appropriate form of participation under Article 6 (1) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that, to avoid any possible ambiguity, it would be advisable to indicate in relation to each individual count precisely and expressly the particular nature of the responsibility alleged. Nevertheless, even if an individual count of the indictment does not indicate precisely the form of responsibility pleaded, an accused might have received clear and timely notice of the form of responsibility pleaded, for instance in other paragraphs of the indictment.[297]

123. In considering whether the Appellant received clear and timely notice, the Indictment must therefore be considered as a whole. In this case, the Appeals Chamber finds, by majority, Judge Güney and Judge Meron dissenting, that the reference to aiding and abetting in the preamble to Count 4, taken in combination with the allegations of material facts sufficient to support a conviction under that mode of liability, was sufficient to put the Appellant on notice that he was charged with aiding and abetting the murders of Marie and Béatrice. Specifically, paragraph 36 of the Indictment states that the Appellant ordered his tenants to leave their home and made an announcement that, in the context of the ongoing genocide, made clear that he was doing so because he did not want the home to serve as a refuge for Tutsi. Other paragraphs of the Indictment detail the context of the genocidal campaign, which ensured that in expelling the tenants under these circumstances, the Appellant was exposing them to a high probability of death.[298] Taken together – and independently of the allegation at the end of paragraph 36 that the Appellant subsequently ordered the tenants' murder, which pleads the alternative "ordering" theory – these paragraphs allege the necessary material facts in support of a conclusion that the Appellant aided and abetted their murder.

124. Thus, the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider whether the Appellant aided and abetted the murder of Marie and Béatrice. Although the Trial Chamber therefore entered no conviction for aiding and abetting murder, it did enter findings of fact sufficient to support such a conviction. It detailed the expulsion of the tenants, the statements of the Accused, the context of the genocidal campaign and the Appellant's involvement therein, and the killing of the tenants, and concluded that > "the Accused expelled his tenants, Tutsi women, knowing that by so doing he was exposing them to the risk of being targeted by Hutu attackers on grounds of their ethnic origin."[299]

On the basis of these findings of fact, the Appeals Chamber will enter a new conviction for aiding and abetting murder.

125. For the foregoing reasons, this sub-ground of appeal is upheld.

B. RESPONSIBILITY FOR RAPES COMMITTED IN RUSUMO COMMUNE (GROUND OF APPEAL 3)

126. Although the Appellant was convicted of eight rapes under Count 5 of the Indictment, the Trial Chamber acquitted him of certain other rapes that had been recounted by Prosecution Witnesses TAO, TAS, and TAP. The Trial Chamber found that these rapes had taken place, but that the Prosecution had not proven that the Appellant had instigated them.[300] On appeal, the Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber should have convicted the Appellant for these rapes, either for instigation or under other modes of Article 6 (1) or Article 6 (3) liability.[301]

1. Instigation

(a) Legal Requirements for Instigation

127. The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law by requiring it to establish that the Appellant's instigation was a condition sine qua non of the commission of the rapes.[302] Instead, it contends that to establish culpability for instigation, it suffices to show that the accused's instigation "substantially contributed" to the commission of the crime – that is, that he "set in motion a chain of events that were the foreseeable consequence of his instigation of the crime."[303] The Prosecution concludes that the totality of the evidence in this case establishes beyond reasonable doubt that this standard was satisfied.[304]

128. The Trial Chamber held that conviction for instigation requires proof "of a causal connection between the instigation and the actus reus of the crime."[305] It found "no evidence of a link" between the Appellant's words and the rapes recounted by Witnesses TAS, TAO, and TAP.[306]

129. As the Kordić and Čerkez Appeal Judgement established, "it is not necessary to prove that the crime would not have been perpetrated without the involvement of the accused"; rather,

> "it is sufficient to demonstrate that the instigation was a factor substantially contributing to the conduct of another person committing the crime."[307]

Thus, the Prosecution has correctly stated the causation requirement for instigation. However, there is no indication that the Trial Chamber misunderstood this requirement. Its reference to a "causal connection between the instigation and the actus reus of the crime"[308] does not specify what kind of causation must be proven, and without more it cannot be inferred that the Trial Chamber required that the instigation be the sine qua non of the rapes.

130. While the Trial Chamber did not use the phrase "substantially contributing", its language made clear that it found that this standard was not satisfied. Specifically, it found "no evidence establishing a link" – substantial or otherwise – between the Appellant's words and the rapes recounted by Witnesses TAS, TAO, and TAP.[309] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber did not err in law, and this sub-ground of appeal is dismissed.

(b) Evidence Supporting Instigation

131. In the alternative, the Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber erred by failing to draw the only reasonable conclusion supported by the totality of the evidence and by its own factual findings: that the Appellant was responsible for instigating all the rapes established.[310] For instance, the Prosecution notes, the Trial Chamber found that on or about 17 April 1994,[311] the Appellant drove around Nyarubuye secteur with a megaphone inciting Hutu men to rape Tutsis and to kill atrociously those who resisted. Such rapes were then carried out, including by inserting sticks in the victims' genitals, and some victims died.[312] The specific rapes recounted by Witnesses TAO, TAS, and TAP were perpetrated around mid-April 1994 in Rusumo Commune; some of them were perpetrated within Nyarubuye secteur, including by the Nyarubuye conseiller.[313] The Prosecution points to the findings concerning the Appellant's knowledge of the rapes, his authority as bourgmestre, and his role in the genocide, and cites the testimony of Witness TAS that those who raped her told her that the Appellant had ordered the rape and killing of Tutsi women and girls.[314]

(i) The Rape of Witness TAS

132. Witness TAS, a Hutu woman married to a Tutsi man, testified that, on an unspecified date, she was raped by two Hutu men, one of whom told her that the Appellant had authorized the rape of Tutsis but that no decision had yet been taken concerning Hutu women who were married to Tutsis.[315] The Trial Chamber concluded that the rape of Witness TAS had been established,[316] but found that her uncorroborated hearsay testimony concerning the Appellant's instructions was insufficient to prove that he had instigated the rape.[317]

133. There is no evidence that the rape of Witness TAS took place after the Appellant's statements instigating rapes on 17 April 1994, and no direct evidence that, prior to that date, the Appellant had instigated rape.[318] The only evidence to the latter effect was Witness TAS's account of her attacker's statement, which the Trial Chamber did not find reliable.[319] No error has been shown in this finding. Although the Trial Chamber is not precluded as a matter of law from relying on uncorroborated hearsay testimony to establish an element of a crime, it is not obligated to do so.[320] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber did not err in declining to find that the Appellant instigated the rape of Witness TAS.

(ii) The Rapes of Witness TAP and her Mother

134. Witness TAP testified that one day in April 1994, after the President died, she heard loud noises, gunfire, buildings collapsing, and explosions coming from Nyarubuye Parish.[321] She explained that the following day,[322] a group of thirty unidentified attackers sexually assaulted and killed her mother, and

See also Trial Judgement, para. 207 (internal citation omitted): "Le témoin précise que cette attaque s'est produite le lendemain du jour où, en avril 1994, après la mort du Président, elle avait entendu des bruits importants qui lui indiquaient que quelque chose de spécial se passait à la paroisse de Nyarubuye." The English translation of this paragraph is inaccurate: "The witness explained that the attack occurred the day after the President's death".

subsequently raped her.[323] The Trial Chamber accepted Witness TAP's account of the rapes,[324] but was not persuaded that there was a "sufficient nexus" between the Appellant's words on 17 April 1994 and those rapes to establish his responsibility for them.[325]

135. As with the rape of Witness TAS, there is no evidence that the rapes recounted by Witness TAP took place after 17 April 1994, the date of the Appellant's instigation. The Prosecution did not establish the date on which the rapes in question took place. Witness TAP situated the rapes temporally as the day after which she heard loud noises from Nyarubuye Parish. The Appeals Chamber notes that the principal attack at Nyarubuye Parish, a possible source of the sounds testified to by Witness TAP, took place on 15 April 1994.[326] This would mean that the rapes in question took place on 16 April 1994, one day before the Appellant's instigation of rapes.[327] As no other evidence shows that the Appellant's actions or words substantially contributed to the rapes of Witness TAP and her mother, the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that the Prosecution had not established beyond reasonable doubt that the Appellant instigated these rapes.

(iii) The Rapes Recounted by Witness TAO

136. Witness TAO, a Tutsi man, testified that at some point after the attack at Nyarubuye Parish on 15 April 1994 his wife was taken to the house of the conseiller of Nyarubuye Sector, Isaïe Karamage.[328] Witness TAO testified that his wife spent two or three days there, and that she told him afterward that the conseiller had raped her every night.[329] A few days later, Witness TAO witnessed the rape and killing of his wife by unknown attackers.[330]

137. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness TAO's testimony regarding the rapes of his wife by Mr. Karamage was hearsay,[331] but it nevertheless considered it reliable, "especially as other witnesses testified that there were similar incidents of rape at the same house, or at least, that women and girls gathered there".[332] The Trial Chamber also accepted that Witness TAO witnessed the rape and killing of his wife by unknown attackers.[333] However, the Trial Chamber found that the Prosecution had not proven a link between the Appellant's words on 17 April 1994 and the rapes recounted by Witness TAO,[334] and that the Appellant could not be convicted for them.[335]

138. Although at least some of the rapes in question appear to have been committed after the Appellant instigated rape, there is no evidence that the Appellant's instigation substantially contributed to them. The Prosecution did not establish that Mr. Karamage and the other attackers were aware of the Appellant's statements of 17 April 1994. The Prosecution's suggestion that

> "[i]t is only reasonable to conclude that, even if some perpetrators of the other rapes did not directly hear the [Appellant]'s instigation, they were told by others about it, or were inspired by the actions of others who had heard it"[336] is speculative and plainly does not establish that this was the only reasonable conclusion. Thus, the Prosecution has not shown an error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion that no nexus was proven between the instigation and the rapes.

2. Other Modes of Liability under Article 6 (1) of the Statute

139. The Prosecution also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to convict the Appellant for planning, ordering, committing through a joint criminal enterprise, and aiding and abetting the rapes recounted by Witnesses TAO, TAS, and TAP.[337] It submits that the Appellant had the requisite mens rea for any of these modes of liability because he acted "with the full awareness of the substantial likelihood that indiscriminate rape of Tutsis would occur in Rusumo."[338] As to the actus reus, the Prosecution argues that the only reasonable conclusion is that the Appellant's public call for the indiscriminate rape of Tutsis, taken together with all the other proven facts, establishes that he aided and abetted the rapes in question.[339] The Prosecution makes no attempt to explain how the evidence establishes the actus reus of planning or ordering rape, and so the Appeals Chamber will not consider its assertion of error in this regard. Its submissions regarding joint criminal enterprise will be addressed in Section III.D below.

140. The Prosecution states that the causation standard for aiding and abetting "is that the acts have a substantial effect on the commission of the crime."[340] The Appeals Chamber agrees, but finds that the Prosecution has not established that this standard was satisfied. As discussed in the previous subsection, the evidence at trial was insufficient to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Appellant's words on 17 April 1994 had any effect on the rapes in question. The Prosecution does not point to any other specific acts or omissions that support a conviction for aiding and abetting. Accordingly, this sub-ground of appeal is dismissed.

3. Article 6 (3) Liability

141. The Prosecution challenges the Trial Chamber's holding that the Appellant lacked superior authority over the conseillers, gendarmes, soldiers, and Interahamwe in Rusumo Commune at the time of the events.[341] It argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law by requiring proof that the Appellant was a superior in a formal administrative hierarchy rather than examining whether he exercised effective control.[342] It further claims that because overwhelming evidence established that the Appellant possessed such effective control, he should have been convicted for the rapes recounted by Witnesses TAO, TAP, and TAS under Article 6 (3) of the Statute.[343]

142. The Trial Chamber did not enter a formal legal finding concerning the Appellant's Article 6 (3) responsibility for rape, instead stating:

> Having found the Accused criminally liable under Article 6 (1) of the Statute for instigating others to commit rape in Rusumo commune in April 1994, the Chamber does not deem it necessary to enquire whether he is equally responsible pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute, given the similarity of the acts charged and the lack [sic] [of] evidence of a superior-subordinate relationship between the Accused and the perpetrators of the rapes.[344]

As to the first part of this statement, it is true that convictions should not be entered under both Articles 6 (1) and 6 (3) of the Statute for the same crime based on the same conduct.[345] The Appellant's Article 6 (1) conviction for rape only extended to some of the rapes alleged, however. The Trial Chamber therefore had to consider whether the Appellant was responsible for the other rapes under Article 6 (3) of the Statute, that is those recounted by Witnesses TAO, TAP, and TAS. It in fact implicitly did so, concluding that there was no evidence of a superior-subordinate relationship. Its holding on this point was further elaborated in its factual findings:

> On the evidence tendered, the Chamber cannot find that the Accused had superior authority over the conseillers, gendarmes, soldiers and Interahamwe that were in his commune at the time of the events under consideration. The law did not, per se, place him in such a position. Although his responsibilities regarding the maintenance of law and order afforded him the power to take legal measures that would be binding on everyone in the commune, the Prosecution has not adduced any evidence that such power placed him, ipso facto, in the position of a superior within a formal administrative hierarchy vis-à-vis each category of persons mentioned above.[346]

143. This analysis focuses on the Appellant's de jure authority – specifically, whether the "law" placed him in power and whether he was "a superior within a formal administrative hierarchy". The Trial Chamber does not appear to have considered the Appellant's de facto authority. This was an error. A superior

> "possesses power or authority over subordinates either de jure or de facto; it is not necessary for that power or authority to arise from official appointment."[347]

To establish liability under Article 6 (3) of the Statute, the following must be shown:

- A crime over which the Tribunal has jurisdiction was committed;
- The accused had effective control over the perpetrators of the crime (i.e., the material ability to prevent or punish the commission of crimes);
- The accused knew or had reason to know that the crime was going to be committed or had been committed; and
- The accused did not take necessary and reasonable measures to prevent or punish the commission of the crime by a subordinate.[348]

144. The Trial Chamber found that the Appellant knew or had reason to know of the rapes recounted by Witnesses TAO, TAS, and TAP.[349] The key question is whether the Appellant had effective control over the perpetrators. Attempting to show effective control, the Prosecution, in its Appeal Brief, points to Trial Chamber findings concerning the Appellant's general authority as bourgmestre to impose law and order in the commune, as well as his leading role in the genocidal campaign.[350] Yet it cannot be extrapolated from these findings that he exercised effective control over every person who was present in the commune during the time in question. The Prosecution advances no arguments specifically addressing the relationship between the Appellant and the perpetrators of the particular rapes described by Witnesses TAO, TAS, and TAP.

145. The Appeals Chamber therefore cannot conclude that the Prosecution met its burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the Appellant had effective control over the perpetrators of the rapes recounted by Witnesses TAO, TAS, and TAP. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber affirms the Trial Chamber's finding that the Appellant cannot be convicted under Article 6 (3) of the Statute for these rapes.

146. This sub-ground of appeal is dismissed, and the appeal under this ground is dismissed in its entirety.

C. Elements of Rape as a Crime against Humanity (Ground of Appeal 4)

147. The Prosecution's fourth ground of appeal seeks a clarification of the law relating to rape as a crime against humanity or as an act of genocide.[351] The Prosecution argues that non-consent of the victim and the perpetrator's knowledge thereof should not be considered elements of the offence that must be proved by the Prosecution; rather, subject to the limitations of Rule 96 of the Rules, consent should be considered an affirmative defence.[352]

148. The Prosecution argues that the crime of rape only comes within the Tribunal's jurisdiction when it occurs in the context of genocide, armed conflict, or a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population – circumstances in which genuine consent is impossible. In support, it quotes a report by a Special Rapporteur to the UN Commission on Human Rights:

> The manifestly coercive circumstances that exist in all armed conflict situations establish a presumption of non-consent and negate the need for the Prosecution to establish lack of consent as an element of the crime.[353]

149. The Prosecution posits that rape should be viewed in the same way as other violations of international criminal law, such as torture or enslavement, for which the Prosecution is not required to establish absence of consent.[354] Further, it contends that Rule 96 (ii) of the Rules presumes that consent is a defence that must be supported by credible evidence introduced by the accused.[355]

150. The Trial Chamber found that the circumstances in this case were so coercive as to negate any possibility of consent.[356] The Prosecution therefore does not allege an error invalidating the verdict. However, it maintains, and the Appeals Chamber agrees, that the matter should be considered as one of "general significance" for the Tribunal's jurisprudence.[357]

151. In the Kunarac case, the ICTY Appeals Chamber defined rape as follows:

> the actus reus of the crime of rape in international law is constituted by: the sexual penetration, however slight: (a) of the vagina or anus of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator or any other object used by the perpetrator; or (b) the mouth of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator; where such sexual penetration occurs without the consent of the victim. Consent for this purpose must be consent given voluntarily, as a result of the victim's free will, assessed in the context of the surrounding circumstances. The mens rea is the intention to effect this sexual penetration, and the knowledge that it occurs without the consent of the victim.[358]

However, it immediately emphasized that

> "the circumstances giving rise to the instant appeal and that prevail in most cases charged as either war crimes or crimes against humanity will be almost universally coercive. That is to say, true consent will not be possible."[359]

152. The Appeals Chamber adopts and seeks to further elucidate the position expressed by the ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Kunarac et al. Appeal Judgement. Two distinct questions are posed. First, are non-consent and the knowledge thereof elements of the crime of rape, or is consent instead an affirmative defence? Second, if they are elements, how may they be proved?

153. With respect to the first question, Kunarac establishes that non-consent and knowledge thereof are elements of rape as a crime against humanity. The import of this is that the Prosecution bears the burden of proving these elements beyond reasonable doubt. If the affirmative defence approach were taken, the accused would bear, at least, the burden of production, that is, the burden to introduce evidence providing prima facie support for the defence.

154. As the Prosecution points out, Rule 96 of the Rules does refer to consent as a "defence". The Rules of Procedure and Evidence do not, however, redefine the elements of the crimes over which the Tribunal has jurisdiction, which are defined by the Statute and by international law.[360] The Appeals Chamber agrees, moreover, with the analysis of the Trial Chamber in the Kunarac case:

> The reference in the Rule [96] to consent as a "defence" is not entirely consistent with traditional legal understandings of the concept of consent in rape. Where consent is an aspect of the definition of rape in national jurisdictions, it is generally understood […] to be absence of consent which is an element of the crime. The use of the word "defence", which in its technical sense carries an implication of the shifting of the burden of proof to the accused, is inconsistent with this understanding. The Trial Chamber does not understand the reference to consent as a "defence" in Rule 96 to have been used in this technical way.[361]

Rather than changing the definition of the crime by turning an element into a defence, Rule 96 of the Rules must be read simply to define the circumstances under which evidence of consent will be admissible.[362] Thus, it speaks to the second part of the present inquiry: how may non-consent be proven?

155. The answers both Tribunals have given to this second question resolve as a practical matter the objections raised by the Prosecution with respect to the elements approach. The Prosecution can prove non-consent beyond reasonable doubt by proving the existence of coercive circumstances under which meaningful consent is not possible. As with every element of any offence, the Trial Chamber will consider all of the relevant and admissible evidence in determining whether, under the circumstances of the case, it is appropriate to conclude that non-consent is proven beyond reasonable doubt. But it is not necessary, as a legal matter, for the Prosecution to introduce evidence concerning the words or conduct of the victim or the victim's relationship to the perpetrator. Nor need it introduce evidence of force. Rather, the Trial Chamber is free to infer non-consent from the background circumstances, such as an ongoing genocide campaign or the detention of the victim.[363] Indeed, the Trial Chamber did so in this case.

156. Under certain circumstances, the accused might raise reasonable doubt by introducing evidence that the victim specifically consented. However, pursuant to Rule 96 (ii) of the Rules, such evidence is inadmissible if the victim:

> (a) Has been subjected to or threatened with or has had reason to fear violence, duress, detention or psychological oppression; or
> (b) Reasonably believed that if the victim did not submit, another might be so subjected, threatened or put in fear.

Additionally, even if it admits such evidence, a Trial Chamber is free to disregard it if it concludes that under the circumstances the consent given was not genuinely voluntary.

157. As to the accused's knowledge of the absence of consent of the victim, which as Kunarac establishes is also an element of the offence of rape, similar reasoning applies. Knowledge of non-consent may be proven, for instance, if the Prosecution establishes beyond reasonable doubt that the accused was aware, or had reason to be aware, of the coercive circumstances that undermined the possibility of genuine consent.

D. JOINT CRIMINAL ENTERPRISE (GROUND OF APPEAL 5)

158. The Appeals Chamber, following ICTY precedent, has recognized that an accused before this Tribunal may be found individually responsible for "committing" a crime within the meaning of Article 6 (1) of the Statute under one of three categories of "joint criminal enterprise" ("JCE") liability.[364] The present ground of appeal concerns the Appellant's liability for murder, genocide, extermination and rape under the first and third categories.[365] The first (or "basic") category encompasses cases in which "all co-perpetrators, acting pursuant to a common purpose, possess the same criminal intention" to commit the crime that is charged.[366] The third (or "extended") category concerns cases in which the crime charged, "while outside the common purpose, is nevertheless a natural and foreseeable consequence of executing that common purpose."[367]

159. At paragraph 289 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber stated:

> The Prosecution seems to allege that the Accused participated in a joint criminal enterprise. However, the Chamber cannot make a finding on such allegation since it was not pleaded clearly enough to allow the Accused to defend himself adequately.

160. The Prosecution submits that this holding was in error.[368] It observes that the Indictment charged that the Appellant acted "in concert with" others in pursuit of a "common scheme, strategy, or plan". The Prosecution argues that this language is the functional equivalent of "joint criminal enterprise" and sufficed to put the Appellant on notice, particularly in conjunction with the factual allegations in the Indictment and the "collective" nature of the crimes charged.[369] The Prosecution further contends that any vagueness in the Indictment was cured by its Pre-Trial Brief[370] and asserts that it consistently advanced the JCE theory at trial.[371] It argues that the Appellant should have been convicted on this theory for committing murder, genocide, extermination, and rape.[372]

1. Applicable Law Concerning the Pleading of Joint Criminal Enterprise

161. The relevant law concerning specificity of indictments as a general matter is set forth in Section II.B above. This Tribunal's leading precedent on pleading practice with respect to JCE is the Ntakirutimana Appeal Judgement, which invokes this passage from the Krnojelac Appeal Judgement:

> With respect to the nature of the liability incurred, the Appeals Chamber holds that it is vital for the indictment to specify at least on what legal basis of the Statute an individual is being charged (Article 7 (1) and/or 7 (3)). Since Article 7(1) allows for several forms of direct criminal responsibility, a failure to specify in the indictment which form or forms of liability the Prosecution is pleading gives rise to ambiguity. The Appeals Chamber considers that such ambiguity should be avoided and holds therefore that, where it arises, the Prosecution must identify precisely the form or forms of liability alleged for each count as soon as possible and, in any event, before the start of the trial. Likewise, when the Prosecution charges the "commission" of one of the crimes under the Statute within the meaning of Article 7 (1), it must specify whether the term is to be understood as meaning physical commission by the accused or participation in a joint criminal enterprise, or both. The Appeals Chamber also considers that it is preferable for an indictment alleging the accused's responsibility as a participant in a joint criminal enterprise also to refer to the particular form (basic or extended) of joint criminal enterprise envisaged. However, this does not, in principle, prevent the Prosecution from pleading elsewhere than in the indictment – for instance in a pre-trial brief – the legal theory which it believes best demonstrates that the crime or crimes alleged are imputable to the accused in law in the light of the facts alleged. This option is, however, limited by the need to guarantee the accused a fair trial.[373]

162. More recently, the ICTY Appeals Chamber elaborated in The Prosecutor v. Kvočka et al.:

> An indictment which merely lists the charges against the accused without pleading the material facts does not constitute adequate notice because it lacks "enough detail to inform a defendant clearly of the charges against him so that he may prepare his defence". Whether or not a fact is considered material depends on the nature of the Prosecution's case. The Prosecution's characterization of the alleged criminal conduct and the proximity of the accused to the underlying crime are decisive factors in determining the degree of specificity with which the Prosecution must plead the material facts of its case in the indictment in order to provide the accused with adequate notice.[...] If the Prosecution relies on a theory of joint criminal enterprise, then the Prosecutor must plead the purpose of the enterprise, the identity of the participants, and the nature of the accused's participation in the enterprise. Therefore, in order for an accused charged with joint criminal enterprise to fully understand which acts he is allegedly responsible for, the indictment should clearly indicate which form of joint criminal enterprise is being alleged.
> The Appeals Chamber also considers that the Indictment is defective because it fails to make any specific mention of joint criminal enterprise, although the Prosecution's case relied on this mode of responsibility. As explained above, joint criminal enterprise responsibility must be specifically pleaded. Although joint criminal enterprise is a means of "committing", it is insufficient for an indictment to merely make broad reference to Article 7 (1) of the Statute. Such reference does not provide sufficient notice to the Defence or to the Trial Chamber that the Prosecution is intending to rely on joint criminal enterprise responsibility. Moreover, in the Indictment the Prosecution has failed to plead the category of joint criminal enterprise or the material facts of the joint criminal enterprise, such as the purpose of the enterprise, the identity of the participants, and the nature of the accused's participation in the enterprise.[374]

Thus, Kvočka unambiguously established that failure to plead a JCE theory, including the category of JCE and the material facts supporting the theory, constitutes a defect in the indictment. It held,

163. The Appeals Chamber adopts the holding and rationale of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Kvočka. The mode of liability under Article 6 (1) (including the JCE theory) must be pleaded in the indictment, or the indictment is defective. As Krnojelac makes clear, however, such defects may be cured by the provision of timely, clear, and consistent information – for example, in a pre-trial brief.[375] This approach is consistent with the Appeals Chamber's approach to all other pleading failures.[376]

164. The Appeals Chamber will now consider whether the Indictment gave proper notice of the Prosecution's intent to rely on a JCE theory. The Prosecution does not argue that the Appellant has waived any objection to the vagueness of the Indictment in this respect. Thus, if it finds that the Indictment is defective, the Appeals Chamber will have to consider whether the Prosecution has proven that the defect was cured by the provision of timely, clear, and consistent information.

2. Allegations in the Indictment

165. The words "joint criminal enterprise" are not contained in the Indictment. This absence does not in and of itself indicate a defect. As the Appeals Chamber noted in Ntakirutimana, the Tadić Appeal Judgement used interchangeably the expressions "joint criminal enterprise", "common purpose", and "criminal enterprise".[377] It is possible that other phrasings might effectively convey the same concept.[378] The question is not whether particular words have been used, but whether an accused has been meaningfully "informed of the nature of the charges" so as to be able to prepare an effective defence.[379]

166. In this regard, two of the Prosecution's contentions are readily dismissed. First, the Appellant plainly could not have been expected to infer the Prosecution's reliance on a JCE theory from the mere fact that the Indictment "explicitly charged the [Appellant] with collective crimes: genocide, complicity in genocide, extermination, murder and rape in connection with the massacres that took place at various locations".[380] "Collective crimes" in this sense, i.e. crimes that involve multiple responsible parties or that take place in the context of mass violence, are alleged in every case before this Tribunal. But the Statute and Tribunal's jurisprudence indicate that an individual can participate in such crimes in various ways involving different kinds of interactions with other people – for instance, ordering, aiding and abetting, "committing" through JCE, "committing" through direct physical perpetration, and so forth. As the Kvočka Appeal Judgement makes clear, an accused cannot be expected to infer the mode of liability; it must be charged.

167. Second, the Prosecution's assertion that the allegations in the Indictment that the Appellant was responsible for "committing" crimes should be read to encompass a JCE theory[381] is similarly untenable and inconsistent with Kvočka, as the Prosecution in fact conceded at oral argument. It is not enough for the generic language of an indictment to "encompass" the possibility that JCE is being charged. Rather, JCE must be pleaded specifically.[382] Otherwise, an accused could reasonably infer that references to "committing" crimes are meant to refer to acts that he personally perpetrated.

168. The Prosecution's other argument is based on paragraphs 22 and 25 of the Indictment, which read as follows:

> 22. From those first days of April 1994 through 30 April 1994, Sylvestre GACUMBITSI ordered, directed or acted in concert with local administrative official in Kibungo préfecture, including bourgmestres and conseillers de secteur, to deny protection to civilian Tutsi refugees and to facilitate attacks upon them by communal police, Interahamwe, civilian militias and local residents.
> 25. Sylvestre Gacumbitsi, in his position of authority and acting in concert with others, participated in the planning, preparation or execution of a common scheme, strategy or plan to exterminate the Tutsi, by his own affirmative acts or through persons he assisted or by his subordinates with his knowledge and consent. [Emphases added]

169. The Appellant and his trial counsel have, however, used French throughout the proceedings. Although the Indictment was written in English, it is the French translation that is critical to determining whether the Appellant received proper notice of the charges against him, to the extent that any distinctions in phrasing are relevant. Paragraphs 22 and 25 of the translation read:

> 22. De ces premiers jours d'avril 1994 jusqu'au 30 avril de la même année, Sylvestre Gacumbitsi a ordonné ou dirigé les autorités administratives locales de la préfecture de Kibungo, y compris les bourgmestres et conseillers de secteur, de refuser toute protection aux réfugiés civils Tutsis et de faciliter les attaques de la police communale, des Interahamwe, des milices civiles et des résidents locaux contre ces réfugiés ou a agi de concert avec ces autorités en cela.

[379] Ntakirutimana Appeal Judgement, para. 470. The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that because today ICTY and ICTR cases routinely employ the phrase "joint criminal enterprise", that phrase should for the sake of maximum clarity preferably be included in future indictments where JCE is being charged.

[381] Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 192.

25. Sylvestre Gacumbitsi, de par sa position d'autorité, et agissant de concert avec d'autres, a participé à la planification, la préparation ou l'exécution d'un plan, d'une stratégie ou d'un dessein communs visant à exterminer les Tutsis, par ses propres actes positifs ou par le biais de personnes qu'il a aidé ou par ses subordonnés dont il connaissait et approuvait les agissements.[Emphases added]

170. As a threshold matter, these paragraphs are found in a portion of the Indictment alleging material facts in support of the genocide and complicity in genocide counts only. They are not incorporated elsewhere in the Indictment and, therefore, cannot support the Prosecution's reliance on a JCE theory with respect to the murder, extermination, and rape counts.[383]

171. With respect to the genocide count, the Appeals Chamber finds, by majority, Judge Shahabuddeen and Judge Schomburg dissenting, that the paragraphs relied upon by the Prosecution were not sufficient to provide notice to the Appellant that he was being charged with participation in a joint criminal enterprise. First, taken alone, the words "acted in concert with" ("a agi de concert avec"), as used in paragraph 22 of the Indictment, do not suffice to meet the pleading requirements outlined above.[384]

172. Paragraph 25 of the Indictment comes closer to providing the necessary notice, as it clearly refers to concerted action among a plurality of persons in support of "a common scheme, strategy or plan to exterminate the Tutsi" ("d'un plan, d'une stratégie ou d'un dessein communs visant à exterminer les Tutsis"). This language is similar to that employed in Tadić and seems to encompass the critical elements of a JCE charge. However, in then proceeding to state that the accused participated in the common scheme "by his own affirmative acts or through persons he assisted or by his subordinates with his knowledge and consent", the Indictment could be read to invoke three established modes of liability other than JCE: "committing" through direct, personal perpetration, aiding and abetting, and Article 6 (3) superior responsibility. The Appellant could have interpreted the paragraph, taken as a whole, to refer only to those modes of liability and not to JCE, and he cannot therefore be said to have received clear notice of the JCE theory. This is especially so because, at the time of the Indictment, JCE was still an unfamiliar mode of liability in this Tribunal, although it had been employed at the ICTY.

173. As noted, the Prosecution also argues that the material facts set forth in the Indictment were sufficient to provide notice of the JCE theory. Specifically, the Prosecution states that the Indictment identified (i) the nature or essence of the JCE; (ii) the period over which it existed; (iii) the identity of its participants; and (iv) the nature of the accused's participation.[385] But even assuming the Indictment can be [383] Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 184.

[384] The practice of the ICTY contains instances where the phrase "acting in concert" has been considered insufficient to imply, without more, an allegation of joint criminal enterprise. The Pre-Trial Chamber in the Brdanin and Talić case held that the use of the words "[acting] individually and in concert" in that indictment was ambiguous and that if the Prosecution sought to rely on the Article 7 (1) liability of "acting in concert as part of a common purpose or design, or as part of a common criminal enterprise […] then this should be made clear". Brdanin and Talić Decision on Objections, para. 12. This decision was followed by an amendment to the indictment to specifically state that the accused in that case "participated in a criminal enterprise". The Prosecutor v. Brdanin and Talić, Case N°IT-99-36-PT, Further Amended Indictment, 12 March 2001, para. 27 ("the common purpose of which was the permanent removal of the majority of Bosnian Muslim and Bosnian Croat inhabitants from the territory of the planned Serbian state"). When it addressed the accused's objection to the indictment, the Pre-Trial Chamber in the Deronjić case stated that "the [i]ndictment for example does not plead a case of common purpose or common criminal enterprise liability against the accused, unless the vague reference to the accused acting 'in concert with others who share his intent' is meant to include such a case, in which event it is not pleaded with sufficient particularity." Deronjić Decision on Form of the Indictment, para. 30 (emphasis added). The Prosecution consequently filed an amended indictment in that case where it explicitly used the expression "joint criminal enterprise". The Prosecutor v. Miroslav Deronjić, Case N°IT-02-61-PT, Amended Indictment, 29 November 2002, paras. 2-8. Furthermore, "acting in concert" has also been used in several indictments where the Prosecution did not intend to rely on joint criminal enterprise for its case. In the Strugar case, while the indictment contained the expression "acting […] in concert with [others]", the Prosecution explicitly stated during a pre-trial hearing and in a pre-trial filing that it was not pleading joint criminal enterprise. The Prosecutor v. Pavle Strugar, Case N°IT-01-42-PT, Indictment, 23 February 2001, para. 18. Strugar Decision Concerning the Form of the Indictment, para. 21, referring to transcript of hearing of 12 March 2002 p. 108 and to The Prosecutor v. Pavle Strugar, Case N°IT-01-42-PT, Prosecution's Response to the Defence Preliminary Motion, 21 February 2002, para. 13. Similarly, in the Miodrag Jokić case, while the indictment stated that the accused had acted "individually or in concert with others," the Prosecution charged him for aiding and abetting crimes pursuant to Article 7 (1) of the Statute, to which he eventually pled guilty. The Prosecutor v. Miodrag Jokić, Case N°IT-01-42/1-PT, Second Amended Indictment, 27 August 2003, paras. 15, 22. Jokić Sentencing Judgement, paras. 9, 21. construed as containing all the material facts necessary to support a JCE theory, these facts were not clearly identified as being intended to plead such a theory. The mere inclusion in an indictment of scattered facts that might relate to a mode of liability does not suffice to put an accused on notice that the mode of liability is being alleged.

174. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds, by majority, Judge Shahabuddeen and Judge Schomburg dissenting, that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding the Indictment defective.

3. Whether Defects in the Indictment were Cured

175. The sole post-Indictment submission to which the Prosecution points in support of its contention that any defects in the Indictment were cured is its Pre-Trial Brief. However, that brief did not provide any clear indication to the Appellant that he was being charged as a JCE participant. It nowhere referred to a joint criminal enterprise, a common criminal purpose, or any other synonym. Part II of the Pre-Trial Brief (Factual Allegations) was divided into chapters including "Planning", "Preparing", and "Executing" (sub-divided into "Instigating", "Ordering, Leading and Supervising", and "Killing").[386] As to "Executing", the Pre-Trial Brief explained:

> During the month of April 1994, Sylvestre Gacumbitsi used his position as the Bourgmestre of Rusumo Commune and as an influential member of the MRND political party to execute the campaign of looting, raping and killing of the Tutsi civilians. Sylvestre Gacumbitsi ordered his subordinates from the local administration, communal policemen, members of the Interahamwe and Hutu civilians to attack and destroy the Tutsi civilian population. He instigated, led and supervised some of these attacks. Sylvestre Gacumbitsi, by his own hands, killed Tutsi civilians.[387]

This description does not give any indication that the Prosecution was pursuing a JCE theory. Nor is any such indication to be found in Part III of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief (Legal Issues). In fact, when discussing modes of liability in relation to each count, the Pre-Trial Brief does not even refer to "acting in concert with others" or to "a common scheme, strategy or plan" (in contrast to paragraphs 22 and 25 of the Indictment). It simply states that "the accused Sylvester [sic] Gacumbitsi, by virtue of the acts attributed to him, planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of" genocide,[388] or that "[t]he accused planned, instigated, ordered, committed, or aided and abetted in" the extermination, murder, and rape.[389] Thus, if anything, the Pre-Trial Brief is less clear than the Indictment with respect to joint criminal enterprise, and cannot be found to have cured the Indictment's defects.

176. The Prosecution also mentions certain submissions during the trial, although it concedes that these are "not relevant to the question whether the Respondent was unfairly prejudiced in the conduct of his defence" by defects in the Indictment.[390]

177. The Appeals Chamber has previously stated that "in some instances, information contained in an Opening Statement of the Prosecution may cure a defective indictment."[391] The Appeals Chamber need not decide now whether and under what circumstances such a statement might be sufficient to plead the mode of liability, however, because no assistance is provided to the Prosecution by its Opening Statement in this case. The Prosecution points to the following statement made during its opening address:

> Today, Your Honours, Gacumbitsi stands charged with 5 counts: The count of genocide, or complicity in genocide in the alternative.

> He is also charged Your Honours with extermination, murder and rape, as crimes against humanity, all arising from culpable acts we allege he committed in concert with others as part of the common scheme whose singular objective was the total destruction of the Tutsi ethnic group.[392]

Even had it been timely, this statement was not, on its own, sufficient to correct the defect in the Indictment and the Pre-Trial Brief. It was not further developed; the Prosecution did not connect it, for instance, to specific factual allegations that supported the JCE claim. Nor did it specify to which category of JCE it meant to allude. The indictment places an accused on notice of the charges he faces. For a subsequent submission to be understood to clarify vagueness in an indictment, the implications of that submission must be clearer than the Prosecution's statement was here.

178. Only in its Closing Brief did the Prosecution provide further details on its JCE theory, and that submission obviously came too late. Thus, the defect in the Indictment was not cured by the provision of timely, clear, and consistent information, and the Trial Chamber did not err in refusing to consider the JCE theory.

179. Accordingly, this ground of appeal is dismissed in its entirety.

E. AUTHORITY FOR ORDERING (GROUND OF APPEAL 6)

180. The Trial Chamber found that the Appellant ordered crimes committed by the communal policemen, but did not find that he ordered crimes committed by the conseillers, gendarmes, soldiers, and Interahamwe who were in his commune at the time of the events under consideration. The Prosecution challenges this. First, it argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law by requiring proof of a formal superior-subordinate relationship in order to find that the Appellant had the authority or power to order.[393] Second, it contends that the Trial Chamber failed to draw the only reasonable conclusion on the evidence: that the Appellant was a superior to, and possessed the capacity to order, not only the communal policemen, but also the other perpetrators of the crimes.[394] The Appellant responds that the Trial Chamber correctly stated the law and that the factual findings and evidence cited by the Prosecution do not show when or how he gave orders to the other assailants.[395]

1. Alleged Error of Law

181. The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Prosecution that ordering does not require the existence of a formal superior-subordinate relationship. But the Trial Chamber did not misapprehend the law in this respect. It held:

> The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that the issue must be determined in light of the circumstances of the case. The authority of an influential person can derive from his social, economic, political or administrative standing, or from his abiding moral principles. Such authority may also be de jure or de facto. When people are confronted with an emergency or danger, they can naturally turn to such influential person, expecting him to provide a solution, assistance or take measures to deal with the crisis. When he speaks, everyone listens to him with keen interest; his advice commands overriding respect over all others and the people could easily see his actions as an encouragement. Such words and actions are not necessarily culpable, but can, where appropriate, amount to forms of participation in crime, such as "incitement" and "aiding and abetting" provided for in Article 6 (1) of the Statute. In certain circumstances, the authority of an influential person is enhanced by a lawful or unlawful element of coercion, such as declaring a state of emergency, the de facto exercise of an administrative function, or even the use of threat or unlawful force. The presence of a coercive element is such that it can determine the way the words of the influential person are perceived. Thus, mere words of exhortation or encouragement would be perceived as orders within the meaning of Article 6 (1) referred to above. Such a situation does not, ipso facto, lead to the conclusion that a formal superior- > subordinate relationship exists between the person giving the order and the person executing it. As a matter of fact, instructions given outside a purely informal context by a superior to his subordinate within a formal administrative hierarchy, be it de jure or de facto, would also be considered as an "order" within the meaning of Article 6 (1) of the Statute.

> The Chamber recalls its factual finding that Sylvestre Gacumbitsi had superior authority only over the communal police. The Prosecution failed to show that he also had superior authority over the conseillers, Interahamwe*, gendarmes or any other persons who participated in the attacks. Moreover, the Prosecution failed to demonstrate that, in the absence of a formal superior-subordinate relationship between the Accused and the population and attackers, the circumstances of the case suggest that the Accused's words of incitement were perceived as orders within the meaning of Article 6 (1) of the Statute*.[396]

182. Thus, after finding that no formal superior-subordinate relationship existed, the Trial Chamber proceeded to consider whether, under the circumstances of the case, the Appellant's statements nevertheless were perceived as orders. This is in accordance with the most recent judgements of the Appeals Chamber. In the Semanza Appeal Judgement, the Appeals Chamber explained:

> As recently clarified by the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Kordić and Čerkez, the actus reus of "ordering" is that a person in a position of authority instruct another person to commit an offence. No formal superior-subordinate relationship between the accused and the perpetrator is required. It is sufficient that there is proof of some position of authority on the part of the accused that would compel another to commit a crime in following the accused's order.[397]

The Appeals Chamber notes that this element of "ordering" is distinct from that required for liability under Article 6 (3) of the Statute, which does require a superior-subordinate relationship (albeit not a formal one but rather one characterized by effective control).[398] Ordering requires no such relationship – it requires merely authority to order, a more subjective criterion that depends on the circumstances and the perceptions of the listener.

183. Accordingly, this sub-ground of appeal is dismissed.

2. Alleged Error of Fact

184. The Trial Chamber found that, as bourgmestre, the Appellant was the highest authority and most influential person in the commune, with the power to take legal measures binding all residents.[399] His role in the genocide demonstrated his authority: he convened meetings with the conseillers; asked them to organize meetings to tell people to kill Tutsis, and verified that these meetings had been held; and directly instructed conseillers, other leaders, and the Hutu population to kill and rape Tutsis.[400] The Trial Chamber pointed to several instances in which the Appellant "instructed", "ordered", or "directed" the attackers in general, not just the communal policemen:

- On 14 April 1994, after giving a speech telling people "to arm themselves with machetes and [...] to hunt down all the Tutsi", the Appellant led assailants to Kigarama, where they engaged in an attack on Tutsis "carried out under [the Appellant's] personal supervision".[401]
- At Nyarubuye Parish on 15 April 1994, the Appellant "instructed the communal police and the Interahamwe to attack the refugees and prevent them from escaping", which they did.[402]

- On 16 April 1994, the Appellant "directed" an attack at Nyarubuye Parish, during which the assailants "finished off" survivors and looted the parish building.[403]
- On 17 April 1994, the Appellant ordered a group of attackers to kill fifteen Tutsi survivors of previous attacks at Nyarubuye Parish, which they immediately did.[404]

185. These findings made clear that the Appellant had authority over the attackers in question and that his orders had a direct and substantial effect on the commission of these crimes. In view of these facts, no reasonable trier of fact could find that the Appellant's words were not perceived as orders by the attackers in general, not just the communal police, to commit these crimes.

186. In Semanza, the Appeals Chamber found that the Trial Chamber had unreasonably failed to conclude that Laurent Semanza was liable for ordering a massacre.[405] This conclusion was based on the facts that Mr. Semanza had "directed attackers, including soldiers and Interahamwe, to kill Tutsi refugees who had been separated from the Hutu refugees"[406] and that the refugees "were then executed on the directions" of Mr. Semanza.[407] The Appeals Chamber concluded as follows:

> On these facts, no reasonable trier of fact could hold otherwise than that the attackers to whom the Appellant gave directions regarded him as speaking with authority. That authority created a superior-subordinate relationship which was real, however informal or temporary, and sufficient to find the Appellant responsible for ordering under Article 6 (1) of the Statute.[408]

The Trial Chamber in the Kamuhanda case reached a similar conclusion under similar facts, and the Appeals Chamber affirmed it.[409] The present case is materially indistinguishable from these cases.

187. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber erred in fact by not convicting the Appellant for ordering the crimes committed by all attackers, not just the communal policemen, at Nyarubuye Parish on 15, 16, and 17 April 1994 and on 14 April 1994 at Kigarama. This sub-ground of appeal is upheld.

F. SENTENCING (GROUND OF APPEAL 1)

188. The Prosecution contends that the Trial Chamber considered irrelevant factors in mitigation of sentence, and that it failed to take sufficient account of the gravity of the crimes and the degree of the Appellant's criminal responsibility.[410] In the Prosecution's view, there were no mitigating factors in this case that would justify imposing less than the maximum sentence of life imprisonment.[411] In response, the Appellant asserts that this ground of the Prosecution's appeal must fail in its entirety.[412]

1. The Appellant's Use of the Communal Police

189. The Prosecution contends that the Appellant's

[410] Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 21. The Prosecution argues that even if there are mitigating circumstances, this does not automatically entitle the Appellant to a "credit" in sentencing; life imprisonment thus might still be appropriate. See ibid., para. 38, citing Niyitegeka Appeal Judgement, para. 267 and Musema Appeal Judgement, para. 396.
[411] Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 21.
[412] Gacumbitsi Response, para. 100. Most of the Appellant's other arguments concerning sentencing (See ibid. paras. 35-47 and 96-98) are not responsive to the Prosecution's first ground of appeal and will not be considered here.

> "reliance on the police, armed, uniformed, and responsible for public security, to launch attacks during the widespread or systematic killings of Tutsi civilians, was a circumstance that should have been seen as extremely aggravating."[413]

190. The Trial Judgement does not expressly mention the Appellant's use of the police as an aggravating circumstance. However, it did not need to do so. It clearly described and gave weight to the Appellant's abuse of his powers as bourgmestre, of which his use of the police was merely a part.[414] The Trial Chamber stated:

> In the instant case, the Chamber finds that the status of the Accused in April 1994, as bourgmestre and the most important and influential personality of Rusumo commune, is an aggravating circumstance, insofar as the Accused participated in the crimes committed and was one of the ringleaders, in terms of planning the crimes, inciting their commission and sometimes driving attackers to the massacre sites. By so doing, he betrayed the trust that the people of his commune had placed in him. His active participation in the said crimes explains why he could not take measures to prevent or to punish the perpetrators, when he had the opportunity to do so. The seriousness of the crimes committed, particularly genocide, but also the particularly atrocious rapes that some victims suffered, further constitute aggravating circumstances.[415]

191. The Appeals Chamber finds no discernible error in the Trial Chamber's analysis.

2. The Appellant's Formal Status as a Superior

192. The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the fact that the Appellant's formal status as a superior was confined to the communal police because this ignored the fact that the Appellant instigated and aided and abetted other participants in the attacks.[416] In response, the Appellant denies that he had any authority over the soldiers and gendarmes who participated in the attacks.[417]

193. In its conclusion on aggravating and mitigating circumstances, the Trial Chamber stated:

> […] the Chamber is not persuaded that the Accused had superior responsibility over the perpetrators of the crimes committed in Rusumo commune in April 1994, with the exception of the communal policemen of Rusumo. Accordingly, the Chamber cannot take into account the aggravating circumstances submitted by the Prosecution.[418]

The Appeals Chamber recalls its holding above that the Trial Chamber erred in not holding the Appellant liable for ordering the crimes committed not only by the police but also by the "other perpetrators".[419] This error will be taken into account in the Appeals Chamber's consideration of the gravity of the crime for the purpose of determining the Appellant's sentence. In light of this determination, the Appeals Chamber does not consider it necessary to determine whether, had the Trial Chamber's holdings concerning the Appellant's authority over the other attackers been correct, it should nonetheless have considered the Appellant's authority as an aggravating factor in sentencing.

3. The Appellant's Prior Good Character, Accomplishments, and Relationships with Tutsis

194. The Prosecution submits next that the Trial Chamber accorded undue weight in mitigation to the Appellant's prior good character and accomplishments.[420] It argues that, if anything, these are aggravating factors, since, as the Trial Chamber found, the Appellant abused the trust he had earned through his prior good character and his position as bourgmestre.[421] Moreover, the Prosecution argues, the Trial Chamber erred in considering that the Appellant's good relationship with the Tutsis before April 1994 could serve as a mitigating factor in light of the horrific and discriminatory crimes the Appellant committed against the Tutsis between April and June 1994.[422]

195. The Appeals Chamber in the Semanza case considered similar arguments, as follows:

> 397. Trial Chambers of both International Tribunals have to a greater or lesser extent taken into account an accused's previous good character in mitigation, as well as accomplishments in functions previously held. For instance, in Niyitegeka the Trial Chamber considered in mitigation that the accused was a person of good character prior to the events "and that as a public figure and a member of the MDR, he advocated democracy and opposed ethnic discrimination." Similarly, in Ntakirutimana, the Trial Chamber found as a mitigating factor that Elizaphan Ntakirutimana was a "highly respected personality within the Seventh-Day Adventist Church of the West-Rwanda Field and beyond" and that he led an "exemplary life as a church leader." The Trial Chamber also noted Gérard Ntakirutimana's good character, and that he had testified that his return to Rwanda in 1993 was prompted by "his hope to contribute to development and to promote peace within his country." In the Obrenović Sentencing Judgement, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that "prior to the war Dragan Obrenović was a highly respected member of his community who did not discriminate against anybody."
> 398. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that it was within the Trial Chamber's discretion to take into account as mitigation in sentencing the Appellant's previous good character and accomplishments as bourgmestre. Precedent does not support the Prosecution's position that "being a successful academic, politician or administrator is irrelevant" as a mitigating factor in crimes of genocide and crimes against humanity. Notwithstanding, the Appeals Chamber notes that in most cases the accused's previous good character is accorded little weight in the final determination of determining the sentence. However, in this case, the Trial Chamber does not indicate how much weight, if any, it attaches to the Appellant's previous character and accomplishments. Thus, it is not clear that these mitigating factors unduly affected the sentence, given the nature of the offences. Consequently the Appeals Chamber finds no discernible error on the part of the Trial Chamber.
> 399. Finally, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in the Prosecution's argument that there exists a contradiction in the Trial Chamber's reasoning that the Appellant's position of influence was an aggravating factor, whereas his previous accomplishments as bourgmestre were considered in mitigation.[423]

196. These findings are directly transposable to the case at hand. There is no indication that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion, and the Prosecution's arguments in this respect are dismissed.

4. Alleged Irrelevant Factors in Mitigation

197. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber gave weight to irrelevant considerations, including the fact that the Appellant's family lives in Rwanda and has good relationships with its neighbors from all ethnic groups and the fact that the Appellant's active involvement in the events was of a short duration.[424] The Appellant responds that the fact that his family lives at peace with other groups in Rwanda shows that he did not commit any reprehensible act because, had he done so, his family would have been targeted in revenge.[425]

[422] Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 31. The Appellant responds that, to the contrary, the Trial Chamber erred by not giving sufficient weight to these mitigating circumstances. The Appeals Chamber notes its holding above that the Appellant has failed to allege any sentencing error in his own appeal, and will not consider these contentions here.

[424] Prosecution Appeal Brief, paras. 34-37.
[425] Gacumbitsi Response, paras. 77-79.

198. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in considering that the good relationships of the Appellant's family with its neighbors constituted a factor in mitigation. While there is no exhaustive list of what constitutes a mitigating circumstance,[426] the fact that the Appellant's family has good relationships with its neighbors of all ethnic groups cannot be considered to constitute an "individual circumstance" of the Appellant and should not be considered in sentencing.[427] Nevertheless, it is unclear what weight, if any, the Trial Chamber gave to this factor. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber will not increase the Appellant's sentence as a result of the Trial Chamber's error.

199. The Prosecution also submits that it is "hardly a mitigating factor that the [Appellant's] active involvement in the events was of short duration."[428] The Trial Chamber, however, did not consider the short duration of the Appellant's involvement to be a mitigating factor. Rather, the Trial Chamber merely noted that the duration of the Appellant's involvement was not so long that it might constitute an aggravating factor.[429] The Appeals Chamber sees no error in this observation.

5. Gravity of the Crimes and Degree of Criminal Culpability

200. The Prosecution contends that the Trial Chamber committed an error by failing to impose a sentence reflecting the gravity of the crimes and of the Appellant's degree of criminal culpability.[430] It submits that the Trial Chamber should have considered the Appellant as one of the most serious offenders, deserving the highest penalty available at the Tribunal.[431]

201. The Trial Chamber properly stated the legal principles on which the Prosecution relies. After noting that the crimes committed were very serious,[432] it stated that "the penalty should, first and foremost, be commensurate with the gravity of the offence" and that "[s]econdary or indirect forms of participation are generally punished with a less severe sentence."[433]

202. The Prosecution argues, however, that the Trial Chamber failed to apply these principles properly because the sentence it imposed was inconsistent with those issued in comparable cases.[434] It contends that the correct sentence for extermination as a crime against humanity, especially when combined with other serious offences including rape, is life imprisonment.[435] And for genocide, it claims, the principle that the default punishment is life imprisonment is clearly established:

> In addition to the [Appellant], the ICTR has, to date, found eighteen people guilty of crimes under Article 2 of the Statute. Out of these eighteen, eleven have been sentenced to imprisonment for the remainder of their lives. In two of the remaining cases, Ruzindana and Gérard Ntakirutimana, the Tribunal passed a sentence of 25 years' imprisonment. In only five instances, where the accused was found guilty of genocide, have sentences of less than 25 years' imprisonment been imposed. These include the sentences of Semanza, who received 15 years for complicity in genocide, Imanishimwe, who was sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment for genocide, and Elizaphan Ntakirutimana, who was sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment for genocide. The other two cases are Omar Serushago, who received 15 years' imprisonment, and Ruggiu, who received 12 years' imprisonment for incitement to commit genocide, following their guilty pleas.[436]

It further notes that, contrary to the present case, exceptional circumstances in mitigation were found in the cases of Omar Serushago and Georges Ruggiu in that they both pleaded guilty, were found to have co-operated substantially with the Prosecutor, and had expressed genuine remorse for their participation in the offences.[437] Similarly, Élizaphan Ntakirutimana received only ten years of imprisonment because of mitigating factors including his advanced age and fragile health.[438]

203. In response, the Appellant refers to the Penal Code of Rwanda, which he submits provides that no sentence for a fixed term shall be longer than twenty years or thirty years in case of several offences.[439] The Appellant also refers to the Semanza Trial Judgement, where the Trial Chamber stated that it was not convinced that the accused in that case deserved life imprisonment.[440] The Appellant further argues that the comparative analysis engaged in by the Prosecution is not helpful because the differences between the various cases are more important than the similarities and because the sentence must be individualized.[441]

204. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that, although the Trial Chamber correctly noted that the sentence should first and foremost be commensurate with the gravity of the offences and the degree of liability of the convicted person, it then disregarded these principles in imposing a sentence of only thirty years' imprisonment on the Appellant. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Appellant played a central role in planning, instigating, ordering, committing, and aiding and abetting genocide and extermination in his commune of Rusumo, where thousands of Tutsis were killed or seriously harmed.[442] The Trial Chamber also found the Appellant guilty of instigating rape as a crime against humanity,[443] noting that he had exhibited particular sadism in specifying that where victims resisted, they should be killed in an atrocious manner.[444] The Appellant was thus convicted of extremely serious offences. Moreover, unlike in most of the other cases in which those convicted for genocide have received less than a life sentence, there were no especially significant mitigating circumstances here.[445] Instead, the Appellant was a primary player, a leader in the commune who used his power to bring about the brutal massacre and rape of thousands.

205. The Appeals Chamber is, as noted above, fully cognizant of the margin of discretion to which Trial Chambers are entitled in sentencing. This discretion is not, however, unlimited. It is the Appeals Chamber's

Since the Prosecution filed its Appeal Brief, the Appeals Chamber has rendered Judgements in the Ntakirutimana, Semanza, Kajelijeli, and Kamuhanda cases. It affirmed the sentences of both appellants in the Ntakirutimana case. Ntakirutimana Appeal Judgement, Disposition. In the Semanza Appeal Judgement (See Disposition), the Appeals Chamber, inter alia, entered a new conviction for genocide, and increased the sentence to a total of thirty-five years (twenty-five of which were for genocide); this sentence reflected a reduction the Appeals Chamber imposed for violations of Mr. Semanza's pre-trial rights. In the Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement (See para. 325), the Appeals Chamber maintained the convictions for genocide and extermination (except insofar as they were also based on superior responsibility), but reduced the sentence from life imprisonment to forty-five years' imprisonment because it found that Mr. Kajelijeli's fundamental rights were seriously violated during his arrest and detention. In the Kamuhanda Appeal Judgement (See para. 365), the Appeals Chamber, inter alia, affirmed the convictions for genocide and extermination and affirmed the life imprisonment sentences imposed by the Trial Chamber.

prerogative to substitute a new sentence when the one given by the Trial Chamber simply cannot be reconciled with the principles governing sentencing at the Tribunal. This is such a case. The Appeals Chamber concludes that in light of the massive nature of the crimes and the Appellant's leading role in them, as well as the relative insignificance of the purported mitigating factors, the Trial Chamber ventured outside its scope of discretion by imposing a sentence of only thirty years' imprisonment. The Appeals Chamber therefore upholds this sub-ground of the Prosecution's appeal.

6. Implications of the Appeals Chamber's Findings on the Sentence

206. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber has held that the Appellant was responsible for ordering the acts of genocide, extermination, murder, and rape committed not only by the communal police, but also by the other perpetrators who participated in the attacks at Nyarubuye Parish and at Kigarama.[446] Additionally, the Appeals Chamber has found by majority, Judge Güney and Judge Meron dissenting, that the Appellant aided and abetted the murders of two of his Tutsi tenants, Marie and Béatrice, whom he expelled from their home and who were killed later that night. Consequently, it will enter a new conviction for murder as a crime against humanity under Count 4 of the Indictment.[447] The Appeals Chamber has also found that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to give proper weight to the gravity of the crimes committed by the Appellant and to his central role in those crimes. The Appeals Chamber considers that the maximum sentence is warranted in the Appellant's case and that there are no significant mitigating circumstances that would justify imposing a lesser sentence than imprisonment for the remainder of his life.

V. SEPARATE OPINION OF JUDGE SHAHABUDDEEN

A. Preliminary

1. Mr. Murefu was an old man; he was a teacher. He was also a Tutsi. At the beginning of these sad happenings, he found himself a refugee among fellow Tutsi refugees; they had hurried to a church in search of protection from a looming peril to life and limb. Mr. Murefu made a desperate attempt to avert the threatened calamity; he made a protest to the appellant, a Hutu holding high office in the community. Mr. Murefu asked why the Tutsis were being killed. The appellant said he had no answer to give, because "the Tutsi hour had come". He took a machete from an Interahamwe and slew Mr. Murefu, striking him on the neck.[1] Then events picked up speed; an attacking crowd was being led by the appellant; thousands of Tutsis were killed. But, citing only one of these killings, namely, that of Mr. Murefu, the Trial Chamber convicted the appellant of "committing" genocide.

2. The appellant appeals. The Appeals Chamber dismisses the appeal. It gives two grounds for its decision. First, it holds that, there being no mention in the indictment of the slaying by the appellant of Mr. Murefu, this circumstance constituted a defect in the indictment which precluded evidence of the slaying from being given. However, it also holds that the defect was cured by the prosecution's subsequent submissions. Evidence of the slaying could therefore be given; and such evidence established that the appellant "committed" genocide. Second, the Appeals Chamber holds that the appellant's other actions as pleaded in the indictment and proven at trial, including his personal supervision of the massacre of refugees sheltering at the church, constituted "committing" genocide, even apart from the killing of Mr. Murefu.

3. Though the dismissal of the appeal is unanimous, these two grounds for the dismissal are supported by different majorities. I form part of the majority in both cases. But, in part B I explain that I would hold, in the alternative, that the indictment was not defective with respect to the killing of Mr. Murefu and that there was therefore nothing to be cured. In part E, I argue that, in any event, the appellant should have been convicted for committing genocide through participation in a joint criminal enterprise. As to both of these points, the Appeals Chamber holds the indictment to be defective. In so doing, in my respectful view, it imposes too formulaic a set of pleading requirements on the prosecution.

4. Also, I propose to consider some other issues on which judicial opinion is divided. In part C, I shall deal with the correctness of the first holding mentioned above, concerning "curing", that is to say, assuming that it has to be dealt with. In part D, I shall deal with the correctness of the second holding mentioned above, concerning the appellant's other actions at the genocide. Turning to an appeal by the prosecution, I shall deal in part F with the correctness of a holding which the Appeals Chamber makes on aiding and abetting.

5. My examination of the foregoing leads me to support the conclusion reached by the Appeals Chamber. I disagree with some of its findings, but the disagreement in no way impairs that support. On the contrary, I consider that the judgement of the Appeals Chamber could be strengthened in the areas in which I disagree. Some repetition will be inevitable, but the endeavour will be to keep duplication to a minimum.

B. The indictment was not defective as it stood

6. The appellant did not raise any question that he did not understand that the indictment charged him with "committing" genocide; no such issue is before the court. The question before the court is whether, in proof of "committing" genocide, the prosecution is entitled to adduce evidence that the appellant killed Mr. Murefu,[2] regard being had to the circumstance that that killing is not mentioned in the indictment. The Appeals Chamber answers in the negative. I am of the opposite view.

7. With respect, it appears to me that the major difficulty with the Appeals Chamber's answer is that it does not adequately distinguish between admissibility of evidence of the killing of Mr. Murefu to prove murder and admissibility of that evidence to prove genocide. Although murder, as a crime against humanity, must be committed pursuant to an attack against a civilian population, it does not require proof of intent to destroy a protected group. It consists, fundamentally, of the killing of individuals. Accordingly, the deaths of the individual victims are elements of the crime and have to be referred to in the indictment. Because the killing of Mr. Murefu was not mentioned in the indictment for murder, evidence of it was correctly excluded by the Trial Chamber on the charge for that crime.[3]

8. By contrast, the essence of the crime of genocide is an intent to destroy a protected group.[4] The persons in the group may be legion. It is settled jurisprudence that, in the case of a mass killing, individual victims do not have to be specifically referred to in the indictment. If the indictment does refer to them, it is only by way of illustration of the crime; there may be hundreds of illustrations. The Appeals Chamber indeed embraces a similar logic when, examining the extermination count, it says that, "[a]though" the indictment "lists certain specific victims, this is only by way of example;"[5] failure to give evidence of their deaths did not invalidate the charge.

[2] As to the question whether it is enough to rely on one killing to prove genocide, it has been suggested that "[t]he reference to 'members of the group' as victims of a genocidal act in paragraph (a) of Article 2 of the Genocide Convention means that the act itself must involve the killing of at least two members of the group." Khan, Dixon and Fulford (eds.), Archbold: International Criminal Courts: Practice, Procedure and Evidence, 2nd ed. (2005), p. 676, paras. 13-32. But that Seems at variance with the Semanza Trial Judgement, para 316, in which the Trial Chamber observed that "there is no numeric threshold of victims necessary to establish genocide". Schabas expresses the view that "from a grammatical standpoint, the phrase can just as easily apply to a single act of killing" and that "[c]learly, the quantitative dimension, that genocide involves the intentional destruction of a group 'in whole or in part,' belongs to the mental and not the material element…" William A. Schabas, Genocide in International Law (Cambridge, 2000), p. 158. The view that a single killing could suffice if the other conditions are met would Seem to accord with the thinking of the Appeals Chamber in this case.

[3] Trial Judgement, paras. 176, 317-320.

[4] See, inter alia, Statute, art. 2 (2) (referring to "intent to destroy" a "group, as such"); ibid. para. (a) (referring to "killing members of the group").

[5] Judgement of the Appeals Chamber, para. 89.

9. What must be borne in mind is the distinction between the material facts necessary to establish an offence and the evidence adduced to prove those material facts.[6] The material facts must be pleaded, the evidence need not.[7] When an indictment alleges genocide, proof of any one killing is not a material fact as it would be in a case of murder; it is evidence of a material fact, namely, that the intent of the accused was the destruction of a group, as a group. Each individual killing does not have to be specifically referred to in the indictment.

10. In sum, it was not necessary to mention the killing of Mr. Murefu in the count of the indictment relating to genocide as if the appellant was being charged in that count with murdering him. The Trial Chamber did not err in admitting the evidence of his death on the charge for genocide though excluding it on the charge for murder. The Appeals Chamber is of a different view.[8] I respectfully disagree with it.

C. If there was any defect in the indictment concerning Mr Murefu, it was cured so as to make evidence of his killing admissible

11. Thus far, I have proceeded on the basis that the killing of Mr Murefu was evidence, not a material fact, and accordingly was not required to be pleaded in the indictment under the normal rules which say that matters of evidence do not have to be pleaded. But there could be an argument that, though it related to evidence, the killing of Mr Murefu had to be referred to in the indictment. The argument is as follows:

12. Fairness is a wide and fundamental rule; it goes beyond the normal rules regulating the contents of an indictment; it requires that the accused be put in a position to investigate a specific incident from the beginning of the case even if it relates to evidence and not to a material fact. The killing of Mr Murefu was a specific incident; moreover, it was the foundation of the Trial Chamber's conclusion as to guilt. Therefore, even if the killing concerned evidence, it had to be referred to in the indictment. Not having been so referred to, the defence did not have due notice of it and accordingly the prosecution could not adduce evidence of it.

13. It is not necessary to express an opinion on the validity of that argument. Assuming that for any reason the indictment was defective for not mentioning the killing of Mr Murefu, any such defect was properly cured.

14. The prosecution gave the defence a copy of the written statement of witness TAQ[9], dated 29 November 2000; that statement, though otherwise redacted, mentioned the killing of Mr. Murefu by the appellant. The prosecution said that the redacted statement was given to the defence on 14 June 2001. That would have been six days before 20 June 2001 when the appellant was arrested. But there was no argument about the precise date, and at any rate no contention that it was not provided in advance of the trial, which began nearly two years later. Additionally, on the eve of the trial, a summary of the anticipated evidence of witness TAQ was annexed to the Pre-Trial Brief of the prosecution which was filed on 16 May 2003.[10] The summary specifically stated that it related to paragraphs of the indictment (4, 15, 16 and 17) which concerned genocide. And although it did not specify a mode of liability, the Appeals Chamber's cases do not suggest that it needed to do so, nor was there any lack of clarity in any event. It is obvious that to physically kill a man because he is Tutsi, in connection with an ongoing genocidal campaign, is to "commit" genocide; it is not mere instigation or evidence of mens rea.

15. Thus, witness TAQ was going to be asked to testify on the killing of Mr. Murefu as part of the case for the prosecution, inter alia, on genocide, and the accused was told that before 28 July 2003 when the case began. When the evidence was eventually given – by both witness TAQ and witness TAO – defence counsel naturally did not object on the ground that it exceeded the scope of the indictment in that it related to genocide. This lack of objection is significant because it must have been apparent to defence counsel that the evidence of the killing of Mr. Murefu was inextricably bound up with the evidence of the various actions which went to constitute genocide.[11]

16. The testimony of witness TAO included this statement by him:

> When they started to sing, Gacumbitsi said out aloud – he asked the Hutu that were there to move away from the Tutsi, because the Tutsis' hour had come, and the Interahamwe started to sing, "Let's exterminate them".[12]

This showed that evidence was being given in proof of an intent to commit genocide. Witness TAO also testified that, inter alia, the appellant "took a machete from the hands of someone standing next to him and cut – slashed at one of the elderly persons who was there, and another elderly person who was also cut up. And he told the policemen, 'Open fire,' and they opened fire. And those who had machetes started to slash and cut up their victims".[13] Other evidence of this kind was given.[14] The evidence of witness TAQ[15] showed that Mr. Murefu had asked the appellant: "What have the Tutsis done? Why are they being killed?"[16] Also, according to witness TAQ, three persons asked the appellant, "You as a responsable, the Tutsis are being killed. Why are they being treated in this manner? What did they do to deserve this?"[17] The Trial Chamber considered the evidence of witnesses TAQ and TAO to be credible.[18]

17. Defence counsel cross-examined witnesses TAQ and TAO extensively but did not object to the fact that their evidence (concerning the killing of Mr. Murefu, as so given) went outside of murder and covered matters relating to genocide.[19] An accused is expected to object at the time evidence exceeding the scope of the indictment is introduced at trial.[20] In a no-case submission, defence counsel objected to the admissibility of the evidence relating to the killing of Mr. Murefu but only in relation to murder. The answer of the prosecution was that it did "not seek a conviction for murder on these facts… At the close of trial the Prosecutor will be relying on these murders as evidence in support of other charges…". The Appeals Chamber correctly points out that, in his "briefing", the appellant "repeatedly" brought to the attention of the Trial Chamber the fact that Mr. Murefu's death had not been mentioned in the indictment, but, as the Appeals Chamber also recognises, this was "in the context of murder alone and not genocide".[21] The inference is warranted that the appellant did not object to admissibility of the evidence of the killing of Mr. Murefu in relation to genocide because he recognised that the defence had been given due notice that witness TAQ's evidence of Mr. Murefu's killing would be part of the evidence of genocide.

18. In his "Closing Arguments", dated 9 February 2004, the appellant contended that the evidence relating to the killing of Mr Murefu was "mentioned for the first time in court".[22] That concerned murder. If it concerned genocide, it did not tell the whole story; it was too weak to be worthy of serious consideration. The defence had advance notice that the evidence would be given, and that it concerned genocide.

19. The summary provided by the prosecution to the defence in this case was materially indistinguishable from the summary of witness testimony which was provided to the defence in Naletilić and Martinović and which the Appeals Chamber found sufficient to cure a defect in the indictment in that case.[23]

It bears noting that, while with respect to an incident involving the beating of a man called "the Professor", the information provided by the Chart of Witnesses in the Naletilić and Martinović case was complemented by a reference to that incident in the Prosecution's Opening Statement, this was not the case with respect to another incident involving the unlawful transfer of prisoners, described at paragraphs 62 through 65 of the Appeals Judgement in that

The holding in that case was correct, and the Appeals Chamber is right to follow it here. In my opinion, any vagueness in the indictment was sufficiently cured. Evidence that the appellant killed Mr Murefu was properly admitted on the genocide charge. I respectfully agree with the Appeals Chamber in concluding to this effect.

D. The Trial Chamber made other findings of fact which showed that the appellant committed genocide

20. I agree with the Appeals Chamber that the findings made by the Trial Chamber as to the appellant's other conduct showed that he "committed" genocide. Apart from the killing of Mr Murefu, it is useful to recall briefly just what the appellant did.

21. The Trial Chamber found, generally, that the appellant was not at any remove from the crime scene; he was physically present at the action. Specifically, it found that, being there, he "gave a signal for the massacres to commence"[24] and "ordered Hutu refugees to separate themselves from the Tutsi"[25] – a step indicating an intention to commit the genocide which immediately followed. Indeed, as the Trial Chamber found, he "directed"[26] the attacks, he "personally took part"[27] in them, he "led attacks against Tutsi civilians by example"[28], he "participated in the attack on Nyarubuye Parish on 15 and 16 April 1994"[29], and he "played a leading role in conducting and, especially, supervising the attack"[30].

22. A person who engaged in the attacks in those ways would plainly be guilty of "committing" genocide. Justice would not be served by holding that this view does not apply to the appellant as the principal actor; it would be a misunderstanding and misapplication of the law to say that, on those findings of fact made by the Trial Chamber, he was guilty of "ordering" or "instigating" but not of "committing" genocide. He not only "ordered" or "instigated" but actually participated in the "commission" of the crime. Those acts were before the Appeals Chamber and both sides addressed them.

23. Questions have been raised on the Trial Chamber's observation that "'[c]ommitting' refers generally to the direct and physical perpetration of the crime by the offender himself."[31] Two glosses may be put on the Trial Chamber's observation.

24. First, attention is invited to the word "generally" in the Trial Chamber's statement. It is accepted that the statement does not deny that there can be a "committing" where the accused acts through a joint criminal enterprise. However, there are not two rules, but one; it is not the position that non-JCE cases are governed by the "direct and physical perpetration" rule and JCE cases by another rule which, mysteriously, exempts them from the application of the "direct and physical perpetration" rule. The matter always turns on whether there is "direct and physical perpetration". What happens is that, in the circumstances of a case of JCE, there is a "direct and physical perpetration" even though the accused is not in personal contact with the victim: the JCE is his instrument. But I see no reason why the rationale of that view has to be limited to that situation. Why, for example, can there not be "direct and physical perpetration" where the accused perpetrates his crime through the instrumentality of another, even though no JCE is involved and even though there is no personal contact between the accused and the victim? To say that in such a case the proper charge is one of "ordering" and not one of "committing" imposes too great a strain on the legal apparatus. That may be case. With respect to the latter incident, the ICTY Appeals Chamber specifically held that the Opening Statement and other submissions did not provide information that remedied the defect in the indictment, and that it was therefore necessary to rely on "the information in the Prosecution Chart of Witnesses alone". Ibid., para. 63. Finally, I also note that the Chart of Witnesses in Naletilić and Martinović did not specify which mode of liability was being pleaded.

defensible in some circumstances but not in all; it depends on the immediacy of the relationship between the accused and the result of his action. In any event, it is to be observed that in this case the Trial Chamber found that the appellant "personally took part"[32] in the attacks and in other ways directly participated in them. Why that should give difficulty in finding that he engaged in the "direct and physical perpetration" of the crime of genocide resulting from the attacks is not clear to me.

25. Second, I agree with the Appeals Chamber that proof of personal killing is not required to show "the direct and physical perpetration of the crime by the offender himself."[33] To hold the contrary will be too narrow. Even in relation to a charge of genocide by "killing members of the group", the "direct and physical perpetration" test can be fulfilled even if it is not proved that the appellant himself killed anyone.

26. A more important question is whether the Appeals Chamber may (on the Trial Chamber's findings of the appellant's participation in respects other than the killing of Mr Murefu) make a determination that the appellant committed genocide in view of the fact that the Trial Chamber did not make a similar determination on those findings. In holding in paragraph 285 of its judgement that the appellant committed genocide, the Trial Chamber cited only the killing of Mr. Murefu, stating that the "Trial Chamber therefore finds that [the appellant] committed genocide…". But a microscopic reading of the Trial Chamber's judgement would not be appropriate. The Appeals Chamber has previously held that a conclusion of guilt would be upheld where other inferences sustaining guilt would reasonably have been drawn at trial.[34] In this case, the factual findings of the Trial Chamber require the Appeals Chamber to determine that the appellant was guilty of committing genocide.

27. The last question is this: if the Appeals Chamber were so to determine, would there be a breach of the requirement for the Trial Chamber to give reasons? The Trial Chamber gave only one reason for holding that the appellant committed genocide, namely, the killing of Mr Murefu. Can it be argued that an additional reason cannot now be given? It seems necessary to bear in mind that "[a]n appeal lies from the judgment, not the reasons for judgment".[35] True, the Trial Chamber did not give the additional reason. But, where the additional reason is apparent from the record, that it was not previously given is not relevant; reliance on it does not cause the appellant prejudice. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber is right to affirm the Trial Chamber's judgement that the appellant committed genocide on the basis of his conduct other than in respect of the killing of Mr Murefu.

E. In any event, the appellant was responsible for genocide through group criminality

1. Joint Criminal Enterprise

28. Evidence of the appellant's responsibility for genocide under joint criminal enterprise ("JCE") was admissible if JCE was pleaded in the indictment so as to give the appellant fair notice of the basis on which he was charged. The Trial Chamber found that it "was not pleaded clearly enough to allow the Accused to defend himself adequately,"[36] and the Appeals Chamber has in substance upheld that finding.[37] I respectfully disagree.

29. JCE is not mentioned specifically in the indictment. However, I agree with the Appeals Chamber that the absence of the words "joint criminal enterprise" from the indictment "does not in and of itself indicate a defect. … It is possible that other phrasings might effectively convey the same concept. The question is not whether particular words have been used, but whether an accused has been meaningfully 'informed of the nature of the charges' so as to be able to prepare an effective defence."[38] To rely on JCE, an indictment need not plead the doctrine ipsissima verba if the intention is apparent.

30. In Tadić,[39] no special formulae were used; the indictment simply presented the facts necessary to make out a case under the theory. It was not complained that this was insufficient; in my view it was sufficient. An indictment corresponding in substance to the requirements of JCE would have been valid if filed before the elements of the doctrine were assembled by the Appeals Chamber in Tadić under the rubric "joint criminal enterprise"; such an indictment would be valid if filed thereafter even though the indictment made no reference to those terms.

31. So far as formulae are concerned, two phrases come to mind: "acting in concert with others" and "common purpose" (or its close equivalents, such as "common scheme, strategy, or plan"). As to "acting in concert with others", in Brđanin and Talić[40] the Trial Chamber pointed out that the problem in that case was that the accused were charged "individually or in concert in the operations relating to the conduct of the hostilities …".[41] In the opinion of the Trial Chamber, that phrase could mean "that each of the accused acted individually and in concert with each other ..."[42]. The Trial Chamber implied that a different consequence would have followed if the indictment had "pleaded that the two accused had acted 'in concert with others'".[43] In the instant case, paragraph 25 of the indictment expressly speaks of the appellant as "acting in concert with others".

32. As to "common purpose", for the reasons given, in Brđanin and Talić the Trial Chamber held that the phrase "individually or in concert" was ambiguous, but it stated that if "the prosecution seeks to rely upon the 'accomplice' liability of acting in concert as part of a common purpose or design, or as part of a common criminal enterprise, held by the Appeals Chamber to fall within Article 7 (1), then this should be made clear."[44] This shows that the Trial Chamber considered that the words "acting in concert as part of a common purpose or design", as opposed to "acting in concert" only, would have been sufficiently clear.

33. I do not propose to go through the other cases seriatim. My conclusion from a review of them is that it is enough if the indictment alleges in substance that the accused was "acting in concert with others" in pursuit of a "common purpose". Both expressions, or their equivalents,[45] were used in this case. Nothing more would appear to be required to plead a joint criminal enterprise. If any cases are really to the contrary, they cannot be correct.

34. In fact, the Appeals Chamber acknowledges that the "language [used in paragraph 25 of the indictment in this case] is similar to that employed in Tadić and seems to encompass the critical elements of a JCE charge".[46] However, the Appeals Chamber finds that the meaning of that paragraph was rendered confusing by the later statement in that paragraph that the appellant participated in the action "by his own affirmative acts or through persons he assisted or by his subordinates with his knowledge and consent".[47]

[38] Ibid., para. 165, footnotes omitted. Prosecuting counsel Ms Onsea obviously understood the jurisprudence to be requiring the indictment to "mention joint criminal enterprise as a term" when she said, "[W]e acknowledge that the indictment, as such, is vague in light of recent jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber in that it does not plead JCE, as such…". [47] Ibid.

With respect, I do not find this statement confusing at all. It merely pleads, as required by the Appeals Chamber's jurisprudence, the "nature of [the appellant's] participation in the enterprise."[48] It does not obscure the plain meaning of the allegation in the indictment that the appellant acted "in concert with others" in support of a "common scheme, strategy or plan to exterminate the Tutsi".

35. As to the category of JCE on which the prosecution intended to rely, it is true that the indictment did not expressly indicate this as is seemingly required by the Appeals Chamber in Kvočka.[49] But that case does not exclude statements by implication, and I do not consider that this elementary rule is displaced by general propositions of the law applicable to indictments, as set out in that case. The test remains, as the Appeals Chamber says, "whether an accused has been meaningfully 'informed of the nature of the charges' so as to be able to prepare an effective defence."[50] Here the material facts presented in the indictment naturally indicated the basic or first category of JCE.[51] The prosecution sought to hold the appellant responsible for crimes perpetrated by a group of which he was a member, that crime being within a purpose common to all members of the group. The aim of the prosecution was fully within the first category of JCE. The prosecution did not seek to impose liability for crimes that, though foreseeable, were beyond the group's objective, as permitted by the third category of JCE; nor did the allegations fall into the second category of an ongoing "system" of ill-treatment. So it must have been apparent to the appellant that the first category was intended. In these circumstances, to assert that it was the duty of the prosecution to state the exact category into which the case fell looks procrustean in practice and excessive in law.

36. As to the necessary material facts to support the case being brought under the first category of JCE, the indictment included a reference to "the purpose of the enterprise, the identity of the participants, and the nature of the accused's participation in the enterprise".[52] All three of these matters were pleaded. First, the common criminal purpose is specified in paragraph 25 of the indictment as being to "exterminate the Tutsis".[53] Second, the other participants in the JCE are identified in paragraph 22 of the indictment as "local administrative official [sic] in Kibungo préfecture, including bourgmestres and conseillers de secteur".[54] Third, as noted above, paragraph 25 of the indictment states the nature of the appellant's participation; this was further detailed in a number of other paragraphs of the indictment.[55]

37. As to the state of the law in the ICTR, it is recognised that joint criminal enterprise was not applied in this Tribunal until after its elucidation by the ICTY Appeals Chamber. For some time now, however, the phrasing used in paragraphs 22 and 25 of the indictment has had a firm foundation in the jurisprudence of the ICTR.[56] It could not be argued that one of the central issues addressed in the Tadić Appeal Judgement – the first judgement of the ICTY Appeals Chamber on an appeal from a conviction – could have escaped the notice of reasonably diligent defence counsel in an ICTR case,[57] especially given that the two Appeals Chambers have the same judges.

38. The findings of the Trial Chamber are sufficient to establish the appellant's liability under the first category of JCE. These findings have been discussed in other sections of the Appeals Chamber's judgement and need not be reiterated here. It suffices to say that the appellant clearly joined with others (including conseillers and other local officials) in a joint criminal enterprise to destroy the Tutsi population in Rusumo Commune; numerous atrocities, including mass killings and rapes, were perpetrated in pursuit of that common criminal purpose. Thousands died – that was the appellant's object.

39. In short, the indictment pleaded JCE. The Appeals Chamber incorrectly held that it did not. It was open to the Trial Chamber to find that, even if the appellant did not personally commit genocide, he did so through JCE. On the evidence, it would have found so.

40. Now for some concluding remarks. A suggestion that the doctrine of JCE was created by Tadić is not correct. In Tadić the Appeals Chamber was putting forward a judicial construct developed out of its analysis of scattered principles of law gathered together for the purpose of administering international criminal law. The expression "joint criminal enterprise" can be found in those principles;[58] the Appeals Chamber was not proposing any modification of those principles. Courts frequently carry out such an exercise for the better appreciation of what they are doing; especially may this be done where an international criminal court feels called upon to declare the basis on which it is proceeding in a relatively unexplored field of litigation.

41. Thus, the mission which the Appeals Chamber set itself in Tadić was to identify the elements of individual criminal responsibility for a crime collectively perpetrated, as they were to be gathered from existing law; the Chamber was careful to say that "[t]o identify these elements one must turn to customary international law,"[59] several cases being examined, including some from international criminal adjudication. The Appeals Chamber did not see its task as extending to the invention of a new head of liability: it is a misapprehension to suggest otherwise. What is in issue is not "JCE" as such, but the law on which it is based. It is understandable that there is a preference for another legal basis, but it is prudent to be wary of a "doctrinal disposition to come out differently"[60]. A preference for another doctrine is not the same as asserting that there is no legal basis for the doctrine on which the Tribunal now acts.

2. Co-perpetratorship

42. When another legal basis is suggested, it has however to be looked at carefully. Apart from JCE, there is at least one other theory of "commission". It is appropriate for an international criminal tribunal to take respectful notice of it if its judges, who are from various national jurisdictions, are to identify a jurisprudence which belongs to all. The theory[61] is that of co-perpetratorship (including indirect perpetratorship[62]). It is subscribed to by several countries. Attention to it has been invited by my distinguished colleague Judge Schomburg. Acknowledging my deficiencies in grasping its elements, the theory seems to be as follows.

43. In Tadić, the ICTY Appeals Chamber said that "the foundation of criminal responsibility is the principle of personal culpability."[63] In contemporary times, that seems to be a universally accepted principle. To respect the principle, it is necessary in every case to establish that the accused himself did the crime. The obvious difficulty in conforming to that requirement in the case of a group crime which the accused member of the group himself did not personally accomplish requires proof of a link between the accused and the perpetration of the crime so as to show that the crime could not have been committed without his participation.

[62] See the Politbüro case (BGHSt, 40, pp. 236ff, 26 July 1974), which concerned the criminal responsibility of East German high political officials for the killings of escaping citizens, and Videla and others, National Appeals Court (Criminal Division) for the Federal District of Buenos Aires, Docket N°13, 9 December 1985, which concerned the criminal responsibility of Argentine leaders for "disappearances". Both cases involved accused who were "behind the scenes".
[63] Tadić Appeal Judgement, para. 186.

44. However, "in general, there is no specific legal requirement that the accused make a substantial contribution to [a] joint criminal enterprise."[64] Exceptionally such a requirement may exist, but only "to determine whether [the accused] participated in the joint criminal enterprise."[65] It is therefore apparent that, in a JCE, "the Prosecutor need not demonstrate that the accused's participation is a sine qua non, without which the crimes could or would not have been committed."[66] In other words, the accused could "participate" in a JCE without bearing a substantial individual link to the perpetration of the actual crime. But to visit him with individual criminal responsibility in such a case is to impute to him the criminality of the member who in fact committed the crime. The culpability of the accused would be derived, not personal;[67] that is not the same as saying that he should only be culpable for what he himself has done, which is the leading principle of individual criminal responsibility.

45. The object of co-perpetratorship theory is to establish a juridical link which would make the accused liable for the crime on the basis that he had personally committed it. The link rests on the view that he would personally have "committed" the crime if it could only have been committed on fulfilment by him of his assigned role in the group; on that reasoning, it could be said that he was in "control" of the commission of the crime even though the actual crime was in fact perpetrated by another member or other members of the group. He could therefore be said to be personally linked to the commission of the crime.

46. The theory was considered by several jurists, including Claus Roxin. Speaking of "the bank robber with the gun or the perpetrator of the murder holding the victim", he said:

> The co-perpetrator can achieve nothing on his own: the intimidation of the bank employees and the seizing of the victim do not ensure success. The plan only "works" if the accomplice works with the other person. That other person is just as helpless however; if the bank employees are not fully controlled, he will be arrested; and if no one seizes the victim, he will defend himself or flee. Both are therefore in the same position: they can only realize their plan in so far as they act together, but each individually can ruin the whole plan if he does not carry out his part. To this extent he is in control of the act.[68]

Thus, by carrying out his part of the bargain, a party exercises "control" over the act visualised by the group plan. He could prevent the act, as planned, from being realised. This establishes a direct link between him and the actual commission of the crime; he could therefore be made personally culpable for it.

47. Comparing co-perpetratorship with JCE, I reached the conclusion two years ago that, in the case of the latter, the "focus is not on whether [the accused] had power to prevent [his colleagues] from acting as they did; the focus is on whether, even if he could not prevent them from acting as they did, he could have withheld his will and thereby prevented their act from being regarded as having been done pursuant to his own will also".[69] That is how the matter still appears to me: "control" is not an element of JCE, but it seems arguable that, apart from his participation in the work of the group, the will of the accused, which is highlighted in JCE, is ultimately involved in any imaginable system of law on the subject of individual responsibility for group criminality and can therefore serve as the lowest common denominator of the law adopted by the Tribunal. However, co-perpetratorship theory merits careful evaluation; there is much force in the logic of its underlying principles. If the matter were res integra, I would, for my part, give renewed consideration to it. But it seems to me that, as a matter of judicial discipline, the following reasons bar inquiry by this Tribunal.

48. On 15 July 1999 the ICTY Appeals Chamber, in Tadić,[70] referred to "the notion of co-perpetratorship" but did not adopt it. The notion was not chosen in the recent case of Stakić[71] decided by the ICTY Appeals Chamber on 22 March 2006 – just four months ago. The ICTY Appeals Chamber then unanimously affirmed its preference for JCE over the co-perpetratorship mode of liability, finding that the former was "firmly established in customary international law",[72] as Tadić had found in 1999 after examining post-World War II cases. Many decisions have followed the Tadić holding; JCE is now well established in the ICTR's jurisprudence.[73] Moreover, the notion of co-perpetratorship (as a doctrine) was not referred to in the trial judgement in this case or in the appellate pleadings; the Appeals Chamber has not had the benefit of the arguments of the parties. The matter being one of intricacy,[74] it seems to me that, in the circumstances, this Appeals Chamber is not in a good position to reassess the standing case law.

49. In any case, both theories of liability show that the appellant "committed" genocide – that being the issue in this part of the case. There are differences in the workings of the two theories, but the differences are not relevant. For example, there could be guilt under the third category of JCE relating to extended liability when, under the co-perpetratorship theory (at least as understood in Germany[75]), there could not. However, there is no question of extended liability here so as to make that category relevant.

50. Two other problems remain. First, it is said that the question is one of harmonisation of theories and not election between them. That is attractive. But there could be a question as to whether harmonisation is possible. Tadić referred to co-perpetratorship but did not adopt it; presumably the case recognised that both theories could not be adopted at the same time. As has been noticed, the contribution of an accused to a JCE does not have to be a sine qua non of the commission of the crime. Indeed, the contribution does not have to be substantial, as it has to be in the case of aiding and abetting. By contrast, under the co-perpetratorship theory, since the non-fulfilment by a participant of his promised contribution would "ruin" the accomplishment of the enterprise as visualised, the making of his contribution would appear to be a sine qua non. Therefore, though the two theories overlap, they arrive at a point of incompatibility touching guilt or innocence: at that point one theory is wrong, the other right. This would seem to indicate that only one of the two theories can prevail in the same legal system.[76]

51. Second, the problem of harmonisation leads to another problem. Since several states adhere to one theory while several other states adhere to the other theory, it is possible that the required state practice and opinio juris do not exist so as to make either theory part of customary international law. That opens the risk of there being a non liquet on a matter of substance in international criminal law as applied by the Tribunal. That risk was sensed in Erdemović.[77] There too there was a clash between domestic legal systems. The majority in the Appeals Chamber was able to avoid the risk in that case only, on one view, by going outside of the normal principles of international criminal law. Whether the risk in this case can be avoided by taking a less adventurous course is best left for future inquiry.

52. For these reasons, I am of the view that the Appeals Chamber is not at this stage in a good position to pursue the co-perpetratorship theory.

F. Aiding and abetting the murder of tenants

53. This part concerns an appeal by the prosecution. Count 4 of the indictment charged Mr Gacumbitsi ("appellant") with murder as a crime against humanity in that he "did kill persons, or cause persons to be killed, … as follows:

> Pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute: by virtue of his affirmative acts in planning, instigating, ordering, committing, or otherwise aiding and abetting[78] the planning, preparation or execution of the crime charged …".

The question raised is whether these averments were enough to give the appellant notice that the indictment for murder included an allegation that he aided and abetted it.

54. The Appeals Chamber correctly notes that in "considering whether the Appellant received clear and timely notice, the Indictment must … be considered as a whole."[79] In other words, the indictment is not to be read as rigidly compartmentalised between the different counts. Read properly, it showed that, consequent on the death of President Habyarimana on 6 April 1994, there was to be a "fight" against "the Rwandese Patriotic Front (RPF), a predominantly Tutsi politico-military opposition group"[80]; that "fight" involved general genocide by Hutus against Tutsis. The indictment clearly indicated to the average reader that it was alleged that the appellant took part in that general genocidal campaign as a prominent local Hutu.[81]

55. It is against this background that the indictment relating to the deaths of the former tenants has to be seen. In ordering the two Tutsi sisters to vacate his home, according to the indictment, the appellant announced that "his home was not CND, a reference to the cantonment of RPF soldiers in Kigali".[82] Thus, the indictment may be reasonably understood to mean that the appellant knew, as the Trial Chamber found, that, by expelling them, "he was exposing them to the risk of being targeted by Hutu attackers on grounds of their ethnic origin".[83] In turn, the Appeals Chamber correctly understood the indictment that way, stating that its other "paragraphs … detail the context of the genocidal campaign, which ensured that in expelling the tenants under these circumstances, the Appellant was exposing them to a high probability of death".[84] Predictably, the two sisters were killed the night following their eviction earlier in the day. There was no acceptable proof that the appellant "ordered" that killing, and the indictment on this point was dismissed; but the indictment gave due notice that an allegation was that he did aid and abet the killing – by whomsoever the killing was ordered or done.

56. In another case, the Appeals Chamber said that it is "advisable"[85] for the prosecution to be specific,[86] and not simply to quote the charging provisions of the Statute. That advice is valuable. However, I would hesitate to elevate it to a universal procedural requirement, more particularly as the Appeals Chamber recognised that "it has long since been the practice of the Prosecution to merely quote the provisions of Article 6 (1) of the Statute in the charges, leaving it to the Trial Chamber to determine the appropriate form of participation under" that provision.[87] An existing practice of long standing is not terminated by an injunction as to what is "advisable".

[87] See Judgement of the Appeals Chamber, para. 122, citing Semanza Appeal Judgement, para. 259. The existing practice of merely citing the applicable charging provision is not entirely unsupported. "In Queensland it is sufficient to describe an offence in the words of the … statute … which defines the offence". John B. Bishop, Criminal Procedure, 2nd ed. (Sydney, 1998), p. 428. In Canada, a count in an indictment may be "in the words of the enactment that describes the offence or declares the matters charged to be an indictable offence." Criminal Code of Canada, (R.S., 1985, c. C-46), s. 581 (2) (b).

57. In my view, the general reason for the practice is that, for the purpose of conviction, aiding and abetting is not a separate crime in itself, though it is often spoken of as if it were; it is merely a method of perpetrating the crime with which the article 6 (1) of the Statute is concerned;[88] it forms part of an indictment for that crime, in this case, murder – which was charged. In one jurisdiction, when "indicting a secondary party to an offence (i.e. an aider, abettor, counsellor or procurer), there is no need to indicate, either in the statement of offence or particulars, that such was his role."[89] In other words, a charge for the main crime includes a charge for aiding and abetting it. The position was criticised obiter in Maxwell,[90] but the indictment practice has not noticeably altered.[91] True, the practice in that jurisdiction has come about through a statute, but, for the foregoing reasons, it may be thought that the understanding which the statute evidences is applicable here.

58. In cases in which the accused may be misled by the terms of the indictment, specificity has been enjoined.[92] But each case turns on its own facts. In this case, the indictment expressly and distinctly mentioned "aiding and abetting" after charging that the appellant "did … cause persons to be killed." Also, the indictment pleaded material facts that supported a conviction for aiding and abetting the murder of the appellant's tenants. With knowledge of these things, the appellant failed to raise any question at the trial about sufficiency of notice that he was being charged with aiding and abetting their murder.

59. The case of the tenants concerns aiding and abetting murder. It is to be noticed that, so far as aiding and abetting genocide was concerned, virtually the same indictment formula was employed, the second paragraph of count 1 reading:

> Pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute: by virtue of his affirmative acts in ordering, instigating, commanding, participating in and aiding and abetting[93] the preparation and execution of the crime charged [i.e., genocide]…

It was on the basis of this indictment that the Trial Chamber held that –

> Sylvestre Gacumbitsi aided or abetted in the perpetration of the massacres, thereby encouraging the commission of the crime of genocide in Rusumo commune in April 1994.[94]

60. The Trial Chamber's formal "Verdict" merely found that the appellant was guilty of "Genocide",[95] it being understood that this comprised its express finding, made elsewhere, that the appellant was "responsible for planning, instigating, ordering the communal police, committing and aiding and abetting in the killing of members of the Tutsi ethnic group, as part of a scheme to perpetrate the crime of genocide".[96] This conviction, which thus includes aiding and abetting genocide, is affirmed by the Appeals Chamber. I see no material basis for any procedural distinction so far as aiding and abetting the murder of the tenants was concerned.

61. In the circumstances of this case, it appears to me that, as the Appeals Chamber has found,[97] the appellant had adequate notice that the charge against him included an allegation that he aided and abetted the [88] Difficult issues have arisen on methods of participation in the commission of a crime. One question is whether (a) article 6 (1) of the Statute visualises the existence of only one crime which can be perpetrated by any or all of the stipulated modes; or (b) article 6(1) visualises the existence of several crimes each corresponding to one of the stipulated modes. In my view, at the level of conviction, (a) is correct. But (a) means that, in the case of a mode (such as aiding and abetting) which does not involve actual perpetration of the crime, the criminality of the perpetrator is being imputed to the accused. Because of this derived nature of the responsibility, a conviction for perpetrating the crime by aiding and abetting will, in sentencing, be regarded (save in exceptional circumstances) as being less serious than a conviction for actual perpetration of the crime. In other words, at the level of sentencing, aiding and abetting tends to be regarded as a separate crime: effectively, the accused is being sentenced for a crime constituted by his conduct in assisting another to commit a crime and not for the latter crime itself. Thus, at the level of sentencing, (b) is also involved.

murder of his tenants. The Trial Chamber incorrectly failed to record an appropriate conviction. Its reasoning does not appear. Its silence falls to be construed as a judgement acquitting the appellant of aiding and abetting. The Appeals Chamber correctly sets aside that implied acquittal and enters a conviction in its place.

G. Conclusion

62. Throughout this case, as in others, there has been concern with fairness to the accused. That concern is of course proper: the liberty of the accused is important. As it was said, "the saddest epitaph which can be carved in memory of a vanished liberty is that it was lost because its possessors failed to stretch forth a saving hand while yet there was time".[98] That remark, though made in a different context, is generally useful.

63. Thus, fairness to the accused has to be honoured, however inconvenient may be the consequences for the prosecution. The scope of a trial is fixed by the indictment; on a fair reading, the indictment, either original or as cured, must tell the accused exactly what he is charged with. A court must insist on that. Yet, it seems to me that it is the substance which matters: sophistication in applying the relevant standards cannot be extended to the point of rendering the task of the prosecution unreasonably hazardous.

64. At all material times, the appellant knew from the indictment that he was charged with having committed genocide (inter alia by killing Mr. Murefu) and aiding and abetting murder. I am confident that his right to a fair trial was in every way protected by the Trial Chamber. I respectfully support the judgement now handed down by the Appeals Chamber. If anything, I consider that it could be strengthened in the places to which I have referred.

VI. JOINT SEPARATE OPINION OF JUDGES LIU AND MERON

1. We write separately to explain our disagreement with the Majority's conclusion that, though the killing of Mr. Murefu "was not specifically alleged in the Indictment",[1] the Trial Chamber could nonetheless have convicted Gacumbitsi of committing genocide solely on the basis of its finding that Gacumbitsi killed this individual.

2. The Appeals Chamber's Judgement does not dispute that, if the Prosecution intended this killing to be the basis of a finding that Gacumbitsi committed offences, the killing should have been mentioned in the indictment.[2] Indeed, this proposition is beyond dispute. "[C]riminal acts that were physically committed by the accused personally must be set forth in the indictment specifically, including where feasible 'the identity of the victim, the time and place of the events and the means by which the acts were committed.'"[3] The Majority, however, is willing to excuse the Prosecution's failure to comply with our pleading requirements because a vague chart-entry summarizing the anticipated testimony of one witness mentions, inter alia, the killing of Mr. Murefu and the fact that the witness's testimony "relate[s] to the charge of genocide."[4] In our view, serious flaws in the indictment are not so easily remedied.

3. We fully agree with the ICTY Appeals Chamber's holding in Kupreškić that "in some instances, a defective indictment can be cured if the Prosecution provides the accused with timely, clear and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charges against him or her."[5] This holding, however, had an important caveat: "in light of the factual and legal complexities normally associated with the crimes within the jurisdiction of this Tribunal, there can only be a limited number of cases that fall within that category."[6] Indeed, in order to protect the accused's right to be fully aware of the charges he or she faces, and to ensure that each accused can defend against the Prosecution's charges, it is imperative to apply strictly the rule that only "timely, clear and consistent information" can remedy defects in an indictment. Recognizing this fact – even as it held that a particular defect in the indictment was cured by a witness statement taken together with "unambiguous information" contained in the Pre-Trial Brief and its annexes[7] – the Appeals Chamber made clear in Ntakirutimana that the Prosecution cannot be deemed to have charged an accused for every incident described in a document that it makes available to him.[8]

4. Here, in concluding that Gacumbitsi had "clear and consistent" notice that he was alleged to have committed genocide by killing Mr. Murefu, the Majority points to only one document, and indeed, just one small section of a document – namely, the entry on Witness TAQ's anticipated testimony in the Prosecution's Summary of Anticipated Witness Evidence.[9] Indeed, in this case, unlike in Ntakirutimana, the Prosecution never mentioned the killing of Mr. Murefu in the body of its Pre-Trial Brief. Nor did the Prosecution allege in its Opening Statement that Gacumbitsi killed Mr. Murefu.[10] Hence, as the Majority implicitly acknowledges, the key question is whether the chart-entry, taken alone, provided "clear and consistent" notice that Gacumbitsi was alleged to have committed genocide by killing Mr. Murefu.[11] It did not.

[11] As the Majority points out, See Judgement of the Appeals Chamber, para. 55, the Prosecution Response notes that Gacumbitsi was also provided with the witness statement of Witness TAQ, and that this statement mentions the killing of Mr. Murefu, Prosecution Response, paras 149-157. The Prosecution Response, however, never suggests that this witness statement indicated the charge that the allegations about Mr. Murefu's death would be used to prove. Prosecution Response, paras 149-157. The majority is therefore

5. First, we question whether notice provided only once can ever be "consistent" notice. Not only does the term "consistent" suggest that there must not be deviation in the material terms of the notice, but "consistent" also could reasonably be read to suggest that there must be some repetition – arguably, a document or statement providing notice is only "consistent" if there is another relevant document or statement that it is consistent with.[12] Such a reading of the term "consistent" would be in accordance with the purposes of the "clear and consistent" notice requirement: safeguarding the accused's right to be clearly and unequivocally informed of the charges against him in a situation where material facts were omitted from the indictment, the place where the accused would expect to find them.

6. Regardless of whether notice provided only once can ever satisfy the "clear and consistent" standard, the notice provided in the chart-entry on Witness TAQ fails to meet this standard, as it was far from clear. The chart shows that Witness TAQ's testimony would relate to the charges of genocide, extermination, and rape.[13] Yet the chart-entry never mentions any mode of liability, let alone explains which aspects of Witness TAQ's testimony would support a conviction for any of the charges pursuant to a particular mode of liability.[14] This omission is all the more serious given how much ground the chart said that witness TAQ's testimony would cover.[15] According to the chart, Witness TAQ was to testify about a lengthy series of events in which Gacumbitsi took part over the course of several days. The killing of Mr. Murefu was just one small part of this series of events.[16] Given that – in relation to the genocide charge – the Prosecution pursued theories of responsibility based on Gacumbitsi's entire course of conduct during this period,[17] Gacumbitsi could reasonably have believed that the killing of Mr. Murefu was mentioned only as part of this course of conduct. Alternatively, as the Prosecution charged Gacumbitsi with instigating genocide, and as the chart-entry says that the killing of Mr. Murefu was immediately followed by a grenade attack on refugees gathered in the church that Mr. Murefu was killed in front of, Gacumbitsi could reasonably have believed that this killing would be used to argue that he instigated genocide. He might also have reasonably believed that the Prosecution viewed this incident only as evidence of his mens rea for genocide – evidence that could be rebutted with mens rea evidence unrelated to this particular killing. Any of the abovementioned inferences would have been logical ones for Gacumbitsi to have made – indeed, they were likely more logical than the inference that he was charged with committing genocide on the basis of this killing – given that "criminal acts that were physically committed by the accused personally must be set forth in the indictment specifically",[18] and given that the Murefu killing was never mentioned in the indictment.

7. Not surprisingly, the chart does not appear to have led Gacumbitsi to deduce that the Murefu killing was alleged as a basis for the charge that he committed genocide. Discussion of this killing in the Rule 98 bis filings makes clear that, even after the completion of the Prosecution's case at trial, the Appellant was still under the impression that the incident had been alleged with respect to the murder charge. Yet not even at this point in the proceedings did the Prosecution clarify that it felt Gacumbitsi should be convicted of committing genocide on the basis of this killing. In fact, the Prosecution waited until the close of the trial to finally make clear that it intended to rely upon the evidence of the killing to support a conviction for genocide. This is not timely notice. We cannot agree to the entry of a conviction on the basis of allegations that were only made clear at the end of trial.

right not to assert that the witness statement of Witness TAQ might have helped to inform Gacumbitsi that he was alleged to have committed genocide by killing Mr. Murefu.

8. According to the Majority, these circumstances "are materially indistinguishable from" [19] circumstances under which the ICTY Appeals Chamber recently found that the Prosecution had cured an indictment defect. We disagree. The Majority refers to the Naletilić and Martinović case, and in particular, the ICTY Appeals Chamber's finding that the Prosecution had cured the indictment's failure to provide information about the beating of an individual known as "the Professor". This finding rested in part on an entry in a similar chart of witnesses – although the chart-entry suggested that the witness at issue would be testifying to a few discrete incidents, and the chart-entry was far less lengthy than the one at issue in the present case. Yet the Appeals Chamber also rested its finding on the fact that the relevant "details were specifically reiterated by the Prosecution in its Opening Statement."[20] Indeed, the Prosecution's Opening Statement in Naletilić and Martinović not only mentions the beating of "the Professor",[21] it clearly states the counts in the indictment that the allegation relates to.[22] Hence, at the start of his trial, Martinović knew what the Prosecution was trying to prove with its allegations about "the Professor".[23] The value of this second piece of clear, detailed information about the Prosecution's allegation with regard to "the Professor" – like the value of the information in the Pre-Trial Brief that together with the chart of witnesses cured the indictment defect in Ntakirutimana – should not be underestimated. In the present case, where the indictment makes absolutely no mention of the killing of Mr. Murefu – it does not just omit some material facts related to the killing – it is particularly problematic that neither the Prosecution's Pre-Trial Brief nor its Opening Statement reiterated and clarified the information on the killing provided in the chart-entry on Witness TAQ.

9. In conclusion, because the provision of "timely, clear and consistent information" is necessary to cure defects in an indictment, we cannot agree that the Prosecution cured its failure to mention the killing of Mr. Murefu in the indictment, and we therefore cannot agree that Gacumbitsi could be convicted of committing genocide on the basis of this killing alone. Nonetheless, because we agree with the Judgement's conclusion that "[t]he Trial Chamber convicted the Appellant of "ordering" and "instigating" genocide on the basis of findings of fact detailing certain conduct that … should be characterized not just as "ordering" and "instigating" genocide, but also as "committing" genocide",[24] we support the decision not to vacate the finding that Gacumbitsi committed genocide.

VII. SEPARATE OPINION OF JUDGE SCHOMBURG on THE CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY OF THE APPELLANT FOR COMMITTING GENOCIDE

A. Introduction

1. I am in general agreement with the outcome of the Judgement. However, in relation to the Appellant's criminal responsibility for committing genocide, I am concerned about several issues. First, I wish to offer some remarks on committing genocide and the pleading of "committing" genocide which slightly deviate from the opinion of the majority of my distinguished colleagues. Following that, I will concentrate especially on the question whether it was necessary for the Appellant's conviction for committing genocide to plead the killing of Mr. Murefu in the Indictment. Finally, I will discuss the majority's treatment of the Appellant's responsibility for committing genocide in general.

B. Does Committing Refer Generally to the Direct and Physical Perpetration of the Crime by the Offender?

2. The Trial Chamber found the Appellant guilty, inter alia, of committing genocide on the basis that he killed Mr. Murefu. The Trial Chamber stated:

> "Committing" refers generally to the direct and physical perpetration of the crime by the offender himself. In the present case, the Accused killed Murefu, a Tutsi. The Chamber therefore finds that he committed the crime of genocide, within the meaning of Article 6 (1) of the Statute.[1]

Much to my dismay, the majority of the Appeals Chamber has decided to leave this holding of the Trial Chamber in principle[2] undisturbed despite the fact that it stands in striking contrast to the jurisprudence of both ad hoc Tribunals and to modern principles of criminal law and therefore is an error of law which required correction proprio motu.

3. Crimes under international law, e.g., those listed in the Statutes of ICTR and ICTY, are often committed by a plurality of co-operating persons. Not necessarily all these persons carry out the crimes by their own hand; nevertheless, in general, they are not less culpable. On the contrary, within the context of international macro criminality, the degree of criminal responsibility frequently grows as distance from the actual act increases. As the ICTY Appeals Chamber found in Tadić:

> Most of the time these crimes do not result from the criminal propensity of single individuals but constitute manifestations of collective criminality: the crimes are often carried out by groups of individuals acting in pursuance of a common criminal design. Although only some members of the group may physically perpetrate the criminal act […], the participation and contribution of the other members of the group is often vital in facilitating the commission of the offence in question. It follows that the moral gravity of such participation is often no less – or indeed no different – from that of those actually carrying out the acts in question.
> Under these circumstances, to hold criminally liable as a perpetrator only the person who materially performs the criminal act would disregard the role as co-perpetrators of all those who in some way made it possible for the perpetrator physically to carry out that criminal act. At the same time, depending upon the circumstances, to hold the latter liable only as aiders and abettors might understate the degree of their criminal responsibility.[3]

[1] Trial Judgement, para. 285 (footnote omitted) (emphasis added).

[2] In para. 60 of this Judgement, the Appeals Chamber only holds: "In the context of genocide, however, 'direct and physical perpetration' need not mean physical killing; other acts can constitute direct participation in the actus reus of the crime." (footnote omitted). However, the Appeals Chamber does not offer any justification at all as to why this holds true only in the context of genocide (See, e.g., in the context of extermination, para. 90 of this Judgement where the Appeals Chamber abstains from convicting the Appellant for committing extermination, but later on (paras. 158-179) examines the Appellant's responsibility for committing extermination based on joint criminal enterprise).

[3] See Tadić Appeal Judgement, paras. 191, 192.

Both ad hoc Tribunals have therefore accepted that "committing" – in general and not only in the context of genocide – is not limited to direct and physical perpetration.[4]

4. However, instead of correcting the Trial Chamber's above-indicated error, the majority of the Appeals Chamber follows the misleading trail all the way back to the Indictment, which it finds defective because the killing of Mr. Murefu was not pleaded therein.

C. General Remarks on the Pleading of "Committing" Genocide

5. For both ad hoc Tribunals, the only authority is their Statute. There can be no interpretation of the Statute beyond the wording of its provisions. Even within the scope of the Statute, any interpretation may not exceed what is recognized by international law. For a charge of criminal responsibility under the Statute, it is therefore necessary to plead a specific crime and a specific mode of participation as expressly contained in one of the provisions of the Statute.

6. Looking at the wording of Article 6 (1) of the ICTR Statute and Article 7 (1) of the ICTY Statute,[5] I first wish to point out that it would have been possible to interpret these provisions as following a monistic model (Einheitstäterschaft) in which each participant in a crime is treated as a perpetrator irrespective of his or her degree of participation.[6] This would have allowed the Prosecution to plead Article 6 (1) of the ICTR Statute or Article 7 (1) of the ICTY Statute, respectively, in their entirety without having to choose a particular mode of participation. It would have left it to the Judges to assess the significance of an accused's contribution to a crime under the Statutes at the sentencing stage, thereby saving the Tribunals the trouble of developing an unnecessary "participation doctrine". However, as the Tribunals' jurisprudence favours a distinction between principal and accessory (Täterschaft und Teilnahme) for the determination of individual criminal responsibility it must also accept the consequences which follow from this approach. It is impossible to make a difference in terms of substantive law between planning, instigating, ordering, committing or aiding and abetting without acknowledging that, in principle, each of these modes warrants distinction on the sentencing level as well. The difference in individual criminal responsibility must be mirrored in the sentence.[7] In this respect, I wish to add my regrets that the ad hoc Tribunals have decided to not compel the Prosecution as a matter of fairness to plead its case based on a specific mode of participation or to specify such at least at the end of the presentation of the Prosecution's case.

7. Since the Statute is the only authority for both ad hoc Tribunals, it is, on the other hand, sufficient to plead a specific crime and a specific mode of participation as expressly contained in one of the provisions of the Statute. In particular, the Prosecution is not required to plead any legal interpretation or legal theory concerning a mode of participation, which does not appear in the Statute – be it named, for example, direct or indirect perpetratorship, co-perpetratorship, joint principals,[8] joint criminal enterprise,[9] or the like.

[9] As to this, See Karemera, Ngirumpatse and Nzirorera Decision on Defence Motions Challenging the Pleading of a Joint Criminal Enterprise in a Count of Complicity in Genocide in the Amended Indictment, 18 May 2006, para. 8 and para. 5. In the case at hand I regard the appeal brought by the prosecutor and its lengthy discussion on how to plead JCE in paras. 158-179 to be absolutely superfluous.

8. Consequently, an indictment containing the charge "committing" genocide puts the accused on notice of the legal nature of the allegations against him.[10] According to established case law of both ad hoc Tribunals, the Prosecution has to plead in the indictment all material facts underpinning such a charge, but not the evidence by which the material facts are to be proven.[11] Among others, this includes facts which establish whether the accused individually committed the alleged crime or whether it was committed by several persons (including the accused) acting together. However, it must be emphasised once more that the Prosecution is not required to plead a legal theory to be applied to these facts.

9. Furthermore, although the Prosecution is generally obliged to plead the identity of individual victims with the greatest possible precision,[12] this is not required in the case of genocide. The reason for this lies in the protected legal value of the prohibition of genocide which – unlike murder, for example – is not the individual, but the targeted national, ethnical, racial or religious group as such. It is thus not necessary to plead the names of particular victims in the Indictment just like it is irrelevant whether the Appellant killed someone by his or her own hand. Such an approach would miss the reason behind the prohibition of genocide. It would overlook that the persons most responsible for the killing of at least 800,000 Tutsi in Rwanda in 1994 were those who acted behind the scenes, who organized and planned this genocide, and who instructed, ordered and instigated others to carry it out. They committed genocide on an unimaginable scale. What else should these persons be called, but perpetrators? For a correct pleading of "committing" genocide it therefore suffices to plead the fact that at least one person was killed by acts imputable to the accused acting with dolus specialis (special intent).

10. In the instant case, the allegation against the Appellant of having "committed" genocide was pleaded in a manner quite inapprehensible.[13] Nevertheless, the Indictment fulfilled its main functions in that it provided the Appellant with sufficient information about the nature of the charges against him and limited the personal and factual scope of the Prosecution's case. The crime charged was "genocide"; "committing" was the charged mode of participation. The Appellant was put on notice of this charge and the material facts underpinning it. In contrast to what the majority of the Appeals Chamber found, it was neither necessary for the Prosecution to plead the killing of Mr. Murefu nor to plead joint criminal enterprise.

D. The Criminal Responsibility of the Appellant for "Committing" Genocide Based on his Killing of Mr. Murefu

11. The majority of the Appeals Chamber blithely assumes the correctness of the Trial Chamber's approach to the Appellant's responsibility for "committing" genocide and holds:

> The Prosecution should have expressly pleaded the killing of Mr. Murefu, particularly as it had this information in its possession before the Indictment was filed. The Appeals Chamber thus finds by majority […] that the Indictment was defective in this respect.[14]

12. With all due respect, this holding is erroneous.

[10] In my opinion, the modes of liability for genocide are exhaustively listed in Art. 2 (3) of the Statute (Art. 4 (3) of the ICTY Statute). I accept that some of my colleagues also hold Art. 6 (1) of the Statute (Art. 7 (1) of the ICTY Statute) applicable, but wish to note that there appears to be some tension between Art. 6 (1) of the Statute and Art. 2 (3) of the Statute as the scope of the former extends beyond that of the latter. It seems doubtful whether such an approach amounted to customary international law already at the time the crimes before the ICTR and the ICTY were committed. Thus, as regards some details, there is a risk of infringing the nullum crimen sine lege principle.

[11] See this Judgement, para. 49. See also Naletilić and Martinović Appeal Judgement, para. 23.

[12] See this Judgement, para. 49.

[13] Under Count 1, the Indictment charged the Appellant pursuant to Art. 2 (3) (a) of the Statute (committing genocide) and Art. 6 (1) of the Statute ("participating in […] the [...] execution" of genocide; "[participation] à la commission"). Thus, neither in its English nor in its French version does the Indictment adhere to the wording of Art. 6 (1) of the Statute which was also criticized by the Trial Chamber; See Trial Judgement, para. 267. Only the French version of the Indictment ("participé à la commission") amounts to an adequate reference to "committing". However, the original Indictment was the (less clear) English version. Nevertheless, based on the circumstances of the case, the Appellant was put on notice that he was charged as a perpetrator of genocide. The Defence was working with the French version of the Indictment, and it is apparent from the trial record as well as from Defence submissions during the Appeals Hearing that the Appellant was informed about the nature of the charges against him. The same conclusion was reached by the Trial Chamber, See Trial Judgement, para. 269. Furthermore, See para. 37 of this Judgement,.

[14] Para. 50 of this Judgement (footnote omitted).

13. Contrary to what the majority of the Appeals Chamber asserts, the Appellant was not charged with Mr. Murefu's killing.[15] This omission on the part of the Prosecution is most unfortunate and incomprehensible given that it had information about this killing long before the beginning of trial.[16] Irrespective of that, the Appeals Chamber is seized of a charge of "committing" genocide. In this respect, the killing of Mr. Murefu is neither a charge nor a material fact underpinning such, but one – albeit most abhorrent – piece of evidence that a genocidal campaign was conducted in which the Appellant participated and which caused the death of at least one victim. According to settled jurisprudence of both ad hoc Tribunals evidence does not need to be pleaded.[17] This understanding also underlies the Trial Judgement. The Trial Chamber correctly made a distinction between the allegations of murder and genocide. In relation to the killing of Mr. Murefu, it declined to convict the Appellant for murder because the Indictment did not contain a charge to that effect,[18] but it entered a conviction for genocide.[19]

E. The Criminal Responsibility for "Committing" in General

14. As pointed out before, the problem lies in the Trial Chamber's finding that "committing" in general requires direct and physical perpetration of the crime by the offender himself. The Trial Chamber correctly found that the Appellant played a major role in the genocidal campaign against the Tutsi population.[20] It should have therefore convicted the Appellant of "committing" genocide on the basis of his overall control over the massacre at Nyarubuye compound. In this context, it is irrelevant whether the Appellant killed specific persons by his own hand as his superior role in the massacre requires imputing the commission of all killings to him.

15. Based on the Prosecution's fifth Ground of Appeal, the Appeals Chamber unnecessarily[21] examines whether the Appellant incurs liability under the first and third category of joint criminal enterprise for "committing", inter alia, genocide,[22] but concludes that joint criminal enterprise was not pleaded properly in the Indictment and that this defect of the Indictment was not subsequently cured.[23] As already explained, I do not support specific pleading requirements for mere legal theories or interpretations as to the meaning of "committing". With regard to the charge of "committing" genocide, the Indictment was not defective, but precisely put the Appellant on notice of the allegations against him: the Prosecution sufficiently specified the date of the Nyarubuye massacre, its location, the Appellant's criminal acts and the means by which he carried them out, the criminal acts of other perpetrators which must be imputed to the Appellant, as well as the targets of these criminal acts.[24] Also, at various points, the Indictment alludes to concerted action undertaken by the Appellant and others.[25] From this point of view, it becomes clear that the killing of Mr. Murefu was only the starting point of the massacre the Appellant is responsible for in whole. On this reasoning alone, the Appeals Chamber could have established the Appellant's responsibility for [15] But See para. 50 of this Judgement.

[16] For the murder of Mr. Murefu, the Appellant should have been cumulatively charged under Art. 2 of the Statute and under Art. 3 (a) of the Statute (murder as a crime against humanity). See the detailed description of this heinous crime by Witness TAQ, T. 29 July 2003 pp. 52, 53; T. 30 July 2003 pp. 20-24, p. 40. See also the testimony of Witness TAO, T. 30 July 2003 pp. 53, 54, 61, 62. In a legal system applying the principle iuria novit curia, the Appellant could be convicted also under Art. 3 (a) of the Statute even if such a charge is not pleaded in the Indictment, provided that the Bench gives a judicial hint to that extent.

In my opinion, the wording used in these paragraphs, inter alia, "acted/acting in concert with [others]", would have been sufficient to put the Appellant on notice even if specific pleading of joint criminal enterprise was required. It is obvious that these allegations refer to the entire charge of genocide (and complicity in genocide).

"committing" genocide. The discussion of joint criminal enterprise at least in the context of committing genocide in the case at hand is, to say the least, misleading.[26]

16. The concept of joint criminal enterprise is not expressly included in the Statute[27] and it is only one possibility to interpret "committing" in relation to the crimes under the ICTR and ICTY Statutes.[28] In various legal systems, however, "committing" is interpreted differently. Since Nuremberg and Tokyo, national as well as international criminal law has come to accept, in particular, co-perpetratorship[29] and indirect perpetratorship (perpetration by means)[30] as a form of "committing".

17. Co-perpetration in general requires "joint functional control over a crime". Co-perpetrators must pursue a common goal, either through an explicit agreement or silent consent, which they can only achieve by co-ordinated action and shared control over the criminal conduct. Each co-perpetrator must make a contribution essential to the commission of the crime.[31] The worldwide accepted legal scholar, Claus Roxin, provides the following typical example:

> If two people govern a country together – are joint rulers in the literal sense of the word – the usual consequence is that the acts of each depend on the co-perpetration of the other. The reverse side of this is, inevitably, the fact that by refusing to participate, each person individually can frustrate the action.[32]

18. Indirect perpetration (perpetration by means) requires that the indirect perpetrator uses the direct and physical perpetrator as a mere "instrument" to achieve his goal, i.e., the commission of the crime. In such cases, the indirect perpetrator is criminally responsible because he exercises control over the act and the will of the direct and physical perpetrator.[33]

19. Especially the notion of indirect perpetration has been employed in cases concerning organized crime, terrorism, white collar crime or state induced criminality. For example, Argentinean Courts have entered convictions for crimes committed by members of the Junta regime based on indirect perpetratorship.[34] In one of its leading cases, the Politbüro Case, the German Federal Supreme Court (Bundesgerichtshof) held three high-ranking politicians of the former German Democratic Republic responsible as indirect perpetrators for killings of persons at the East German border by border guards.[35]

20. Modern criminal law has come to apply the notion of indirect perpetration even where the direct and physical perpetrator is criminally responsible ("perpetrator behind the perpetrator").[36] This is especially relevant if crimes are committed through an organized structure of power in which the direct and physical perpetrator is nothing but a cog in the wheel that can be replaced immediately. Since the identity of the direct and physical perpetrator is irrelevant, the control and, consequently, the main responsibility for the crimes committed shifts to the persons occupying a leading position in such an organized structure of power.[37] These persons must therefore be regarded as perpetrators irrespective of whether the direct and physical perpetrators are criminally responsible themselves or (under exceptional circumstances) not. This approach was applied, for example, by German courts in cases concerning killings at the East German border: as far as border guards who had killed persons were identified and brought to trial, they were generally convicted as perpetrators. This, however, did not reduce the criminal responsibility of those who had acted "behind the scenes". As the German Federal Supreme Court (Bundesgerichtshof) held in the aforementioned Politbüro Case:

> [I]n certain groups of cases, however, even though the direct perpetrator has unlimited responsibility for his actions, the contribution by the man behind the scenes almost automatically brings about the constituent elements of the offence intended by that man behind the scenes. Such is the case, for example, when the man behind the scenes takes advantage of certain basic conditions through certain organisational structures, where his contribution to the event sets in motion regular procedures. Such basic conditions with regular procedures are found particularly often among organisational structures of the State [...] as well as in hierarchies of command. If the man behind the scenes acts in full awareness of these circumstances, particularly if he exploits the direct perpetrator's unconditional willingness to bring about the constituent elements of the crime, and if he wills the result as that of his own actions, then he is a perpetrator by indirect perpetration. He has control over the action [...]. In such cases, failing to treat the man behind the scenes as a perpetrator would not do justice to the significance of his contribution to the crime, especially since responsibility often increases rather than decreases the further one is from the scene of the crime [...].[38]

21. For these reasons, the notion of indirect perpetratorship suits the needs also of international criminal law particularly well.[39] It is a means to bridge any potential physical distance from the crime scene of persons who must be regarded as main perpetrators because of their overall involvement and control over the crimes committed. This was recognized upon the establishment of the International Criminal Court whose

[36] As indirect perpetratorship focuses on the indirect perpetrator's control over the will of the direct and physical perpetrator, it is sometimes understood to require a particular "defect" on the part of the direct and physical perpetrator which excludes his criminal responsibility.

[39] This appears to be acknowledged also by Pre-Trial Chamber I of the International Criminal Court, who stated in a recent decision:
In the Chamber's view, there are reasonable grounds to believe that, given the alleged hierarchical relationship between Mr Thomas Lubanga Dyilo and the other members of the UPC and the FPLC, the concept of indirect perpetration which, along with that of co-perpetration based on joint control of the crime referred to in the Prosecution's Application, is provided for in article 25 (3) of the Statute, could be applicable to Mr Thomas Lubanga Dyilo's alleged role in the commission of the crimes set out in the Prosecution's Application.
Prosecutor v. Thomas Lubanga Dyilo, Decision Concerning Pre-Trial Chamber I's Decision of 10 February 2006 and the Incorporation of Documents into the Record of the Case against Mr. Thomas Lubanga Dyilo, ICC-01/04-01/06, 24 February 2006, Annex I: Decision on the Prosecutor's Application for a Warrant of Arrest, Article 58, para. 96 (emphasis added).

Statute, in Article 25 (3) (a), includes both the notion of co-perpetration and indirect perpetration ("perpetrator behind the perpetrator"):

> [A person shall be criminally responsible and liable for punishment for a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court if that person] (a) Commits such a crime, whether as an individual, jointly with another or through another person, regardless of whether that other person is criminally responsible".[40]

Given the wide acknowledgement of co-perpetratorship and indirect perpetratorship, the ICC Statute does not create new law in this respect, but reflects existing law.

22. As an international criminal court, it is incumbent upon this Tribunal not to turn a blind eye to these developments in modern criminal law and to show open-mindedness by accepting internationally recognized legal interpretations and theories such as the notions of co-perpetration and indirect perpetration. Co-perpetratorship and indirect perpetratorship differ slightly from joint criminal enterprise with respect to the key element of attribution.[41] However, both approaches widely overlap and should therefore be harmonized by both ad hoc Tribunals. Such harmonization could especially provide the third category of joint criminal enterprise with sharper contours by combining objective and subjective components in an adequate way. In general, harmonization will lead to greater acceptance of the Tribunal's jurisprudence by international criminal courts in the future and in national systems which understand imputed criminal responsibility for "committing" to mean co-perpetratorship and/or indirect perpetratorship. It is important to note that neither the law of Rwanda nor the law of the former Yugoslavia and the law of the States on the territory of the former Yugoslavia employs the theory of joint criminal enterprise.

23. In my opinion, this approach towards interpreting "committing" is reconcilable with the Tadić Appeal Judgement, which introduced joint criminal enterprise into ICTY jurisprudence. The Tadić Appeal Judgement does not only refer to "common (criminal) design", but also – expressly – speaks of co-perpetrators.[42] Furthermore, the Tadić Appeals Chamber noted that in many post-World War II trials, courts "did not rely upon the notion of common purpose or common design, preferring to refer instead to the notion of co-perpetration."[43]

F. Conclusion

24. The concept of joint criminal enterprise is established ICTY jurisprudence in order to deal with allegations of "committing" by way of acting in concert with others based on a common purpose or design. Nevertheless, when interpreting the meaning of "committing" based on imputed liability, it is the noble obligation of an international criminal tribunal to merge and harmonize the major legal systems of the world and to accept also other recognized developments in criminal law over the past decades.

25. A person who participated in the commission of a crime in concert with others is responsible for having "committed" that crime irrespective of whether he or she carried out the criminal act by his or her own hand (co-perpetrator, co-principal, first category of joint criminal enterprise).

26. A person who has effective control over the act and the will of the direct and physical perpetrator (the brain of the crime with "white gloves") must be held responsible for having "committed" the crime in question despite the fact that he or she did not act by own hand (indirect perpetrator).

27. If an accused is alleged to have been a perpetrator of a crime under the Statute by way of acting together with others, it is sufficient if the indictment charges "committing" as the relevant mode of participation and if the underlying material facts pleaded in the indictment reveal that the accused acted together with others to commit the crime charged.

[40] (Emphasis added).
[41] While joint criminal enterprise is based primarily on the common state of mind of the perpetrators (subjective criterion), co-perpetratorship and indirect perpetratorship also depend on whether the perpetrator exercises control over the criminal act (objective criterion).

28. Apart from the killing of Mr. Murefu, it is abundantly clear that the Appellant had a leading role in the commission of the genocidal campaign against the Tutsi population. He controlled the heinous crimes to be committed, in particular at Nyarubuye compound. He had strong influence not only on his subordinates, but on people living in his commune in general. He used this influence to ensure that the genocidal campaign against the Tutsi population would be implemented successfully. Taking into account his predominant role in the genocidal campaign, the Appellant's conduct is best described as indirect perpetration; in some respect the Appellant was also acting as a co-perpetrator.

VIII. Partially Dissenting Opinion of Judge Güney

1. I regret that I am not able to agree with some of the holdings of the majority of the Appeals Chamber. There are two matters in relation to which my own view differs from that of the majority. The first matter is one of substance, and relates to the issue of "committing" genocide. The second matter relates to the Appellant's responsibility for aiding and abetting the murders of his tenants.

A. "Committing" Genocide

2. I agree with the present judgement that the Appellant committed genocide through his killing of Mr. Murefu. However, I disagree with the conclusion that "even if the killing of Mr. Murefu were to be set aside, the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the Appellant 'committed' genocide would still be valid"[1] because the Appellant "was present at the crime scene to supervise and direct the massacre, and participated in it actively by separating the Tutsi refugees so that they could be killed".[2]

3. The central element in the majority's reasoning seems to be that "[i]n the context of genocide, however, 'direct and physical perpetration' need not mean physical killing; other acts can constitute direct participation in the actus reus of the crime."[3] With all due respect, I am of the view that the majority sets aside the established jurisprudence and gives a new meaning to "committing", without providing convincing reasons for doing so.

4. According to the Tadić Appeal Judgement, "committing" refers to a) "the physical perpetration of a crime by the offender himself, or the culpable omission of an act that was mandated by a rule of criminal law"; or b) "participation in the realization of a common design or purpose" (or participation in a joint criminal enterprise).[4] Until the present case, "committing" has always been understood in one of those two ways,[5] and attempts to extend the meaning of "committing" further have not been accepted.[6]

[6] See Stakić Appeal Judgement, para. 62 (rejecting the theory of co-perpetratorship as a form of commission).

5. Pursuant to this jurisprudence, the Appellant will have "committed" genocide if (a) he physically perpetrated one of the acts listed at Article 2 (2) of the Statute (with the relevant intent); or (b) he participated in a joint criminal enterprise to commit genocide. In the present case, a majority of the Appeals Chamber concludes that joint criminal enterprise was not properly pleaded, and that the Appellant can therefore not be convicted on this basis, a conclusion with which I agree. As to physical perpetration, the Appellant can be convicted of having committed genocide pursuant to Article 2 (2) (a) of the Statute for the killing of Mr. Murefu. However, even if the Appellant was present at Nyarubuye Parish, played a leading role in conducting and supervising the attack and directed the Tutsi and Hutu refugees to separate, this does not entail that, in addition to "ordering" and "instigating" genocide, he also "committed" genocide. Plainly, "playing a leading role in conducting and […] supervising" the attack and directing the refugees to separate do not constitute the physical perpetration by the Appellant of one of the acts listed at Article 2 (2) of the Statute.[7]

6. In finding that the Appellant committed genocide by his actions at Nyarubuye (other than his killing of Mr. Murefu), the majority thus misapplies, or departs from, the established jurisprudence as to the meaning of "committing". If the intent was to identify a new form of commission, this should have been said openly, and cogent reasons should have been provided.[8] In the case at hand, no reasons or authorities have been provided to justify the departure from the previous jurisprudence.[9] While I concede that various domestic legal systems may recognize other forms of commission than the two forms identified until now in the Tribunal's jurisprudence,[10] I am concerned by the fact that the majority in this case offers no discussion whatsoever to show that any of these forms of commission are recognized in customary international law.[11] Indeed, no analysis of customary international law is provided to show that "committing" goes beyond the physical perpetration of a crime or the participation in a joint criminal enterprise. Further, the majority does not explain clearly how "committing" is now to be understood; it merely states that "other acts can constitute direct participation in the actus reus of the crime."[12] With respect, this is as vague as it is unsatisfactory, and this novel approach to "committing" arises very late in the life of the Tribunal.

7. The majority finds that the Appellant's action of directing the Tutsi and Hutu refugees to separate at Nyarubuye "is not adequately described by any other mode of Article 6 (1) liability".[13] In this respect, I would like to emphasize that this action certainly constitutes a contribution to the commission of acts of genocide by others, in other words participation in a joint criminal enterprise. This shows that the expansion of "committing" as suggested by the Appeals Chamber is not necessary: the same analysis could have been made through the lenses of joint criminal enterprise. The real problem here is one of lack of adequate notice of that mode of liability.

8. Finally, even if it could be shown that customary international law recognizes forms of commission other than those outlined in Tadić, I would not convict the Appellant on that basis, as he was never put on

[7] Article 2 (2) of the Statute reads as follows:
Genocide means any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, such as:
(a) Killing members of the group;
(b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;
(c) Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part;
(d) Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group;
(e) Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

[8] See Aleksovski Appeal Judgement, paras. 107-111.

[9] In this connection, the Appeals Chamber notes "that the selection of prisoners for extermination played an integral role in the Nazi genocide" (See Appeal Judgement, footnote 145). This is not disputed. But this reference does not suffice to show that "committing" according to Article 6 (1) of the Statute goes beyond physical perpetration of a crime or participation in a joint criminal enterprise.

[10] On this subject See, e.g., Prosecutor v. Milutinović et al., Case N°IT-05-87-PT, Decision on Ojdanić's Motion Challenging Jurisdiction: Indirect Co-Perpetration, 22 March 2006, Separate Opinion of Judge Iain Bonomy, paras. 28-30.

[12] See Appeal Judgement, para. 60.

[13] Appeal Judgement, para. 60.

notice that such a form of commission could apply in his case – this mode of liability was certainly not pleaded in the Indictment. In this connection, I recall that if the Prosecution seeks a conviction for "committing" a crime on the basis of a form of commission other than direct physical perpetration, it should state so explicitly in the indictment.[14]

9. For the above reasons, I conclude that the majority errs in finding that, through his acts at Nyarubuye (other than the killing of Mr. Murefu), the Appellant "committed" genocide. I also note that the Trial Chamber did not find that the Appellant committed genocide otherwise than by his killing of Mr. Murefu,[15] and that none of the Parties in the present appeal invited the Appeals Chamber to do so. Certainly, the Appeals Chamber is entitled to intervene proprio motu if it considers that a Trial Judgement needs to be reformed on a point, but I am not convinced that this was necessary in the present case: it would have been sufficient to uphold the finding that the Appellant committed genocide on the basis of his killing of Mr. Murefu. Further, I am concerned that the Appellant was never put on notice or given the opportunity to present arguments as to whether his actions at Nyarubuye (other than his killing of Mr. Murefu) could lead to a finding that he "committed" genocide there.

B. Aiding and Abetting the Murders of Marie and Béatrice

10. In the present judgement, a majority of the Appeals Chamber finds that the Appellant could be convicted for aiding and abetting the murder of Marie and Béatrice as this mode of liability was sufficiently pleaded in the Indictment.[16] With respect, I disagree. In my view, the Appellant was never clearly informed that he would have to defend himself against a charge not just that he ordered the killing of his tenants, but also that, by expelling his tenants, he knowingly contributed to their killing a few hours later, and thus aided and abetted their murder.

11. While the preamble to Count 4 of the Indictment (Murder) states that the Appellant is charged under Article 6 (1) of the Statute "by virtue of his affirmative acts in planning, instigating, ordering, committing, or otherwise aiding and abetting the planning, preparation or execution of the crime charged",[17] this did not make clear to which of the numerous alleged killings each mode of liability was meant to correspond. Arguably, it could have been inferred that all of the modes applied to all of the killings – yet this implication is dispelled by the specific language of paragraph 36 of the Indictment, which contains the specific allegation as to the murders of the two women and which makes reference only to ordering. Paragraph 36 of the Indictment reads as follows:

> On a date uncertain during April – June 1994, Sylvestre Gacumbitsi personally ordered the tenants in one of his homes to vacate the premises. After announcing that his home was not CND, a reference to the cantonment of RPF soldiers in Kigali, Sylvestre Gacumbitsi ordered the killing of his former tenants.

Given this language, the Appellant could reasonably infer that he was only charged with ordering those two murders. No other paragraph of the Indictment corrects that impression. Thus, the Indictment did not put the Appellant properly on notice that he could be convicted for having aided and abetted the murders of his tenants. Further, this defect in the Indictment was not cured by timely, clear and consistent information. With respect to the murders of Marie and Béatrice, the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief exclusively argues the ordering theory.[18] Some of the witness statements in the annexes allege facts that might be read as supporting aiding and abetting – for instance, the statement of Witness TBC says that the Appellant chased Marie and Béatrice out of the house and that they were then killed on the spot.[19] But in light of the fact that the Pre-Trial Brief to which these statements were appended clearly creates the impression that the Prosecution was continuing to rely only on ordering, the statements cannot be said to have been sufficient to cure the defect.[20] Accordingly, I am of the opinion that the Appellant did not receive clear, timely, and consistent information that he was being charged with aiding and abetting his tenants' murders. As a result, I would have concluded that the Trial Chamber did not err in declining to convict the Appellant for these crimes.

[20] Further, it should be noted that, contrary to the anticipated testimony of Witness TBC (according to which Marie and Béatrice were killed "on the spot" after being expelled by the Appellant), the Trial Chamber found that the killing of Marie and Béatrice occurred several hours after they were expelled by the Appellant ("in the night of 13 April 1994": See Trial Judgement, para. 196).

IX. PARTIALLY DISSENTING OPINION OF JUDGE MERON

For the reasons expressed by Judge Güney in section B of his partially dissenting opinion, I too believe that the indictment failed to properly charge Gacumbitsi with aiding and abetting the murders of Marie and Béatrice, and that subsequent Prosecution submissions failed to cure this defect in the indictment. I therefore respectfully dissent from the judgement's conclusion[1] that Gacumbitsi should be convicted for aiding and abetting these murders.

Annex a: Procedural background

1. The main aspects of the appeal proceedings are summarized below.

A. Notice of Appeal and Briefs

2. The Trial Judgement was delivered in French on 17 June 2004.[5947] The Prosecution and the Appellant both submitted Notices of Appeal against the Trial Judgement.

1. Prosecution's Appeal

3. The Prosecution submitted its Notice of Appeal on 16 July 2004 and its Appeal Brief on 28 September 2004.[5948] On 29 September 2004, the Prosecution submitted a motion to vary and clarify three grounds in its Notice of Appeal.[5949] The Appellant did not respond to that motion.[5950] On 15 December 2004, the Appeals Chamber allowed the motion[5951] and the Prosecution filed its Amended Notice of Appeal on 16 December 2004. The Appellant submitted his Response to the Prosecution Appeal Brief on 10 January 2005. On 19 January 2005, the Prosecution submitted its Reply.[5952]

2. Appellant's Appeal

4. The Appellant submitted his Notice of Appeal on 20 July 2004 and his Appeal Brief on 4 October 2004.[5953] The Prosecution filed its Response in English on 12 November 2004, and a French translation of the Prosecution Response was filed on 1 March 2005. During a Status Conference held on 8 March 2005, the Pre-Appeal Judge granted the Appellant's request for an extension of time to file his Reply by 23 March 2005.[5954] On 22 March 2005, the Appellant requested a further extension of time to file his Reply.[5955] The Pre-Appeal Judge ordered the Appellant to file his Reply no later than 29 March 2005.[5956] The Appellant filed his Reply on 1 April 2005.

B. Assignment of Judges

5. On 23 July 2004, the Presiding Judge of the Appeals Chamber assigned the following Judges to hear the appeal: Judge Mohamed Shahabuddeen, Judge Florence Ndepele Mwachande Mumba, Judge

[5947] A Judgement Corrigendum to the English version was filed on 27 October 2004.
[5948] The Appellant submitted a motion (Motion for Transmission of Documents in French and for an Extension of the Time Limit, filed confidentially in French on 5 October 2004) to obtain a French translation of this document and the Pre-Appeal Judge ordered the Registrar to provide such translation to the Appellant no later than 17 November 2004 (Order Concerning Translation, 15 November 2004). The translation was filed on 17 November 2004, and communicated to the Defence on 1 December 2004 (See Gacumbitsi Response, para. 31).
[5950] The French translation of the Prosecution's Motion for Variation of Three Grounds in its Notice of Appeal Pursuant to Rule 108 of the Rules was transmitted to the Appellant on 17 November 2004, and the Appellant was ordered to file his response at the latest on 29 November 2004: Ordonnance portant calendrier, 19 November 2004. The Appellant did not submit any response.
[5951] Décision relative à la requête du Procureur en modification de son acte d'appel, 15 December 2004.
[5952] A French translation (Réplique du Procureur au mémoire en réponse de la Défense) was filed on 18 April 2005.
[5954] T. 8 March 2005 pp. 2, 3.
[5955] Extremely Urgent Motion, filed confidentially in French on 22 March 2005. The Prosecution objected to this request in its Prosecutor's Response to the Requête en Extrême Urgence, filed confidentially on 23 March 2005. However, this response was only received by the Appeals Chamber after the Pre-Trial Judge had issued the Order of 24 March 2005.
[5956] Order, 24 March 2005.

Mehmet Güney, Judge Wolfgang Schomburg, and Judge Inés Mónica Weinberg de Roca.[5957] Judge Weinberg de Roca was designated the Pre-Appeal Judge.[5958] On 15 July 2005, Judge Fausto Pocar was assigned to replace Judge Weinberg de Roca, effective 15 August 2005.[5959] On 18 November 2005, Judges Liu Daqun and Theodor Meron were assigned to replace Judges Mumba and Pocar, with immediate effect.[5960]

C. Motions to Admit Additional Evidence and Related Motions

6. On 18 July 2005, the Appellant filed a motion for the admission of additional evidence.[5961] The Prosecution submitted its response on 28 July 2005.[5962] A French translation of that response was filed on 6 September 2005, and the Appellant did not file a reply. On 7 September 2005, the Prosecution filed its Motion to Seek Leave to File Supplementary Material Relating to Gacumbitsi's Rule 115 Application. A French translation of that motion was filed on 22 September 2005. The Appellant filed a response on 12 October 2005.[5963] The Appeals Chamber denied the Appellant's motion for the admission of additional evidence and dismissed the Prosecution's related motion as moot.[5964]

7. On 9 December 2005, the Appellant filed a motion seeking, inter alia, to be provided with copies of all statements of witnesses and parties civiles in a Belgian court proceeding in the case of Nzabonimana et al.[5965] The Appeals Chamber denied this request.[5966]

8. On 1 February 2006, the Prosecution made a disclosure of potentially exculpatory material in the form of two documents.[5967] On 9 February 2006, the Appellant moved to admit these documents as additional evidence,[5968] and, on the same date, the Appeals Chamber denied this motion.[5969]

D. Hearing of the Appeals

9. Pursuant to a Scheduling Order of 8 December 2005,[5970] the Appeals Chamber heard the parties' oral arguments on 8 and 9 February 2006 in Arusha, Tanzania. At the close of the hearing, the Appellant made use of the opportunity to address the Appeals Chamber.

I.C.T.Y. : Appeals Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Stanislav Galić, Decision on Momčilo Perišić's Motion Seeking Access to Confidential Material in the Galic Case, 16 February 2006 (IT-98-29)

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber", "Tribunal") is seized with a request, filed on 13 March 2006 by Jean de Dieu Kamuhanda, to dismiss Prosecution submissions related to a recent filing and to issue various orders related to an ongoing investigation into false testimony.[5973]

2. On 19 September 2005, the Appeals Chamber dismissed Mr. Kamuhanda's appeal from this conviction and life sentence, entered by Trial Chamber II on 22 January 2004, for genocide and crimes against humanity.[5974] Presently, Mr. Kamuhanda has no proceedings before the Tribunal. The Appeals Chamber recalls, however, that it directed the Prosecution, pursuant to Rule 77 (C) (i) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal ("Rules"), to investigate discrepancies arising from testimony given during the hearing of the merits of the Appeal and the consequent possibility of false testimony.[5975] As a result, the Prosecutor appointed a Special Counsel to conduct the instigation which is ongoing and near completion.[5976]

3. On 3 March 2006, the Prosecution disclosed to Mr. Kamuhanda a confidential transcript of closed session testimony given by Defence Witness 7/14 in Prosecutor v. Rwamakuba, ICTR Case No. 98-44C-T.[5977] In a statement accompanying its disclosure, the Prosecution explained that it disclosed this transcript because the witness provided evidence "relevant" to Mr. Kamuhanda.[5978] The Prosecution stated that Witness 7/14 testified that Witnesses GET and GEK in the Kamuhanda trial organized false testimony against Mr. Kamuhanda.[5979] The Prosecution added that it had also provided the transcripts to the Special Counsel appointed by the Prosecutor to investigate allegations of false testimony in the Kamuhanda case.[5980]

4. In his submissions, Mr. Kamuhanda raises issues related to the use of the disclosed transcripts in review of proceedings and questions related to the special investigations generally. Mr. Kamuhanda characterizes the Prosecution's filing as a request to the Appeals Chamber to preclude the use of the transcript in an eventual request for review under Rule 120.[5981] This is perhaps due to the fact that the Prosecution filing disclosing the transcript was accompanied by a discussion of why, in its view, the transcripts did not constitute a "new fact" in the event that Mr. Kamuhanda were to use the evidence in review proceedings pursuant to Rule 120.[5982] In its response to Mr. Kamuhanda's submissions, the Prosecution clarifies that its original filing was simply a fulfilment of its continuing disclosure obligations under Rule 68 (E), and not an attempt to prevent the use of the transcript.[5983] Nonetheless, in reply, Mr. Kamuhanda persists in his objections to the other witnesses from the Rwamakuba case.[5984] Mr. Kamuhanda does not elaborate in any detail on the specific relevance of that evidence to him.

5. The Appeals Chamber considers that the Prosecution's original filing is a routine disclosure pursuant to Rule 68. At this Stage, the Prosecution's submissions which accompanied its filing of the disclosed material are both irrelevant and premature, and the Appeals Chamber does not take them into account. It is for Mr. Kamuhanda to determine what use, if any, to make of the disclosed material. In addition, the Appeals Chamber does not find it appropriate to consider Mr. Kamuhanda's request for additional disclosure, Mr. Kamuhanda presently has no case pending before the Appeals Chamber. Furthermore, he has not identified any failing on the Prosecution's part in discharging its continuing disclosure obligations.[5985] The Appeals Chamber highlights that Mr. Kamuhanda may obtain public

[5985] The Appeals Chamber also observes that the Prosecution has recently provided Mr. Kamuhanda with the requested material. See *The Prosecutor v. transcripts from the Registry and direct any request for confidential material to the Chamber seized of the given case.[5986]

6. Mr. Kamuhanda also complains that, despite repeated requests on his part, the Special Counsel appointed by the Prosecutor to investigate possible false testimony in his case has not yet interviewed either him or his counsel.[5987] Consequently, Mr Kamuhanda asks the Appeals Chamber to order the Prosecution to cease its investigation or, in the alternative, to allow him and his counsel an opportunity to be heard.[5988] In any event, he requests the Appeals Chamber to fix a date for the filing of the Special Counsel's final report and to provide him with a copy.[5989] The Prosecution responds that Mr. Kamuhanda's request is inappropriate, emphasizing its discretion and independence in the conduct of the investigation.[5990]

7. In directing the Prosecution to investigate the possibility of false testimony, the Appeals Chamber left it to the Prosecutor's discretion to take the eventual steps and measures which he may deem necessary and appropriate under the circumstances.[5991] Moreover, Rule 70 (A) provides that reports prepared in connection with the investigation of a case are not subject to disclosure.[5992] Consequently, Mr. Kamuhanda's requests related to the investigation lack merit.

8. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Mr. Kamuhanda's request in all respects.

Defence for Ntahobali

1. The Defence moves the Chamber for leave to add convictee Georges Rutaganda and Witness WDSA to its witness list and to reconsider the Decision of 26 August 2005, thereby allowing Witness MJ110 to testify to the following:

- That the Accused was bedridden for nearly one week between late April and early May 1994 and therefore, he did not leave the Hotel Ihuriro during this period;

- That the Accused left for Cyangugu on 28 May 1994.

2. The Defence submits that Georges Rutaganda is identified as Witness NMRG and that a request for his addition to Ntahobali's initial witness list was denied by the Chamber on 26 August 2005. The Defence further states that it failed to provide the Chamber with the summary of Witness NMRG's expected testimony in the previous motion to vary the list of its witnesses filed on 2 August 2005, as the decision in relation to its motion to meet with said witness in the absence of the Prosecution and the Registry was still pending at that time.

3. The Defence submits that it only managed to meet with Georges Rutaganda on 28 October 2005, following the Decision of 22 September 2005, which granted such a visit.[2] During that meeting, Georges Rutaganda provided the Defence with a lot of information relevant to Ntahobali's case and accepted to testify for the Accused.

4. The Defence submits that in his capacity as a former member of the Council of Direction of Interahamwe za MRND, Georges Rutaganda is the only witness who will be able to enlighten the Chamber in relation to the Accused's purported involvement with the Interahamwe.[3] According to the Defence, no other witness for Ntahobali will testify to this issue.

[3] Paragraphs 33 and 34 of the Motion.

5. The Defence submits that it intends to call Georges Rutaganda as one of the last witnesses, thereby allowing the Prosecution and the other Defence teams sufficient time to conduct their investigations and to prepare their cross-examinations.[4]

6. With regard to Witness WDUSA, the Defence recalls that the Chamber denied the request for his addition to its witness list on 26 August 2005.[5] However, the Defence filed its notice of intent to enter a defence of alibi on 13 October 2005[6] and stated that Witness WDUSA is one of the proposed alibi witnesses. The Defence argues that the current request for his addition to the initial witness list is therefore justified. The Defence further asserts that Witness WDUSA, being the only alibi witness not related to the Accused, will testify to his and the Accused's presence in Cyangugu.[7]

7. With regard to Witness MJ110, the Defence recalls that the Chamber granted the request for her addition on 26 August 2005 but limited her expected testimony to the events involving the "Bihira girls" and to the sheltering of Tutsi refugees by the Accused.[8] The Defence submits that Witness MJ110 is amongst the alibi witnesses it intends to call, as specified in the notice of intent to enter a defence of alibi of 13 October 2005. As such, Witness MJ110 should be allowed to extend her testimony to the facts that the Accused was bedridden for nearly one week between late April and early May 1994 and that he left for Cyangugu towards 28 May 1994.[9] The Defence points out that the notice of alibi constitutes a new circumstance warranting the reconsideration of the Decision of 26 August 2005 as proposed above.[10]

8. The Defence alleges that the will-say statements of Witnesses WDUSA and MJ110 were filed on 10 August 2005 and that their respective identity and current address are included in the Defence notice of intent to enter a defence of alibi filed previously. The Prosecution and the other Defence teams will therefore be able to conduct an effective cross-examination of these two witnesses.

Kanyabashi's Response

9. The Defence for Kanyabashi moves the Chamber to limit the potential testimony of Georges Rutaganda to what is alleged in paragraphs 33 and 34 of the Motion and therefore requests the removal of paragraphs 1 and 2 from his will-say statement.[11] As for paragraphs 3, 6, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 18, 19, and 20, the Defence for Kanyabashi submits that it is unable to make any investigation in relation to the allegations mentioned in these paragraphs in the absence of precise and concrete facts making the cross-examination ineffective. It therefore requests the deletion of those paragraphs.[12]

10. The Defence for Kanyabashi submits that Georges Rutaganda's will-say statement gives no indication with regard to the moment in 1994 when he would have been present in Butare, in Ngoma Commune, or in Butare Prefecture, particularly between 6 April and 3 July 1994.[13]

Prosecutor's Response

[4] The Defence attached to its Motion as Annex A the Particular Sheet and the Will-say statement of Georges Rutaganda.

[11] Paragraph 15 of Kanyabashi's Response.
[12] Paragraph 16 of Kanyabashi's Response.
[13] Paragraph 11 of Kanyabashi's Response.

11. The Prosecution does not object to the proposed addition of Georges Rutaganda to the Accused's witness list. Nevertheless, the Prosecution underscores that the attached will-say statement of Georges Rutaganda is broad, imprecise, and has paragraphs that go beyond the temporal jurisdiction of the Tribunal or are irrelevant to the matter at hand. Thus, the Prosecution will suffer irreparable prejudice if the Defence is allowed to present such evidence.[14]

12. The Prosecution therefore requests the exclusion of the following paragraphs from Georges Rutaganda's will-say statement: 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 18, 19 and 20. The Prosecution argues that paragraph 1 falls outside the temporal jurisdiction of the Tribunal and is not material to the matter before the Chamber. Some witnesses previously called by Accused Nyiramasuhuko have sufficiently testified on the 1990 war and its impact on Butare, rendering paragraph 2 of the will-say statement unnecessary. As for paragraphs 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 13, 19, and 20, they lack precision and/or specific dates or incidents to support the alleged facts. The Prosecution further submits that Georges Rutaganda is not an expert witness; as such, he cannot be allowed to draw conclusions with respect to opinion of the experts referred to in paragraph 12 of the will-way statement. Paragraph 14 is outside the temporal jurisdiction of the Tribunal and the Defence failed to make the requisite disclosure, pursuant to Rule 67 (C). Regarding paragraph 15, the Prosecution submits that it is imprecise and irrelevant as it is not the Interahamwe or the RPF which are charged in the Indictment. According to the Prosecution, paragraph 18 is also irrelevant and imprecise.[15]

13. As far as the prayer for reconsideration is concerned, the Prosecution argues that the Defence has failed to demonstrate any special circumstances that would warrant reconsideration, nor has it demonstrated a clear error, or that a reconsideration of the Decision of 26 August 2005 will prevent an injustice in conformity with the jurisprudence.[16] The Prosecution submits that on 1 August 2005, when the Defence filed its first motion to vary its witness list, it was aware that Witness WDUSA would be giving alibi evidence but that it chose not to serve notice under Rule 67, until after the Trial Chamber ruled on that application on 29 August 2005.

14. With regard to Witness MJ110, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber has occasioned no injustice warranting a reconsideration of the Decision of 26 August 2005 in limiting this witness' expected testimony strictly to the "Bihira girls" and to the alleged sheltering of Tutsi refugees by the Accused. Furthermore, the Prosecution argues that the Defence should have known about the new proposed facts as referred to in paragraph 7 above and should have provided the Trial Chamber with this information on 1 August 2005, when it filed its application to vary its witness list. Finally, the Prosecution submits that the Defence has failed to comply with the Trial Chamber Decision of 1 March 2005, directing all Defence teams to immediately make the necessary disclosures in accordance with Rule 67 if they wish to rely on the defence of alibi, for the reason that it only filed its notice of alibi on 1 and 13 October 2005.

Ntahobali's Reply to Kanyabashi's Response

15. The Defence for Ntahobali submits that paragraphs 1 and 2 of Georges Rutaganda's will-say statement should stand as they do not go beyond what is elaborated in paragraphs 33 and 34 of the Motion. Rather, Paragraphs 1 and 2 are intended for illustration of paragraphs 33 and 34 of the Motion; as such they constitute evidence which is necessary to the Accused's defence strategy.[17]

[17] Paragraph 10 of Ntahobali's Reply to Kanyabashi's Response.

16. The Defence for Ntahobali submits that nowhere in the will-say statement is it mentioned that Georges Rutaganda came to Butare; rather, he will talk about his knowledge of Kajuga's coming there.[18]

17. The Defence for Ntahobali alleges that the purpose of a will-say statement is to enunciate the subjects which will be dealt with by the witness during his/her testimony but not to indicate all the concrete and precise facts to which he/she will testify, as claimed by the Defence for Kanyabashi.[19] Finally, the Defence for Ntahobali submits that it has fully complied with the provision of Rule 73 ter (B) (iii) in providing the summary of facts to which Georges Rutaganda will testify.[20]

HAVING DELIBERATED,

18. Following its Oral Decision of 12 December 2005, the Chamber finds that both the Prosecutor's Request of 6 December 2005 for an extension of time to reply[21] and the subsequent response filed by the Defence for Ntahobali on 7 December 2005[22] have become moot.

19. The Chamber also notes that on 19 December 2005, the Defence for Ntahobali filed its Reply to the Prosecutor's Response dated 12 December 2005. The Chamber finds such filing out of time as the timeframe of five days within which the Defence for Ntahobali should have filed its Reply expired on 17 December 2005 following the Oral Decision of 12 December 2005. The Chamber therefore concludes that Ntahobali's Reply to the Prosecutor's Response of 19 December 2005 is inadmissible and the Chamber will therefore not take it into consideration in deciding the instant Motion.

On the Addition of Georges Rutaganda as a Defence Witness for Ntahobali

20. The Chamber recalls decisions issued by this Tribunal where motions for additional witnesses have been granted in the interest of justice, and notes that the moving party has always provided the Chamber and the other Parties with an indication of the proposed witness' testimony, usually in the form of a summary of the proposed testimony or will-say statement, an indication of the relevance of the evidence to the proceedings, and an estimated length of the testimony. This is to ensure that other Parties are not taken by surprise or otherwise suffer prejudice and that there exists sufficient information upon which to prepare their examinations and carry out the necessary investigations if required. More importantly, it allows the Chamber to make a proper determination as to the materiality and probative value of the proposed testimony to the proceedings.[23]

21. The Chamber notes the Defence submissions alleging that Georges Rutaganda's testimony is relevant to its case; in his capacity as a former member of the Council of Direction of Interahamwe za MRND, Georges Rutaganda is the sole witness who will be able to enlighten the Chamber in relation to the Accused's purported involvement with the Interahamwe. After having reviewed Georges Rutaganda's will-say statement attached to the Motion, the Chamber is satisfied that his proposed testimony contains relevant and probative evidence which the Chamber should hear in the interest of justice. The Chamber therefore grants the motion for the addition of Georges Rutaganda as a Defence Witness for Ntahobali in the sense which will be discussed below.

On the Scope of Georges Rutaganda's Expected Testimony

22. Chamber notes that both the Prosecution and the Defence for Kanyabashi request that some paragraphs be removed from Georges Rutaganda's will-say statement and should not be part of his expected testimony before the Chamber.

23. The Chamber also notes the Defence for Ntahobali's submissions alleging that the purpose of a will-say statement is to enunciate the subjects which will be dealt with by the witness during his/her testimony, but not to indicate all the concrete and precise facts to which he/she will testify.[24]

24. The Chamber recalls its Oral Decision of 13 December 2005 and reiterates that since the sole purpose of the will-say statement is to enable the other party or the other parties to prepare and to raise issues, it must be clear enough to cover the scope of the proposed testimony of the witness. Accordingly, will-say statements must be full and comprehensive, not in the sense of giving all the details, but at least laying out the scope of what the witness is expected to cover in clear terms.[25]

25. After having thoroughly reviewed the Motion and the attached will-say of Georges Rutaganda, the Chamber finds that Georges Rutaganda's expected testimony, in his capacity as a former member of the Council of Direction of Interahamwe za MRND, should be strictly limited to the alleged involvement of Ntahobali with the Interahamwe as it is charged in the Indictment and supported by certain Prosecution witnesses. Accordingly, the Chamber limits Georges Rutaganda's expected testimony to paragraphs 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19 and 20 of his will-say statement. Regarding paragraph 12, the Chamber notes that Georges Rutaganda is being called as a factual witness and his testimony should be limited to the factual issues raised in this paragraph.

On the Reconsideration of the Decision of 26 August 2005

26. The Chamber recalls its jurisprudence on reconsideration, namely that,

> [t]he fact that the Rules are silent as to reconsideration, however, is not, in itself, determinative of the issue whether or not reconsideration is available in "particular circumstances" and a judicial body has inherent jurisdiction to reconsider its decision in "particular circumstances." Therefore, although the Rules do not explicitly provide for it, the Chamber has an inherent power to reconsider its own decisions. However, it is clear that reconsideration is an exceptional measure that is available only in particular circumstances.[26]

27. The Chamber notes that it has the inherent jurisdiction, to be exercised as its discretion, to reconsider an impugned decision, including but not limited to the following circumstances:

i. Where the impugned decision was erroneous in law or an abuse of discretion when decided and for this reason a procedural irregularity has caused a failure of natural justice; or,
ii. Where new material circumstances have arisen since the decision was issued.[27]

28. As for the reconsideration sought regarding Witness WDUSA, the Chamber notes the Defence submissions alleging that he is among the alibi witnesses, that he will testify to his and the Accused's presence in Cyangugu, and that he is the only alibi witness who is not related to the Accused.

29. The Chamber recalls the provision of Rule 67 and its Decision of 1 March 2005 where it directed "the Defence, to immediately, make the necessary disclosures in accordance with Rule 67 if they wish to rely on the defence of alibi."[28] Given that the Defence only filed its notice of alibi on 13 October 2005, the Chamber finds that this notice has not been filed in a timely manner. Further, the Chamber recalls its Decision for Certification to Appeal of 21 September 2005, draws the Defence's attention to Rule 67 in full and Sub-Rule 67 (B) in particular, and reiterates that the Defence for Ntahobali is not limited by the Chamber's Decision of 26 August 2005 if it wishes to avail itself of its right to present a defence of alibi.

30. The Chamber is of the opinion that the filing of the notice of intention to enter a defence of alibi with regard to Witness WDUSA on 13 October 2005 does not constitute a "new material circumstance" warranting a reconsideration of the Decision of 26 August 2005. The Chamber finds that the Defence must have known about the alleged alibi evidence prior to the issuance of said Decision. The motion for reconsideration is therefore denied.

31. However, the Chamber grants the motion for the addition of Witness WDUSA as an alibi witness whose expected testimony will be limited to the presence of the Accused in Cyangugu.

32. As for the reconsideration sought for Witness MJ110, the Chamber recalls the Defence submissions that she is also an alibi witness expected to testify to the facts that Ntahobali was bedridden for nearly one week between late April and early May 1994, and that he left for Cyangugu towards 28 May 1994.

33. The Chamber reiterates its reasoning set out in paragraphs 29 and 30 above and denies the motion for reconsideration of its Decision of 26 August 2005. Nonetheless, it grants the Defence motion to allow Witness MJ110 as an alibi witness to extend her testimony to the facts that Ntahobali was bedridden for nearly one week between late April and early May 1994, and that he left for Cyangugu towards 28 May 1994, coming back to Butare one week later.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIAL CHAMBER

NOW DECIDES the Motion, pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules, on the basis of the written briefs filed by the Parties.

The Defence

1. The Defence outlines the sequence of events during which it requested the Prosecution to disclose to it certain documents, which it describes as forming pat of the "Belgian files" pursuant to Rule 66 (B) of the Rules.[1] The Defence notes that, while the Prosecution disclosed some of the said files, it neglected to disclose others despite numerous reminders to that effect.[2] The Defence submits that the said "Belgian files" concern persons accused of committing crimes in Butare, such as Higaniro, Kanyabashi, Ntezimana and Ndayambaje. The Defence argues that their case files are of interest to the case against the Accused Ntahobali.[3]

2. In a letter dated 26 August 2005, the Defence noted that the documents numbered K006-4772 to K006-5719, K007-5604 to K007-5629, K002-8277 to K002-8350 and K028-8207 were missing and requested the Prosecution to make the necessary disclosure.[4]

3. In a letter dated 9 September 2005, the Prosecution indicated to the Defence that having perused the documents requested, it had formed the opinion that the requested documents did not concern the Accused and that they were neither relevant nor of any interest. Therefore, the Prosecution argued that it would not disclose them unless the Defence proved that they were relevant.[5] Furthermore, the Prosecution indicated that it had not used the requested documents during the presentation of its case.[6]

4. Following further unsuccessful requests for documents dated 13 September 2005, 14 November 2005, and 21 November 2005, the Defence decided to file a formal Motion under Rule 66 (B),[7] relying on the Bagosora Decision of 27 November 1997.[8]

[7] Motion at paras. 16-23.
[8] Decision on the Motion by the Defence Counsel for Disclosure of 27 November 1997 ; Motion at para. 57.

5. The Defence notes that none of the requirements under Rule 66 (B) call for the Defence to demonstrate that the documents it requests are relevant and of interest, contrary to the Prosecution's argument.[9]

6. The Defence outlines that contrary to the Prosecution' assertion that the Defence is asking for an unrestricted search, the Defence request is very precise and limited.

7. Moreover, the Defence recalls that the documents disclosed by the Prosecution in June 2005 are of the same nature as those currently requested, and there is no reference to the Accused in those documents either.

8. The Defence submits that the conditions under Rule 66 (B) are not cumulative and that it is sufficient for it to show that the documents requested are material to the preparation of its case.[10] On this issue, the Defence submits that:

(i) The requested documents from the "Belgian files" are documents which it has not yet perused and that therefore it is impossible for the Defence to precisely indicate the relevance of each document to its case;

(ii) The fact that the Prosecution did not use those documents when presenting its evidence is only one criterion under Rule 66 (B). The Defence argues that it suffices that prima facie, those documents are material to the preparation of the Defence. Since all the documents with the identified K-numbers seem to refer to events in Ngoma commune, a location where the Accused is alleged to have committed crimes, their disclosure could enlighten Counsel as to whether the Accused should testify or otherwise;

(iii) Higaniro's file is important to the Accused's case who is allegedly an Interahamwe leader: Higaniro was the director of SORWAL, a Company which was allegedly the financing organ of the Interahamwe, as testified to by Prosecution Expert Witness Guichaoua;

(iv) Kanyabashi's and Ndayambaje's files are important because they are both co-Accused who allegedly conspired in the planning and execution of the genocide;

(v) Ntezimana's file is material to the case of the Accused because he was a professor at Université Nationale du Rwanda (UNR), a location where the Accused is alleged to have led attacks.

9. The Defence argues that the Prosecution is not in a position to know how material the files are to the case against the Accused and that moreover, since the Prosecution has not raised any of the three exceptions for disclosure of materials under Rule 66 (B), the Prosecution is duty-bound to disclose the same to the Defence.[11]

The Prosecution Response

10. The Prosecution admits that it corresponded with the Defence regarding disclosure of documents. The Prosecution submits, however, that the request of November 2005 listed in the Motion concerned 3,800 pages of English, French, and Kinyarwanda documents.

11. The Prosecution requested the Defence to identify those documents it deemed necessary to its case among the 3,800 pages so that it could make a proper disclosure. The Prosecution submits that the Defence response to this request has been rather vague.

[9] Motion at para. 24.
[11] Motion at paras. 50, 52, 53.

12. Regarding the requirements of Rule 66 (B), the Prosecution submits that the Defence has failed to demonstrate whether the 3,800 pages it requests are "material to the preparation of the Defence". Rather, the Prosecution argues that the Defence's mere submission that the requested documents form part of the "Belgian files" is too broad and could cover innumerable or many more thousands of files/documents.

13. The Prosecution submits that it is the Chamber's discretion to determine the scope of documents which are "material to the preparation of the defence," and therefore not all documents mentioning Butare Préfecture could be requested and disclosed under Rule 66, because the spirit of the Rule is not to permit the Defence to go on a "fishing expedition".

14. Noting that the Defence has merely indicated a series of "K" numbers without specifying the documents in question and without providing a schedule or index of the actual documents, the Prosecution points out that according to the Decision in Bizimungu et al.[12] referred to by the Defence, Rule 68 does not give the Defence the right to conduct an unrestricted search of the Prosecution's electronic databases for material which the Prosecution is under no obligation to disclose under the Rules.

15. The Prosecution thus prays the Chamber to deny the Motion to disclose the listed documents in its entirety.

The Defence Reply

16. As a preliminary matter, the Defence, citing the jurisprudence of the Chamber to this effect, argues that the Prosecution Response was filed one day out of time and should therefore be rejected since no explanations have been provided for filing out of time.[13]

17. In the eventuality that the Chamber admits the Response, the Defence essentially submits the following:

(i) Regarding the Prosecution's argument that the Defence request is too broad and vague as to the materiality of the requested documents to the case of the Accused, the Defence reiterates its arguments at paras. 45 to 48 of its Motion, adding that the Indictment against the Accused alleges that he exercised authority over the Interahamwe militia of Butare Préfecture;

(ii) Para. 6.9 of the Indictment alleges that the crimes committed in Butare Préfecture from 19 April 1994 onwards were planned;

(iii) Furthermore, the Indictment alleges that the Accused conspired to commit genocide with, among others, two retired bourgmestres of Butare Préfecture, namely Ndayambaje and Kanyabashi;

(iv) In this regard, the Defence argues that all the documents pertaining to Butare Préfecture are material to the preparation of the case for the Accused;

(v) Regarding the Prosecution's accusation of a "fishing expedition" by the Defence because it merely lays out the "K" numbers of documents it requests, the Defence reiterates its submissions in the Motion and argues further that since it is not in possession of the documents in question, it is not possible for it to make an index of the same.

18. In conclusion, the Defence argues that it has largely demonstrated prima facie that the documents requested are material to the preparation of the Defence.

19. The Chamber has considered all the submissions of the Parties.

20. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber notes the Defence submissions that the Prosecution Response filed on 7 December 2005 was filed out of the time-limits set by the Chamber. The Chamber finds that the said Response was indeed filed one day out of time. Because the Prosecution has not provided the Chamber with any explanations for its tardy filing, the Chamber finds the said filing inadmissible.

21. The Chamber recalls the provisions of Rule 66 (B):

> "At the request of the Defence, the Prosecutor shall, subject to Sub-Rule (C) permit the Defence to inspect any books, documents, photographs and tangible objects in his custody or control, which are material to the preparation of the defence, or are intended for use by the Prosecutor as evidence at trial or were obtained from or belonged to the accused."

22. A plain reading of the Sub-Rule shows that the Prosecutor is obliged, subject to Sub-Rule (C) to permit the Defence to inspect the items enumerated, and is not obliged to disclose them pursuant to the Sub-Rule. However, the Defence is only required to demonstrate one of the three conditions laid out under Sub-Rule (B) before the Chamber may grant permission to inspect the enumerated items (emphasis ours).

23. In order to be granted inspection of evidence under Rule 66 (B), the Defence is required to demonstrate the prima fade materiality of the evidence in question to the preparation of its case, as well as that the said evidence is in the custody or control of the Prosecution. The requirement that the documents are in the custody or control of the Prosecution implies that

> "Defence Counsel must make specific identification of any requested documentation, thus enabling the Trial Chamber to take action".[14]

24. In the instant case, the Chamber notes that the Prosecution does not deny possessing the documents requested as identified by the K-numbers enumerated. Rather, it essentially submits that the request is too vague, since it concerns 3,800 pages of documents, some of which are in Kinyarwanda. On its part, the Defence submits that it is unable to make a precise indication of the relevance of each of the documents it requests, given that it has not been able to peruse each one of them.

25. To demonstrate materiality of the requested documents to its case pursuant to Rule 66 (B), the Defence argues that said documents concern events in locations for which the Accused is alleged to have committed crimes, they concern his activities as an alleged leader of the Interahamwe, they concern his Co-Accused, and they may enlighten Counsel as to whether the Accused should testify or otherwise.

26. The Chamber notes that the Defence is unable to precisely specify the exact relevance of each and every piece of document it requests since it has not had the opportunity to peruse them. In the Chamber's opinion, this notwithstanding, the Defence has made a prima facie demonstration that the documents it requests may be material to the preparation of its case, in the sense that they concern Butare préfecture.

Delalić et al*., Case N°IT-96-21-212, Decision on the Motion by the Accused Zejnil Delalić for the Disclosure of Evidence, of 6 September 1996, at para. 11.

27. Accordingly, the Chamber orders the Prosecution, pursuant to Rule 66(B), to immediately permit the Defence to inspect the requested documents with K-numbers; K006-4772 to K006-5719, K007-5604 to K007-5629, K002-8277 to K002-8350 and K028-8207. Following such inspection, the Defence may indicate to the Prosecution the specific document(s) it considers to be material to the preparation of its case.

28. The Chamber also reminds the Parties of the provisions of Rule 67 (C).

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIAL CHAMBER

ORDERS the Prosecution, pursuant to Rule 66 (B), to immediately permit the Defence to inspect the requested documents with the following K-numbers: K006-4772 to K005-5719, K007-5604 to K007-5629, K002-8277 to K002-8350, and K028-8207.

DENIES the Motion in all other respects.

[1] Unofficial translation: "The Defence's Extremely Urgent Motion to Have Witness WDUSA Testify by Video Link in accordance with Rule 71 (A) and (D) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence."

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties, pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules.

The Defence

1. Defence Witness WDUSA, who is to testify on the alibi of the Accused, was added to the Defence witness list by Decision of 27 January 2006.[2] Following the grant of his addition to its list, the Defence submits that it would be in the interests of justice for WDUSA to testify via video conference from The Hague pursuant to Rule 71 (D).

2. The Defence relying on the Bagosora et al. Decisions of 8 October 2004,[3] and of 20 December 2004,[4] submits that WDUSA is unable to travel to Arusha to give testimony as a result of a heart surgery he underwent in 2002. In the same year, WDUSA was authorised to testify via video link from The Hague in the Cyangugu trial,[5] and to this date, he is unable to undertake long journeys.

3. The Defence submits that the testimony of WDUSA is important since he is the only alibi witness who is not related to the Accused who is expected to testify to having been in Cyangugu with the Accused during the events of 1994. Furthermore, the Defence reminds the Chamber of its Decision of 27 January 2006 where the importance of WDUSA's testimony was considered.

The Prosecutor

4. The Prosecution objects to the Motion submitting that the Bagosora et al. Decisions relied upon by the Defence are distinguishable from the current circumstances: WDUSA is not of advanced aged, no unredacted statement of the witness has been disclosed to the Prosecution and there is no medical evidence that the witness is unable to travel for medical reasons.

The Defence's Reply

5. Regarding the Prosecution's allusions to the fact that WDUSA is not of an advanced age, the Defence refers to the Bagosora et al. Decision of 20 December 2004 and the Brdanin[6] Order of the ICTY and submits that the Chamber does not need to consider the age of the witness rather it is required to consider the material inability of the witness to travel due to medical reasons.

6. Regarding the production of a medical report in support of its request, the Defence submits it had assumed it would not need to produce another certificate in this case since such a certificate was produced when WDUSA testified in the Cyangugu trial. Notwithstanding, the Defence produces a medical report dated 2 February 2006 annexed to its Reply.

[6] Prosecutor v. Brdanin, IT-99-36-T, (TC) Order to Allow Testimony via Video-Conference in Accordance with Rule 71 bis, 23 September 2003.

7. The Chamber underscores the general rule articulated in Rule 90 (A), that "witnesses shall, in principle, be heard directly by the Chamber." [7] The Chamber recalls its reasoning in the Nyiramasuhuko et al Decision of 1 March 2005 that,

> "[a]lthough the testimony of witnesses via video-link has been granted in other cases, such measure was granted under absolute necessity only and the Tribunal regularly recalled that it had a clear preference for testimony in court."[8]

8. Nonetheless, the Chamber recalls that it has discretion to grant the hearing of testimony by video-conference in lieu of physical appearance where it is in the interests of justice, based on an assessment of; (i) the importance of the testimony, (ii) the inability or unwillingness of the witness to attend, (iii) whether a good reason can be adduced for that inability and unwillingness. The burden of proof for authorising a witness' testimony to be taken by way of video-conference lies with the Party making the request.[9]

9. With respect to the first criterion, the Chamber recalls that in its Decision of 27 January 2006, it granted the addition of Witness WDUSA as an alibi witness whose expected testimony will be limited to the presence of the Accused in Cyangugu. Indeed his addition to the Defence list of witnesses indicates that the specific testimony Witness WDUSA proposes to give is sufficiently important. The Chamber also recalls that the unredacted will-say statement of the proposed testimony of Witness WDUSA was considered when the Chamber made its Decision of 26 August 2005 regarding the Defence Motion to modify its list of witnesses.[10]

10. Regarding the second and third criteria, the Chamber finds that on the basis of the medical report dated 2 February 2006, the Defence has established that Witness WDUSA is, for medical reasons, unable to travel to Arusha to give evidence.[11]

11. In the Chamber's opinion, the Defence has demonstrated exceptional circumstances warranting that Witness WDUSA testifies by video-conference from The Hague. For the above reasons and in the interests of justice, the Chamber grants the Defence Motion. Accordingly, the Chamber authorises Witness WDUSA to give his testimony via video conference from The Hague in lieu of his physical presence in Arusha.

12. To facilitate organisation for the taking of a testimony via video conference from The Hague, and recalling the Chamber's direction that the case for the Defence for Ntahobali be closed at the latest on 10 March 2006, the Chamber directs the Defence to liaise immediately with the Registry to facilitate the proceedings and the scheduling of the testimony of Witness WDUSA.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Motion and orders that Defence Witness WDUSA give his testimony via video conference from The Hague in lieu of his physical presence in Arusha.

DIRECTS the Registry to make all the necessary arrangements in respect of the testimony via video conference of Defence Witness WDUSA from The Hague;

DIRECTS the Defence to diligently assist the Registry with the necessary arrangements to ensure that the video conference testimony of Defence Witness WDUSA is taken without delay.

SITTING as Trial Chamber II, composed of Judge William H. Sekule, Presiding, Judge Arlette Ramaroson and Judge Solomy Balungi Bossa (the "Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of the Prosecutor's "Motion for Reciprocal Inspection of Documents Intended for Use by the Defence of Sylvain Nsabimana", filed on 20 February 2006 (the "Motion");

NOTING the Prosecution's letter to the Defence for Nsabimana, dated 13 February 2006, and requesting that inspection and examination of evidence be made possible as quickly as possible;

NOTING that the Defence for Nsabimana did not respond to the Motion;

WHEREAS the Prosecution prays that the Defence for Sylvain Nsabimana be directed to make all the material it intends to use in its defence case immediately available for inspection, since the Defence for Nsabimana has already inspected the books, documents, photographs and tangible objects in the Prosecution's custody or control which were intended for use during the presentation of the Prosecution case, pursuant to Rule 66 (B);[1]

WHEREAS the Prosecution recalls that according to the directions given by the Trial Chamber during the Status Conference on 8 February 2006, the Defence for Nsabimana is to commence immediately after the conclusion of the Defence case for Arsène Shalom Ntahobali, due to end by 10 March 2006,[2] thus rendering it vital that the Prosecution be granted the opportunity for reciprocal inspection in enough time to prepare itself adequately;[3]

HAVING DELIBERATED, the Chamber

RECALLS that Rule 67 (C) states that

> "[i]f the Defence makes a request pursuant to Rule 66 (B), the Prosecutor shall in turn be entitled to inspect any books, documents, photographs and tangible objects, which are within the custody or control of the Defence and which it intends to use as evidence at the trial";

NOTES that if the Defence makes a request under Rule 66 (B), it triggers the reciprocal provision of Rule 67 (C);

FOR THIS REASON, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Motion;

DIRECTS the Defence for Nsabimana to comply with the provision of Rule 67 (C); and DIRECTS the Parties to set up an appointment for the Prosecution to inspect any books, documents, photographs and tangible objects within the Defence for Nsabimana's custody or care and which it intends to use as evidence at trial, as soon as possible.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), in particular Rules 71 (D) and 71 (A);

NOW DECIDES the Motion, pursuant to Rule 73 (A), on the basis of the written briefs filed by the Parties.

The Defence

1. The Defence moves the Chamber to allow Witness NMBMF to testify by means of a video-conference, pursuant to Rule 71 (D), from the United States, where she currently resides, specifically either from Boston or from the United Nations' Headquarters in New York City. Alternatively, the Defence submits that if this prayer fails, it seeks that a Presiding Officer be mandated to take Witness NMBMP's deposition, pursuant to Rule 71 (A).

2. The Defence submits that it is impossible for Witness NMBMF' to travel outside the United States before 28 March 2006, when she is due to appear before an Immigration Judge.[1] On 31 January 2006, the Defence received an e-mail from Mr McHaffey,[2] Witness NMBMF's immigration Counsel in the United States, enumerating various reasons for the witness' inability to travel outside the United States before 28 March 2006:[3]

- Witness NMBMP is currently on "removal proceedings"[4] and may not therefore travel without the prior permission known as "advance parole" from the Immigration service.[5] An "advance parole" can only be obtained from the Office of International Affairs in Washington, D.C.
- Second, a person subject to a "removal proceeding" who leaves the country without an "advance parole" will not be allowed to return. Further, an "advance parole" can be revoked while the beneficiary is outside the country, and the Court has no jurisdiction to review the decision of revocation.[6]
- Third, Witness NMBMP does not have a valid passport[7] which makes it impossible for her to travel, even if she were granted an "advance parole". Witness NMBMP is applying for political asylum in the United States, and any request for a passport from the Rwandan Embassy may negatively affect her application for asylum.

- Fourth, Witness NMBMP is afraid of coming to Tanzania as she fears reprisals from the Rwandan government.
- Finally, Mr. McHaffey indicates that Witness NMBMP is still willing to testify for the Accused even though it is impossible for her to leave the United States for the reasons cited above.[8]

3. The Defence submits that as an alibi witness, Witness NMBMP's testimony is of great importance to Ntahobali's case.[9]

The Prosecution

4. The Prosecution submits that the Defence has failed to demonstrate that it has sought the assistance of the Witness and Victims Support Section (WVSS) in its endeavours to have Witness NMBMP testify in Arusha. WVSS has the ability to contact and facilitate the travel and related matters pertaining to witnesses with the relevant authorities of a country where the witness is residing. Fear of arrest or persecution is not a ground for a witness' refusal to appear in Arusha.

5. The Prosecution opposes the request for Witness NMBMP to testify under Rule 71 (A), given the importance being attributed to this witness by the Defence. If the witness is not able to come to Arusha, then she should testify via video-link, which would allow the Trial Chamber to assess her demeanour.

The Defence Reply

6. The Defence submits that WVSS has indicated that it cannot guarantee that the American authorities would allow Witness NMBMP to re-enter the country, if she leaves it.[10] In addition, even assuming that WVSS would be able to assist Witness NMBMP in obtaining all the requisite travel documents, including the "advance parole", it cannot guarantee that the "advance parole" will not be revoked while the witness is outside American territory.[11]

Having deliberated,

7. The Chamber underscores the general rule articulated in Rule 90 (A), that "witnesses shall, in principle, be heard directly by the Chamber."[12] The Chamber recalls its reasoning in the Nyiramasuhuko et al. Decision of 1 March 2005 that,

> "[a]lthough the testimony of witnesses via video-link has been granted in other cases, such measure was granted under absolute necessity only and the Tribunal regularly recalled that it had a clear preference for testimony in court."[13]

Karemera*, ICTR-98-44-1, (TC), Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Special Protective Measures for Witness G and T and ta Extend the Decision on Protective mesures for the Prosecutor's Witnesses in

8. Nonetheless, the Chamber recalls that it has discretion to grant the hearing of testimony by video-conference in lieu of physical appearance where it is in the interests of justice, based on an assessment of; (i) the importance of the testimony, (ii) the inability or unwillingness of the witness to attend, (iii) whether a good reason can be adduced for that inability and unwillingness.[14] The burden of proof for authorising a witness' testimony to be taken by way of video-conference lies with the Party making the request.[15]

9. With respect to the first criterion, after having reviewed Witness NMBMP's will-say statement,[16] the Chamber find that the Defence has demonstrated that Witness NMBMP's testimony is sufficiently important to the Accused's defence in that she is expected to challenge prosecution allegations that the Accused abducted and raped young girls at Hotel Ihuliro,[17] and in that she is an alibi witness.

10. With respect to the second and third criteria, the Chamber observes that it is submitted that Witness NMBMP is unable and also unwilling to come to testify at the Tribunal.

11. As far as her alleged inability is concerned, the Chamber is of the view that it has not been demonstrated that the witness's alleged current immigration status or the requisite immigration procedure she may be pursuing render her unable to travel outside the United States. The Chamber therefore concludes that no good reason has been adduced to support Witness NMBMP's alleged inability to testify at the Tribunal.

12. With respect to Witness NMBMP's unwillingness, the Chamber has noted Annex B, a copy of an e-mail purportedly sent by Mr McHaffey Witness' immigration counsel in the email, the Witness is alleged to be unwilling to travel to Arusha in order to give testimony because of alleged fears of some sections of the Rwandan government. According to the Tribunal jurisprudence, the applicable test is "real fear underscored by an objective basis", and that "subjective fear is insufficient."[18] in the instant case, the Chamber notes that the Defence merely submits that the Witness fears to come to Tanzania, while her application for political asylum is pending. She is further alleged to fear reprisals from certain sections of the Rwandan Government without demonstrating the objective basis in support of her alleged fears. The Chamber recalls that the Witness is already subject of protective measures. The Chamber therefore find that the Defence has failed to demonstrate that there is a real fear underscored by an objective basis preventing Witness NMBMP from testifying in Arusha and that her "unwillingness to attend" is not supported by any good reason.

13. In light of the above, the Defence request to have Witness NMBMP testify via video-link is therefore denied.

14. As for the alternative prayer under Rule 71 (A), the Chamber considers that given the alleged importance of the witness' testimony, it would be more appropriate to hear the witness in court. The Chamber therefore also denies the Defence request in that respect.

WHEREAS the Defence seeks clarification as to whether its request made at Paragraph 16 and in the prayers to the Motion of 1 December 2005[1] was granted, since this request formed part of the object of the Motion and since the Decision of 31 January 2006[2] is not clear as to whether those K-number referred to at paragraph 16 and in the prayers to the Motion of 1 December 2005 were granted or otherwise;

NOTING the Defence submissions that, whereas the Chamber discussed the entirety of its prayers to the Motion of 1 December 2005 when it considered its Decision of 31 January 2006, the Chamber omitted to grant inspection of the same in its order;

WHEREAS the Defence prays the Chamber to correct the mistake it made in the order to its Decision of 31 January 2006 by issuing a corrigendum ordering inspection of all the documents in the

K-numbers specified in the prayer to the Motion of 1 December 2005 and also reproduced in this Request for a Corrigendum;[3]

HAVING RECEIVED the Prosecutor's Response to the Request for a Corrigendum, wherein the Prosecution submits that it does not object to the inclusion into the Chamber's Decision of 31 January 2006, an order for inspection of the K-Numbers listed in the Request for a Corrigendum;

HAVING DELIBERATED;

1. The Chamber recalls its Decision of 31 January 2006 in which it granted the Defence request to inspect the documents with K-numbers mentioned at Paragraph 7 of the Motion of 1 December 2005.[4]

2. The Chamber notes that when it considered the above-mentioned Motion, it was not in a position to know what the list of K-numbers in the final Defense prayer referred to as Paragraph 16 therein did not specifically list the K-numbers which it alluded to nor was the letter of 14 November 2005, which allegedly listed that series of K-numbers, attached to the Motion.

3. In the Chamber's opinion, a party's prayer should logically be presented and supported in the body of the motion, which was not how it was done in the instant case. There was therefore, no basis upon which to grant the Defence request for a corrigendum with respect to the remaining K-numbers listed in its final prayer to the Motion of 1 December 2005, apart from those listed at Paragraph 7 of the said Motion.

4. Accordingly, the Chamber denies the Defence request for it to issue a corrigendum. The Chamber therefore reiterates its Decision of 31 January 2005 which should read as it stands.

5. However, since the Prosecution does not object to the inspection of the requested documents indicated by K-numbers, the Parties may make arrangements to facilitate that inspection.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIAL CHAMBER

DENIES the Defence request; and

REITERATES its Decision of 31 January 2006.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute"), in particular Articles 19 and 20 and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties, pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules.

The Defence

1. On 23 January 2006, the Chamber granted the Defence request to facilitate its access to the Accused at the UNDF and directed the Registry to assist.[1] From the date of the Memorandum sent by the Registry to this effect, members of the Defence Team were given access to the Accused without much difficulty.

2. The Defence recalls that during the Status Conference of 8 February 2006, it was directed to indicate, by 17 February 2006, whether the Accused would testify. The Defence submits that this situation is legally and factually new and has created an immediate need to have greater access to the Accused.

3. On Sunday 12 February 2006, Lead Counsel for the Accused was denied access to the Accused. After consulting with the Deputy Commanding Officer of the UNDF, he was allowed access to the Accused until 01.00 p.m. only.

4. This issue was raised in court on Monday 13 February 2006, unsuccessfully thus far.

5. The Defence met with Ms. Ngum of DCDMS and an agreement was reached. A general request for access to the Accused every evening and week-end for the duration of presentation of its case, i.e., until 10 March 2006 should be made. The Defence then wrote a letter to the Commanding Officer of the UNDF, copying it to Ms. Ngum to this effect. On 13, 14 and 15 February 2006, the Defence had access to the Accused until 06:30 p.m. On 16 February 2006, members of the Defence were granted access to the Accused until 06:15 p.m., regardless of its request for longer access.

6. The Defence recalls that the Defence of the Accused Nyiramasuhuko was given larger access to its client when it was presenting its defence. Relying on the provisions of Article 19 and 20 of the Statute, the Defence submits that through their discriminatory attitude, the UNDF authorities have infringed upon the rights of the Accused.

7. The Defence notes that it is of great importance that the schedule should not be interrupted unnecessarily. The Defence thereby relies on the jurisprudence of the ICTY in the Tadic Appeal Chamber Judgment of 15 July 1999 at para. 52[2] and requests that it be granted greater access to the Accused so that an order to the authorities of the UNDF is issued directing that access shall be granted every day of the week until 10:00 p.m. including week-ends.

The Prosecution

8. The Prosecution argues that the Defence request for access to the Accused until 10:00 p.m. every day of the week is "not practicable." It argues that the Motion is without basis as it seeks to deny the Registrar and UNDF Commanding Officer of all discretion.

9. The Prosecution submits that under Rules 61 and 65 of the Rules Covering the Detention of Persons Awaiting Trial or Appeal Before the Tribunal or Otherwise Detained on the Authority of the Tribunal (the "Detention Rules"), visits to detained persons, including the Accused are regulated by the Commanding Officer by prior arrangement and they shall therefore be under such restrictions and supervision as the Commanding Officer, in consultation with the Registrar, may deem necessary.

[2] Said Para provides, "It follows that the Chambers shall provide every practicable facility it is capable of granting under the Rules and Statute when faced with t request by a party for assistance in presenting its case." (Emphasis by the Defence of Ntahobali)

The Defence's Reply

10. In its Reply, the Defence maintains that the Prosecution has no legitimate legal interest in the Motion and therefore its Response should be dismissed.

The Registrar's Submissions

11. The Registrar submits that the Commanding Officer of the UNDF consents to provide the Defence Team of Ntahobali with exceptional access to the Detention Facilities depending on staffing and security issues. Until the end of the Accused's testimony, visits to the Accused outside of normal visiting hours, i.e., on Fridays up to 05.00 p.m. and on Saturdays from 09.00 a.m. up to 05:00 p.m. are allowed. Sunday visits cannot be allowed due to lack of staff. Any requests for visits outside the prescribed time frames should be made at least 24 hours prior to such visit.

12. The Registrar submits that for a number of years, the Defence Team of Ntahobali has been given the same facilities to access its client as other teams. Additionally, the Defence Team of Ntahobali has recently been given extra facilities to access its client as a result of its Defence stage and the imminent testimony of the Accused.

13. The Registrar observes that since October 2001, Mr. Marquis has billed over 8,000 hours of preparation of the case and the examination-in-chief of its client was already on going in January 2005. For the past five years, the Defence has had ample time to prepare Ntahobali's defence.

14. Finally, the Registrar points out that Mr Marquis filed this Motion without waiting for the DCDMS's response to his correspondence dated 13 February 2006 in order to find an amicable arrangement.

Having Deliberated

15. The Chamber has taken note of the submissions of the Parties as well as those of the Registrar.

16. The Chamber notes that the Registrar is responsible for the servicing and administration of the Tribunal under Rule 33 (A) of the Rules and that the administration of visits of accused at the UNDF by the Defence is a matter falling squarely within the ambit of the Commanding Officer, as provided for under Rules 61 (i) and (ii) and 65 of the Detention Rules. The Chamber recalls that Rule 65 stipulates that

> "all visits shall be made by prior arrangement with the commanding officer as to the time and duration of the visit and shall be subject to the same security controls as are imposed under Rule 61."

Therefore, any visit request should be directed to the Commanding Officer and/or the Registrar and not to the Chamber.

17. The Chamber underscores that matters such as those raised in the Motion fall squarely within the Registrar's competence, and therefore, it can only be seized of them when all available avenues have been exhausted.

18. The Chamber notes that the Defence seized the Chamber of the said matter before it received an answer to its correspondence of 13 February 2006, from the Registrar. The Motion is therefore premature and inadmissible.

19. The Chamber is of the considered opinion that the Motion is frivolous and that in future, conduct like this may attract sanctions under Rule 46.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DISMISSES the Defence Motion.

Defence for Ntahobali

1. The Defence for Ntahobali brings its Motion pursuant to Art. 20 (2) (e) of the Statute and Rules 54, 73 (A), and 90 (G) of the Rules. The Defence seeks leave to recall Prosecution Witnesses TN, QY, and QBQ in the instant proceedings, for further cross-examination. The Defence argues that all three witnesses have, after their testimony in this case, testified in other proceedings before the Tribunal or given supplementary statements which the Defence alleges to be "in flagrant contradiction"[1] to their initial testimonies in the instant proceedings.[2]

2. The Defence recalls that it had moved the Chamber for leave to add Witnesses QY and QBQ to its list of witnesses, as well as to file their testimonies in other proceedings before this Tribunal in lieu of oral testimony, but that these motions were denied.[3] Rather, this Chamber had indicated that "the Parties may therefore wish to make the proper application to recall the witnesses for further cross-examination on the alleged specific issues that may have arisen from either the additional statements and/or the testimony given in the Muvunyi proceedings".[4] Therefore, the Defence has included Witness TN in the present Motion, rather than following the same procedure it used regarding Witnesses QY and QBQ.[5]

3. The Defence submits that according to the Tribunal's jurisprudence, the condition for recalling a witness for additional cross-examination is to show good cause, i.e. "a substantial reason amounting in law to a legal excuse for failing to perform a required act".[6] In assessing this, the Chamber "must carefully consider the purpose of the proposed testimony as well as the party's justification for not offering such evidence when the witness originally testified".[7] Regarding the specific case where a witness has given statements after his or her testimony, it has been held in Bagosora et al. that the Defence may move the Chamber to recall a witness who has made statements inconsistent with his or her testimony, if prejudice can be shown from the Defence's inability to put these inconsistencies to the witness.[8] Finally, the Defence recalls that there has also been an oral decision in Bagosora et al. to recall Witness DO for additional cross-examination regarding alleged inconsistencies.[9]

Witness TN

4. The Defence submits that additional cross-examination of Witness TN is necessary for the defence strategy and will allow it to exercise its right to a full defence.[10] Witness TN has no credibility whatsoever in the eyes of the Defence, and this alleged lack of credibility becomes all the more obvious when confronted with this witness' testimony in the Ndindiliyimana et al. proceedings.[11] The Defence refers to the following examples:

a. Witness TN testified that on 21 April [1994], she witnessed the arrival of members of the presidential guard, soldiers, and Arsène Shalom Ntahobali, in a Toyota.[12] During her testimony in the Ndindiliyimana et al. trial, the witness stated that on 21 April, she saw the arrival of Shalom Ntahobali in a Hilux, bearing the inscription "Police", together with members of the presidential guard.[13] The Defence submits that it would be in the interests of the Accused to confront the witness with this new affirmation, all the more because according to the Defence, there was no vehicle bearing the inscription "Police" in Rwanda in 1994.[14]
b. Witness TN testified in the present proceedings that when she and other girls arrived at Arsène Shalom Ntahobali's home, they were told by the Accused to have sexual intercourse with him, and that those who refused would be killed. These words were spoken in a compound, and the girls were then led to a house and its doors were bolted.[15] However, in Ndindiliyimana et al., Witness TN stated that the girls were led into the house and the Accused immediately bolted the doors, whereupon he threatened the girls with killing their parents.[16] According to the Defence, this demonstrates that there are two versions of the words attributed to Arsène Shalom Ntahobali.[17]
c. Witness TN in Ndindiliyimana et al. also referred to a second house, different from the one in which she was locked up, and where she was led in the context of sexual violence committed against her,[18] whereas in the instant proceedings, she did not mention a second house next to the one in which she was locked up.[19]
d. According to the Defence, there are also discrepancies between Witness TN's descriptions of the first time she was allegedly raped in the present proceedings and in Ndindiliyimana et al. In the present proceedings, Witness TN stated that after having raped her, Arsène Shalom Ntahobali introduced the handle of a scraper [into her vagina], causing great pain and bleeding.[20] According to the Defence, there is no mention of a scraper in the witness' testimony in Ndindiliyimana et al.[21]
e. The Defence further submits that there are inconsistencies regarding the witness' arrival at Munagano refugee camp in Burundi. Whereas Witness TN testified in the present proceedings that when she arrived there, a soldier called Alexis ordered her to have sexual intercourse with three soldiers,[22] in Ndindiliyimana et al. she stated that Alexis described her as his Tutsi wife, whom he had taken by force. He said to other persons he knew that he could do what he liked to the witness, and so could they. He then asked them to sleep with the witness, or they asked the witness to sleep with them. They were four.[23]

f. Witness TN also stated in the present proceedings that the first person she had been able to contact upon her return to Rwanda was her brother.[24] However, in Ndindiliyimana et al., she said that she had first met the son of her uncle, and that she later fetched her brothers and sisters from Nyanza.[25]
g. The Defence further stresses that when testifying in Ndindiliyimana et al., Witness TN stated that although her mother had sent her home, she could not go there because Arsène Shalom Ntahobali took her to the bureau de secteur.[26] The same witness testified in the instant proceedings that she had gone home and that she was arrested there to be taken to the bureau de secteur.[27]
h. In the same context, Witness TN testified in the present proceedings that she had been taken to the bureau de secteur after the Accused had killed Rwabugili[28] and Philippe.[29] The Defence submits, however, that this is an inconsistency, because in Ndindiliyimana et al., the same witness stated that she first saw Rwabugili some moments before he was killed.[30]
i. Witness TN also stated in the Ndindiliyimana et al. proceedings that she had not been told that she was being led to Shalom's house, but that she deduced it was his from the circumstances.[31] The Defence submits that this contradicts her testimony in the present proceedings, where she testified that she had been told that it was the house of the Accused.[32]

5. Apart from these alleged inconsistencies, the Defence submits that there are also a number of absurdities in Witness TN's testimonies. For instance, Witness TN stated that in spite of being illegally confined for five days with six other young girls, she did not learn the names of those she had not known before[33] and that she did not speak to them.[34] Besides, Witness TN affirmed that none of the confined girls felt the need to urinate during the time they were being held.[35]

6. Further, the Defence submits that it would be in the interests of the Accused Ntahobali to be able to confront the witness with her statement that she went to the HCR bureau in Munagano camp,[36]

since Exhibit D 60, filed in Ndindiliyimana et al., is a letter from HCR affirming that in April 1994, there was no HCR structure at Munagano, where there was no functional camp.[37] The Defence has filed a letter from UNHCR, dated 21 March 2003 and indicating "there was no camp at Munagano. However, there were (sic) a camp at Mugano. The Mugano camp was not operational in April 1994 and the UNHCR did not have any structure there".[38]

7. Finally, whilst Witness TN has testified that the Accused Ntahobali had killed Philippe and Rwabugili, the transcripts of proceedings in Ndindiliyimana et al. show that a certain Jean-Baptiste Nzisabira has been found guilty of their deaths by the Butare Chambre spécialisée, section conseil de guerre.[39]

8. The Defence submits that it has not been able to raise these issues during Witness TN's testimony in the instant proceedings, because this testimony was given on 3 and 4 April 2002, whereas the same witness testified in the Ndindiliyimana et al. case on 20 and 21 April 2005. The Judgment against Jean-Marie Nzisabira has been rendered on 30 December 2002 and confirmed on appeal on 8 April 2004. The Defence has filed two Rwandan decisions in Kinyarwanda, issued on these dates.[40] The Defence submits that it has obtained them only very recently and that they were inexistent and could not be addressed at the moment of Witness TN's testimony before this Chamber.[41]

9. As to the showing of prejudice, the Defence submits that it will not be able to question Witness TN's credibility if it is not able to confront the witness with the alleged contradictions. Further, it is part of the right to a full defence that the Accused may demonstrate that Prosecution Witnesses, who have personally accused him, do not have any credibility.[42]

Witness QY

10. As regards Witness QY, the Defence submits that it is necessary to confront her with her testimony in the Muvunyi proceedings.[43] The Defence raises the following inconsistencies:

a. Witness QY indicated in her statements of 11 and 13 March 1998 and of 24 July 2000, and in her testimony in the present proceedings, that she was raped at EER by a person she named.[44] However, in Muvunyi, the witness stated that she had been raped at EER twice in the course of one evening,[45] that she did not know the perpetrator's name[46] and that the person she had identified as the perpetratror of the rapes at EER in the instant proceedings had raped her at the prefectural office, but not at EER.[47]

The Chamber notes that this is partly omitted in the English version of the transcripts (see T. 24 March 2003, p. 57, and the French original of the same date, p. 58 (CS)).

[45] The Motion, para. 74, quotes Prosecutor v. Muvunyi, TC II, Transcriptions d'audience du 8 juin 2005, pp. 18 and following (English transcripts of 8 June 2005, pp. 18-19).

b. Witness QY testified in the instant proceedings that she was raped at Gikongoro in April 1994, before fleeing to Butare and being raped there.[48] However, in Muvunyi, the same witness testified that she had not gone to Gikongoro.[49]
c. Witness QY has testified twice and inconsistently to her presence at Kibeho. In the present proceedings, she testified to having gone to Kibeho to visit her parents, accompanied by her sister.[50] However, in Muvunyi, she stated that she had not gone to Kibeho.[51]

11. The Defence submits that it is evident from the instances cited that Witness QY contradicts herself and that if her testimonies in the present proceedings and in the Muvunyi case are compared, the witness has given contradictory versions of the events she allegedly witnessed.[52] The Defence further submits that the reason why these issues were not raised when Witness QY testified before this Chamber is the same as for Witness TN, namely, that her testimony of 8 and 13-15 June 2005 in Muvunyi is posterior to the one in the present proceedings, on 19, 20, and 24-26 March 2003.[53]

12. According to the Defence, the Accused Ntahobali would suffer prejudice if he were not allowed to put the alleged inconsistencies to the witness, because the Chamber will only be able to evaluate the witness' credibility adequately if it has all her statements made in the Muvunyi proceedings.[54] Besides, Witness QY has personally accused Arsène Shalom Ntahobali, and the Defence submits that it is thus fundamental that he be allowed to defend himself and to demonstrate to the Chamber that this witness does not have any credibility.[55]

Witness QBQ

13. The Defence submits that Witness QBQ has contradicted her testimony in the present proceedings in a statement signed later – on 2 September 2004 – and divulged in Bizimungu et al.[56] Whereas in the present proceedings, as well as in an earlier statement of 6 May 1999, the witness indicated that she had not been raped on a certain night because she was carrying an injured baby and thus not picked by the Interahamwe,[57] the statement of 2004 stated that she had been raped on that night.[58]

14. The Defence submits that it is undeniable that the witness has lied under oath and that she must thus be confronted with her contradicting statements so the record reflects that she is not credible.[59] The Defence further argues that this is fundamental in order to guarantee the Accused's right to a full defence, since from the moment that a witness makes a wrong statement regarding a particular event, it is submitted that this taints the remainder of the testimony with the same falsehood.[60]

15. According to the Defence, these inconsistencies could not have been raised during the cross-examination of Witness QBQ in the present proceedings because the contradicting declaration was made after the witness' appearance before this Chamber.[61] The reasons applicable to Witnesses TN and QY also apply to Witness QBQ, all the more since she has stated in the 2004 declaration that what she had testified to under oath was wrong. Thus, according to the Defence, it is fundamental for the Accused to be able to confront the witness with her declaration.[62] This will also enable the Chamber to evaluate the credibility of Witness QBQ by disposing of all the relevant elements, which are also necessary for the defence of the Accused.[63]

Prosecution's Response

16. The Prosecution does not contest that Witnesses TN, QY, and QBQ have testified in the Butare case and, subsequently, in the Ndindiliyimana et al. and Muvunyi proceedings, or have given a new statement.[64] However, the Prosecution submits that the alleged contradictions in the testimony/statements of the witnesses are not substantial enough to warrant their recall. In support of this, the Prosecution cites the example of the inscription "Police" on a vehicle transporting the presidential guards.[65]

17. The Prosecution stresses that it was held in a decision in the Bagosora case that "if there is no need for the witness's explanation of the inconsistency, because the inconsistency is minor or its nature is self-evident, then the witness will not be recalled".[66]

18. The Prosecution further submits that should the recall of these witnesses be allowed for a supplementary cross-examination, the limits of this cross-examination must be clearly delineated so that there is no unnecessary lengthy questioning of the witnesses. Accordingly, the cross-examination should be limited to the alleged contradictions, ensuring the speedy resolution of this matter.[67]

19. The Prosecution also submits that the full transcripts of the relevant parts of the witnesses' testimonies in the Muvunyi and Ndindiliyimana et al. proceedings ought to be available to the Chamber, so as to ensure that that these testimonies are not taken out of context or misquoted. The Prosecution refers to two instances mentioned in the Motion to illustrate this point. First, contrary to the impression conveyed in the Motion at para. 60 that Witness TN did not urinate in five days, the full transcripts of that day in the Ndindiliyimana et al. case make it clear that she did urinate, but on herself.[68] Secondly, the rape of Witness QY at EER could be considered as one rape because it happened on a single day, or as two rapes, because she was raped in two different locations at EER, but on the same day.[69]

Kanyabashi's Response

20. The Defence for Kanyabashi stresses that it received the Motion on 12 January 2006, but without any annexes.[70] It submits that it does not object to Witnesses QY and QBQ being recalled for the purposes of additional cross-examination, as long as this is strictly limited to the contradictions alleged in the Motion.[71]

[71] Kanyabashi's Response, paras. 11-12.

21. The Defence for Kanyabashi recalls that regarding Witnesses QY and QBQ, it has filed several responses in August 2005.[72] In these responses, it has already indicated that it would not object to the tendering into evidence of the statements made by Witnesses QY and QBQ on 2 September 2004, because they are succinct. This is not the case, however, for the transcripts of these witnesses' testimonies, which cover many issues.[73] Therefore, the Defence submits that should the witnesses be recalled, they may be questioned with regard to the alleged contradictions. However, the possible tendering of the transcripts must be limited to the question of credibility, and they must not be assessed as evidence of the different allegations they contain.[74]

22. The Defence for Kanyabashi is of the opinion that if the statements and/or transcripts are tendered, they should only have probative value as regards credibility concerning the issues that will have been raised during the additional cross-examination.[75] Further, since the additional cross-examination should be limited, it is not the totality of the transcripts or statements that may be of relevance at this stage.[76]

Nsabimana's Response

23. The Defence for Nsabimana submits that it received the Motion on 13 January 2006. It does not object to the recall of the witnesses[77] and reserves its right to cross-examine them as well.[78] However, it points out that the Defence for Ntahobali has not served it with all the documents or other evidence on which it plans to base the additional cross-examination,[79] and that the scope of this cross-examination has not been delineated clearly in the Motion.[80]

24. Accordingly, the Defence for Nsabimana requests that the Chamber grant the Motion and take note of the Defence for Nsabimana's intention of cross-examining the witnesses as well, should this be necessary.[81] However, it also requests that the Chamber direct the Defence for Ntahobali to disclose the points that are to be raised in the additional cross-examination of Witnesses QY, QBQ, and TN before their possible recall.[82]

Kanyabashi's Additional Response

25. In its Additional Response, the Defence for Kanyabashi stresses that it has received the relevant transcripts of Witness TN's testimony on 18 and 20 January 2006[83] and that it is now able to respond to all the prayers contained in the Motion. It requests that the Chamber therefore allow it to file its additional response,[84] which only addresses Witness TN.[85]

26. The Defence for Kanyabashi submits that it is for the Chamber to decide whether Ntahobali's allegations warrant Witness TN's recall.[86] Were the Chamber to grant the Motion, the Defence submits that Witness TN's additional cross-examination should be strictly limited to the issues raised in the Motion.[87] As already stated with regard to Witnesses QY and QBQ, the Defence submits that the possible tendering of the transcripts of Witness TN's testimony must be limited to the issues addressed in cross-examination and to the question of credibility, and that the transcripts must not be assessed as evidence of the different allegations they contain.[88]

27. The Defence for Kanyabashi recalls that is has not yet been served with the Nzisabira Judgement referred to in the Motion. In order not to delay proceedings, it does not oppose a possible use of this Judgement to suggest to Witness TN that the death of Philippe and Rwabugili has been perpetrated by Nzisabira. However, should a wider use be envisaged by the Defence for Ntahobali, the Defence submits that the Judgement should have been filed together with the Motion.[89] It therefore requests that the use of the Nzisabira Judgement be strictly limited to the death of Philippe and Rwabugili, and conducted only to address credibility, rather than any question of fact. The Defence further requests that the Chamber orders the immediate disclosure of this Judgement and, subsidiarily, allow the Defence for Kanyabashi to reply to the relevant part of the Motion within ten days after its receipt.[90]

Ntahobali's Reply

28. In its Reply, the Defence for Ntahobali indicates that it only intends to use the files of the Nzisabira proceedings to suggest to Witness TN that Nzisabira is responsible for Philippe's and Rwabugili's deaths, rather than Arsène Shalom Ntahobali, as stated by Witness TN.[91]

29. The Defence also submits that should its Motion succeed, it will communicate a copy of the Nzisabira Judgement to the Defence for Kanyabashi in a timely manner and before its cross-examination.[92]

Deliberations

30. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber notes that the Defence for Kanyabashi's request to file its additional response has become moot, because it has not been filed out of time, as is borne out by the e-mail sent to the Parties by the Registry on 13 January 2006.

31. The Chamber underscores that it will assess the witnesses' credibility at a later stage and that at this point, it will only address the matters raised in the Motion, namely, the possible recall of the three witnesses for further cross-examination with regard to the specific instances of alleged inconsistencies raised by the Parties.

32. The Chamber notes that since the Decision on the recall of witnesses in Kayishema and Ruzindana proceedings, the Tribunal's jurisprudence allows the recall of witnesses if good cause has been shown.[93] It observes that previous jurisprudence has defined good cause to be a substantial reason amounting in law to a legal excuse for failing to perform a required act.[94] In assessing good cause, a

Chamber must carefully consider the purpose of the proposed testimony as well as the party's justification for not offering such evidence when the witness originally testified.[95] The right to be tried without undue delay as well as concerns of judicial economy demand that recall should be granted only in the most compelling of circumstances where the evidence is of significant probative value and not of a cumulative nature.[96] The Chamber sees no reason to depart from this jurisprudence and notes that in the instant proceedings, the additional testimony of recalled witnesses has been strictly limited.[97]

33. The Chamber also notes that according to the Tribunal's jurisprudence, the Chamber's attention may be drawn to > inconsistencies between testimony of witnesses before this Chamber and any declarations obtained subsequently. If prejudice can be shown from its inability to put these inconsistencies to the witness, the Defence may submit motions for their recall; if there is no need for the witness's explanation of the inconsistency, because the inconsistency is minor or its nature is self-evident, then the witness will not be recalled.[98]

34. The Chamber will address the questions relating to the Witnesses TN, QY and QBQ's testimonies in turn.

Witness TN

35. The Chamber notes that some of the alleged inconsistencies between Witness TN's testimonies in the instant proceedings and in a different case may be explained when the transcripts of the latter's testimony are read as a whole, rather than in isolation.[99] This applies to the witness' testimony regarding the alleged rape by Arsène Shalom Ntahobali (para. 4 (d) above). While it is true that the rape with the handle of an instrument is not immediately mentioned in the context of forced sexual intercourse in the Ndindiliyimana et al. proceedings,[100] the witness mentions on the same page of the transcripts that Arsène Shalom Ntahobali also raped her "with a piece of wood", "it was the handle of a broom – the broom that is used for sweeping".[101] The Chamber is of the view that even if there was a contradiction between TN's two testimonies, it would not warrant the witness' recall for further cross-examination on this issue.

36. As to the alleged discrepancy between Witness TN's first meeting with her brother or her cousin when she returned to Rwanda (para. 4 (f) above), the Chamber notes that the witness explains this by saying that the relative she had met first upon her return to Rwanda was the son of her paternal uncle, but that "back home we say – we refer to him – I will refer to him as my brother, but he was the son of my paternal uncle". Asked by Counsel if he could be referred to as "brother/cousin, as you refer to him in your country", the witness replied, "yes, that is true".[102] Accordingly, the Chamber is of the view that even if there was a contradiction between TN's two testimonies, it would not warrant the witness' recall for further cross-examination on this issue.

37. Further, as to the witness' testimonies that she had been taken to the bureau de secteur after the Accused had killed Philippe and Rwabugili,[103] and that she first saw Rwabugili some moments before he was killed[104] (para. 4 (h) above), the Chamber is of the view that even if there was a contradiction between TN's two testimonies, it would not warrant the witness' recall for further cross-examination on this issue.

38. The Chamber observes that the following alleged inconsistencies in Witness TN's testimonies may be minor and/or self-evident:

- whether the vehicle in which Arsène Shalom Ntahobali arrived bore the inscription "Police" (para. 4 (a) above);
- whether the Accused addressed Witness TN and the other girls in the compound or in the house and threatened their parents (para. 4 (b) above);
- whether there was a second house next to the one in which the witness was locked up (para. 4 (c) above);
- whether she was able to go home before being arrested and taken to the bureau de secteur (para. 4 (g) above);
- and whether she had been told that she was in Arsène Shalom Ntahobali's house or deduced it from the circumstances (para. 4 (i) above).

The Chamber is of the view that even if there were contradictions between TN's two testimonies, they would not warrant the witness' recall for further cross-examination on these issues.

39. As to the alleged absurdities regarding the witness' detention (para. 5 above), the Chamber notes that "absurdities" may be a matter for comment or submissions at the end of the trial but do not justify the recall of a witness.

40. The Chamber notes that the remaining instances of alleged inconsistency in Witness TN's testimonies before this Tribunal relate to the responsibility of the Accused Ntahobali or that of Jean-Baptiste Nzisabira for two killings (para. 7 above); the presence or not of a HCR camp at Munagano (para. 6 above); and whether Witness TN was raped by three or four soldiers, apart from Alexis, in Munagano camp (para. 4 (e) above).

41. The Chamber observes that the first two alleged discrepancies arise from documents that were not produced by the witness. Witness TN's evidence in Ndindiliyimana et al. has been that she does not know anything about the Nzisabira Judgement[105] and that there was an HCR bureau in Munagano camp.[106] The Chamber is satisfied that these matters do not constitute a valid basis for a recall and additional cross-examination. As to her alleged rapes in Munagano camp by three or four soldiers, the Chamber is of the opinion that this disparity, if at all, does not warrant the recall of the witness.

42. The Motion is accordingly denied with respect to the recall of Witness TN.

Witness QBQ

43. The Chamber notes that Witness QBQ's two statements of 6 May 1999 and 2 September 2004 may be contradictory as to her rape on a certain night by the Interahamwe. The Chamber observes, however, that the relevant passage in the witness' 1999 statement was read to the witness on three occasions in the instant proceedings. Yet Witness QBQ was never questioned and did not testify to rapes perpetrated against her on the night in question, although sexual violence committed against other persons was addressed at this time.[107] The Chamber notes that Counsel had the opportunity to raise this matter with the witness, but did not do so. This omission does not constitute a basis for recall for further cross-examination. As for the witness' alleged statement of 2004, there is no evidence that she has confirmed it in any proceedings. The Chamber is therefore not convinced that the alleged change has an impact on her testimony in the instant proceedings and therefore, this matter does not warrant the witness' recall for further cross-examination.

44. Motion is accordingly denied with respect to the recall of Witness QBQ.

Witness QY

45. The Chamber notes that Witness QY, in the instant proceedings, confirmed giving an earlier statement in which she had named the man who allegedly raped her once[108] at the EER.[109] In the Muvunyi case, however, Witness QY indicated that she was raped at EER twice in the course of one evening by a person whose identity she did not know[110] and that the man whose identity she had confirmed in the Butare proceedings as being the perpetrator's, had not raped her at EER, but at the prefectural office.[111] The Chamber notes the Prosecution's submissions that the sexual violence perpetrated against Witness QY at EER could be considered as one rape because it happened on a single day, or as two rapes, because she was raped in two different locations at EER, but on the same day.[112] The Chamber is of the opinion that while there may be discrepancies in the witness' testimonies regarding the number of times that she was allegedly raped at the EER, they do not seem to relate directly to the Accused. The Chamber therefore considers that this point does not warrant the witness' recall.

46. As to the identity of the perpetrator of the alleged sexual violence against the witness at EER, however, the Chamber finds that the discrepancy between Witness QY's testimonies on this point reaches the threshold for a recall for further cross-examination, strictly limited to this issue.

47. With regard to Witness QY's presence at Gikongoro and Kibeho, the Chamber notes that while the witness in the instant proceedings acknowledged an earlier statement in which she had indicated that she was in Gikongoro, and raped there, before fleeing to Butare,[113] she also stated that she went to Kibeho,[114] but did not reach Gikongoro.[115] In the Muvunyi proceedings, however, the witness denied having been in Gikongoro[116] or Kibeho.[117] The Chamber observes while some of these differences may be explained by the fact that there is a Kibeho secteur in Mubuga commune, Gikongoro préfecture,[118] these are nonetheless discrepancies that meet the threshold for the recall of a witness for further cross-examination, strictly limited to her presence in Kibeho and Gikongoro.

48. The Motion is therefore granted with regard to the recall of Witness QY for cross-examination on the issues specified above.

FOR THESE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Motion with regard to Witnesses TN and QBQ;

GRANTS IN PART the Motion with regard to Witness QY;

ORDERS the recall of Witness QY for further cross-examination on the identity of the perpetrator of sexual violence committed against the witness at EER, mentioned in the French transcripts of proceedings held in closed session in the instant case on 24 March 2003, p. 58, as well as her presence at Kibeho and Gikongoro between April and July 1994.

DIRECTS the Registry to undertake all necessary steps for the recall of Witness QY.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA,

SITTING as the Bureau, composed of Judge Erik Møse, President of the Tribunal, and Judge Khalida Rachid Khan, Presiding Judge of Trial Chamber III, in accordance with Rule 23 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules");

BEING SEIZED of the "Requête Devant le Bureau de Arsène Shalom Ntahobali en Récusation des Juges de la Chambre de Première Instance II", filed by the Defence for Ntahobali on 2 March 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution's "Submissions to Ntahobali's Motion for Recusal of Judges", filed on 6 March 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. In his motion, Arsène Shalom Ntahobali requests the disqualification of all three judges hearing his trial, Judges Sekule, Ramaroson and Bossa, on the basis of an alleged lack of impartiality pursuant to Rule 15 (B).

2. During a Status Conference on 8 February 2006, the Presiding Judge addressed a number of scheduling matters concerning the few witnesses remaining to be called for the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali defence. In this context, he invited Counsel for Mr. Ntahobali to indicate, for the sake of planning, whether he intended to testify on his own behalf. The Presiding Judge noted that as the testimony for the Ntahobali Defence case was expected to be concluded by 10 March 2006 at the latest, arrangements would have to be made to facilitate this testimony as soon as practicable.[1] The Judge further expressed his expectation that proceedings would resume on 13 February 2006 and requested the Defence to work towards ensuring a continuous flow of witnesses so as to enable continuous testimony of the remaining few witnesses.[2] Despite this, a number of trial days were lost in the days that followed as a result of a lack of Defence witnesses.[3]

3. In a letter to the Trial Chamber of 17 February 2006, the Defence indicated that Mr. Ntahobali was still not ready to give a definitive answer as to his intention to testify on his own behalf, but that in any event, he would be testifying as the last witness. On 20 February 2006, the Presiding Judge directed that if Mr. Ntahobali does intend to testify, he should be ready to start his testimony on 2 March 2006.[4]

4. On 2 March 2006, Defence Counsel, rather than presenting the evidence of Mr. Ntahobali, instead announced that the present motion for disqualification had been filed before the Bureau. In response, the Presiding Judge adjourned the proceedings pending resolution of the matter by the Bureau.[5]

Submissions

5. In its motion, the Defence submits that the modalities adopted by the Trial Chamber to ascertain whether Mr. Ntahobali intended to testify in his own defence and to schedule this testimony gives rise to the need for disqualification of the entire bench. Other decisions taken in the course of the trial are also alleged to give rise to a reasonable apprehension of bias on the part of the Chamber, which similarly ought to result in disqualification.

6. The Prosecution opposes the motion for disqualification on the basis that it fails either to demonstrate how any such alleged errors would be attributable to a pre-disposition against Mr. Ntahobali or that the Judges were animated by any concern other than the relevant legal issues in rendering their decisions.

Deliberations

7. Judges Ramaroson and Sekule, who, pursuant to Rule 23 (A), are normally members of the Bureau in their capacity as Vice-President of the Tribunal and Presiding Judge of Trial Chamber II respectively, have recused themselves from consideration of the current motion. The Bureau is therefore presently composed of Judges Møse and Khan.

8. Rule 15 (A) provides that a Judge may not "sit in any case in which he has a personal interest or concerning which he has or has had any association which might affect his impartiality". This provision has been interpreted broadly to permit any ground of impartiality to be raised before the Bureau as a basis for disqualification.[6] The Appeals Chamber in Furundžija has found that the requirement of impartiality is violated not only where the decision-maker is actually biased, but also where there is an appearance of bias.[7] An appearance of bias is established if (a) a Judge is a party to the case, or has a financial or proprietary interest in the outcome of the case, or if the Judge's decision will lead to the promotion of a cause in which he or she is involved; or (b) the circumstances would lead a reasonable observer, properly informed, to reasonably apprehend bias.[8]

9. The apprehension of bias test reflects the maxim that "justice should not only be done, but should manifestly and undoubtedly be seen to be done".[9] Although the standpoint of the Accused is a relevant consideration, the decisive question is whether a perception of lack of impartiality is objectively justified.[10] Thus, a mere feeling or suspicion of bias by the Accused is insufficient; what is required is an objectively justified apprehension of bias, based on knowledge of all the relevant circumstances.[11] Judges of this Tribunal enjoy a presumption of impartiality, based on their oath of

[6] Rule 15 (A) has been interpreted as "co-terminous with the statutory requirement of impartiality and thus as including within its scope all possible bases of disqualification" on the basis of lack of impartiality: Blagojević et al., Decision on Blagojević's Application Pursuant to Rule 15 (B), 19 March 2003, para. 10; see also Bagosora et al., Determination of the Bureau Pursuant to Rule 15 (B), 20 February 2002, paras. 9-11; Nahimana et al., T. 19 September 2000 p. 6.

Sesay*, Decision on Defence Motion Seeking the Disqualification of Justice Robertson from the Appeals Chamber (Sierra Leone AC), 13 March 2004, para. 16.

[10] This test contains a two-fold objective element: the person considering the alleged bias must be reasonable and the apprehension of bias itself must be reasonable in the circumstances of the case. (Furundžija, Judgment (AC), 21 July 2000, para. 185). See also Incal v. Turkey, (2000) 29 E.H.R.R. 449 (E Ct HR), para. 71: "In deciding whether there is a legitimate reason to fear that a particular court lacks independence or impartiality, the standpoint of the accused is important without being decisive. What is decisive is whether his doubts can be held to be objectively justified".

[11] The objective test has, in substance, been adopted in a number of decisions before this Tribunal: Karemera, Decision on Motion by Karemera for Disqualification of Judges (Bureau), 17 May 2004, para. 9; Nzirorera et al., Re. Application for the Disqualification of Judge Mehmet Güney (Bureau), 26 September 2000, paras. 8-9; Nahimana et al., Oral Decision (TC), T.

office and the qualifications for their selection in Article 12 of the Statute. The moving party bears the burden of displacing that presumption.[12]

10. The motion does not allege that any interest or association of the Judges gives rise to an apprehension of bias. Rather, it contends that Mr. Ntahobali has grounds for the reasonable suspicion of bias on the basis of decisions in the case itself.

11. In Karemera, the Bureau considered the issue of judicial impartiality as evidenced through a Chamber's decisions.[13] It relied on the reasoning of the Bureau of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in Blagojević, where that Bureau, although not entirely ruling out the possibility that decisions rendered by a Judge or Chamber in the course of trial could by themselves suffice to establish actual bias, observed that they would only serve to do so in the most exceptional of cases.[14]

12. Where such allegations are made, the Bureau has a duty to examine the content of the judicial decisions cited as evidence of bias. The purpose of that review is not to detect error, but rather to determine whether such errors, if any, demonstrate that the judge or judges are actually biased, or that there is an appearance of bias based on the objective test described above. Error, if any, on a point of law is insufficient: what must be shown is that the rulings are, or would reasonably be perceived as, attributable to a pre-disposition against the applicant, and not genuinely related to the application of law (on which there may be more than one possible interpretation) or to the assessment of the relevant facts.[15]

13. The motion alleges impropriety on numerous grounds. Firstly, it alleges that upon being requested to indicate whether or not Mr. Ntahobali intended to testify in his defence, Counsel were improperly impeded from making legal submissions concerning the right of the Accused not to be compelled to testify.[16] It submits that the Chamber thus failed to consider the Accused's arguments, having already pre-determined the matter.[17] However, the Presiding Judge did no more than remind Counsel that the present hearing was a status conference to address issues of planning, inviting Counsel instead to file a motion should the Defence wish to make detailed submissions of law.[18] Further, the Judge fully acknowledged the Accused's right not to be compelled to testify, and his intention was clearly to seek information for planning purposes:

[12] Delalić, Judgment (AC), para. 707. The reason for this threshold is that while any real appearance of bias on the part of a judge undermines confidence in the administration of justice, it would be equally a threat to the interests of the impartial and fair administration of justice where judges to be disqualified on the basis of unfounded and unsupported allegations of apparent bias. See id.: "It needs to be said loudly and clearly that the ground of disqualification is a reasonable apprehension that the judicial officer will not decide the case impartially and without prejudice, rather than that he will decide the case adversely to one party ... Although it is important that justice must be seen to be done, it is equally important that judicial officers discharge their duty to sit and do not, by acceding too readily to suggestions of apparent bias, encourage parties to believe that, by seeking the disqualification of a judge, they will have their case tried by someone thought to be more likely to decide the case in their favour."

Allegations of bias based on the content of judicial proceedings have also been considered by the United States Supreme Court, where it has been emphasised that "judicial rulings alone almost never constitute a valid basis for a bias or partiality motion. … Almost invariably; they are proper grounds for appeal, not for recusal. … [O]pinions formed by the judge on the basis of facts introduced or events occurring in the course of the current proceedings … do not constitute a basis for a bias or partiality motion unless they display a deep-seated favouritism or antagonism that would make fair judgment impossible" (Liteky v. United States, 510 U.S. 540, 555 (1994)).

[18] T. 8 February 2006, pp. 12, 22.

> [W]ith regard to the indication, if any … whether or not the Accused will give evidence on his own behalf[, t]he legal position is very clear. The Accused has the right to choose to testify on his own behalf. He cannot be compelled… It is his … or her prerogative, but the Trial Chamber which … controls the proceedings, must plan. … We would expect the Defence of the Accused Ntahobali to indicate to the Trial Chamber so that it's able to plan ahead whether or not the Accused intends to give testimony [s]o that we can plan his testimony with a view of seeing how best it will fit … in the Trial Chamber's plan to complete this Defence in a given time. ... [W]e would [therefore] invite the … the Defence of Ntahobali to indicate by the end of next week so that we can plan how best, where his testimony, if he is going to testify, is going to be placed. Things cannot be left … open-ended.[19]

14. There is no indication that the Chamber's request was based on incorrect legal reasoning or influenced by improper considerations. Under these circumstances, it cannot reasonably be apprehended as arising from bias against the Accused.

15. Defence Counsel indicated, in a letter to the Trial Chamber of 17 February 2006, a provisional intention on the part of Mr. Ntahobali to testify. The motion alleges that the Chamber thereafter improperly ordered the Accused to begin his testimony on 2 March 2006 as opposed to allowing him to choose the timing of his testimony.[20]

16. The Bureau observes that on 20 February 2006, Defence Counsel had requested a further adjournment, citing lack of preparedness to commence the examination in chief of Witness WCMNA and indicating probable delays also with regard to the next witness to testify.[21] The Prosecution then renewed its protest against being, once again, unaware as to which witness would testify and when. It averred that if in future a further unforeseen adjournment was forced due to the non-availability of other Defence witnesses, then Mr. Ntahobali himself should testify.[22] The Presiding Judge directed that > if the Accused intends to testify on his behalf, he should be ready to start his testimony on the 2nd of March in all circumstances … So from the 2nd of March … [the Accused's] testimony is expected, if he still intends to start his testimony. So if there is no witness or a witness is not available, he will begin. If that … witness will not have been done by then, he should be ready to start his testimony on that date and day.[23]

17. The Defence alleges that this attempt by the Chamber to direct the timing of the Accused's testimony contravenes the Accused's rights under Article 20 of the Statute.[24] This Tribunal has already determined that no mention of the timing of an appearance of the Accused is to be found in Articles 19 or 20 of the Statute whereas, under Rule 90 (F), the Chamber has the obligation and authority to

It appears that a similar approach to the scheduling of future testimony was adopted vis-à-vis the Nyiramasuhuko defence during the same hearing. See id., p. 22: "We do take due note that the Defence of Nyiramasuhuko is considering … whether or not to call the remaining expert witness. That is their prerogative. But we cannot … leave it at that, there must be some specific timeframe in order that the Chamber can plan for the next stage. "exercise control over the mode and order of interrogating witnesses…".[25] The consistent practice before the international tribunals has been that Accused who testify have chosen the timing of their testimony which, in most cases, has been given at or near the end of the Defence case.[26] However, Chambers have also considered the interests of justice and questions of judicial economy in ordering a particular sequence of witnesses.[27] In the present case, the Chamber appears to have afforded Mr. Ntahobali the opportunity to choose the timing of his testimony, subject to the Chamber's duty to efficiently manage trial proceedings and to avoid undue prejudice to other parties stemming from uncertainty and delay.[28] The Chamber's direction on 20 February 2006 that Mr. Ntahobali, should he wish to testify, be ready to do so from 2 March 2006 onwards was motivated by the need to exercise proper control over proceedings and cannot be said to evince bias on the part of the Chamber toward the Accused.

18. The Defence further submits that a perception of bias emerges from alleged double standards in decisions by the Chamber against Mr. Ntabohali.[29] As evidence of bias, the motion cites the differing outcomes of numerous other motions brought by the Ntahobali Defence and Prosecution, respectively.[30]

19. The Bureau notes that such decisions are rendered on a case by case basis and form part of the inherent discretion and duty of the Chamber to control the proceedings in order to ensure an expeditious and fair trial.[31] The Defence has failed to demonstrate that in rendering these decisions, the Judges were animated by any concern other than the relevant legal issues.[32] Accordingly, there is no basis for an apprehension of bias in an objective observer, fully apprised of the relevant circumstances, in the instant case.

20. For instance, the Defence alleges that contrary to the treatment afforded to him, the co-Accused Ms. Nyiramasuhuko was on 16 June 2005 granted a one month adjournment in order to permit her to testify last.[33] In fact, this adjournment was found by the Chamber to be justified in order to allow adequate preparation time in relation to an expert witness.[34] Regarding the timing of Ms. Nyiramasuhuko's testimony, despite her preference to testify last, the Chamber rendered an order substantially similar to the direction it had given on 20 February 2006.[35] The basis of this decision was

[34] T. 16 June 2005, p. 3: "In view of the fact that that witness and, indeed, the last - the expert witness cannot be available within a reasonable time to come and testify before the Trial Chamber during the remaining period of this session, and in view of the fact that the Defence of the Accused Shalom Ntahobali could not step in - there is one witness who could possibly testify, but it is not very certain as to when he or she could be available, the Trial Chamber sees that it would be best in the circumstances to adjourn these proceedings to enable adequate preparations being made in preparation for the continuation of the proceedings when we resume next session."
[35] See Ndayambaje et al., Scheduling Order (TC), 5 August 2005 (instructing counsel for Ms. Nyiramasuhuko to put the Accused on the stand to begin her testimony on a particular date or any date thereafter in the event that a preceding witness

21. The Bureau concludes that the motion has failed to establish that a reasonable apprehension of bias could arise on the basis of the arguments advanced by the Defence, whether viewed individually or cumulatively.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE BUREAU

DENIES the motion.

However, the Chamber finds that the Defence does not provide a cogent argument why the Accused should not testify before Witness WBNM, should the need arise, nor does it demonstrate the prejudice it would suffer. The Chamber is of the opinion that the Defence has had ample opportunity to prepare the testimony of the Accused. ... The Chamber underscores that when seeking to give effect to an Accused's rights under Article 20, it has a duty to ensure that there is a balance between the competing and respective rights of all the Parties in the case. The Chamber thus finds that it would not facilitate fairness to the other Parties and/or serve the interests of justice, to postpone the trial merely to allow the Accused to testify at her own convenience. Accordingly, the Chamber rules that should Witness WBNM be unable to commence his testimony as scheduled, on 29 August 2005, for any justifiable reason, the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko should be prepared to call the Accused Nyiramasuhuko to give testimony on her own behalf. … The Chamber accordingly finds no merit in the submissions of the Defence.")

NOW DECIDES the matter, pursuant to Rule 73 (A), on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties.

The Defence

1. The Defence moves the Chamber for certification to appeal the Impugned Decision of 4 March 2006. The certification is sought with respect to the denial of the request to recall Witnesses TN and QBQ.

2. In relation to Witness TN, the Defence submits that the contradictions between her testimony in the instant proceedings and her testimony in the Ndindiliyimana et al. proceedings are not minor[1] and could cast doubt on her credibility[2].

3. The Defence further asserts that in depriving the Defence of the possibility to confront Witness TN with some new elements, notably the letter from UNHCR and the Jean-Baptiste Nzisabira Judgment, the Chamber indirectly ruled upon witness' credibility without hearing her on these pertinent issues[3]. The fairness and the outcome of the trial are seriously affected as the Accused is denied the right to present exculpatory evidence.[4]

4. The Defence asserts that the immediate resolution of the matter by the Appeals Chamber at this stage would materially advance the proceedings in the sens that a debate under Rule 115 would be avoided on appeal, were the Accused convicted on the basis of allegations made by Witness TN.[5]

5. In relation to Witness QBQ, the Defence alleges that the Chamber issued an erroneous conclusion in the Impugned Decision which resulted in the denial of the recall of this witness. According to the Defence, the recall is solely aimed at establishing the fact that Witness QBQ made a subsequent out of court statement which is incompatible with the testimony that she has given in the instant proceedings : it is not aimed at demonstrating whether the aforementioned out of court statement is true or not.[6] The Defence submits that the fairness or outcome of the Trial is seriously affected because it is not allowed to confront Witness QBQ with her out of court statement in which she admits having told lies under oath.[7]

6. Finally, the Defence asserts that the immediate resolution of the matter by the Appeals Chamber at this stage would materially advance the proceedings in the sens that a debate under Rule 115 would be avoided on appeal, were the Accused convicted on the basis of the allegations made by Witness QBQ.

The Prosecution

7. The Prosecution submits that the Defence has failed to meet the criteria under Rule 73 (B)[8] and attemps to argue the appeal it is seeking certification for.[9]

[9] Paragraphs 3, 12, 16 and 29 of the Prosecution Response.

8. The Prosecution contends that the Motion deals at considerable length with the issues already decided by the Chamber in its Impugned Decision.[10]

9. The Prosecution submits that it is the Chamber's responsibility to address the admissibility of evidence, including whether there are factors necessitation the recall of witnesses TN, QBQ, and QY for further cross-examination and the scope of Witness QY's cross-examination.[11] The Chamber has a duty to assess the materiality of the evidence that the proposed witnesses are expected to give.[12]

10. The Prosecution argues that there has been no compelling demonstration as to how the denial of the motion to recall witnesses would actually affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings.[13] The Motion only claims an alleged violation of the right of the Accused to a fair trial.[14] The Prosecution submits that contrary to the Defence assertions, the recalling of the witnesses will inordinately and significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings in an adverse manner.[15]

Witness TN

11. The Prosecution submits that the Chamber fully considered the alleged discrepancies in the testimonies of Witness TN, before deciding that the issues are not significant enough to justify the recall of the witness.[16]

12. The Prosecution argues that the references to the Ndindiliyimana et al. proceedings and the Nzisabira Judgment can be dealt with by alternative procedures to tender documents, without the need to recall the witnesses.[17]

13. With respect to the evidence on the UNHCR camp at Munagano, the Prosecution submits that the document was not tendered by Witness TN, there is no direct link between the document and the witness and the Defence can use other procedures to produce legally admissible evidence in relation to the camp in lieu of recalling the witness.[18]

14. The Prosecution submits that the Defence relies extensively on the Ndindiliyimana et al. proceedings in its submissions while contending, at the same time, that the Chamber erred in law by basing its Impugned Decision on evidence from another case which is not part of the evidence in this case.[19]

15. The Prosecution submits that the Defence argument that the Chamber has been unfaire lacks merit and its misconceived as the Defence has not attempted to produce the evidence in question other than through the cross-examination of Witness TN.[20] It is speculative to assume that documents like the Nzisabira Judgement and the UNHCR documentation can be used to confront TN or any other witness in cross-examination without laying the proper legal foundation at appropriate time.[21]

16. The Prosecution submits that the Defence has narrowly construed the Impugned Decision to mean the exclusion of the evidence, whereas the Prosecution reiterates that it is not essential to recall Witness TN for the documents sought to be admitted.[22]

Witness QBQ

17. In relation to the Defence argument that it was unfair of the Chamber to deny it the opportunity to use an 'extra-judicial' statement to impeach the credibility of Witness QBQ, the Prosecution reiterates that the Chamber has the discretion to admit or exclude evidence and has the right to assess evidence and to determine issues of credibility.[23] The use of extra-judicial statements is determined by the Chamber on a case-by-case basis and it is not bound by what transpires in other proceedings.[24] This Chamber has consistently held that statements of witnesses as opposed to their actual testimonies before the Chamber are not evidence in these proceedings.[25]

The Defence Reply

18. The Defence submits that the Prosecution Response of 14 March 2006 was filed out of time and should be dismissed. According to the Defence, the time frame of five days within which the Prosecution should have filed its response expired on 13 March 2006.

Having Deliberated

19. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution Response was filed on time, as the Registry's notification of 9 March 2006 specifies that "the Parties have five (5) days to file their responses after receipt of this notification" [emphasis added]. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution acknowledged receipt of the notification on 9 March 2006 and the time frame for its response therefore ran from 10 March 2006. Accordingly, the Chamber rejects the Defence request for dismissal of the Prosecution response.

20. The Chamber recalle Rule 73 (B), which stipulates :

> Decisions rendered on such motions are without interlocutory appeal save with certification by the Trial Chamber, which may grant such certification if the decision involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and for which, in the opinion of the Trial Chamber, an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings.

21. The Chamber notes that decisions rendered on Rule 73 motions are without interlocutory appeal, except that the Chamber has direction to grant certification in the very limited circumstances stipulated in Rule 73 (B). The Chamber may grant certification to appeal if both conditions of Rule 73 (B) are satisfied. Under the firest limb of Rule 73 (B), the applicant must show how the Impugned Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect (a) the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings, or (b) the outcome of the trial. Under the second limb, the applicant has the burden of convincing the Chamber that an "immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings". Both of these conditions require a specific demonstration, and are not met through a general reference to the submissions on which the Impugned Decision was rendered.[26]

22. The Chamber notes the Defence submissions and observes that the reasons invoked by it constitue grounds of appeal, rather than grounds to support a motion for certification. The Chamber therefore concludes that the Defence has failed to meet the requirements provided for by Rule 73 (B).

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

NOW DECIDES the matter, pursuant to Rule 73 (A), on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties.

The Defence

1. The Defence moves the Chamber for certification to appeal the Impugned Decision of 2 March 2006. The Defence submits that the Chamber erred in fact and in law in two respects: firstly, when the Chamber evaluated the burden imposed on the Defence;[1] secondly, when it evaluated the evidence adduced in support of the Motion and when it evaluated the legal consequences of Witness NMBMP's status in relation to the procedure she is pursuing before the Immigration Committee of the United States.[2]

2. The Defence submits that Witness NMBMP's testimony might affect the outcome of the trial as she is expected to give alibi evidence and to challenge the charge of rape against the Accused.[3] Furthermore, the Defence argues that the fairness of the trial would be significantly affected if the Defence were to withdraw NMBMP from its witness list due to her inability to travel out of her country of residence.[4]

3. The Defence submits that the Chamber erroneously concluded that the Defence failed to show that Witness NMBMP is actually unable to travel outside the United States, despite the production of supplementary documents by the Defence in support of the Motion which show this and which the Chamber has not challenged.[5]

4. The Defence argues that it is obvious that the immediate resolution of the matter by the Appeals Chamber at this stage would materially advance the proceedings in the sense that a debate under Rule 115 would be avoided on appeal, were the Accused convicted on the basis of facts that Witness NMBMP could challenge at first instance.[6]

The Prosecution

5. The Prosecution submits that rather than focus on the criteria for certification in Rule 73 (B) (ii), the Defence dwells extensively on irrelevant considerations, and attempts to re-litigate issues already decided by the Chamber in its Impugned Decision.[7] The Prosecution asserts that the submissions and implicit threats in the Motion regarding Rule 115 are both irrelevant to a motion for certification and premature.[8] The Prosecution alleges that the Defence has essentially relied on submissions contained in its motion to have Witness NMBMP testify by video-link, including submissions on the witness' immigration status, which the Chamber has considered and accorded due weight to.[9] The Prosecution further argues that the Motion deals extensively with the grounds of appeal, rather than addressing the certification criteria.[10]

6. The Prosecution submits that the Defence has failed to demonstrate that the Impugned Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect the expeditious conduct of the proceedings.[11]

7. The Prosecution asserts that the Defence has failed to sufficiently demonstrate why an appeal is warranted on a matter falling squarely within the Chamber's discretion.[12]

8. The Prosecution submits that according to the Defence there are procedures allowing persons in circumstances comparable to Witness NMBMP's to leave the country in question, but that the Defence has not established that these procedures have been exhausted.[13] The Prosecution further argues that it is rather speculative and hypothetical for the Defence to submit that the witness may not be allowed to return to her country of residence if she applies for and obtains an advance parole.[14]

9. The Prosecution submits that the arguments of the Defence do not raise 'serious doubts as to the correctness of the legal principles at issue'.[15] The legal principles alluded to relate to United States' immigration law, which the Chamber is not bound to accept.[16] Consequently, a resolution of the matter by the Appeals Chamber may not materially advance the proceedings.[17]

10. The Prosecution argues that the Chamber has not denied the Accused the right to call Witness NMBMP as an alibi witness, but has decided that the testimony should not be given by video-link.[18] The Prosecution further submits that the Defence intends to call other witnesses to provide alibi evidence, including the Accused himself, his spouse, and Witness NMBMB, who has already testified.[19]

The Defence Reply

11. The Defence submits that the Prosecution Response of 14 March 2006 was filed out of time and should be dismissed. According to the Defence, the time frame of five days within which the Prosecution should have filed its response expired on 13 March 2006.

Having deliberated,

12. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution Response was filed on time, as the Registry's notification of 9 March 2006 specifies that "the Parties have five (5) days to file their Responses after receipt of this notification" [emphasis added]. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution acknowledged receipt of the notification on 9 March 2006 and the time frame for it to file its response therefore ran from 10 March 2006. Accordingly, the Chamber rejects the Defence request for dismissal of the Prosecution response.

13. The Chamber recalls Rule 73 (B), which stipulates:

> Decisions rendered on such motions are without interlocutory appeal save with certification by the Trial Chamber, which may grant such certification if the Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and for which, in the opinion of the Trial Chamber, an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings.

14. The Chamber notes that decisions rendered under Rule 73 motions are without interlocutory appeal, except that the Chamber has discretion to grant certification in the very limited circumstances stipulated in Rule 73 (B). The Chamber may grant certification to appeal if both conditions of Rule 73 (B) are satisfied. Under the first limb of Rule 73 (B), the applicant must show how the Impugned Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect (a) the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings, or (b) the outcome of the trial. Under the second limb, the applicant has the burden of convincing the Chamber that an "immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings". Both of these conditions require a specific demonstration, and are not met through general reference to the submissions on which the Impugned Decision was rendered.[20]

15. The Chamber takes note of the Defence submissions and points out that it did not deny the Defence the opportunity to call Witness NMBMP in the Impugned Decision; rather, it found that the legal requirements to allow NMBMP to testify via video-link were not met. Furthermore, the Chamber is of the view that the reasons invoked by the Defence constitute grounds of appeal, rather than grounds to support a motion for certification. The Chamber therefore concludes that the Defence has failed to meet the requirements provided for by Rule 73 (B).

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Motion in its entirety.

DEFENCE FOR NYIRAMASUHUKO

1. The Defence for Nyiramasuhuko brings its Motion pursuant to Rules 82 (B)[1] and 72 (D) of the Rules. The Defence prays for severance of proceedings, for a new trial, and for the stay of proceedings. It argues that Pauline Nyiramasuhuko has suffered serious and irrevocable prejudice caused by a conflict of interests that results from joint proceedings conducted with two other Accused, Sylvain Nsabimana and Joseph Kanyabashi. Nsabimana's and Kanyabashi's defence strategies, according to the Defence, are contradictory to Nyiramasuhuko's, and incriminate her.[2] Further causes of prejudice are the delays which have become "totally unreasonable"[3] and are contrary to the interests of justice. Accordingly, both criteria under Rule 82 (B) have been met.

Applicable Law and Jurisprudence

2. The Defence recalls the provisions of Rule 82, arguing that it limits the possible prejudice an accused may suffer from a joint trial,[4] since it allows the accused to be tried separately if there is a conflict of interests that might cause serious prejudice to an accused or if it is necessary to protect the interests of justice.[5] The Defence submits that the possibly inevitable prejudice resulting from joint proceedings must remain minimal[6] and may not adversely affect an accused to the point of depriving him or her of a full defence and a fair trial.[7]

3. The Defence submits that considerations in favour of joint proceedings – such as possible savings in expense and time, greater transparency in justice, more consistent and detailed presentation of the evidence, better protection for victims and witnesses who will have to testify only once, and a reduced risk of contradictions in the decisions, when related and indivisible facts are examined – must be balanced against the rights of the accused to a trial without undue delay and any prejudice to the accused that may be caused by joinder.[8]

4. In this context, the Defence recalls that the Chamber has assured Nyiramasuhuko that it would always be vigilant with regard to fair proceedings, respecting the rights of each accused in a joint trial, so that no co-accused loses the rights he or she would have been guaranteed if tried separately.[9]

5. The Defence contends that whilst both the wording of Rule 82 (B) and the cited jurisprudence demonstrate that it is sufficient for an accused to show either the existence of a conflict of interests which might cause serious prejudice resulting from joint proceedings, or that the interests of justice are compromised,[10] it will demonstrate that both elements are met in the present case.

Conflict of Interest that Might Cause Serious Prejudice to Pauline Nyiramasuhuko

6. The Defence submits that while the evaluation of prejudice resulting from a conflict of interests between co-accused demands a case-by-case-analysis, certain decisions indicate the limits of this prejudice.[11] In Kovacevic, it was held that the emergence of a conflict of interests between the accused in the context of their respective defence strategies could concern their right to a fair trial.[12] In Ngirumpatse et al., the Trial Chamber recalled the elements of a conflict of interests which might cause serious prejudice, such as the "concurrent presentation of evidence of the proposed co-accused".[13]

7. The Defence points out that while there is jurisprudence stating that the existence of antagonistic and accusing defence strategies in joint proceedings does not prima facie render Rule 82 (B) applicable,[14] these decisions, too, refer to the possibility of demonstrating that there is a conflict of interests.[15]

8. The Defence submits that there is a real and not hypothetical conflict of interests between Nyiramasuhuko's defence strategy and Kanyabashi's and Nsabimana's defence strategies,[16] which accuse Nyiramasuhuko. This conflict has been present throughout the trial,[17] became evident during Nsabimana's and Kanyabashi's cross-examination of Prosecution witnesses,[18] and has intensified during Nyiramasuhuko's defence case, reaching a point where it would be unjust and unfair to continue her trial in the joint proceedings, thus rendering Rule 82 (B) applicable.[19]

9. The Defence contends that the conflict of interests is caused by a strategy aiming firstly at attacking Nyiramasuhuko with regard to allegations contained in her Indictment, and secondly at implicating her as a former minister and MRND member.[20]

10. With regard to the first aim, the Defence submits that these allegations have no relevance to the allegations raised against Kanyabashi and Nsabimana, even if they figure in their Indictments, since some of the factual allegations mentioned there do not implicate these Accused.[21] This situation is one of the factors which might cause serious prejudice to an accused.[22] Since Kanyabashi is not implicated by these allegations, if he fears contamination by the evidence presented against the other accused in his trial, he should take the appropriate steps, rather than interfere in Nyiramasuhuko's defence.[23]

11. The Defence submits that the facts of which Nyiramasuhuko and her co-accused are accused are often completely distinct. Nyiramasuhuko has had to answer factual allegations particular to her status as a government minister from April 1992 to July 1994, notably as regards the evidence presented by Prosecution Expert Witnesses Des Forges and Guichaoua.[24] Further, Nsabimana and Kanyabashi try to impute responsibility for the events in Butare to the MRND and to hold Nyiramasuhuko responsible for the MRND and for its alleged youth wing, the Interahamwe.[25] In this context, the Defence points out that Kanyabashi and Nsabimana were both civil administrators in Butare and members of the PSD opposition party.[26] Further, even though the counts are more or less the same for all the Accused, this is not the case for the factual allegations which support these counts.[27] Apart from the very vague and general paragraphs related to the count of conspiracy to commit genocide, the allegations are distinct.[28] As to the allegations of acts committed in Butare préfecture, the large majority would have been committed in different places, against different victims, and at different times, thus the only thing they have in common is the region delineated by this préfecture.[29]

12. The Defence submits that the strategy also aims at attacking Nyiramasuhuko via her status as member of the MRND and of the interim government, in charge, allegedly, of organising and executing massacres at Butare, in order to discharge PSD members, including Kanyabashi and Nsabimana.[30] A conflict of interests between administrators and members of an opposition party, on the one hand, and a MRND minister, on the other, constitutes – according to the jurisprudence cited – a factor leading to the conclusion that there is a conflict of interests that might cause serious prejudice to an accused.[31]

13. In support of the purported serious conflict of interests between Nyiramasuhuko's and Nsabimana's defence strategies, the Defence refers to passages of transcripts.[32] These reputedly show that Nsabimana's defence strategy is "totally irreconcilable" with Nyiramasuhuko's, and clearly demonstrate the former's intention of accusing Nyiramasuhuko of being one of "the authorities in charge of the killings".[33] The Defence submits that its own defence strategy has always been to demonstrate that neither she nor the government of which she was a member, has ever planned, organised, or executed killings at any time.[34] Further, it is extremely important that when Nsabimana asked the questions which incriminated Nyiramasuhuko, the latter's cross-examination was already concluded. Therefore, she was unable to address the subject again with the witness, which resulted in an additional prejudice to her, caused by the conflict of interests.[35]

14. As to the conflict of interests between Kanyabashi and Nyiramasuhuko, the Defence contends that a portion of the transcripts underlines the importance of Nyiramasuhuko's status as a government minister and a MRND member, in contrast to Kanyabashi and Nsabimana's status as PSD members.[36]

15. The Defence also submits that generally, the cross-examinations of Nyiramasuhuko's Defence witnesses conducted by Nsabimana's and Kanyabashi's Defences were aimed at discrediting them.[37] This also applies to the Defence for Kanyabashi's cross-examination of Expert Witness Eugène Shimamungu, which tried by all means to damage the witness' credibility.[38] These examples demonstrate that the conflict of interests has existed during Nyiramasuhuko's whole defence case but that it has been accentuated in the course of her own testimony.[39] The Chamber therefore cannot deny that such conflict of interests exists between Nyiramasuhuko and Nsabimana and Kanyabashi.[40] The Defence adds that the existence of a conflict of interests is so flagrant that it is by now recognised and commented upon by the media which follow the proceedings.[41]

16. The Defence submits that Nsabimana and Kanyabashi reinforce each other and support the Prosecution's theory as to the MRND's, and therefore Nyiramasuhuko's, implication in the events unfolding at Butare.[42] The conflict of interests sustained by Nyiramasuhuko is advantageous to the Prosecution, which sees a good part of its theory used against Nyiramasuhuko by her co-accused. This exceptional situation cannot but seriously damage Nyiramasuhuko's fundamental rights.[43] A conflict of interests which is caused by antagonistic defence strategies pursued by co-accused per se might cause serious prejudice.[44]

17. The Defence submits that while the conflict of interests has been foreseeable since before the opening of proceedings, the Chamber's decisions to order Nyiramasuhuko to cross-examine Prosecution witnesses and to present her defence first, have amplified the prejudice.[45] This is why Nyiramasuhuko submitted the problem of the conflict of interests at the pre-trial conference,

The Defence submits that the Chamber should have considered the prejudice this decision would cause Nyiramasuhuko, since the precise reference, attributed to Ndindabahizi, could not be given, which allowed the Defence for Nsabimana to cover this subject by way of suggestions, without referring to or reading out this part of the report, see the Motion, para. 101.

requesting that she be allowed to cross-examine last, or at least after Nsabimana.[46] This submission was not heeded by the Chamber,[47] as was the case on numerous other occasions.[48]

Prejudice Sustained by Nyiramasuhuko

18. The Defence submits that there is evidence of a conflict of interests that has prejudiced Nyiramasuhuko, pursuant to Rule 82 (B). This prejudice will only be aggravated during the defence cases of Kanyabashi and Nsabimana.[49] The conflict of interests has seriously infringed Nyiramasuhuko's right to a fair trial, including her rights to a full defence, to equality before this Tribunal, to be judged on an equal footing with her co-accused, to be informed in a timely and detailed manner about the allegations raised against her, as well as her right to have the necessary time and means for the preparation of her defence.[50] The Defence submits that the sustained prejudice is already irreparable and must lead to the immediate severance of her trial.[51]

19. As to Nyiramasuhuko's right to a full defence, it is submitted that even if the conflict of interests was noted during the presentation of her defence case, the Defence could not have known in advance, in a precise, specific and detailed manner, the nature of the attacks or the methods used against her by Kanyabashi and Nsabimana, nor could it, as a result, prepare for these.[52] Further, recalling the equality of all the accused before this Tribunal, the Defence contends that Nyiramasuhuko, who had to present her defence first, does not have the same opportunities as Kanyabashi and Nsabimana, who may prepare and adjust their respective defences after having heard her defence case.[53] The Defence submits that Nyiramasuhuko therefore has not had a full defence, because she did not know and still does not know what further incriminating evidence will be presented by Nsabimana and Kanyabashi, who have already heard her defence case and may still amend their list of witnesses and even redirect their defence, if they deem it necessary.[54]

20. The Defence contends that while this situation may be inevitable in joint proceedings, it is still inadmissible in a case where a conflict of interests causes serious violations to the fundamental rights of an accused, pursuant to Articles 19 and 20.[55] The exceptional circumstances of the case have forced Nyiramasuhuko to present her defence without knowing the evidence that has been used and will yet be used in the course of Nsabimana's and Kanyabashi's defences, preventing her from conducting investigations in order to adequately prepare her defence case.[56] This very serious prejudice is now irrevocable and irreversible. Even if the Chamber permitted a reopening of evidence to Nyiramasuhuko in order to counter the different allegations made by and forms of evidence used by Nsabimana and Kanyabashi, this would not be sufficient to limit the serious prejudice already sustained.[57]

21. The Defence submits that to conduct the necessary investigations would take time, since it would be necessary to retrace several witnesses, obtain the necessary information and documents, convince some witnesses to come and testify again, and to convince other witnesses, who the Defence has met with but for whom the Chamber denied testimony via video-link, to come.[58] This remedy would therefore aggravate the violation of Nyiramasuhuko's right to be tried without undue delay and would be contrary to the considerations which have led to the joinder of trials.[59]

22. The Defence submits that Nyiramasuhuko's right to a fair trial is also violated by the fact that the defences for Kanyabashi and Nsabimana may be considered to be additional "Prosecution cases", and that this would not be the case if she was tried separately.[60] This exceptional situation has caused serious prejudice.[61] If this joint trial is pursued, the already irreversible prejudice would be further aggravated, because Kanyabashi and Nsabimana would add evidence to that of the Prosecution, concerning allegations which are not made against them.[62] Accordingly, the existence of a conflict of interests, together with Nyiramasuhuko's obligation to present her defence case before Nsabimana's and Kanyabashi's, has undeniably caused prejudice to her rights, a situation that renders Rule 82 (B) applicable.[63]

23. The Defence also contends that the prejudice caused by the conflict of interests is further aggravated by the Chamber's decision that there is no obligation of prior communication to the Defence of documents that a Party intends to use when cross-examining a witness, even an accused witness.[64] The Defence quotes a portion of transcripts in support of this argument and submits that it also demonstrates Kanyabashi's intention to implicate the MRND and the Interahamwe for the 1994 events in Rwanda, and can thus be added to the extracts which have already been cited to show the existence of the conflict of interests.[65]

24. The Defence therefore argues that although the Chamber has stated that "what is important is that the other party must be informed before cross-examination about the documents that will be used during cross-examination, according to habitual practice", this has not been applied on numerous occasions during cross-examinations conducted by Nsabimana and Kanyabashi, not to mention the Prosecution.[66] This non-communication of the documents further aggravated the already serious prejudice to Nyiramasuhuko and has seriously and irrevocably infringed upon her right to a fair trial.[67] Thus, the Chamber permitted Kanyabashi to put suggestions to Nyiramasuhuko when she was testifying in her own defence, although it was obvious that her defence did not know the origin, nature, or contents of the document used in questioning, even though a decision had been rendered on timely communication. Allowing such questions to be put to the Accused aggravated the pre-existing prejudice caused by the conflict of interests.[68]

25. Finally, the Defence submits that it has several times advised the Chamber of the danger of a conflict of interests, as well as of the existence of this conflict, and of the prejudice this conflict would cause or has already caused.[69] This was done during the pre-trial conference, has been done throughout trial, and was repeated with regard to Nsabimana's contradictory defence strategy.[70] The Defence also submitted arguments on this point on 18 October 2004, before Nyiramasuhuko's defence case started.[71] Besides, it has seized the Chamber several times during Nyiramasuhuko's defence case, in order to alert it to the serious prejudice Nyiramasuhuko sustained because of the conflict of interests caused by the contradictory and accusing defence strategies of Kanyabashi and Nsabimana.[72]

26. The Defence submits that it even requested the Chamber during Nyiramasuhuko's defence case to stop the "haemorrhage" of prejudice, in other words, the constant aggravation of prejudice which the latter sustained because of the conflict of interests, which only worsened in the course of the defence case.[73] The Defence refers to an incident where it objected to the use of an unidentified document by the Defence for Kanyabashi, submitting that this was yet another incident with an aggravating effect.[74] Even when the Defence requested the Chamber at least to order the communication of documents used against her by Kanyabashi in a timely fashion, this remedy was not granted, unlike before.[75]

27. The Defence recalls the Chamber's reassurance: "[T]he Chamber will always remain alive to the need for a fair trial with due considerations given to the rights of the accused within a joint trial, in order to ensure that he or she would not lose the rights that he or she would have if he or she was tried alone."[76]

28. In the present circumstances, the Defence submits that Nyiramasuhuko has lost her right to a fair trial and requests that the Chamber order the only remedy that will enable her to fully exercise her rights pursuant to Articles 19 and 20.[77] She therefore demands that her trial be separated from Nsabimana's and Kanyabashi's.[78]

Interests of Justice

29. The Defence submits that whilst the conditions of the first element in Rule 82 (B), the conflict of interests causing serious prejudice, have already been demonstrated, the interests of justice equally demand severance of Nyiramasuhuko's trial.[79] It relies on a decision rendered in Ngirumpatse et al. which recalls that the 'elements of justice' criterion has three elements, namely, the right to be tried fairly, the right to be tried without undue delay, as well as the consideration of the complexity of a case in evaluating the necessary delays.[80] The Defence submits that none of these elements is observed in the instant proceedings.[81]

[81] The Motion, para. 165.

30. The Defence submits that it is in the interests of justice that each accused be accorded the same rights in joint proceedings as if they were tried separately. When assessing judicial economy and efficiency, the accused's right to a trial without undue delay under Article 21 (4) (c) has to be assessed in light of the same rights of the other accused.[82] Further elements for consideration include whether the factual allegations against all the accused are similar,[83] because this will further judicial efficiency.[84]

31. As to the first element, the right to a fair trial, the Defence relies on a decision in Prosecutor v. Kovacevic,[85] where the Trial Chamber did not join proceedings because this might have infringed upon the Accused's right to a fair trial, as it might cause a conflict of interests among them.[86] The Defence submits that it has already shown the existence of a conflict of interests, as well as the resulting irreversible violation of Nyiramasuhuko's right to a fair trial. Therefore, the first element of the 'interests of justice' criterion has not been observed.[87]

32. As to the second element, the right to be tried without undue delay, the Defence submits that it has not been observed either, reiterating the arguments in its Motion for Stay of Proceedings, filed on 25 June 2003.[88] The Defence recalls all the arguments contained in this earlier Motion,[89] referring to the circumstances of Nyiramasuhuko's arrest and detention; alleged violations of her right to be informed in a timely manner about the charges levelled against her; alleged violations of her procedural rights, especially with regard to excessive delays; and the prejudice suffered by Nyiramasuhuko in consequence, particularly with regard to the conditions in detention. The Defence contends that the arguments, jurisprudence and doctrine contained in its earlier Motion must be fully applied at this stage[90] and that the Defence is justified in pleading again the contents of its earlier Motion because there is a new fact, namely another two and a half years of detention.[91] The trial against Nyiramasuhuko will not be concluded anytime soon, since the defence case of the second of the six Accused is not yet over. Yet Nyiramasuhuko was arrested eight and a half years ago and her trial started four and a half years ago. These delays have become completely unreasonable with regard to Article 20 (4) (c) and can no longer be justified.[92] The Defence recalls that Nyiramasuhuko will have to go through four more defence cases before the Chamber will hear the final pleadings, deliberate and render judgement, without counting the delays of an appeal, if any.[93]

33. As to the third element, the Defence contends that the complexity of the case cannot anymore justify the delays sustained to this day, since the experience of this trial has clearly shown that the joinder has unduly prolonged proceedings and rendered them more complex than if each Accused had been tried separately.[94] If this had been the case, their trial would have been concluded a long time ago, as is demonstrated by those persons who have been tried as single accused.[95] The Defence further submits that the application and interpretation of international criminal law must adapt and evolve, and the Tribunal, which guarantees this law, must interpret and apply it in the context of the present case.[96] Therefore, exceptional circumstances also demand that Nyiramasuhuko's trial be separated in the interests of justice.[97]

Conclusion

34. The Defence recalls the Chamber's observation that "there are remedies that are always available should anything of prejudice arise within the course of the trial. There is cross-examination, there are other facilities that can be devoted to, and the Trial Chamber will be open to any – as the case develops, to any issues that can be raised before it".[98] The Defence requests the Chamber to apply the appropriate remedy, namely, Rule 82 (B), and separate Nyiramasuhuko's trial to allow her to exercise again her fundamental right to a fair trial.[99] The Defence also submits that even if severed, her trial cannot be continued, because its unfairness has clearly become irreversible during the presentation of her case.[100] Therefore, the Chamber would have to order new proceedings for her to exercise her rights again.[101]

35. However, whilst severance is the only way to end the conflict of interests, this reparation must necessarily be followed by the termination of proceedings against Nyiramasuhuko, because her right to be tried without undue delay has already been violated, a violation which increases with every trial day and which renders any additional delay unacceptable.[102] It would be unfair, unreasonable and contrary to her right to be tried without undue delay if Nyiramasuhuko had to have her trial at least nine years after being arrested and detained. Therefore, Nyiramasuhuko requests the Chamber to stop proceedings against her, after having ordered the severance of her trial.[103]

Nteziryayo's Response

36. The Defence for Nteziryayo submits that he does not wish to participate in the discussion on whether there should be a separation of the trial, but only on the consequences a decision might have on his rights.[104] As to the phrase contained in the Motion, "evidence against one accused is not evidence against another accused", the Defence argues that in a joint trial this is incomplete, since as a general rule all evidence presented by a party can be used for or against every party and the Prosecutor. It might be the case, however, that some elements of evidence are admissible only against one accused and that certain elements are admissible only for one, and not all, purposes.[105] A different interpretation would necessitate the recall of all witnesses.[106]

37. The Defence questions the consequences for Nteziryayo's trial if Nyiramasuhuko's Motion was granted, such as who will be tried with whom, and who will take these decisions.[107] Accordingly, the Defence prays that if the Motion is granted in part or in all respects, all parties be heard, the Prosecutor first, regarding to the continuation of the trials.[108]

Ntahobali's Response

38. The Defence for Ntahobali submits that it "totally agrees" with the points raised in Nteziryayo's Response.[109]

PROSECUTOR'S RESPONSE AND ADDENDUM

39. The Prosecutor submits that Nyiramasuhuko's Motion is a disguised appeal on an issue that Nyiramasuhuko has already appealed twice, is therefore inadmissible and should be dismissed.[110] The Motion is frivolous and the Chamber should deny fees.[111]

40. On the merits, the Prosecutor contends that severance can be granted if a moving party can prove serious prejudice, which is a high standard and even higher when considering that the trier of fact is a panel of three judges, rather than a jury.[112] Rule 82 (B) is permissive, rather than obligatory.[113] As to the decision in Kovacevic et al. cited by Nyiramasuhuko, the Prosecutor submits that it is distinguishable, because it denied a joinder, rather than granting severance. The weighing of interests inherent to the granting of joinder has already been done by this Chamber in 1999. Further, the alleged serious prejudice was not the sole reason of denying the joinder, since "confusion of issues and evidence" was also referred to.[114] The Prosecutor submits that the Motion fails to demonstrate concrete prejudice, let alone serious prejudice, caused by Nsabimana and Kanyabashi's cross-examination of Nyiramasuhuko's witnesses, and stresses that incriminating evidence is not per se seriously prejudicial within the meaning of Rule 82 (B). As to the non-disclosure of documents used in cross-examination, the Prosecutor points out that Nyiramasuhuko has not appealed these decisions by the Chamber.[115]

41. The Prosecutor also submits that Nyiramasuhuko has the right to re-examine and to move for recall, rebuttal or rejoinder of witnesses if she so chooses, and that she may appeal any judgment against her that improperly considers evidence.[116]

42. Further, the Prosecutor stresses that mutually antagonistic defences are not prejudicial per se,[117] that even those that do cause prejudice do not mandate severance, and that remedies to ensure a fair trial are within the discretion of the trial court.[118]

43. The Prosecutor concurs with Nteziryayo's view that all Parties may rely on all admitted evidence to prove or disprove their cases, save where a court admits evidence but expressly limits its use or scope, including against a particular accused.[119]

NYIRAMASUHUKO'S REPLY TO NTEZIRYAYO'S AND THE PROSECUTOR'S RESPONSES AND TO THE PROSECUTOR'S ADDENDUM

44. The Defence for Nyiramasuhuko prays that the Chamber grant her Motion, declare the Prosecutor's Response frivolous, and order appropriate sanctions in this regard.[120]

45. The Defence submits that contrary to the Prosecutor's submissions, the Motion is not frivolous. It further submits that Rule 82 (B) presupposes the possibility that in joint proceedings the Accused may suffer serious prejudice.[121] Besides, the Chamber's decisions on Motions for separate proceedings filed by other Parties cannot be used to declare Nyiramasuhuko's Motion moot, as alleged by the Prosecutor.[122] The Defence stresses that it has never questioned the qualification of the three Judges to assess the evidence, and that it does not submit that the evidence is tainted by the prejudice she has suffered.[123] As to the lack of appeal against oral decisions issued by the Chamber allowing the use of certain documents, the Defence submits that Rule 73 does not constitute an obligation to appeal.[124]

46. As to the Prosecutor's distinction between the decision in Kovacevic et al. and the present situation, the Defence submits that there is no difference between a decision denying joint proceedings and a decision ordering severance to the extent that the reason for the decision is the possibility of a conflict of interests, which may cause prejudice to an accused.[125] It recalls that the conditions of Rule 82 (B) may be met by two alternative elements, which render baseless the Prosecutor's argument that the decision was not exclusively issued because of the possible conflict of interest.[126] Further, it is clear from this decision that the invoked motive is the serious prejudice.[127]

47. Besides, the Defence contends that it has never argued that Nyiramasuhuko suffered prejudice because her witnesses were cross-examined by Nsabimana and Kanyabashi.[128] Rather, the Defence has argued that the serious prejudice was caused by a conflict of interests flowing from contradictory and critical defence strategies.[129] The Defence notes that the Prosecutor has not presented any argument countering its submissions that Nyiramasuhuko has suffered serious and irreparable prejudice because she had to cross-examine Prosecution witnesses first and to present her defence case first.[130]

48. As to Nyiramasuhuko's right to move for recall, rebuttal or rejoinder of witnesses mentioned by the Prosecutor, the Defence replies that this is a possibility on which Nyiramasuhuko cannot rely, and the prejudice has already been sustained.[131] Further, any such motion would be contrary to the protection of witnesses and temporal and financial economy.[132] Besides, it would aggravate the violation of Nyiramasuhuko's right to a fair trial without undue delay.[133]

49. With regard to the Prosecution's allegation that the Motion is without merit because the Defence case has been closed since 24 November 2005, the Defence regards its case as ongoing, pointing out that otherwise there would be no reason for the Accused or her Counsel to be present, to cross-examine witnesses, and intervene in other ways. Further, in joint proceedings, a trial is terminated when all defence cases and the final pleadings have been heard.[134] The Defence for Nyiramasuhuko adds that it is contradictory for the Prosecutor to agree with Nteziryayo's submission regarding the Parties' right to rely on evidence, while contending that Nyiramasuhuko's case is closed, because if her case were closed, she could not rely on further evidence yet to be tendered.[135]

50. In its Reply to the Prosecution's Addendum, the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko reiterates the arguments contained in the Motion,[136] adding, however, that the Prosecution relies on the same elements as those mentioned in Rule 82 and in the jurisprudence of the ICTR and the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia with regard to the severance of joint proceedings in conspiracy charges.[137] According to the Defence, the criterion used by the courts of the United States of America regarding severance in joint proceedings, is evidence of a conflict of interests emanating from antagonistic or contradictory defence strategies and comprising the risk of causing serious damage to a legal right of a joint accused.[138]

51. In the Zafiro et al. case cited by the Prosecution,[139] the judges decided that the conflict of interests was not clearly contradictory or antagonistic and that no legally recognized prejudice had been caused.[140] The Defence submits that the serious violation of a fundamental right of an accused must not be confused with the risk of a jury's incomprehension in joint proceedings, especially if the charges concern conspiracy. It is well aware that Nyiramasuhuko's case is not heard by three judges, and not by a jury, but maintains that her most fundamental right, the right to a fair trial, has been violated in an irreversible manner and that in consequence her trial must be severed.[141] Since the prejudice has already been suffered, the judges – however experienced – cannot put her back to a situation minimizing that prejudice, unless they were to grant the Motion.[142] As stated in the remarks of Judge Stevens, the Defence submits that Nyiramasuhuko has to face two "additional Prosecutors", namely, Kanyabashi and Nsabimana and that this has allowed the Prosecution, after the end of its case, to benefit from Kanyabashi's and Nsabimana's defence strategies. This is an unfair advantage for the Prosecution and disadvantages Nyiramasuhuko, whose defence case is closed. The presence of two "additional Prosecutors" per se is evidence of proceedings which have become unfair.[143] Whilst in the case cited by the Prosecutor the conditions for severance have not been met, the court clearly recognizes the right to severance in cases where the right to a fair trial is in danger of suffering prejudice, and a fortiori if a prejudice to this right has already been suffered.[144]

52. In Reply to Nteziryayo's Response, Nyiramasuhuko agrees that all parties should be heard if the Motion is granted.[145] As to the question of who can rely on evidence in joint proceedings, the Defence stresses that if there is a charge of conspiracy, every piece of evidence concerning an act undertaken for the common aim may be relied upon against all persons accused of conspiracy, once conspiracy has been proved beyond reasonable doubt.[146] Therefore, not all evidence can be used against all parties, even if there is a conspiracy charge.[147] Further, according to the Defence, all evidence presented in joint proceedings may be used by all parties to raise reasonable doubt as to their respective criminal responsibility.[148] The Defence also submits that this question of law should be clarified by the Chamber as quickly as possible.[149]

KANYABASHI'S RESPONSE

53. The Defence for Kanyabashi prays that the Chamber declare that his defence has not interfered with other defence teams' strategies, but that it has only tried to present a full defence in joint proceedings, and leaves it to the Chamber to decide the Motion.[150]

54. The Defence submits that it has always opposed the joinder but respects the Chamber's decision of 5 October 1999.[151] As to Nyiramasuhuko's allegations of interfering in her defence, Kanyabashi submits that the Indictment (paras. 5.1 and 6.62) refers to an alleged conspiracy with Nyiramasuhuko and that he needs to cross-examine witnesses on this subject.[152] This does not, however, constitute interfering in another Accused's defence.[153] As to Nyiramasuhuko's submission regarding prejudice resulting from Kanyabashi's defence, which is opposed to hers, Kanyabashi replies that his defence strategy has been the same during the proceedings and that his cross-examination of Nyiramasuhuko could not have been a surprise, since her examination-in-chief aimed to cast doubt on statements Kanyabashi had elicited from Witnesses RV, Alison Des Forges, and André Guichaoua, or were raised by Nyiramasuhuko herself.[154]

55. Besides, the Defence for Kanyabashi contends that it does not relentlessly insist upon certain allegations against Nyiramasuhuko, as alleged by the latter, but that it responds to her allegations and that, according to certain observers, it is rather Nyiramasuhuko who lays the blame on local authorities, such as Kanyabashi.[155] Kanyabashi's defence strategy is clear: to defend himself against the accusations leveled against him and because of which he has been detained for more than ten years, while being presumed innocent.[156]

56. The Defence further stresses that apart from clerical errors, it has complied with the disclosure obligations, as noted by Counsel for Nyiramasuhuko.[157]

57. As to the order of conducting cross-examinations and presenting defence cases, the Defence contends that in a trial joining six accused, all cannot testify at the same time. An order has to be established, and this was done according to the applicable law. There was no appeal.[158]

58. The Defence also submits that it agrees with Nteziryayo's and the Prosecutor's submissions regarding the right of other parties to rely on evidence presented in joint proceedings.[159]

[159] Kanyabashi's Response, paras. 8-9.

59. In its Reply to Kanyabashi's Response, the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko reiterates its arguments contained in the Motion[160] and submits that it did not criticize Kanyabashi for his choice of defence strategy, since it is his right to defend himself in any way he chooses.[161] It reiterates that Kanyabashi interferes with its defence strategy, since his strategy goes further than he pretends, because he considers that the implication and degree of criminality regarding the events at Butare between April and July 1994 rest on the government and its members, including Nyiramasuhuko, and not the "little bourgmestres", including himself.[162] Whilst this strategy is legitimate, it is also legitimate for Nyiramasuhuko to point out that Kanyabashi's defence strategy is contradictory to hers and aims at incriminating her.[163] The Defence submits that it is this strategy which makes Kanyabashi interfere with her defence.[164] Even if the Chamber found that Kanyabashi's defence strategy does not interfere with Nyiramasuhuko's, it is still in contradiction with hers, lays the blame on her, and thus has caused her prejudice.[165]

60. The Defence also maintains that there were elements of surprise in Kanyabashi's cross-examination since he used documents that were not known, and in some cases have not been divulged, to the Defence.[166] In this context, the Chamber has not been consistent in its orders for disclosure, or regarding the formulation of suggestions that may be put to witnesses.[167]

61. As to Kanyabashi's argument that in joint proceedings not all the Accused can be heard at the same time, the Defence argues that this is not an issue. Rather, the fact that Nyiramasuhuko was compelled to be the first Accused to cross-examine Prosecution witnesses, and especially to be the first to first present her defence case, has caused her prejudice. The Defence points out that this is not contested by Kanyabashi.[168]

Deliberations

62. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber observes that many of the portions of the transcripts cited and relied upon by the Defence are not properly referenced,[169] or are not referenced at all.[170] This observation also applies to a decision quoted by the Defence.[171] The Chamber reminds Counsel of their obligation to act with care and diligence, pursuant to Articles 5 (a) and 6 of the Code of Professional Conduct for Defence Counsel. It is not up to the Chamber to decipher parties' pleadings.

63. The Chamber recalls the provisions of Rule 82:

> (A) In joint trials, each accused shall be accorded the same rights as if he were being tried separately.
> (B) The Trial Chamber may order that persons accused jointly under Rule 48 be tried separately if it considers it necessary in order to avoid a conflict of interests that might cause serious prejudice to an accused, or to protect the interests of justice.

64. The Chamber recalls that it has a discretionary power to order a separate trial.[172] It has carefully considered the Parties' submissions regarding the alleged conflict of interests and the violations of the interests of justice and will address them in turn.

Conflict of Interests that Might Cause Serious Prejudice

65. Regarding a conflict of interests between co-accused within the meaning of Rule 82 (B), the Chamber observes that its existence is to be determined on a case-by-case basis,[173] and that for such a conflict to exist, circumstances must be extraordinary.[174]

66. The Chamber observes that Nyiramasuhuko alleges a conflict of interests between its defence strategy and Nsabimana's and Kanyabashi's respective defence strategies, based on three main elements: (1) the fact that Kanyabashi and Nsabimana insist on allegations that do not concern them, although they are contained in their Indictments, in order to attack Nyiramasuhuko; (2) the different positions held by these three Accused with regard to membership of political parties or of government; and (3) their different implications in the events in Butare between April and July 1994.

67. The Chamber recalls that a legally recognized conflict of interests that would cause serious prejudice is not demonstrated if one accused shifts blame to another joint accused.[175] The Chamber further recalls that a situation where the accused have allegedly played different roles in the hierarchy or even in different hierarchies of command, leading to possibly different culpability of the accused, does not constitute a conflict of interests that might cause serious prejudice to the accused.[176] The Chamber recalls the Brdanin and Talic Decision, where it was held:

> Nor does the Trial Chamber see any possibility of serious prejudice resulting from the prospect that Brdanin may give evidence which incriminates Talic (…). A joint trial does not require a joint defence, and necessarily envisages the case where each accused may seek to blame the other. (…) Any prejudice which may flow to either accused from the loss of the "right" asserted by Talic here to be tried without incriminating evidence being given against him by his co-accused is not ordinarily the type of serious prejudice to which Rule 82 (C) (sic) is directed. The Trial Chamber recognises that there could possibly exist a case in which the circumstances of the conflict between the two accused are such as to render unfair a joint trial against one of them, but the circumstances would have to be extraordinary.[177]

68. Having reviewed all arguments, including the portions of transcripts in support of the alleged conflict of interests,[178] the Chamber is of the opinion that the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that there is a conflict of interests between Nyiramasuhuko and her two co-accused, corresponding to the extraordinary and exceptional circumstances which are necessary for the application of Rule 82 (B).

69. Further, the Chamber notes that its decisions, which have purportedly aggravated the prejudice resulting from this alleged conflict of interests, were legally made and are unchallenged. The Chamber is of the view that these decisions do not give rise to any prejudice.

70. The Chamber underscores that it has always been and continues to be alive to the need for a fair trial with due considerations given to the rights of the accused within a joint trial, to ensure that each does not lose the rights that he or she would have if tried alone.[179] It also recalls that the Rules provide for several remedies, which are always available should any prejudice arise within the course of the trial and if the legal requirements are met. Such remedies may include cross-examination, further cross-examination, recall, or rebuttal evidence.

71. The Chamber therefore finds that there has not been any demonstration of a conflict of interests that would cause serious prejudice within the meaning of Rule 82 (B).

Interests of Justice

72. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber notes that the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko has included its earlier Motion for Stay of Proceedings in the present Motion by way of reference.[180] The Chamber does not consider that the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko is justified in raising the arguments contained in the earlier Motion once again, as there are no new elements and the Chamber has already decided this Motion. The issue of general alleged delay due to joinder that was not included in that Motion will be addressed in this Decision. The Chamber will also address the conduct of Counsel at the end of the present Decision.

73. The Defence for Nyiramasuhuko submits that pursuant to Rule 82 (B), it is in the interests of justice that Nyiramasuhuko's trial be severed from Nsabimana's and Kanyabashi's. It mainly relies on three elements: (1) the right to a fair trial; (2) the right to be tried without undue delay; and (3) the consideration of the complexity of a case in determining appropriate delays. According to the Defence, none of these elements is met in the present case, and therefore severance, to be followed by a new trial, is warranted. However, because of the delays, the Defence moves for a stay of proceedings.

74. The Chamber notes the submission that Nyiramasuhuko's trial has been rendered unfair by the conflict of interests between her defence strategy and Nsabimana's and Kanyabashi's. However, the Chamber has already determined that no conflict of interests within the meaning of Rule 82 (B) has been demonstrated, for the reasons given in paragraphs 68 to 71 above.

75. As to the right to be tried without undue delay and the consideration of the complexity of the case, the Chamber underscores that it is fully aware of the length of proceedings and the detention period of the Accused, and that the expeditiousness of proceedings has been a constant concern.[181] The Chamber recalls that the interests of justice mentioned in Rule 82 (B) may include, inter alia, an expeditious and fair trial as provided in Article 19. However,

They must come to an end at some point." See also Decision on Joinder, para. 15; Decision on Ntahobali's Motion for Severance, para. 23; Decision on Ndayambaje's Motion for Severance, paras. 18-19; Decision on Nyiramasuhuko's Motion for Stay of Proceedings, para. 16.

> "in determining whether a delay in the criminal proceedings against the accused is undue, it is essential to consider the length of the delay, the gravity, nature and complexity of the case, as well as any prejudice that the accused may suffer."[182]

The Chamber notes that a joint trial might last longer than that of a single accused,[183] without necessarily encroaching upon the right to be tried without undue delay.[184] The Chamber reiterates that the instant case raises complex issues of law and fact.[185]

76. The Chamber also recalls its decision that the fact that an accused might be tried faster, should severance be granted, does not per se render unreasonable the length of the joint proceedings. Further, the possible acceleration of proceedings by severance is not necessarily compatible with the good administration of justice.[186] The Chamber is of the opinion that Nyiramasuhuko's submissions to the effect that the trials of all Accused would be concluded by now, had joinder been denied, are hypothetical and speculative.

77. Besides, the Chamber observes that whilst the right to be tried without undue delay, pursuant to Articles 19 (1) and 20 (4) (c), is one of the elements of the interests of justice within the meaning of Rule 82 (B), it is not the only one. Rather, the advantages of a joint trial, which are not lightly outweighed, include uniform presentation of evidence and uniform procedure; the guarantee of consistent treatment of evidence, verdicts, and sentencing; and ensuring that witnesses need not be called repeatedly in separate trials.[187] The Chamber notes that the protection of victims and other witnesses is part of the interests of justice pursuant to Rule 82 (B),[188] and that this has been the constant concern of the Chamber.[189] In this context, the Chamber recalls that > "the similarity of the allegations in the different indictments (…) will avoid the unnecessary pressure and trauma caused to victims and other witnesses who may be repeatedly called upon to testify in separate trials."[190]

78. With respect to the request for a new trial after severance is granted, the Chamber notes that witnesses may have to be recalled to testify again, which is the situation the Chamber wished to avoid when it granted joinder.

79. On balance, therefore, the Chamber is of the opinion that the length of proceedings has not violated Pauline Nyiramasuhuko's right to be tried without undue delay, given the complexity of the present case and taking into account the other elements that make up the interests of justice within the ambit of Rule 82 (B), discussed in the preceding paragraphs, as well as the advanced stage of proceedings. The Chamber notes that the length of proceedings is also quoted by the Defence in support for its prayer for a stay of proceedings, but considers that such a measure is not justified under the present circumstances.

80. The Trial Chamber is of the view that no case has been made for severance, a new trial, or a stay of proceedings against Pauline Nyiramasuhuko. The Chamber finds that it would not be in the interests of justice to grant the Motion.

Conduct of Counsel

81. The Chamber notes that the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko has included its earlier Motion for Stay of Proceedings, filed on 25 June 2003, in the present Motion by way of reference. The Chamber further notes that the earlier Motion included the alleged prejudice Nyiramasuhuko had suffered from not being promptly informed of her rights when she was arrested and until her initial appearance.[191] This issue was already addressed in 2000.[192]

82. The Chamber recalls that in 2004, it considered Counsel's conduct in re-litigating issues resolved in 2000 to be an attempt to obstruct proceedings and warned Counsel pursuant to Rule 46 (A).[193] The Chamber is now of the opinion that sanctions pursuant to Rule 73 (F) are warranted for Counsel's lack of observance of the Chamber's warning in this matter.

83. The Chamber recalls that pursuant to Rule 73 (F), > a Chamber may impose sanctions against Counsel if Counsel brings a Motion (…) that in the opinion of the Chamber, is frivolous or is an abuse of process. Such sanctions may include non-payment, in whole or in part, of fees associated with the motion and/or costs thereof.

84. As the prayers included in the 2003 Defence Motion and reintegrated into the present Motion have been addressed in 2004, the Chamber is of the opinion that relitigating these matters is frivolous. It therefore orders that the fees associated with the filing of the previous Motion as an annex to the present Motion not be paid.

DENIES the Motion for severance, a new trial, and stay of proceedings in all respects;

[192] Decision on Nyiramasuhuko's Motion for Certification to Appeal, paras. 24-25, refers to Prosecutor v. Nyiramasuhuko et al., Décision relative à la requete de la Défense en exclusion de preuve et remise de biens saisis, 12 October 2000. The Chamber recalls that it held then that '[i]t worries the Chamber that the same Defence Counsel who brought the Motion decided by the late Judge Kama in March 2000 felt no qualms in bringing back the same issues in June 2003, without saying a word to even hint at the fact that they had raised those issues on a previous occasion and that the decision went against them. Submissions of the Parties

Defence for Kanyabashi

1. The Defence for Kanyabashi requests the Chamber to grant it leave to use earlier statements made by Arsène Shalom Ntahobali during his cross-examination. These are statements he made on 24 and 26 July 1997 to Prosecution Investigators ("transcripts of Ntahobali's interviews"), as well as related documents signed by the Accused, including three waivers of his rights, biographical elements of 23 and 24 July 1997, and a one page sketch, dated 26 July 1997. At the end of Ntahobali's examination-in-chief, the Defence communicated to the other defence teams, its intention to use these documents.

2. The Defence submits that it will use the documents to challenge the credibility of the Accused, but that it will not address their substance. Further, the Defence submits that they should not be used against co-Accused. It maintains that it is justified to use the documents, since Kanyabashi, who is being jointly tried with Ntahobali, has been implicated by the latter during his testimony. Accordingly, the Defence argues that it has the right to challenge Ntahobali's credibility by using the statements Ntahobali made to the Prosecution in 1997.

3. However, the Defence submits that, at this stage of proceedings, the Prosecution is foreclosed from requesting a voir dire with the aim of tendering the statements into evidence, since it is a fundamental right for an accused person to know the entirety of the evidence against him before he decides to put up his defence. In this sense, the rights of an accused differ from those of the Prosecution, for example, the Prosecution does not have the right to remain silent.

4. The Defence refers to Rules 42, 43, 63, 92, and 95. Rule 92 makes no distinction between the Prosecution and the Defence and refers to Rule 63, which concerns the admissibility. Rules 42 and 43 address issues of substance and form, respectively, Rule 43 being less exacting than Rule 42. The Defence submits that the rights of the Accused Ntahobali have been respected in the production of the relevant documents, as there are three statements to the effect that no promises or threats were used. Rule 42 has been complied with, as well as the substance of Rule 43.[2] It only remains with the Chamber to determine the question whether a voir dire should be held before the documents in question may be used.

5. As to the question whether the same rules regarding foreclosure are applicable to the Prosecution and co-accused, the Defence relies on the English decision in Queen v. Myers,[3] in which it was held that an out-of-court confession made by one defendant, which the Prosecution had not relied upon because of admitted breaches of procedural rules, may be put in evidence by the second defendant as evidence of the facts stated, as long as the confession is relevant to the second Defence and so long as it appears that the confession was not obtained in a manner which would have made it inadmissible. Therefore, according to English law, the Defence can use an earlier declaration of a co-accused, even if the Prosecution may not. Further, two other English decisions allow the use of an inadmissible confession in cross-examining a co-accused.[4]

6. In support of its submission that such statements may not be used against co-accused, the Defence relies on the English decision in Rawson, which held that it was a fundamental rule of evidence that statements made by one defendant either to the Police or to others (other than statements, whether in the presence or absence of co-defendant, made in the course and pursuance of a joint criminal enterprise to which the co-defendant was a party), are not evidence against a co-defendant, unless the co-defendant either expressly or by implication adopts the statements and thereby makes them his own.[5]

Submissions made by the Prosecution

7. The Prosecution submits that Ntahobali's 1997 statements do not contain a confession in the strict legal sense, but merely explain the Accused's role in the 1994 events. The statements made in 1997 are closer to 1994 and therefore more reliable than subsequent statements. According to the Prosecution, it is in the interests of justice that the interviews be admitted into evidence.

8. Pursuant to Rule 89 (C), a previous statement made in an interview can be used by the Parties to the proceedings, as it is the very purpose for which such interviews are conducted by the Prosecution. The Prosecution had also intended using the documents in question in its cross-examination of Ntahobali. Further, the interview itself is admissible as an exhibit. There is no material prejudice, as the Prosecution has complied with the Rules, including Rules 42 and 43. This is evident from the transcripts of the interviews and the documents signed by the Accused.

9. The Prosecution submits that the Chamber is entitled to examine the transcripts of the interviews, as well as the accompanying documentation, including the waivers signed by the Accused and it will discern that there is no material prejudice, because the Prosecution has complied with the Rules, including Rules 42 and 43. This is evident from the transcripts of the interviews and the documents signed by the Accused.

10. The Prosecution recalls that Ntahobali voluntarily surrendered to the Tribunal and freely agreed to be interviewed without Counsel. According to the Prosecution, he is a man of high intellect and intellectual accomplishments, so that there can be no question of his not understanding what was occurring during the interviews. The interviews were sealed in his presence, and he signed to that effect. There is no evidence of threats, torture, or oppression used during the interview. Rule 42 was fully complied with because the Accused was informed of his right to Counsel, to the free assistance of an interpreter, and to remain silent.

11. The Prosecution submits that it did not use the statements during the Prosecution case because it was not known at the time whether the Accused was going to testify and whether his testimony would be inconsistent with his previous statements.

12. The Prosecution submits that it does not seek a voir dire, as it is neither applicable, nor relevant. Since the Accused is in the witness box, he can be asked questions in cross-examination or re-examination. Further, the documents in question are self-evident and self-explanatory. The Prosecution recalls that a voir dire is not essential before International Tribunals. It submits that the Zigiranyirizo case, which orders a voir dire,[6] is distinguishable from the instant case because it concerns a Defence Motion for Disclosure of Evidence. Further, the case at hand is heard before three professional judges, whereas the voir dire procedure has been developed to facilitate the work of a jury.[7]

13. As to the applicable law, the Prosecution relies on the decision to admit Nsabimana's statements through its expert witness Desforges,[8] while its weight and probative value were to be determined at a later stage. According to the Prosecution, there is no jurisprudence with regard to a possible foreclosure of the Prosecution to tender the relevant documents.

14. The Prosecution further relies on a decision in Bizimungu et al., on the Prosecution's compliance with Rules 40, 42 and 43.[9] A similar decision was issued in Delalic et al.,[10] when it was stated that the standard of oppression changes with the age and experience with the administration of justice the interviewee may have. In a decision in Kabiligi and Ntabakuze, it was held that the Trial Chamber does not exercise a general control over investigations conducted by the Prosecution as such, but may only grant relief if an alleged unlawful investigation results in material prejudice to an accused.[11]

15. The Prosecution further stresses the wide discretion the Chamber has pursuant to Rules 89 (D) and 94. It quotes a decision in Martic which held that the Tribunal's practice is in favour of admissibility, whereas the admission of a document is not equivalent to the recognition of its correctness.[12]

Defence for Ndayambaje

16. The Defence for Ndayambaje agrees with the Defence for Kanyabashi as far as the Prosecution's foreclosure from introducing the documents at this point is concerned. Further, there might also be a prejudice to the Accused Ndayambaje, which had to be raised at this moment, as it might not be possible to do so later.

17. The Defence also argues that if the Prosecution did not tender the documents in question because they did not know if the Accused would testify, then it would have been the proper procedure to reserve the right to cross-examination regarding this document in the eventuality that the Accused would testify in his own defence.

Defence for Nteziryayo

18. The Defence for Nteziryayo relies on the Canadian decision rendered in Regina v. Crawford. Its solution for the competing rights of co-accused is that a co-accused is not bound by the rules on the admissibility of a statement, but can cross-examine on credibility matters. Further, he cannot produce a statement as evidence without admissibility issues being resolved. An accused who testifies against a co-accused must accept that his credibility can be fully challenged by the latter.[13] Therefore, in the cited decision, a voir dire was not held to be necessary. The Defence adds that the Canadian Supreme Court did not have to contend with the equivalent of Rule 82 of the Rules.

Defence for Nyiramasuhuko

19. The Defence for Nyiramasuhuko agrees with the proposition that an accused has the fundamental right to be informed of the evidence that may be used against him. It recalls that the Prosecution has chosen a different procedure and has not tendered the evidence in question within the framework of its case. According to the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko, the Defence for Kanyabashi is as foreclosed as the Prosecution from tendering the documents in question.

20. The Defence states that the ICTY jurisprudence reflects the position that mere compliance with Rules 42 and 43 is not enough to use a document.[14] Further, it is incongruous that an Accused may prove that the Prosecution has respected these Rules.

21. The Defence refers to the cited decision in Crawford, but stresses that the passage relevant to the matter at hand states that where allegations on a co-accused are relevant to his defence, an accused can not be limited. The remedy would be to request severance, which may be granted if there is serious prejudice.[15] It was pointed out by the Defence for Nteziryayo, however, that this passage was merely the Supreme Court's analysis of the Court of Appeals' decision.

22. The Defence submits that there is a further distinction between Crawford and the instant case, because in the Canadian case, each co-accused was charged with having murdered the same person, whereas Butare addresses the alleged joint commission of genocide and crimes against humanity.

23. The Defence also submits that while the Defence for Kanyabashi has argued that the documents will only be used against Ntahobali, the latter has spoken frequently about his mother, the Accused Nyiramasuhuko. Her Defence therefore seeks clarification on whether the documents will not also be used to make allegations against Nyiramasuhuko, particularly as the presentation of her case and her testimony has already been concluded. The possible prejudice arising from such use is obvious.

24. The Defence recalls that Ntahobali is not an ordinary witness, but an Accused. He has the right to know the evidence to be used against him; that it is a co-accused who decides to use it, changes nothing. This right is so fundamental that at the present moment, it is impossible to use the declarations against Ntahobali.

Defence for Ntahobali

25. The Defence for Ntahobali objects to anyone using the documents in question, for any end. A simple summary examination of the documents will not end the discussion or provide an answer to the question whether they may be used by the Defence for Kanyabashi.

26. According to the Defence, the hearing held on 9 May 2006, cannot be equated to a voir dire, because a simple examination of the documents does not permit the Chamber to know whether the Accused answered questions while a gun was held to his head.

27. The Defence argues that it is impermissible for the Defence for Kanyabashi to submit that 90 % of the documents in question have been obtained in compliance with the Rules, because Counsel may not testify.

28. The Defence also submits that the Canadian law as to a co-defendant's right to launch allegations against an accused is not as clear as has been pleaded. The decision in Crawford is distinguishable, as an interrogation in this case would have concerned the absence of a declaration, rather than an existing earlier declaration as in the present case.

29. The Defence refers to the Canadian Supreme Court decision of R. v. G. (B.) [B.G.],[16] made after the decision in Crawford, which held,

> To reintroduce an involuntary statement in this way would run counter to the most fundamental aspect of trial fairness. In many cases, as here, the guilt of the accused will depend solely on his credibility and of that of the other witnesses. To allow the statement to be used, even for the limited purpose of undermining the credibility of the accused, could lead to abuse and serious injustice. That is why the traditional rule, in force in Canadian law, must be interpreted in such a way that no use may be made of an inadmissible statement at any stage whatsoever of the trial.

30. Further, the Defence submits that it is incumbent on the Chamber to fully explore the circumstances surrounding the taking of the allegedly voluntary interviews.[17] It also recalls that it was held in a Bagosora et al. decision that the most exacting standards must be observed in determining whether an interview was given under oppressive conditions.[18]

31. The Defence therefore submits that the Chamber must demand convincing proof from the Prosecution as to the free and voluntary character of the statements and the compliance with the Rules when the statements were obtained. It recalls that the Prosecution carries the burden of proof in that matter. The Defence further submits that it has informed the Chamber as of 2001 of its objections to the use of the documents in question. In 2001, the Defence had indicated to the Chamber that when Ntahobali made the interviews in 1997, he was under the belief that he was cooperating with representatives of the Tribunal, rather than those of the Office of the Prosecutor.[19] This also applies to the interviews having been granted in the context of arrests of Ntahobali's family members and the payment of money to the Kenyan police in exchange for the promise of their liberation, particularly his father's.

[16] R.. v. G. (B.) [B.G.], [1999], 2 S.C.R., p. 660, para. 34. The Chamber takes note that this passage refers to confessions and that the following paragraph distinguishes the law applicable to confessions from the use of former mere statement of an accused in the cross-examination conducted by a co-accused.

[17] The Defence relies on Prosecutor v. Sefer Halilovic, Decision on Motion for Exclusion of Statement of Accused, 8 July 2005.

32. The Defence also submits that two of the declarations in question have been illegally obtained from Ntahobali and that an illegally obtained declaration may never be used to cross-examine the accused who is its author. If they were to be used, a voir dire procedure would have to be ordered, as has been done at this Tribunal.[20] In the case of such a procedure, all witnesses implicated in the production of the statement will have to be heard.

33. The Defence for Ntahobali concludes by stating that the highest standards of justice should be applied by International Tribunals, given that they judge the most serious crimes.

Letter from Ntahobali

34. The Accused Arsène Shalom Ntahobali submits that he has written a letter to the Chamber on 9 May 2006 because he is testifying and has not been able to address his Counsel during the proceedings held on that day. He argues that if he had been given the floor in court, he would have made suggestions to them or addressed himself to the Chamber, but he was not asked to speak. Therefore, he wishes to raise certain issues regarding the use of the interviews.

35. Ntahobali submits, as he indicated to the Chamber on Monday, 8 May 2006, that he has never received the nine original audio tapes made in the course of the 1997 interviews. Further, he has never received the document he wrote himself at the Hotel Intercontinental, as confirmed in the French transcripts of tape 3, p. 8 (K0133936).

36. Besides, Ntahobali submits that the transcripts have been signed neither by him, nor by the investigators. It is not clear that these transcripts are a faithful reflection of the originals. Further, while browsing the transcripts, he has noticed several mistakes.

37. Ntahobali submits that whilst the Prosecution has alleged that there is a document handwritten by him and dated 24 July 1997, this is not the case. Rather, this one-page document has been handwritten by Mr Robert Petit.

38. The Accused Ntahobali recalls that Robert Petit introduced himself as Legal Officer of the Tribunal, and Paul Dobbie as an Investigator of the Tribunal. Nobody told him that they were working at the Office of the Prosecutor.

39. Further, five Accused in the Butare proceedings have made statements, including Kanyabashi, who was in largely more favourable conditions when interrogated. The Accused Ntahobali requests to know if the Chamber will allow him to use these declarations, which in several respects exonerate him.

40. The Accused Ntahobali requests to be heard by the Chamber regarding the circumstances under which these interviews were conducted, and how he spent his nights handcuffed, before an unjust or prejudicial decision is taken. He also requests to be given the nine original audio tapes to allow him to undertake the necessary verifications and to answer questions.

Prosecution's Response to Letter from Ntahobali

41. In its Response, the Prosecution submits that the interview tapes of Ntahobali were on the Prosecution Modified Exhibits List of 27 September 2001, and that the Prosecution wrote to all Defence Counsel in the Butare case on 12 October 2001 to collect 5 CD Roms containing the proposed Prosecution exhibits, including Ntahobali's interviews. The Prosecution confirms that the Defence for Ntahobali, as well as the other Defence teams subsequently received copies of the interview tapes and transcripts on 16 October 2001, while the originals remain sealed and under the Prosecution's custody.

42. As to the transcript of the interview on tape 3, the Prosecution submits that K0133936 refers to two documents. The Accused confirmed in the course of the interview that the first document was handwritten by him at the Hotel Intercontinental. The document in question indicates that no threat was made and no promise or inducement was offered to the Accused to surrender. The second typed document containing the rights of the Accused during the interviews was prepared by the Interviewing Officer and signed by the Accused Ntahobali. The Prosecution submits that it is currently unable to confirm if copies of these two documents have been served on the Accused. However, Counsel for Kanyabashi served copies on all Parties at the beginning of his cross-examination of the Accused Ntahobali.

Ntahobali's Affidavit

43. The Accused Ntahobali submits in his affidavit dated 11 May 2006 that his interviews of 1997 need to be viewed in the context of arrests of his immediate family members, including his father. His family members were only released in exchange for sums of money paid to the Kenyan police. However, when he surrendered to ICTR representatives, he did so under the impression that in exchange for his cooperation, his father would be released. Further, the ICTR representatives did not make it clear to him that they were working for the Prosecutor. Ntahobali submits that although he was detained in Nairobi from 23 July 1997, he was not formally arrested before 25 July 1997. Further, he had to sleep handcuffed. The Accused submits that while he was being acquainted with his rights, he was not afforded a real opportunity of considering and exercising them. He argues that subterfuge was used to surprise him into making statements as he did not understand who he was talking to and nobody had told him that the persons he took to be "ICTR representatives" were in fact working for the Prosecution.

44. In the hearing on 15 May 2006, the Chamber asked the Accused Ntahobali whether the issues raised in the affidavit corresponded to those he had wanted to be heard on, as stated in his letter, and whether he had anything to add to his affidavit. The Accused replied that those were the issues he had wished to discuss and that he had nothing to add, reiterating his complaint about a missing handwritten document.

Deliberations

45. The Chamber notes that three main issues were raised on 9 May 2006: whether it should conduct a voir dire proceeding to ascertain that Ntahobali's interviews were properly taken; the scope of the use of Ntahobali's interviews at this stage of the proceedings; and their admissibility.

The Request for a Voir Dire Proceeding

46. The Chamber notes that in its submissions, the Defence for Ntahobali, relying heavily on Canadian jurisprudence and practice, maintains that for Ntahobali's interviews to be used by the Defence of Kanyabashi, the Chamber is required to hold a voir dire procedure to determine whether they were given voluntarily and thus legally obtained by the Prosecution, in compliance with the Statute and the Rules.

47. The common law procedure of a 'trial within a trial,' also referred to as a voir dire procedure is,

> "a preliminary examination to test the admissibility of evidence [on the ground that it was not made voluntarily] in the absence of the jury, the purpose being to avoid contaminating the minds of the jury with material that might never become evidence in the case."[21]

In the United Kingdom, the voir dire procedure has been extended to apply to

> "the admissibility of a confession if the Defence represents to the court that the confession may have been obtained by oppression of the person who made it, or in consequence of anything said or done which was likely, in the circumstances existing at the time, to render unreliable any confession which might be made by him in consequence thereof."[22]

48. The jurisprudence has been that for the procedure to be triggered, the Defence is required to satisfy the court of the existence of any of the situations amounting to an accused's statement not having been made voluntarily,[23] and, once a statement is challenged on the ground that it was not made voluntarily, "the Prosecution has the burden of proving, beyond a reasonable doubt," that it was made voluntarily and that it was not obtained either by fear of prejudice or hope of advantage held out by interrogators.[24]

49. The Chamber notes that the voir dire procedure is not specifically provided for under the Rules. The Appeals Chamber in the Delalić et al. case opined that

> "rules of evidence as expressly provided in the Rules should be primarily applied, with assistance of national principles only if necessary for guidance in the interpretation of these Rules."[25]

However, the Appeals Chamber did not rule out the application of the voir dire procedure by a Trial Chamber if in a particular case it thought it appropriate.[26]

50. While the Chamber recalls that since a voir dire procedure is usually embarked upon in the absence of the jury in order to prevent contamination of evidence, there is no such risk of

Delalic et al*, Decision on the Motions for the Exclusion of Evidence by the Accused, Zejnil Delalic of 25 September 1997 at para. 29, quoting the English case of Ibrahim v. R (1914) A. C. 609 where it was declared: "It has long been established as a positive rule of English criminal law that no statement by an accused is admissible in evidence against him unless it is shown by the prosecution to have been a voluntary statement, in the sense that it has not been obtained from him either by fear of prejudice or hope of advantage exercised or held from him either by fear of prejudice or hope of advantage exercised or held out by a person in authority. The principle is as old as Hale."

contamination of evidence because the Chamber is composed of professional Judges who hear the case without the aid of jurors.[27]

51. The Chamber notes that since Ntahobali's interviews are not confessions to the commission of the crimes for which he has been charged and that, rather, the interviews include Ntahobali's account of the events of 1994, the voir dire procedure requested is not appropriate in the circumstances of the case.

52. The Chamber finds the Defence for Ntahobali's submission that if the Chamber were to hold a voir dire, it may show that during Ntahobali's interviews, the Accused may have had a weapon put against his head or he may have been given promises inducing him to give the interviews, to be mere speculation.

53. The Chamber agrees with the Appeals Chamber that the Rules should be primarily applied, with assistance of national principles only if necessary for guidance in the interpretation of these Rules. The Chamber is not convinced that it is only by way of a voir dire that the challenge to the Prosecution's compliance with the Statute and the Rules when it conducted Ntahobali's interviews can be dealt with.

54. The Chamber recalls that in the cases of Bagosora et al.,[28] Bizimungu et al.,[29] and Kabiligi and Ntabakuze,[30] Trial Chambers at the Tribunal perused the transcripts of the interviews in which custodial statements of the respective accused persons were taken and made determinations as to whether the Prosecution complied with the relevant Articles, i.e., Articles 18 and 20 and the relevant Rules, i.e., Rules 42, 43, 63 and 92.

55. The Chamber finds that through a perusal of the transcripts of Ntahobali's interviews as well as through the normal procedure of admissibility of evidence provided under Rule 89 (C), and the conditions laid out in Rules 89 (D) and 95, it is able ascertain whether the Prosecution obtained Ntahobali's interviews in compliance with Article 20 of the Statute and Rules 42, 43 and 63 of the Rules.

56. Accordingly, the Chamber denies the Defence of Ntahobali's request to hold a voir dire procedure.

Scope of the Use of Ntahobali's Interviews

57. The Chamber recalls that the Defence for Kanyabashi, Ndayambaje and Nyiramasuhuko submitted that the Prosecution is not entitled to tender into evidence Ntahobali's interviews or to use them to challenge his credibility, at this stage of the proceedings. According to the Defence of Kanyabashi and Nyiramasuhuko, this tendering should have been done during the presentation of the Prosecution case. The Defence for Ndayambaje adds that according to common-law jurisdictions, the Prosecution must use any statement made by an accused during the presentation of its own case and not afterwards. Furthermore, Kanyabashi and Nyiramasuhuko's Defence point out that an accused has the right to know the totality of the evidence that may be used against him.

58. The Defence for Nyiramasuhuko argued that the foreclosure extends to the co-accused.

[30] Prosecutor v. Kabiligi and Ntabakuze, Decision on Kabiligi's Motion to Nullify and Declare Evidence Inadmissible, 2 June 2000.

59. The Chamber also recalls the Prosecution submissions that it intends to use Ntahobali's interviews to cross-examine him and that it is not foreclosed from doing so. The Prosecution further indicates that during the presentation of its case, it was not in a position to know whether or not the Accused would testify on his own behalf and that he would give evidence which is inconsistent with his previous statements.

60. The Chamber is of the opinion that as a general principle, the use of prior statements of a witness during the witness' cross-examination for the purpose of challenging his credibility is allowed and should not be precluded if it is shown to be relevant and reliable. The Chamber considers that there is no distinction between an ordinary witness and an accused who testifies on his behalf in this regard.

61. The Chamber sees no reason to preclude the Prosecution, or any other cross-examining party, from using Ntahobali's interviews for the purpose of cross-examining the Accused on issues pertaining to his credibility only, as long as they are admissible. The Chamber stresses, however, that since the Prosecution did not seek to use the interviews as evidence during the presentation of its case, it is precluded from using their substance at this stage of the proceedings. Regardless of the Accused's choice whether to testify on his own behalf, the Prosecution should have presented this evidence if it intended to rely on the substance of the interviews.

62. Accordingly, the Chamber denies the Motion to declare the Prosecution foreclosed from using Ntahobali's interviews.

63. Finally, the Chamber finds Nyiramasuhuko's submission alleging that the foreclosure should extend to the co-accused to be without legal basis.

Admissibility of Ntahobali's Interviews

64. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber notes that the record of Ntahobali's interviews contains portions in which the word "inaudible" is recurrent. The Chamber has noted that the quality of the tapes is assessed in the cover page of the transcript and ranges from bad to good. Based on this assessment of the quality of the tapes, the Chamber is not convinced that ordering a new transcription of the tapes would result in more clarity in the transcription of the questions and answers. Moreover, the Chamber does not find that the mention of the word "inaudible" in the transcripts affects the reliability and/or substance of the information contained therein.

65. The Chamber recalls that the Defence for Kanyabashi requested to use Ntahobali's interviews in cross-examination to challenge his credibility and that the Prosecution also requested to use them in cross-examination because of alleged inconsistencies with Ntahobali's testimony in court.

66. In the Chamber's opinion, for the Parties to use Ntahobali's interviews in the current proceedings, it is necessary that they be admissible into evidence, provided the relevant safeguards and procedural protections under Article 20 of the Statute and Rules 42, 43 and 63 of the Rules were complied with when the interviews were taken, and provided they are relevant.

67. The Chamber notes that when Ntahobali was interviewed on 24 and 26 July 1997 by Prosecution investigators, his Indictment had already been confirmed by Judge Yakov Ostrovsky on 29 May 1997.[31]

[31] Prosecutor v Nyiramasuhuko et al, Decision to Confirm the Indictment of 29 May 1997.

68. Article 20 (4) guarantees the accused, inter alia, the right not to be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt.

69. Once an Accused is in the custody of the Tribunal, the Prosecution is required to comply with the provisions of Rule 63 if it intends to question him.[32] Rule 63 indicates that the questioning shall not proceed without the presence of counsel unless the Accused has waived his right. The questioning also has to comply with the recording procedure under Rule 43 and the Accused has to be reminded of his right to remain silent and of the fact that the statement may be used as evidence pursuant to Rule 42 (A) (iii) of the Rules.

70. The transcripts of Ntahobali's interviews show that the Accused was clearly informed of his rights under Rules 42 and 43 at the beginning of the interview of 24 July 1997 as well as at the beginning of the interview of 26 July 1997, as well as on several occasions throughout the interview.

71. The Accused was informed of his right to counsel, to the free assistance of an interpreter and that if he chooses to answer questions without the presence of counsel, he can stop the interview at any time and request a counsel. The Accused answered that he understood. When the Accused was informed of his right to remain silent and that any statements he makes shall be recorded and may be used in evidence, he indicated that he understood. After the Accused read out a paper containing a waiver of rights to counsel, the investigator asked him if he understood that what he had read meant that he chose to be interviewed without a lawyer. The Accused answered in the affirmative. The Accused was asked if he chose to be interviewed without threat or duress from anyone, and he confirmed this fact. The Accused was offered the option to write down his account of the events or to be questioned and he chose to be questioned.

72. The Chamber further notes that Ntahobali's interviews were audio-recorded, in accordance with the procedure set out in Rule 43 of the Rules. The records indicate that throughout the interviews, there were regular breaks, upon request by the Accused. Even if the Accused appears to have been tired at the end of the 26 July 1997 interview, there is no evidence that the questioning may have been oppressive or that the Accused had lost control of the situation.

Issues raised in Ntahobali's affidavit

73. The Chamber has taken note of the submissions made by Ntahobali in his affidavit, and has also given him the opportunity to further elaborate on them in court. The Chamber is of the opinion

[32] Rule 63 (Questioning of Accused) provides: Questioning by the Prosecutor of an accused, including after the initial appearance, shall not proceed without the presence of counsel unless the accused has voluntarily and expressly agreed to proceed without counsel present. If the accused subsequently expresses a desire to have counsel, questioning shall thereupon cease, and shall only resume when the accused's counsel is present. The questioning, including any waiver of the right to counsel, shall be audio-recorded or video-recorded in accordance with the procedure provided for in Rule 43. The Prosecutor shall at the beginning of the questioning caution the accused in accordance with Rule 42 (A) (iii);
Rule 42 (Rights of Suspects during Investigation) provides: (A) (iii) the right to remain silent, and to be cautioned that any statement the suspect makes shall be recorded and may be used in evidence.
Rule 43 (Recording Questioning of Suspects) provides: Whenever the Prosecutor questions a suspect, the questioning shall be audio-recorded or video-recorded, in accordance with the following procedure: (i) the suspect shall be informed in a language the suspect speaks and understands that the questioning is being audio-recorded or video-recorded; (ii) in the event of a break in the course of the questioning, the fact and the time of the break shall be recorded before audio-recording or video-recording ends and the time of resumption of the questioning shall also be recorded; (iii) at the conclusion of the questioning the suspect shall be offered the opportunity to clarify anything the suspect has said, and to add anything the suspect may wish, and the time of conclusion shall be recorded; (iv) a copy of the recorded tape will be supplied to the suspect or, if multiple recording apparatus was used, one of the original recorded tapes; (v) after a copy has been made, if necessary, of the recorded tape, the original recorded tape or one of the original tapes shall be sealed in the presence of the suspect under the signature of the Prosecutor and the suspect; and (vi) the tape shall be transcribed if the suspect becomes an accused.

that the issues raised in the affidavit refer to matters prior to the Accused's 1997 interviews and his arrest.

74. The Chamber observes that in the handwritten document which the Accused signed in Nairobi on 24 July 1997 at 01.24 a.m., he stated that he would go to Arusha himself, if he had the means. He further asserted that no promises or threats had been used to obtain his surrender.

75. The Chamber observes that the waivers of rights were signed after the rights pursuant to Rules 42 and 43 of the Rules had been read to the Accused or he had read them himself. The latter confirmed in the proceedings held on 15 May 2006 that he signed a waiver of his rights, which is also clear from the transcripts of the interviews.[33] These are the right to Counsel, free of charge, the right to an interpreter, free of charge, the right to remain silent, the information that the interview would be taped and may serve as evidence against the Accused, and the right to stop the interview at any moment to request the assistance of Counsel. Ntahobali signed that he had read or been told in a language he understood about these rights, that he was ready to answer questions and make a statement and that he did not request Counsel at the time. He also signed to the effect that there had been neither promises, nor threats, and that no pressure was put on him.

76. The Chamber also notes that it is clear from the transcripts that at least one of the ICTR representatives introduced himself as an investigator.[34] The Chamber observes that the interrogators introduced themselves to the Accused as coming from the Tribunal, and that there was nothing to mislead him to believing otherwise. In any case, the Chamber notes that Rule 37 (B) of the Rules allows the Prosecutor to authorize investigators or any other person to act on his behalf. The Chamber therefore does not find that the Accused did not know whom he was talking to, or that subterfuge was used by the investigators.

Issues raised in Ntahobali's letter

77. With regard to the submissions contained in Ntahobali's letter, the Chamber notes that there is no legal requirement for the transcripts of interviews to be signed by either interviewee or investigators. Further, the Chamber observes that the Prosecution has indicated, without being challenged, that copies of the original audio tapes were communicated to all Defence teams, including the Accused's. Therefore, the Chamber finds that the Accused Ntahobali had access to a copy of the recordings of the interviews. Should he wish to examine the[35] originals, he would have to formally apply and give reasons for such a request.

78. Finally, as to the missing document the Accused referred to in his letter and in the proceedings held on 15 May 2006, the Chamber has carefully examined the transcripts and is of the view that while there may have been two handwritten statements signed by the Accused on 24 July 1997, one handwritten by the Accused and one by another person, and while the first document has not been filed, they appear to have had similar contents.[36] From the transcripts, the filed document appears to be a summary of the one alleged to have been handwritten by the Accused, and both state the Accused's surrender to the ICTR representatives. The Accused confirmed on 15 May 2006 that he signed the handwritten document filed by the Prosecution. Taking into account the handwritten document dated 24 July 1997, signed by the Accused, and the waivers of his rights signed on 24 and 26 July by the Accused, the Chamber finds that the absence of an additional handwritten document does not diminish the value of the Accused's signed statements that he had surrendered freely, that no threats or promises had been used, that he had waived his rights and that he would go to Arusha himself, if he had the means to do so.

Conclusion on the admissibility

79. Rule 89 (C) empowers the Chamber to admit evidence which is relevant to the subject matter before it and which has probative value while Rule 89 (D) deals with the Chamber's powers to verify the authenticity of evidence obtained out of court. However, Rule 95 empowers the Chamber to exclude evidence which is obtained by methods casting substantial doubt on its reliability or if its admission is antithetical to, and would seriously damage, the integrity of the proceedings.

80. Having reviewed Ntahobali's interviews, the Chamber has not found any instance in which the Accused asked to stop the interview to obtain presence of Counsel, or which showed that his statement was given under duress. The Chamber finds that Ntahobali's interviews show that the Accused was questioned voluntarily and answered in a language that he understood. The Chamber concludes that Ntahobali's interviews fully comply with the requirements of Article 20 of the Statute and Rules 42, 43 and 63 of the Rules and are relevant to the trial. Moreover, the Chamber recalls that the Defense for Ntahobali did not challenge that Ntahobali made the interviews in issue. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that Ntahobali's interviews are admissible under Rule 89 (C) for the purpose of cross-examining Ntahobali on issues relating to his credibility.

81. The Chamber notes that among Ntahobali's interviews, the one taken on 24 July 1997 starting at 3:31 p.m. refers to written statements taken from the Accused after his arrest at around 1:07 a.m. on 24 July 1997. The Chamber notes, after a perusal of the interviews that the Accused had signed waivers of rights to Counsel, before those statements were taken; one relating to the conditions of his surrender and the other containing biographical information; pictures were also taken after his arrest and form part of these records. The Chamber notes that in the transcripts of the 24 and 26 July 1997 interviews, the Accused confirms that his rights were read out to him before he signed a waiver of rights and made those statements. The Chamber finds that these written statements are admissible under Rule 89 (C) of the Rules for the purpose of cross-examining Ntahobali on issues relating to his credibility and that they will be admitted after the cross-examination by each Party concerned, if they are used.

82. Accordingly, the Chamber grants Kanyabashi's and any other co-Accused's Motion as well as the Prosecution's Motion to cross-examine the Accused Ntahobali using his interviews to challenge his credibility. Following its practice, the Chamber adds that only the portions of Ntahobali's interviews that will be used by Kanyabashi, the Prosecution, and any other Party during cross-examination on issues of credibility, will be admitted as evidence.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL

RULES ADMISSIBLE Ntahobali's interviews of 1997. A request for admission of any portion used in cross-examination by the co-Accused or the Prosecution will be determined at the end of each cross-examination;

GRANTS Kanyabashi's Motion to use Ntahobali's interviews in cross-examination to test Ntahobali's credibility;

GRANTS in part, the Prosecution Motion and allows it to use Ntahobali's interviews in cross-examination to test Ntahobali's credibility;

DENIES the Prosecution Motion in all other respects;

DENIES Ntahobali's request to hold a voir dire procedure;

DENIES the request to declare the Prosecution foreclosed from using Ntahobali's interviews.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), specifically Rule 73 (B) and (C) of the Rules;

NOW DECIDES the Motion, pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules, on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties.

Defence for Ntahobali

1. The Defence for Ntahobali moves the Chamber for certification to appeal the Impugned Decision. Certification is sought with respect to the use of Ntahobali's statements to the Prosecution investigators in 1997 during Ntahobali's cross-examination.

2. The Defence submits that the Chamber erred in law regarding several issues[1] and that it raised three additional legal issues, namely, whether a voir dire proceeding should be held to ascertain that Ntahobali's statements were properly taken; the scope of the use of Ntahobali's statements at this stage of the proceedings; and their admissibility.[2] According to the Defence, these questions would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and their immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings.[3]

3. The Defence argues that the question of admissibility or use of a prior statement of an accused is important and affects the fairness of proceedings because of the Accused's fundamental rights as

[1] The Motion, para. 12. As the Defence for Ntahobali indicates in its Reply to Kanyabashi, para. 17, that the errors in law have only been pointed out for reasons of judicial rectitude, and that Kanyabashi's response in that matter is not relevant to the question of certification, the Chamber deems it unnecessary to reproduce either the alleged errors in law or the Prosecution's or Kanyabashi's arguments.

guaranteed under the Statute and the Rules. These rights are affected by the Impugned Decision.[4] It is undeniable that the credibility of an Accused's testimony is at the very core of the trial.[5] Further, it is equally undeniable that the use of prior statements by opponents to assess the credibility of the Accused is likely to affect the outcome of the trial.[6]

4. The Defence relies on several decisions. In Muvunyi, the Trial Chamber held that the admissibility of evidence the Prosecution wished to use and which the Accused consistently denied, would have an impact on the rest of the trial, and that the decision thus regarded a question likely to affect the fairness and expeditiousness of proceedings.[7] This Decision also held that an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber might advance proceedings, especially because of the impending evaluation of this evidence in the context of the Judgement.[8] In the Ndindiliyimana et al. case, it was determined that "admitting documents with an unknown and possibly incriminating content into evidence may affect the fairness of the proceedings and the outcome of the trial".[9] Trial Chamber I of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (the "ICTY") in Halilovic held that the admission of the Accused's interview had a bearing on the fairness of proceedings, as well as on the outcome of the trial, because it involved a number of the Accused's statutory rights. This decision also determined that an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber would materially advance proceedings and therefore granted the Motion for certification.[10]

5. The Defence submits that the admissibility or the use of Ntahobali's prior statements may also concretely advance proceedings, as it affects and will affect the Accused's defence strategy through defence exhibits introduced by other accused, considering the sometimes contradictory and incompatible defence strategies. This is particularly true with regard to the large number of witnesses which are yet to be heard in the course of all defence cases, and who are likely to aim at contradicting the Accused's former statements or his testimony in this respect.[11]

6. Finally, and subsidiarily, the Defence submits that even if the criteria for certification have not been met, the importance of the question within the context of the Butare proceedings, where several Accused made statements when they were arrested, would justify the Chamber to order certification to appeal proprio motu, so that the Appeals Chamber determines these fundamental legal issues as a question of general interest.[12]

Kanyabashi's Response

7. The Defence for Kanyabashi requests the Chamber reject the Motion, as the conditions set out in Rule 73 (B) of the Rules are not met.

8. The Defence agrees that the admissibility of extra-judiciary statements of an accused made to persons of authority may have an impact on the fairness of proceedings, as has been held in the Halilovic case,[13] where the Appeals Chamber quashed the Trial Chamber's decision which had admitted into evidence an extra-judiciary statement of the Accused made to Prosecution investigators.[14] However, the Defence alleges that Halilovic's reasons were more serious than Ntahobali's.[15] Further, not all decisions regarding the admissibility of such statements are subject to interlocutory appeal.[16] Regarding the Muvunyi Decision cited, the Defence submits that its context is different in that it addresses the admissibility of evidence after the close of the Prosecution case.[17]

9. The Defence submits that none of Ntahobali's reasons are likely to affect the fairness of proceedings, because the Impugned Decision takes into account all of his arguments and demands the respect of Art. 20 of the Statute and Rules 42, 43, and 63 of the Rules. Further, the Chamber rejected the argument that a co-accused is bound by the rules on the admissibility of a statement[18] and held an informal voir dire proceeding by ordering the respect of the rights of the Accused. Therefore, the Impugned Decision does not involve an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings, or the outcome of the trial.[19]

10. The Defence submits that it is equally difficult to see how an immediate resolution of the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings, since the Impugned Decision limited the use of the statements to challenging Ntahobali's credibility and it is not clear how his testimony or the statements may be contradicted by witnesses led by the co-Accused.[20]

11. The Defence submits that Ntahobali ,must have raised the argument that the Chamber could proprio motu grant certification to appeal knowing that his arguments were weak.[21] It recalls that the Chamber clearly stated on 9 May 2006 that it was not going to address hypothetical issues.[22] With regard to the statements the other accused allegedly made, the Defence points out that the Chamber does not have any information about their nature and the conditions under which they were made.[23]

Prosecution's Response

12. The Prosecution submits that the Motion should be dismissed, as it does not meet the criteria for certification set out in Rule 73 (B) of the Rules[24] and is without merit in law or fact.[25] It argues that the Impugned Decision complied with Ntahobali's rights under Art. 20 of the Statute and Rules 42, 43, and 63 of the Rules.[26]

13. The Prosecution recalls that the Chamber held that "certification of an appeal has to be the absolute exception when deciding on the admissibility of the evidence […] it is the responsibility of the Trial Chamber, as triers of fact, to determine which evidence to admit during the course of the trial".[27]

14. The Prosecution submits that the Chamber as the trier of fact is invested with inherent powers in its dispensation of justice under Rules 54, 73 bis (B) (v), 73 ter (B) (iv), 89, 95, and 98 of the Rules. The Prosecution stresses that the Appeals Chamber held in the Halilovic case that "the Trial Chamber […] had the discretion to admit the record, at least so long as doing so did not violate any specific restrictions outlined in the remainder of the Rules nor the principle of Rule 89 (B) requiring application of the rules of evidence which will best favour a fair determination of the matter before it and are consonant with the spirit of the Statute and the general principles of law".[28]

15. With regard to the interviews of other Accused, the Prosecution argues that the Chamber should not allow Ntahobali to appeal a matter that is not before it. While the Chamber may make orders suo motu, it is submitted that the instant case does not require such order.[29]

16. The Prosecution further submits that the jurisprudence relied on by the Defence is only of persuasive value and can be distinguished from the matter at hand.[30]

17. The Prosecution adds that all the assertions put forward by the Defence in support of its certification to appeal are a guise to further slow down proceedings rather than to expedite the process.[31]

Ntahobali's Reply to Kanyabashi

18. The Defence for Ntahobali submits that Kanyabashi's Response is contradictory, as it alleges that the admissibility of the interviews is not likely to significantly affect the fairness of proceedings, while it also indicates that the question of the admissibility of extra-judicial statements made by an accused to persons in position of authority can have an impact on the fairness of proceedings.[32]

19. With regard to Kanyabashi's argument that the question at hand is not likely to substantially compromise proceedings, because the Impugned Decision only declared the interviews admissible with a view to test Ntahobali's credibility, the latter submits that the Halilovic Decision cited considered that the admissibility stricto sensu met the criteria for certification.[33] Besides, despite this limited use, the interviews have been declared admissible and the content read out in proceedings will be part of the evidence.[34]

20. The Defence further argues that while Kanyabashi stated that the Chamber could not determine the question of the interviews of the other Accused, because it did not know the context of these interviews, the Chamber need not know these specific conditions.[35] The simple fact of the Appeals Chamber determining the question would significantly advance proceedings, since it might apply mutatis mutandis to subsequent cases.[36]

[36] Ntahobali's Reply to Kanyabashi, paras. 34-35.

21. The Defence for Ntahobali points out that even if the Appeals Chamber Decision in Nyiramasuhuko et al., on which the Prosecution relies, indicates that certification of an appeal has to be the absolute exception when deciding on the admissibility of evidence, this does not mean that an accused's statement may not be one of these exceptional cases, both because of the importance of the question and the number of rights of the accused which are concerned.[37]

22. Further, the Defence submits that the request for certification is not limited to the simple admissibility of the statements. Rather, the question of whether a voir dire proceeding has to be held also satisfies the conditions under Rule 73 (B), and is distinct from the admissibility issue.[38]

23. With regard to the Halilovic Decision on which the Prosecution relies and which held that "the Trial Chamber had the discretion to admit the record, at least so long as doing so did not violate any specific restrictions outlined in the remainder of the Rules", the Defence submits that the spirit of the Rules is clearly violated if promises and threats are used to obtain a statement from an accused. Evidence for this violation is found both in the affidavit and in the transcripts of the Accused's cross-examination, especially those of 24 May 2006.[39]

24. Concerning the Prosecution's submission that referring to the other Accused's statements is inappropriate and that the Chamber should not allow Ntahobali to appeal questions that are not before it, the Defence replies that it never intended appealing this issue.[40] Rather, these statements were mentioned in the Motion in relation to the condition of materially advancing proceedings, pursuant to Rule 73 (B) of the Rules.[41] The Defence submits that it is obvious that if a contentious legal issue is determined by the Appeals Chamber, proceedings advance concretely, in the sense that if the same question is raised subsequently, the Appeals Chamber's position will be already established.[42]

Deliberations

25. The Chamber notes that decisions under Rule 73 (A) of the Rules are "without interlocutory appeal", and that certification to appeal is an exception the Chamber may grant, if the two criteria under Rule 73 (B) of the Rules are satisfied. This is the case if the Impugned Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect (a) the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings, or the outcome of the trial, and (b) if the applicant demonstrates that an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings. Both of these conditions require a specific demonstration, and are not met through a general reference to the submissions on which an impugned Decision was rendered.[43] The Chamber will address the conditions set out in Rule 73 (B) of the Rules in turn.

26. The Chamber is aware of the Appeals Chamber's ruling that certification of an appeal has to be the absolute exception when deciding on the admissibility of evidence, and that it is the responsibility of the Trial Chamber to determine which evidence to admit during the course of the trial.[44]

27. Nonetheless, the Chamber is of the view that the admissibility of an accused's interviews is an important matter that could have a bearing on the fairness of the proceedings, as it affects the fundamental rights of the accused.[45] Therefore, the Chamber finds that the Impugned Decision involves an issue that could significantly affect the fair conduct of the proceedings. With respect to the expeditious conduct of the proceedings, the Chamber notes that the Impugned Decision is the first decision on the admissibility of prior statements of an Accused in this case. Moreover, the Chamber has noted the Parties' submissions that there may be similar statements made by other Accused. The Chamber therefore considers that a resolution of this issue by the Appeals Chamber at this stage could significantly expedite the conduct of the proceedings. Accordingly, the first condition set out in Rule 73 (B) of the Rules is met.

28. The Chamber also notes that in the specific circumstances of this case, similar issues may arise in the future, and that an immediate resolution of this matter by the Appeals Chamber may therefore materially advance the proceedings. Accordingly, the second criterion for certification, pursuant to Rule 73 (B) of the Rules, is also satisfied.

29. The Chamber has carefully considered all the other submissions of the Parties and is of the view that while they may be relevant on appeal, they are not relevant to the determination of this Motion.

30. The Chamber therefore grants Ntahobali certification to appeal the Impugned Decision.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL

GRANTS the Motion.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

NOW DECIDES the matter, pursuant to Rule 73 (A), on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties.

The Prosecution

1. The Prosecution prays the Chamber to order the Defence for Nsabimana to disclose the unredacted statements of its witnesses within 48 hours pursuant to Rule 54. Failure to do so, the Prosecution requests that the concerned witnesses be stricken off the list of Defence witness.

2. The Prosecution submits that despite the Chamber's Decision of 22 June 2006, the Defence for Nsabimana has not made any effort to provide the Prosecutor with the requested statements, yet it was due to start its case on 26 June 2006.

3. The Prosecution argues that it cannot accept the Defence's representation that it does not have a copy of the said statements and submits that there has been no advance notice of this loss and no showing of due diligence by the Defence to enquire about these statements more than five years after the arrest of their former investigator.[3]

4. The Prosecution further alleges that it cannot accept the Defence's representation that the arrest of its former investigator Joseph Nzabirinda and seizures carried out in 2001 resulted in loss of the only existing copy of statements[4] and that the Accused Nsabimana does not have a copy of any of the statements collected on his behalf.[5]

The Defence

5. The Defence points out that in its Oral Decision of 22 June 2006, the Chamber asked not only the Defence but also any other Party, including the Prosecution, to disclose the sought statements if they have them.[6]

6. The Defence submits that neither the original, nor the copies of the unredacted statements of its witnesses contacted by Joseph Nzabirinda, its former investigator who is now an accused before the Tribunal, are in its possession.[7]

7. The Defence argues that the Prosecution could not assume that the Defence possesses those statements simply because they were not part of the items seized from Joseph Nzabirinda upon his arrest in November 2001.[8]

[5] Paragraph 20 of the Motion.
[6] Paragraph 7 of the Response.

[8] Paragraph 17 of the Response.

8. The Defence also submits that striking some of its witnesses because of its failure to disclose statements which are not in its possession would cause considerable prejudice to the Accused Nsabimana's rights and to the fairness of the trial.[9]

9. The Defence underscores that the issue of impossibility to disclose the unredacted statements only concerns the witnesses who were contacted by its former investigator Joseph Nzabirinda.[10] With respect to the remaining witnesses, whose redacted statements have been disclosed to the Parties, the Defence asserts that their unredacted statements are available and will be disclosed in due time.[11]

The Prosecution Reply

10. The Prosecution submits that the Defence for Nsabimana had never mentioned the absence of the unredacted statements, neither in 2005 when it filed the redacted statements, nor on 15 June 2006, when it indicated the order of appearance of its witnesses and the status of its disclosure.[12]

11. The Prosecution argues that the Defence had the obligation to obtain the full unredacted statements from the witnesses if it had lost both the originals and all the copies, and to bring this situation to the notice of the Chamber and the Parties.[13]

Deliberations

12. The Chamber recalls its Oral Decision of 22 June 2006 and reiterates that where statements were made by potential witnesses, the concerned Party is bound to disclose the said statements in their entirety, in conformity with the Rules. The Chamber points out that one of the purposes of such disclosure is to enable the other Parties to conduct an effective cross-examination of the witnesses if they so wish.

13. With respect to the request for disclosure, the Chamber has noted the Defence's submissions that the said unredacted witness statements are apparently unavailable and cannot therefore be disclosed. Accordingly, the Chamber denies the Prosecutor's request.

14. With respect to the request for striking off witnesses, the Chamber notes that there exists a distinction between the obligation of the Prosecution and that of the Defence with regard to the disclosure of witness statements. As regards the Prosecution, under Rule 66 (A) failure to disclose may lead to striking off the concerned witnesses. As for the Defence, failure to disclose witness statements does not necessarily lead to the striking off of witnesses particularly taking into account Rule 73 ter. The Chamber therefore finds no merit in the Prosecution's request to strike off Defence witnesses whose unredacted statements are apparently unavailable and cannot be disclosed.

15. The Chamber further notes that the will-say statements as well as the personal particulars of the said witnesses have already been disclosed by the Defence. The Chamber recalls that will-say statements must be > "clear enough to cover the scope of the proposed testimony of the witness; they must be full and comprehensive, not in the sense of giving all the details, but at least laying out the scope of what the witness is expected to cover in clear terms."[14]

The Chamber therefore expects the will-say statements to meet the requirements set out above. The Chamber further observes that will-say statements of such nature enable "the other party or the other parties to prepare and to raise issues",[15] as it has been reiterated in the instant proceedings.

16. Finally, the Chambers finds it unacceptable that the Defence of Nsabimana did not inform the Parties and the Chamber about the problems concerning the disclosure of some of the unredacted witness statements until this issue was formally raised by the Prosecution just before the start of Nsabimana's case. The Chamber reminds the Parties that compliance with disclosure obligations is crucial to the smooth conduct of proceedings. In addition, the Chamber considers that the Defence should have been diligent and made reserve copies of the alleged unredacted statements. In the Chamber's view, this omission amounts to negligence on the part of the Defence. The Chamber therefore does not expect from the Defence of Nsabimana a repeat of this conduct.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIAL CHAMBER

DENIES the Prosecutor's Motion in its entirety.

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge William H. Sekule, Presiding, Judge Arlette Ramaroson and Judge Solomy B. Bossa (the "Chamber");

SEISED of Ndayambaje's "Requête en extension de délais afin de déposer la "Réplique à la réponse du Procureur à la requête d'Elie Ndayambaje aux fins d'exclure les témoignages et/ ou les portions de témoignages des témoins entendus au procès sur des faits qui sont en dehors de l'acte d'accusation"" with 12 transmission verification reports dated 13 and 14 June 2006 annexed, filed on 20 June 2006 (the "Motion");

CONSIDERING the « Prosecutor's Response to the "Requête en extension de délai afin de déposer la "Réplique à la réponse du Procureur à la requête d'Elie Ndayambaje aux fins d'exclure les témoignages et/ ou les portions de témoignages des témoins entendus au procès sur des faits qui sont en dehors de l'acte d'accusation" », filed on 21 June 2006 (the « Prosecutor's Response »);

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

NOW DECIDES the Motion, pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules, on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties.

Introduction

1. On 31 May 2006, Ndayambaje filed a Motion requesting the Chamber to exclude, in whole or in part, the testimony of some witnesses who testified on facts outside the scope of the Indictment against him ("Ndayambaje's Motion of 31 May 2006").[1]

2. On 5 June 2006, the CMS directed the Prosecution and any other concerned Party to file a Response to Ndayambaje's Motion of 31 May 2006 within five days of its communication, and the Defence to file its Reply within five days following such Responses, if it so wished.

3. On 9 June 2006 the Prosecution filed its Response to Ndayambaje's Motion.

The Defence

4. The Defence submits that it tried to fax its reply on 13 June 2006 but that it only succeeded to transmit part of it due to communication difficulties.

5. On 14 June 2006, the Defence attempted again to fax its Reply, but failed. The same day, it sent an electronic copy of its Reply to Mr Roger Kouambo, explaining the difficulties in transmitting the signed original by fax.

6. The Defence submits that from 15 to 17 June 2006, it attempted to fax its Reply using different fax machines, confirmations of which will be available at the end of the month and therefore could not be annexed to the Motion.

7. Between 17 and 19 June 2006, both Lead and Co-Counsel for the Accused were travelling from Montreal to Arusha to attend trial and thus were unable to file the original Motion before they arrived in Arusha. Accordingly, the Defence filed its Reply on 20 June 2006, together with the Motion.

8. The Defence submits that for reasons beyond its control, it has been unable to file its Reply within the time-limits set and thus prays that the Chamber grant its Motion to file its Reply so that it may be considered during the determination of its Motion of 31 May 2006.

The Prosecution

9. In objecting to the Motion, the Prosecution quotes the Chamber's Decision of 2 March 2001, in which a request for extension of time within which to comply with a court order was granted in the interests of justice, even though the Chamber expressed concern that the Motion was filed after the expiration of the deadline.[2] The Prosecution submits that the instant Motion has been filed after the expiration of the deadline and should therefore be dismissed.

10. The Prosecution further submits that the Defence has not acted with due diligence because when it failed to fax its Reply, it did not contact the Registry in order to find an alternative solution.

Deliberations

11. The Chamber notes that, according to the CMS notification dated 5 June 2006, Ndayambaje should have filed his reply to the Prosecution Response to the Motion of 31 May 2006 no later than 14

June 2006. The Chamber further notes that, as evidenced in the annexes to the Motion, the Defence attempted to fax its Reply on 13 June 2006 that is within the time-limits set for such a filing.

12. Further evidence annexed to the Motion shows that the Defence continued its efforts to fax the signed Reply on 14 June 2006, and failed. The Chamber notes that subsequently, the Defence electronically mailed to Mr Roger Kouambo (CMS Coordinator) an unsigned version of its Reply, which was brought to the attention of the Trial Chamber.

13. The Chamber also notes that the Defence submits that it continued attempts to fax its signed Reply between 15 and 17 June 2006, but failed.

14. In the Chamber's opinion, the Defence has demonstrated that it attempted to file its Reply within the time-limits for such filing but failed due to reasons beyond its control. Moreover, after comparing the unsigned version of the Defence Reply which was electronically received by the Registry and then forwarded to the Chamber and the signed version of the Reply filed on 20 June 2006, the Chamber finds that they are one and the same document. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the Defence was diligent in its attempts to file its Reply within the time-limits set by the Chamber.

15. The Chamber therefore grants the Defence Motion and extends the time for filing its Reply to 20 June 2006 to enable its consideration in the determination of Ndayambaje's Motion of 31 May 2006.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL

GRANTS the Defence Motion and extends the time for filing its Reply to 20 June 2006 to enable its consideration in the determination of Ndayambaje's Motion of 31 May 2006.

THE TRIBUNAL INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal");

SITTING as Trial Chamber II, composed of Judge William H. Sekule, Presiding, Judge Arlette Ramaroson and Judge Solomy Balungi Bossa (the "Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of the "Avis de modification de la liste des témoins de la défense d'Alphonse Nteziryayo et subsidiairement, requête en modification de la liste des témoins de la défense d'Alphonse Nteziryayo", filed on 26 June 2006 (the "Motion");

CONSIDERING the "Réplique d'Alphonse Nteziryayo à la 'Prosecutor's Response to Nteziryayo's Motion to Vary His Witness List'", filed on 4 July 2006 (the "Defence Reply");

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("The Rules"), particularly Rules 73 ter (B) and (E) of the Rules;

NOW DECIDES the matter, pursuant to Rule 73 (A), on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties.

The Defence

1. The Defence submits that pursuant to Rule 73 ter (E), it may modify its witness list without having to file a motion with the Chamber for that purpose, since its own case has not yet started. Accordingly, the Defence moves the Chamber to take note of its new list of witnesses following the deletion and addition of certain witnesses.

2. Subsidiarily, however, the Defence submits that if the Chamber were to find that its leave is required for the Defence to vary its witness list at this stage, it prays the Chamber to:

(i) Order the deletion of the following 22 witnesses from its witness list: AND-1, AND-2, AND-3, AND-4, AND-6, AND-7, AND-8, AND-9, AND-10, AND-12, AND-15, AND-21, AND-22, AND-24, AND-26, AND-27, AND-28, AND-32, AND-33, AND-34, AND-35, and AND-37.

(ii) Order the addition of the following 13 witnesses to its witness list: AND-41, AND-44, AND-50, AND-53, AND-54, AND-59, AND-60, AND-61, AND-64, AND-69, AND-72, AND-73, and AND-74.

(iii) Take note of the new order of appearance of Alphonse Nteziryayo's witnesses as follows: (1) AND-5, (2) AND-11, (3) AND-13, (4) AND-14, (5) AND-16, (6) AND-17, (7) AND-18, (8) AND-19, (9) AND-20, (10) AND-23, (11) AND-25, (12) AND-29, (13) AND-30, (14) AND-31, (15) AND-36, (16) AND-38, (17) AND-41, (18) AND-44, (19) AND-50, (20) AND-53, (21) AND-54, (22) AND-59, (23) AND-60, (24) AND-61, (25) AND-64, (26) AND-69, (27) AND-72, (28) AND-73, and (29) AND-74.

3. The Defence submits that it has lost contact with some of the witnesses who were mentioned in its Response to the Scheduling Order of 14 December 2005, and that it is therefore compelled to substitute them.

4. The Defence submits that the testimony of the witnesses it requests to be added is pertinent to one or more charges against the Accused.

5. The Defence alleges that Witnesses AND-41 and AND-59 will testify on the Gikore meeting and will challenge Prosecution Witness FAH's testimony in this regard. Defence Witness AND-54 will corroborate the testimonies of Witnesses AND-41 and AND-59.

6. As for Witness AND-44, the Defence asserts that he will testify that he escorted Alphonse Nteziryayo when the latter assisted people fleeing to Butare, between 6 and 15 April 1994.

7. With regard to Witness AND-50, the Defence submits that she will testify that she and some other persons were protected by Alphonse Nteziryayo between 6 April and 3 July 1994. She will further testify that she saw Alphonse Nteziryayo almost daily during that period.

8. The Defence alleges that the proposed Witnesses AND-53 and AND-64 will testify to a Kibayi meeting that took place in May 1994, during which Alphonse Nteziryayo made a speech. The said witnesses will challenge Prosecution Witnesses QBU and FAK's testimony concerning, among others, what the Accused said during that meeting.

9. The Defence asserts that the proposed Witness AND-60 will testify about the Muyaga meeting. He will further challenge the entirety or part of Prosecution Witnesses FAB and QBY's testimony. The Defence argues that he is the only witness who can corroborate Witness AND-20's testimony, as Witnesses AND-7 and AND-35 are intended to be withdrawn.

10. The Defence submits that Witness AND-61 will testify about the Ntyazo meeting and will challenge Prosecution Witness FAI's testimony on this point.

11. The Defence argues that the proposed Witness AND-69 will testify on Kabakobwa's event, trainings for the civilian defence purpose and distributions of weapons. He will also challenge the testimony of Prosecution Witnesses FAM, FAI, RV, and QCB.

12. The Defence submits that the proposed Witness AND-72 will testify on the Mugusa meetings and will challenge Prosecution Witness QBV's testimony.

13. Concerning proposed Witness AND-73, the Defence submits that he will testify on the meeting which took place in Kirarambogo, and especially on what the Accused Alphonse Nteziryayo said during that meeting. He will also challenge the testimony of Prosecution Witness RV and will be the only witness who can corroborate the testimony of Witness AND-29.

14. With regard to proposed Witness AND-74, the Defence asserts that he will substantially testify on Alphonse Nteziryayo's functions in the Ministry of the Interior, especially concerning his role within the communal police and the civilian defence. He will also testify on his personal relationship with the Accused Alphonse Nteziryayo and his family.

The Prosecution

15. The Prosecution submits that in the case at bar, under Rule 73 ter (E), the Defence must "move by way of motion before the Trial Chamber for leave to vary its decision as to which witnesses are to be called". The Prosecution further submits that, even if Alphonse Nteziryayo has not begun to call witnesses, the Defence phase of the trial has begun, and the Prosecution and the other parties already have received his witness list and begun preparations.

16. The Prosecution consequently submits that the Defence for Alphonse Nteziryayo should move the Trial Chamber for leave to vary its witness list.

17. The Prosecution submits that the Defence for Alphonse Nteziryayo should be asked to notify the Prosecution if Alphonse Nteziryayo will be called.

18. The Prosecution submits that it does not object either to the deletion or to the addition. It requests, however, that the Chamber order the Defence to disclose the proposed witnesses' will-say statements to the other Parties.

The Defence Reply

19. The Defence submits that the Prosecution has not given any legal argument when it alleged that the Defence has to file a motion in order to modify its witness list at this stage.

20. The Defence alleges that it has already disclosed the added witnesses' will-says to the other Parties.

21. The Defence submits that the Accused Alphonse Nteziryayo has the full right to decide whether or not to testify on his own behalf at any time, with or without a disclosed will-say.

Having deliberated

22. The Chamber recalls Rule 73 ter (E), which provides that:

> "After commencement of the Defence case, the Defence, if it considers it to be in the interest of justice, may move the Trial Chamber for leave to reinstate the list of witnesses or to vary its decision as to which witnesses are to be called."

23. The Chamber notes the Defence submissions that as its own case has not yet started in the meaning of the aforesaid Rule, it may therefore vary its witness list without moving the Chamber.

24. The Chamber observes that Rule 73 ter (E) appears to address the issue of the modification of the list of Defence witnesses in the context of a single accused trial which differs from the instant case where six accused are jointly tried. The Chamber recalls that it decided during the Pre-Defence Conference of 18 October 2004 that all pre-defence briefs would have to be filed by all accused by 31 December 2004, including the lists of witnesses that they intend to call to testify.[1] The Chamber considers that from that date, the Prosecution and the other Parties began their preparation on the basis of the witnesses lists and summaries attached to the pre-defence briefs. The Chamber notes that the Defence case as a whole effectively started on 31 January 2005 and that for purposes of reasonable preparation any accused who intends to vary his witness list has to comply with the requirement of Rule 73 ter (E) in that regard.

25. The Chamber recalls that the Defence for Nteziryayo intends to delete 22 witnesses from its current list and to add 13 new ones and that the Prosecution objects neither to the addition nor the deletion of witnesses sought by the Defence.

On the Deletion of Witnesses

26. The Chamber finds that the proposed deletion of twenty two witnesses could significantly expedite the proceedings and enhance judicial economy.[2] Therefore, the Chamber grants the Defence request to delete Witnesses AND-1, AND-2, AND-3, AND-4, AND-6, AND-7, AND-8, AND-9, AND-10, AND-12, AND-15, AND-21, AND-22, AND-24, AND-26, AND-27, AND-28, AND-32, AND-33, AND-34, AND-35, and AND-37 from its initial list.

On the Addition of Witnesses

27. The Chamber recalls decisions granting motions for additional witnesses by this Tribunal in the interests of justice, and notes that the moving party has always provided an indication of the proposed witness' testimony, in the form of a witness summary or will-say statement. The moving party has also to demonstrate the relevance of the evidence to the proceedings and to provide the estimated length of the examination-in-chief. This is to ensure that there is no prejudicial element of surprise to the other Parties and that there exists sufficient information with which to prepare their examinations and make the necessary investigations if required. More importantly, it allows the Chamber to make a proper determination as to the materiality and probative value of the proposed testimony to the proceedings.[3]

28. The Chamber will now examine the materiality and probative value of the proposed additional witnesses:

- Witness AND-50's expected testimony covers largely the period referred to in the Indictment, notably between 6 April and 3 July 1994 and during which he alleged to have seen Alphonse Nteziryayo almost everyday.
- Witnesses AND-53 and AND-64 are expected to testify on the Kibayi meeting held in May 1994.
- Witness AND-60 is expected to testify about the Muyaga meeting during which Alphonse Nteziryayo is alleged to have made a speech and asked the members of population to remain calm and to denounce any suspicious stranger to the authorities.
- Witness AND-61 is expected to testify, among others, on what Alphonse Nteziryayo allegedly said during the meeting held in Ntyazo on 22 May 1994.

- Witness AND-69 is expected to testify, among others, on the Kabakobwa's event and the involvement of the Accused with the civilian defense.
- Witness AND-72 is expected to testify, among others, on the Mugusa meetings, the massacres which took place in the vicinity of the communal office of Mugusa and the murder of conseiller Nkulikiyinka.
- Witness AND-73 is expected to testify on the meeting held in Kirarambogo on 22 May 1994. He is further alleged to corroborate Witness AND-29's testimony in this respect.

29. The Chamber is of the opinion that the testimony of Witnesses AND-50, AND-53, AND-64, AND-60, AND-61, AND-69, AND-72, and AND-73 may be material to Alphonse Nteziryayo's case and have some probative value. Therefore, the Chamber grants the request for their addition as Defence Witnesses.

Witnesses AND-41, AND-59 and AND-54

30. The Chamber observes that Witnesses AND-41, AND-59, and AND-54 could be material to Nteziryayo's case as they are expected to testify on the participation of Alphonse Nteziryayo in the Gikore meeting during which he may have made a speech calling on the members of population to stop violence and to assist the authorities restoring peace and may have some probative value.

31. However, the Chamber considers that two witnesses' testimony on the Gikore meeting should suffice. The Defence should choose two witnesses and file their pseudonyms together with a revised list of witnesses, within two weeks from the date of this decision.

Witnesses AND-44 and AND-74

32. The Chamber notes that the Defence submits that Witness AND-44 should testify that between 6 and 15 April 1994, Alphonse Nteziryayo helped people escape to Butare.

33. The Chamber further notes that Witness AND-74 is expected to testify substantially on Alphonse Nteziryayo's functions in the Ministry of the Interior, especially concerning his role within the communal police and the civilian defense. He will also testify on his personal relationship with the Accused Alphonse Nteziryayo and his family.

34. The Chamber is of the view that Witness AND-74's will-say statement as produced in support of the request for his addition does not allow the Chamber to fully determine the materiality of his expected testimony. His will-say statement does not seem to address Alphonse Nteziryayo's functions in the Ministry of the Interior as submitted by the Defence.

35. In the Chamber's view, Witnesses AND-44 and Witness AND-74's expected testimonies may be material to the Defence case and may have some probative value. The Chamber grants the request for their addition. Nonetheless, the Chamber orders the Defence to provide more details on their expected testimonies in revised will say statements.

36. Finally, the Chamber points out that Nteziryayo's witness list, as it stands, is still long and must be significantly reduced. It therefore urges the Defence to revise it further with a view to reducing it.

On the Prosecution Request

37. With regard to the Prosecution request to be notified if the Accused Alphonse Nteziryayo will be testifying on his own behalf, the Chamber finds such a request to be premature and thus denies it.

38. Concerning the Prosecution's further request for disclosure of the proposed witnesses' will-say statements to the other Parties, the Chamber notes that the disclosures have already been made. Therefore, this request has become moot.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL,

GRANTS the Defence Motion to delete from its list Witnesses AND-1, AND-2, AND-3, AND-4, AND-6, AND-7, AND-8, AND-9, AND-10, AND-12, AND-15, AND-21, AND-22, AND-24, AND-26, AND-27, AND-28, AND-32, AND-33, AND-34, AND-35, and AND-37.

GRANTS the Defence Motion to add to its list Witnesses AND-50, AND-53, AND-60, AND-61, AND-64, AND-69, AND-72 and AND-73.

ORDERS the Defence to provide a revised witness list within two weeks from the date of this decision.

GRANTS the Defence Motion to add to its list Witness AND-44 and Witness AND-74, and ORDERS the Defence to provide more details concerning the circumstances surrounding the alleged evacuation of people by the Accused to Butare and concerning Alphonse Nteziryayo's functions in the Ministry of the Interior.

URGES the Defence to reduce significantly its witness list.

DENIES the Prosecution's request to be notified if the Accused Alphonse Nteziryayo will be testifying on his own behalf.

DECLARES moot the Prosecution request for disclosure of the proposed witnesses' will-say statements to the other Parties.

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge William H. Sekule, Presiding, Judge Arlette Ramaroson and Judge Solomy Balungi Bossa (the "Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of the "Requête en extrême urgence de Sylvain Nsabimana aux fins d'adjonction et de retrait de témoins sur sa liste", filed on 7 July 2006 (the "Motion") and the annex thereof, filed on the same day;

CONSIDERING the "Prosecutor's Response to the Motion of Sylvain Nsabimana to Withdraw 7 Witnesses and Add 1 New Witness", filed on 10 July 2006 (the "Prosecution Response");

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), in particular Rule 73 ter (E);

NOW DECIDES the matter, pursuant to Rule 73 (A), on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties.

The Defence

1. The Defence moves the Chamber for leave to delete from its witness list the following witnesses: DECA, TEME, JOJO, HINO, QN3, QN5, and QN6; and to add one, Witness AGWA. The Defence alleges that it had lost contact with Witness AGWA, so he could not be included in Nsabimana's initial witness list.

2. The Defence argues that Witness AGWA is relevant to Nsabimana's case, as he is the sole witness who will testify on Nsabimana's character. This proposed witness should testify at the end of Nsabimana's case, allowing the other Parties to prepare adequately, and that his expected examination-in-chief would take only four hours.

The Prosecution

3. The Prosecution submits that the Defence has failed to provide the will-say statement of Witness AGWA in support of its request for the addition of this witness. The Prosecution states, however, that it does not object to the Motion, subject to adequate disclosure of Witness AGWA's intended testimony and his or her personal particulars by the Defence, in due time.

Deliberations

4. The Chamber recalls Rule 73 ter (E), which provides that:

> "After commencement of the Defence case, the Defence, if it considers it to be in the interest of justice, may move the Trial Chamber for leave to reinstate the list of witnesses or to vary its decision as to which witnesses are to be called."

On the Deletion of Witnesses

5. The Chamber finds that the proposed deletion of seven witnesses could significantly expedite the proceedings and enhance judicial economy.[1] Therefore, the Chamber grants the Defence request to delete Witnesses DECA, TEME, JOJO, HINO, QN3, QN5, and QN6 from its initial list.

On the Addition of Witness AGWA

6. The Chamber notes that the Defence did provide Witness AGWA's will-say statement on 7 July 2006 in a separate document, contrary to the Prosecution submissions.

7. The Chamber recalls decisions granting motions for additional witnesses by this Tribunal in the interests of justice, and notes that the moving party has always provided an indication of the proposed witness' testimony, in the form of a sufficient witness summary or will-say statement. The moving party has also to demonstrate the relevance of the evidence to the proceedings and the estimated length of the examination-in-chief. This is to ensure that there is no prejudicial element of surprise to the other Parties and that there exists sufficient information with which to prepare their examinations and make the necessary investigations if required. More importantly, it allows the Chamber to make a proper determination as to the materiality and probative value of the proposed testimony to the proceedings.[2]

8. After reviewing Witness AGWA's will-say statement, the Chamber observes that this witness will testify, among others, on the pacification meeting convened by the Accused Nsabimana at Nyarutegia market.[3] The Chamber is satisfied that Witness AGWA's proposed testimony contains relevant and probative evidence which the Chamber should hear in the interests of justice. The Chamber therefore grants the motion for the addition of Witness AGWA as a Defence Witness for Nsabimana.

9. Finally, the Chamber orders the Defence to call Witness AGWA to testify towards the end of Nsabimana's case to allow the other Parties to prepare adequately.

GRANTS the Defence Motion to add Witness AGWA to its list; and

NOW DECIDES the matter, pursuant to Rule 73 (A), on the basis of the written submissions of the parties.

Nyiramasuhuko's Defence

1. The Defence for Nyiramasuhuko submits that it was informed by its Legal Assistant of a memo relating to Nsabimana's Motion of 31 July 2006[1], setting out the timeframes for Responses/Replies to it.

2. The Defence submits that both Lead Counsel and co-Counsel are, during the judicial break and until 7 August 2006, on vacation outside Canada and have no access to e-mail, including the Motion mentioned above. The Defence submits that its Legal Assistant did not receive Nsabimana's Motion on the date it was filed, but rather the memo setting out the timeframes for filing Responses and Replies.

3. Given the technical difficulties it has faced, the Defence requests an extension of time to 7 August 2006 to respond to Nsabimana's Motion, as well as to any other motion(s) filed between 18 July 2006 and 7 August 2006.

Nsabimana's Response

4. Recalling the events that led to the filing of its Motion, the Defence for Nsabimana objects to Nyiramasuhuko's request, arguing that the reason advanced by Nyiramasuhuko for an extension is not based on any premise serious enough to warrant the extension requested. In support of this, the Defence for Nsabimana underscores Article 6 of the Code of Professional Conduct for Defence Counsel and draws the Chamber's attention to the Ndayambaje Decision of 30 June 2006.[2]

5. The Defence notes that Counsel for the other Parties in the case, who were also on vacation, were able to file Responses to the Motions. In any case, the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko's ability to file this Motion shows its general ability to do so.

6. Moreover, the Defence recalls that the session is expected to resume on 21 August 2006 and that it is required to issue its order of calling witnesses at the latest on 14 August 2006.[3] The Defence argues that therefore, it is in the interests of justice that the said Motions be decided upon as matter of extreme urgency, so that it may prepare its case within the time limits prescribed by the Chamber.

[3] See Annexes to the Response.

7. The Chamber has considered all the submissions of the Parties. It notes that to date, the Defence of Nyiramasuhuko has not filed any Responses to the various Motions nor has it filed a reply to Nsabimana's Response to the instant Motion.

8. The Chamber recalls Article 6 of the Code of Professional Conduct for Defence Counsel which provides that "Counsel must represent a client diligently in order to protect the client's best interests."

9. The Chamber further recalls the Ndayambaje Decision referred to above in which the Chamber decided that for such an extension to be granted, the moving party must demonstrate diligence in its attempts to meet the deadline and also that it was only due to reasons beyond its control that it has failed to do so.

10. The Chamber notes that the Defence requested an extension of time until 7 August 2006 in order to file Response(s) to various Motions filed between 18 July and 7 August 2006. During this period, three Motions have been filed, namely, Nsabimana's Motion to Drop and Add Witnesses, filed on 27 July 2006,[4] Nsabimana's Motion to Hear Witness AGWA'S Testimony by Video-link, filed on 27 July 2006,[5] and Nsabimana's Motion to Admit Witness JAMI's Statement under Rule 92 bis, filed on 31 July 2006.[6]

The merits of this Motion with regard to all motions filed between 18 July and 7 August 2006

11. Regarding the two Motions filed on 27 July 2006, the Registry's Scheduling Order required Responses by 31 July 2006.[7] Since the instant Motion was filed on 2 August 2006, two days after the expiration of time within which to file Responses, the Chamber finds that, in effect, there is no time to extend. The Chamber will address below the merits of this Motion with regard to all motions filed between 18 July and 7 August 2006.

12. Regarding the Motion filed on 31 July 2006, the Chamber notes that the Registry's Scheduling Order required Responses by 3 August 2006.[8] Since the instant Motion was filed on 2 August 2006, one day before expiration of the time limits for filing a response, the Chamber will consider the merits of the request for extension.

13. The Chamber notes that the Defence principally argues that because Counsel was on vacation outside their home country, they were unable to access their e-mails and thus to receive timely information. The Defence further submits that it was only informed of the existence of the Nsabimana Motion of 31 July 2006, because the Legal Assistant had informed it of the relevant Scheduling Order.

14. The Chamber notes that the Defence has not demonstrated any efforts it has made to prevent this kind of situation, even when on vacation. In the Chamber's opinion, any diligent counsel would have made arrangements within the team to ensure they are informed in a timely fashion of all that occurs in the case and thus to ensure timely action can be taken, when necessary. In this context, the Chamber notes that the Accused Nyiramasuhuko has been assigned both a Lead and a Co-counsel. The Chamber further notes that the Defence has not demonstrated that circumstances beyond Counsel's control prevented it from taking action in a timely manner. Accordingly, the Chamber denies the Defence request to extend the deadline within which to file responses to the various Motions filed between 18 July and 7 August 2006.

15. In addition, the Chamber finds the Motion is frivolous, within the purview of Rule 73 (F) of the Rules, and orders that the Registry deny all fees associated with its preparation.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL,

DENIES the Defence request to extend the deadline within which to file responses to the various Motions filed between 18 July and 7 August 2006; and ORDERS that the Registry deny the Defence of Nyiramasuhuko all fees associated with preparation of the instant Motion.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("The Rules"), particularly Rule 73 ter (B) and (E) of the Rules;

NOW DECIDES the matter, pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules, on the basis of the written submissions of the parties.

The Defence

1. The Defence, recalling its Pre-Defence Brief filed 30 December 2004, and the Chamber's Decision of 14 July 2006, granting its Motion to add one witness and to remove seven others from its initial list of witnesses, requests the Chamber to grant it leave to remove three witnesses (JEJE, DOS, and QN1) from its list of witnesses and add one witness (DEDE).

2. The Defence requests the addition of Witness DEDE who it claims could not be added to the Defence's initial list of witness, as he could not be found at the time. It was only in July 2006 that the Defence was able to trace the witness' whereabouts.

3. The Defence submits that, according to the relevant will-say statement attached to the Motion, Witness DEDE is expected to testify in chief for about four hours, and essentially with regard to the Accused's character, since the proposed witness has known him for many years, the installation of the Accused as Préfet, the events at Mbazi and the arrests of the authors of the crimes at the behest of the Accused. At the same time, he is expected to contradict the testimony of Prosecution Witness SJ, whom he knew during the events of 1994, and about the numerous displacements at the préfectural office and the requisition of petrol. The Defence further submits that Witness DEDE is important to its case, because to this moment, he is the only witness who will talk about the events mentioned above.

4. The Defence, recalling the jurisprudence of the Tribunal, in particular in the case of Nahimana,[1] submits that the addition of Witness DEDE will not cause prejudice to any of the Parties since he will be called at the end of the Defence case, thus allowing the other Parties to prepare their cross-examination.

The Prosecution

5. The Prosecution submits that it has no objections to the Defence's Motion with respect to the dropping of the witnesses. Furthermore, it does not oppose the request to add Witness DEDE if the Chamber decides that the criteria for granting the motion have been met.

6. The Prosecution underscores and requests that its right to have 21 days to investigate the allegations of the witness before his cross-examination, pursuant to Rule 73 of the Rules, is preserved.

7. However, the Prosecution argues that the will-say statement submitted for Witness DEDE is vague and ambiguous and constitutes insufficient notice of the expected testimony. It requests that the Defence give "further and better particulars" of the expected testimony of the witness.

8. The Prosecution requests that the Chamber order the Defence to disclose the expected order of appearance of the upcoming witnesses.

The Defence Reply

9. The Defence submits that it does not agree with the Prosecution demand for further information about Witness DEDE, saying that it will not provide personal information about the witness until he is added onto the witness list. It assures the court that as soon as the witness is added on to the list, the Defence will disclose the witness' personal particulars within the prescribed timeframes.

10. The Defence also submits that the Prosecutor's claim that Witness DEDE's statement is vague is "not pertinent."

Having deliberated,

11. The Chamber has considered the submissions of the Parties, noting that none of the Defence Teams have filed Responses to the Motion.

12. The Chamber recalls Rule 73 ter (E) of the Rules, which provides that:

> After commencement of the Defence case, the Defence, if it considers it to be in the interest of justice, may move the Trial Chamber for leave to reinstate the list of witnesses or to vary its decision as which witnesses are to be called.

13. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution offers no specific objection to the Defence request to add or delete some of its witnesses, and reminds the Chamber of its right to a time period of 21 days in which to prepare, before a new witness can be brought to the stand.

On the Deletion of Witnesses

14. The Chamber is satisfied that the proposed deletion of three witnesses could expedite the proceedings and enhance judicial economy.[2] Accordingly, the Chamber grants the Defence request to delete Witnesses JEJE, DOS, and QN1 from the Defence's list of witnesses.

On the Addition of Witness DEDE

15. The Chamber recalls its recent decision in Nteziryayo, in which it noted:

[2] The Prosecutor v. Nyriamasuhuko et al., T. 18 October 2004, p. 20. Also, The Prosecutor v. Nteziryayo, Decision on Alphonse Nteziryayo's Motion to Modify His Witness List (TC), 14 July 2006, para. 26.

> The moving party has always provided an indication of the proposed witness' testimony, in the form of a witness summary or will-say statement. The moving party has also to demonstrate the relevance of the evidence to the proceedings and to provide the estimated length of the examination-in-chief. This is to ensure that there is no prejudicial element of surprise to the other Parties and that there exists sufficient information with which to prepare their examinations and make the necessary investigations if required. More importantly, it allows the Chamber to make a proper determination as to the materiality and probative value of the proposed testimony to the proceedings.[3]

16. The Chamber notes that according to the Defence, Witness DEDE's expected testimony covers the Accused's character, the installation of the Accused as Préfet, the events at Mbazi, and counters the testimony of Prosecution Witness SJ, whom Witness DEDE knew during the events of 1994. Witness DEDE is also expected to testify about the numerous displacements at the préfectural office and the requisition of petrol. He therefore appears to be an important witness for the Defence. It is the Chamber's opinion that the proposed testimony of Witness DEDE may be material and may have probative value to the case of the Accused. The Chamber thus grants the Defence request to add him to his list of witnesses.

17. With regard to the request for timely disclosure of Witness DEDE's identifying information, the Chamber notes that the Defence is required to provide such identifying details to the other Parties 21 days before Witness DEDE testifies. Accordingly, the Chamber orders it to make a timely disclosure of the identifying information of Witness DEDE, so that the other Parties may prepare their cross-examination. Furthermore, the Chamber orders the Defence to call the witness towards the end of its case.

On the Prosecution's other Prayers

18. The Chamber recalls the Prosecution's submissions that Witness DEDE's will-say statement is too vague, particularly with regard to its paragraph 9, which indicates, "Witness DEDE will contradict 'certain allegations' of the Prosecution witness." The Chamber considers that the particular wording of this sentence is imprecise as to the exact allegations Witness DEDE is expected to contradict. The Chamber finds that this type of imprecision may impede the other Parties' right to sufficiently investigate the allegations and conduct cross-examination. The Chamber therefore orders the Defence to provide further and better particulars to Witness DEDE's will-say statement in that regard.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL,

GRANTS the Defence Motion, and orders the Defence to delete Witnesses JEJE, DOS, and QN1 from its list;

GRANTS the Defence Motion to add Witness DEDE to its list, and;

I. ORDERS the Defence to make timely disclosure of the identifying information of Witness DEDE;

II. ORDERS the Defence to provide further and better particulars to Witness DEDE's will-say statement on the issue of contradicting the Prosecution witness concerned; and

III. ORDERS the Defence to call Witness DEDE towards the end of its case.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), in particular Rules 71 (D) and 71 (A) of the Rules*;*

NOW DECIDES the Motion, pursuant to Rule 73 (A), on the basis of the written briefs filed by the Parties.

The Defence

1. The Defence moves the Chamber to allow Witness AGWA to testify from Belgium "or any other appropriate place" during the first week of September 2006 by means of a video-conference, pursuant to Rule 71 (D) of the Rules.[1] The Defence submits that this is necessary due to medical reasons which make it impossible for the witness to travel to Arusha.[2]

2. The Defence submits that pursuant to Rules 90 (A) and 71 of the Rules, while the principle is for witnesses to give oral testimony before the Chamber, a Chamber may, in exceptional circumstances and in the interests of justice, order a deposition by way of a video-conference.[3] The Defence relies on this Chamber's jurisprudence according to which the granting of video conference depends on the assessment of (i) the importance of the testimony; (ii) the inability or unwillingness of the witness to attend; and (iii) whether a good reason can be adduced for that inability or unwillingness.[4] According to the Defence, these conditions are fulfilled.

3. The Defence argues that the importance of Witness AGWA's expected testimony to Nsabimana's case has been noted by the Chamber, which held that it "contains relevant and probative evidence which the Chamber should hear in the interests of justice".[5] The Defence submits that the first criterion is therefore met.[6]

4. The Defence also states that Witness AGWA cannot travel to Arusha for medical reasons, as is borne out by the Annex. The Defence relies on the Tribunal's and the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia's jurisprudence to submit that health problems have been held to be exceptional circumstances which justify testimony by video conference.[7]

The Prosecution

5. The Prosecution submits that it is entirely within the Chamber's discretion to grant a video conference in this matter.[8] However, it argues that the Defence has not shown the nature or seriousness of the witness' medical concerns and has thus failed to provide the Chamber with sufficient information on the basis of which to decide whether a video conference should be granted.[9] Further, the Prosecution submits that because of the importance attributed to the proposed testimony of Witness AGWA, it would be in the interests of justice that he be heard in Arusha. Finally, the Prosecution submits that the Defence has not shown any reason for the witness' unwillingness to come to Arusha, other than a generalized claim that he is unwell.[10]

The Defence Reply

6. The Defence submits that it is not authorised to indicate in detail the medical concerns of Witness AGWA because of medical confidentiality.[11] However, it submits that since the Witness has been advised not to travel during his treatment, this has been done for good reasons. Besides, it is not for the Prosecution or other Parties to the proceedings to assess the existence of valid medical reasons that might cause a witness' inability to travel, but for members of the medical profession alone.[12] The Defence indicates, however, that the Prosecution is free to contact the medical doctor who signed the witness' medical certificate.[13]

7. As to the Prosecution's argument that it would be in the interests of justice to have Witness AGWA testify in Arusha, the Defence submits that a testimony via video conference does not infringe upon the Parties' rights and is not contrary to the interests of justice.[14] As the witness cannot come to Arusha to testify, the video conference is the only way to hear him.[15] Pursuant to Art. 19 (1) of the Statute, which safeguards the Accused's rights, this is what has to be done.[16]

8. The Chamber underscores the general rule articulated in Rule 90 (A), that "witnesses shall, in principle, be heard directly by the Chamber."[17] Nonetheless, the Chamber recalls that it has discretion to grant the hearing of testimony by video-conference in lieu of physical appearance where it is in the interests of justice, based on an assessment of; (i) the importance of the testimony, (ii) the inability or unwillingness of the witness to attend, (iii) whether a good reason can be adduced for that inability and unwillingness.[18] The burden of proof for authorising a witness' testimony to be taken by way of video-conference lies with the Party making the request.[19]

9. With respect to the first criterion, after having carefully reviewed the information regarding Witness AGWA's expected testimony contained both in the Motion and in the will-say, the Chamber finds that the Defence has demonstrated that his testimony is sufficiently important to the Accused's defence. The Chamber particularly recalls that it granted the Defence's request to add Witness AGWA to its witness list because he was expected to testify "among others, on the pacification meeting convened by the Accused Nsabimana at Nyarutegia market".[20]

10. With respect to the second and third criteria, the Chamber has noted the medical certificate annexed to the Motion, indicating that Witness AGWA is formally advised against travelling because of the treatment he is receiving, but not specifying the nature or gravity of his illness. While grave health problems have repeatedly been held to constitute a sufficient reason for video conferences, the Chamber notes that such health issues were clearly set out.[21] In the instant case, however, the Chamber considers that the Defence has not provided sufficient information regarding the witness' state of health, given that testimony via video-conference may only be granted in exceptional circumstances. Therefore, the second and third criterion for allowing the witness to testify via video-link have not been met and thus, the Defence prayer is denied.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIAL CHAMBER

DENIES the Motion in all respects.

NOTING that the Prosecution has not filed a response;

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written submissions filed by the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules.

1. Pauline Nyiramasuhuko, an Accused in the Butare[2] case, requests disclosure of the closed session transcripts in respect of protected Witness ANL/CJ, who testified for the Prosecution in the present case on 28 June 2006. The Motion is brought pursuant to Rule 75 (G) (i).

2. The Chamber recalls its Decision of 23 August 2006 where it held that confidential inter partes material may be disclosed to a party in another case provided that the applicant demonstrates that it "is likely to assist that applicant's case materially, or […] there is a good chance that it would."[3] The Chamber further held that this standard can be met by showing that there is a factual nexus between the two cases.[4]

3. Nyiramasuhuko wishes to have access to the closed session transcripts of Witness ANL/CJ in order to prepare for cross-examination of unprotected Defence Witness Charles Karemano in the Butare case. She submits that both testimonies relate to the circumstances of the death of the same person in April 1994.

4. The Chamber is satisfied that the issue raised by the Nyiramasuhuko Defence establishes a sufficient factual nexus between the Butare case and the present case.

5. The Chamber, however, would like to note that the context of Prosecution Witness ANL/CJ's testimony should not have been known to the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko or anyone else outside the courtroom since the entire testimony of Witness ANL/CJ was given in closed session. At this stage, the Chamber wishes to underscore the importance of witness protection measures and reminds all parties to duly comply with the Chamber's orders in this respect.[5]

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Motion;

ORDERS the Prosecution and the Registry to transmit to the Nyiramasuhuko Defence the closed session transcripts of Witness ANL/CJ's testimony before this Chamber;

ORDERS that the Nyiramasuhuko Defence and the Accused shall be bound mutatis mutandis, upon receipt of the confidential material, by the terms of the above mentioned witness protection orders in the present case.[6]

Submissions of the Parties

Defence for Ndayambaje

1. The Defence requests the exclusion of testimonies or parts of testimonies of 14 Prosecution witnesses[2] because they concern facts or elements not pleaded in the Indictment and because it has not had a timely notification of these allegations.

2. The Defence argues that if the Chamber does not exclude the impugned evidence at this stage of the proceedings, Ndayambaje will suffer serious prejudice because along with the charges in the Indictment, the Accused will have to counter new facts or elements resulting from testimonies of Prosecution witnesses, even though the Chamber will have to dismiss them in its final deliberations.[3]

3. The Defence submits that, to be admissible, evidence must be relevant to an element of a crime with which the Accused is charged and therefore sufficiently related to some charge in the Indictment. If the Prosecution fails to establish the relevance of evidence to a charge against the Accused, this evidence must be deemed inadmissible.[4] The Defence stresses that the indictment must set out the material facts with enough detail to enable the accused to prepare his defence.[5] In this respect, the jurisprudence of both ICTY and ICTR clearly indicates that nothing can replace the indictment.[6] In particular, pre-trial submissions or disclosures are no adequate substitute for a properly pleaded indictment.[7] Failure to allege known material facts in an indictment is unacceptable and can only be remedied in exceptional cases,[8] since such an omission would impact negatively on the ability of the Accused to prepare his defence.[9] Such vagueness can only be harmless if it is shown that the accused's ability to prepare his case has not been materially impaired. If this is not demonstrated, the indictment causes injustice and the trial is rendered unfair.[10] The Defence recalls that a vague indictment in and of itself may be sufficient to reverse a conviction.[11]

4. While it is possible that evidence may turn out differently from what was expected, the Defence submits that in such cases, the indictment must be amended or proceedings adjourned, or certain evidence must be excluded as not being within the scope of the indictment.[12]

5. The Defence concedes that in some circumstances, a defective indictment may be cured, but submits that in light of the factual and legal complexities normally associated with the crimes within the jurisdiction of this Tribunal, there can only be a limited number of cases that fall within that category.[13] Besides, a defective indictment can only be cured by information in a pre-trial brief when the material fact was already contained in the indictment in such a way that it could be discerned by the attentive reader.[14] The Defence recalls that the mere service of witness statements or "will-say" statements is not sufficient to inform the Defence of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial.[15] In the instant case, there has been no sufficient notice to cure the defects of the Indictment.[16]

6. The Defence submits that it must object if evidence regarding a fact not pleaded in the Indictment is about to be admitted. However, failure to object contemporaneously is not equivalent to a complete waiver. According to the Defence, the Chamber has always refused to consider the vagueness of the Indictment or any other defect in Prosecution disclosures with regard to evidence introduced by witnesses, even though this was raised in objections by Ndayambaje's co-accused.[17] Because of the numerous decisions by the Chamber in this sense, objections were not appropriate at the time. The Defence adds that now is the right time because the Defence case has not yet begun and the number of witnesses the Defence intends to call will be affected.[18] The Motion is not moot or premature, and it is in the interest of justice and of efficient proceedings to dismiss the listed testimonies now.[19] The Defence states that denying the Motion would be a denial of justice.[20]

7. The Defence submits that Ndayambaje will suffer irremediable prejudice if he has to present a defence for events that are not pleaded in his Indictment, more than ten years after their alleged perpetration.[21] The Defence argues that since it did not know that certain evidence was going to be presented, it could not direct its investigations or efficiently confront Prosecution witnesses as regards this evidence.[22] This prejudice cannot be remedied by merely presenting witnesses.[23]

8. The Defence also submits that vague indictments infringe upon judicial economy,[24] whereas the identification of persons in the indictment contributes to the efficient conduct of proceedings.[25] Apart from respecting the rights of the Accused, the exclusion of the abundant evidence regarding facts not pleaded in the Indictment will diminish the length of proceedings, which is a constant concern of the Chamber.[26] Also, it is in the interest of justice that Prosecution as well as Defence witnesses are only heard insofar as their testimonies are relevant to the case.[27] In consequence, the analysis of the evidence by all Parties, their pleadings and the final deliberations would be shortened.[28]

Prosecution's Response

9. The Prosecution submits that the Motion is essentially predicated upon Rule 72 (A) of the Rules but has been filed out of time. Therefore, the Chamber should not hear the Motion, as it is time-barred.[29] However, should the Chamber rule that the Motion is admissible, the Prosecution relies on a number of arguments.[30]

10. The Prosecution submits that the appropriate time to object to the admissibility of evidence is when it is presented.[31] However, with regard to the impugned witnesses, the Defence did not object to the admissibility of their testimony, except for Witnesses RV and QBZ. Therefore, there is now an onus on the Defence to show prejudice, as the Motion is untimely.[32] The Prosecution submits that failure to object before the Chamber will usually result in the Appeals Chamber disregarding the argument.[33]

11. For instance, the Prosecution notes that there was no contemporaneous objection by the Defence when Witness QAR testified. Rather, the Defence exhaustively cross-examined him and had him recalled, without alleging that the witness's evidence related to Mugombwa church was inadmissible because it had not been pleaded in the Indictment.[34]

12. The Prosecution also submits that the absence of a material fact in the Indictment does not mean that it cannot be relied upon. Rather, the test for ascertaining whether such material fact should be admitted and/or relied upon is whether the accused received proper notice.[35] It further submits that the Indictment against Ndayambaje is not vague, but sets out the material facts with sufficient specificity. The Prosecution's case against Ndayambaje falls squarely within the ambit of the Kupreskic et al. definition of the sheer scale of the alleged crimes that may make it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity.[36] However, having regard to the complexity of the issues, the material facts have been pleaded with sufficient specificity to assist the Defence in the preparation of its case.[37]

13. The Prosecution submits that even if the Chamber were to find the Indictment deficient, such defects would have been cured by the Prosecution's timely, clear and consistent disclosure of information to the Defence. Therefore, no unfair prejudice has been caused to the Defence that would require the sought remedy, as is again supported by its defence strategy, involving extensive cross-examination of the impugned witnesses.[38]

14. The Prosecution recalls that the Defence submitted its Pre-Defence Brief on 23 October 2004 and that it contains a list of witnesses who will be called to rebut the evidence introduced by the impugned witnesses. Therefore, contrary to the Defence's allegations as to prejudice, it has had ample time to consider the Prosecution evidence and to prepare its defence case.[39]

15. The Prosecution submits that the Chamber should allow the impugned evidence to stand in its entirety, because in any event, it corroborates the factual allegations specifically pleaded in the Indictment.[40]

Ndayambaje's Reply

16. The Defence states that it is surprised that its Motion has been qualified as being both "time-barred" and premature by the Prosecution, as these are contradictory.[41] It reiterates that the Motion is not time-barred and contains no preliminary objections;[42] nor is it based on Rule 72 (A) of the Rules.[43] As to the Prosecutor's argument that the Motion is premature, the Defence refers to two decisions to indicate that this is not the case.[44]

17. The Defence submits that the fundamental legal question is whether the Prosecution could remedy the defects in the Amended Indictment by disclosure contained in the Pre-Trial Brief, the "will-say" statements, or the testimonies.[45] The Defence stresses that while the Prosecution alleges that the Indictment is not vague, on the other hand, it relies on a decision in Kupreskic et al. which states that "there may be instances where the sheer scale of the alleged crimes makes it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity".[46]

18. The Defence also submits that contrary to the Prosecution's arguments, the "exhaustive" cross-examinations of witnesses have not clarified the Indictment. Rather, faced with the multiple contradictions contained in the testimonies of Prosecution witnesses and the silence of the Indictment, the Defence does not know anymore on which elements it must base its case.[47]

19. Further, as to the Prosecution's submissions that the evidence should be kept as corroborative evidence of the facts pleaded in the Indictment, the Defence states that it is inappropriate for the Prosecution to sustain, 18 months after closing its case, that evidence which is inadmissible as direct evidence should be conserved as corroborative evidence of the vague and imprecise elements of the Indictment.[48]

20. The Defence submits that the absence of information in the Indictment, combined with the numerous contradictions and improbabilities in the testimonies, prevent it from presenting a full defence, particularly with regard to a defence of alibi.[49]

Deliberations

21. The Chamber has carefully considered the Parties' submissions. The Chamber observes that as a preliminary issue, it has to address the question of whether the Motion is brought at the right point in time.

22. The Chamber notes the Tribunal's jurisprudence to the effect that the appropriate time to object to the admissibility of evidence is when the evidence is introduced.[50] In the instant case, the Defence by its own admission did not object contemporaneously to the testimony of any of the impugned witnesses.[51] Even if the Chamber were to accept the Defence's argument that the decisions overruling the objections of other defence teams had the effect of res judicata for the Accused Ndayambaje,[52] such objections do not seem to have been raised with regard to the witnesses whose testimony the Defence seeks to have excluded.

23. Nonetheless, the Chamber recalls that the Accused is not barred from raising submissions regarding the vagueness of the indictment in support of the exclusion of evidence at a later stage in the trial proceedings.[53]

24. The Chamber recalls the Appeals Chamber's holding in the Butare case, according to which there can be no conviction of an Accused on the basis of facts not charged in the indictment but introduced by testimonies.[54] However, the Chamber underscores that whilst an allegation may not have been specifically pleaded, this does not in itself render such evidence inadmissible because it may be relevant to the proof of any allegation pleaded in the indictment.The Chamber recalls the Appeals Chamber's Decision that > [i]ndeed, pursuant to Rule 89 (C) of the Rules, the Trial Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value. It should be recalled that admissibility of evidence should not be confused with the assessment of the weight to be accorded to that evidence, an issue to be decided by the Trial Chamber after hearing the totality of the evidence. Consequently, although on the basis of the present indictment it is not possible to convict Nyiramasuhuko in respect of her presence at the installation of Ndayambaje, evidence of this meeting can be admitted to the extent that it may be relevant to the proof of any allegation pleaded in the Indictment.[55]

25. The Chamber notes that some Trial Chambers' decisions are to the effect that it is appropriate to treat questions regarding the exclusion of evidence based on a vague indictment during trial proceedings.[56] However, on the basis of the cited jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber, and with regard to the particular circumstances of this case, as well as the interests of justice, the Chamber is not satisfied that there is a basis to exclude the concerned testimonies at this stage. Some of the matters raised may be considered at a later stage of the proceedings.

26. Finally, the Chamber has noted that issues relating to the credibility and evaluation of evidence have been raised in the Motion, whereas they also ought to be considered at a later stage with the totality of the evidence.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL

DENIES the Motion in every respect.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), particularly Rules 71 (D) and 71 (A) of the Rules;

NOW DECIDES the matter, pursuant to Rule 73 (A), on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties.

The Defence

1. The Defence moves the Chamber to reconsider its Decision of 17 August 2006 to allow Defence Witness AGWA to testify by means of video-conference from Brussels, in the week starting 18 September 2006.

2. The Defence submits that shortly after the issuance of the Decision of 17 August 2006, it received a document providing further details concerning Witness AGWA's actual state of health from Dr. Graux Carios. The Defence indicates that Witness AGWA is currently being treated for a very serious disease which prevents him from travelling for at least six months starting from 23 August 2006, the date of the medical certificate.

3. The Defence stresses that the details contained in the medical certificate dated 23 August 2006 were totally unknown to it when it filed its initial Motion leading to the Decision of 17 August 2006; the Defence adds that those details constitute new and exceptional circumstances warranting the reconsideration of the Decision of 17 August 2006.

The Prosecution

4. The Prosecution submits that the medical certificate contains information which was always available to the Defence and which should have been transmitted to the Chamber with its earlier Motion. Therefore, the requirements for reconsideration are not met. The Prosecution however asserts that it is entirely within the Chamber's discretion to reconsider its own Decision.

Having deliberated

5. The Chamber recalls the Tribunal's jurisprudence on reconsideration:

> The fact that the Rules are silent as to reconsideration, however, is not, in itself, determinative of the issue whether or not reconsideration is available in "particular circumstances" and a judicial body has inherent jurisdiction to reconsider its decision in "particular circumstances". Therefore, although the Rules do not explicitly provide for it, the Chamber has an inherent power to reconsider its own decisions. However, it is clear that reconsideration is an exceptional measure that is available only in particular circumstances.[1]

6. The Chamber recalls its 17 August Decision in which it found that Witness AGWA's testimony was sufficiently important to the Accused's defence but since the Defence did not specify the nature or gravity of his illness, its video-link request was denied.[2]

7. The Chamber notes that the Defence has now produced a Medical Certificate allegedly issued by Doctor Graux Carios on 23 August 2006. According to this certificate, Witness AGWA apparently suffers from a very serious disease that does not allow him to travel for at least six months. In the Chamber's view, the details contained in this newly provided document do not amount to "particular circumstances" within the meaning of the aforesaid jurisprudence given that they could and should have been known by the Defence when filing their initial motion for video-link testimony. The Motion for reconsideration is therefore denied.

8. 9. Finally, the Chamber urges the Defence for Nsabimana to act with more diligence in the preparation of its work and in the filing of motions to avoid wasting time and resources.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL,

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge William H. Sekule, Presiding, Judge Arlette Ramaroson and Judge Solomy B. Bossa (the "Chamber");

SEISED of the "Prosecutor's Urgent Motion to Compel Compliance With the Trial Chamber's Decision of 17 August 2006", filed on 30 August 2006 (the "Motion");

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

RECALLING the Chamber's Decision on Sylvain Nsabimana's Extremely Urgent Motion to Drop and Add Witnesses of 17 August 2006;

NOW DECIDES the Motion, pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules, on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties.

The Prosecution

1. The Prosecution moves the Chamber to order the Defence for Nsabimana to comply with the Chamber's Decision of 17 August 2006 and to make further disclosure regarding Witness DEDE, in particular with regard to the exact place where according to Witness DEDE, Prosecution Witness SJ allegedly sought refuge between April and July 1994, and to the alleged aid Witness SJ received from the Accused Nsabimana. Further, the Prosecution moves the Chamber to order the Defence to disclose the names of the "MRND dignitaries" to whom Witness DEDE is expected to refer, if they include any person/s accused in these proceedings. Finally, the Prosecution moves the Chamber to remind the Defence of its order to call Witness DEDE "towards the end of its case".

2. The Prosecution submits that the "supplementary will-say" filed fails to comply with the Chamber's order of 17 August 2006, as it does not provide "further and better particulars" regarding the place where Witness SJ allegedly hid and it only speaks of "aid" the witness allegedly received from Nsabimana, without specifics.[1]

3. The Prosecution argues that the Defence intentionally used vague expressions as an attempt to avoid disclosure requirements and to deny the other Parties fair and adequate preparation.[2] In particular, the Prosecution states that it cannot adequately prepare its cross-examination without sufficient information regarding the location where Witness SJ sought refuge.[3] The Prosecution also submits that the alleged "aid" the Accused provided to Witness SJ does not appear in the first will-say regarding Witness DEDE, revealing a further intentional failure to disclose.[4] The repeated failures to fully disclose required information in the will-says for Nsabimana's witnesses reveal a pattern of non-compliance, according to the Prosecution.[5]

4. The Prosecution recalls that Rule 90 (G) (ii) of the Rules requires that "counsel shall put to the witness the nature of the case of the party for whom that counsel appears which is in contradiction of the evidence given by the witness" and submits that these propositions were not put to Witness SJ during her testimony. Rather, the Defence seeks to impeach her collaterally at this late stage, despite the provisions of Rule 90 (G) (ii) of the Rules.[6]

5. The Prosecution also points out that Witness DEDE's will-say filed on 21 August 2006 mentions "some MRND dignitaries" and therefore asks that the Defence disclose which persons Witness DEDE is expected to refer to, if they include persons accused in this trial.[7]

Nsabimana's Response

6. The Defence for Nsabimana submits that the Chamber's Decision ordered it to disclose details with regard to the statement that Witness DEDE would contradict Prosecution Witness SJ, and that this has been adequately done in the additional will-say.[8] According to the Defence, further information need not be included in the will-say, and there is no basis for the Prosecution's request in that matter,[9] especially as by its own admission, Witness SJ is still alive.[10]

7. As to the Prosecution's submissions regarding the aid the Accused Nsabimana allegedly provided, the Defence submits that the disclosures made so far enable all Parties to undertake all necessary investigations.[11] The Defence argues that not only does the Chamber's Decision of 17 August 2006 not address this issue, but the additional will-say for Witness DEDE indicates that the Accused assisted that witness after his house had been set on fire.[12] Besides, the Defence indicates that assistance was provided at Mbazi.[13]

8. The Defence submits that among the MRND dignitaries mentioned is Pauline Nyiramasuhuko, Minister of the Interim Government at the time of the events.[14]

9. With regard to the order of appearance of its witnesses, the Defence refers to the Chamber's invitation to avoid gaps between witnesses.[15] The Defence submits that the current order of appearance has been worked out in order to implement this invitation.[16] It also recalls that the Chamber ordered it to call Witness DEDE towards the end of the Defence case and submits that there are only four witnesses left to be called, one of whom is Witness DEDE.[17] The Defence therefore submits that it has entirely complied with the orders of the Chamber and that all has been done to enable Witness DEDE to testify from 11 September 2006, 21 days after the disclosure of his identity.[18]

Deliberations

10. In its Motion, the Prosecution requests that the Defence complies with the Chamber's order (1) to give further and better particulars to Witness DEDE's Will-say statement; and (2) to call Witness DEDE towards the end of its case.

Regarding Compliance with the Chamber's Order to Give Further and Better Particulars to Witness DEDE's Will-Say Statement

11. The Chamber recalls its Decision of 17 August 2006 in which it ordered the Defence to provide further and better particulars to Witness DEDE's Will-Say statement because the wording of its Paragraph 9 indicating that Witness DEDE will contradict 'certain allegations' of Prosecution Witness SJ is imprecise and may impede the other Parties's right to sufficiently investigate the allegations and conduct cross-examination.

12. The Chamber notes that the Defence filed a supplementary Will-Say Statement of Witness DEDE on 29 August 2006 (the "supplementary will-say statement").[19]

13. As for the alleged contradictions between Witness DEDE and Prosecution Witness SJ's testimony, the Chamber notes the Prosecution submissions that the Defence has failed to comply with its order for further and better particulars regarding the exact place where Prosecution Witness SJ was alleged to have hidden during the events, and what assistance préfet Nsabimana is alleged to have provided Prosecution Witness SJ. Furthermore, the Prosecution requests for the Defence to disclose the names of the "MRND dignitaries" to whom Witness DEDE is expected to refer, if they include any person/s accused in these proceedings.

14. In the Chamber's opinion, when a party decides to call a witness to give testimony in contradiction to any other witnesses already heard before the Chamber, it is necessary for the calling party to give sufficient and specific information regarding the contradictory testimony so that all the parties in the case may prepare their cross-examination.[20]

15. In the instant case, the Chamber notes that although the supplementary will-say statement of Witness DEDE states that the latter knew where Prosecution Witness SJ hid during the events and that he never left that hiding place to go to the prefectural office, the supplementary will-say is silent about the alleged hiding place of Prosecution Witness SJ. Furthermore, even though the Defence submitted that Nsabimana aided Prosecution Witness SJ when his house was burnt down in Mbazi, the Chamber finds that this kind of information should be detailed in the will-say of Witness DEDE. Regarding the submission that Pauline Nyiramasuhuko was one of the 'MRND dignitaries' mentioned, the Chamber also finds that this kind of information should be detailed in the will-say.

16. Accordingly, the Chamber orders the Defence of Nsabimana to give details regarding the contradictions between DEDE's testimony and that of Prosecution Witness SJ, in particular, the location he alleges Prosecution Witness SJ was hiding; details regarding the 'aid' Nsabimana allegedly gave to Prosecution Witness SJ. The Chamber also orders the Defence of Nsabiman to specifically mention by name or by position held, the 'MRND dignitaries' mentioned in the supplementary will-say and if those 'MRND dignitaries' include Accused person/s before the Chamber, the Defence is ordered to name the said Accused person/s.

[19] The supplementary Will-say indicated that inter alia; Prosecution Witness SJ's hiding place during the events of April to July 1994 and that SJ had never left this hiding place throughout the period of the events in order to go to the prefectural office; and how prefet Nsabimana helped Prosecution Witness SJ following the burning down of her house.

[20] The Chamber recalls that during Ntahobali's case, the Will-Say statements of Defence Witnesses WUNHF and WUNJN detailed the exact areas where these two witnesses would contradict the testimony of Prosecution Witness QBP, by indicating how they knew the witness and by giving the alleged exact location where they saw QBP during the events, contrary to her testimony. Similarly the Will-Say statement of Witness WUNJN detailed the alleged exact areas where he would contradict the testimony of Prosecution Witness TA, by stating how he knew Witness TA and the alleged exact locations where he saw her during the events of 1994, contrary to the latter's testimony

17. The Chamber orders the Defence to make the required disclosures regarding the proposed testimony of Witness DEDE as soon as possible and in any case before the close of business on Friday, 8 September 2006.

Regarding Compliance with the Chamber's Order to Call Witness DEDE Towards the End of its Case

18. The Chamber recalls that in its order of 17 August 2006, the Defence was required to call Witness DEDE towards the end of its case.

19. During the course of trial on 31 August 2006, the Chamber discussed the Defence of Nsabimana's correspondence of 29 August 2006[21] noting that there was a pending Motion on the matter and in order to avoid unnecessary delays, it directed the registry to make all the necessary arrangements so that Witness OYO testifies as from 11 September 2006, as originally scheduled.[22]

20. Accordingly, the Chamber finds the Prosecution request moot and reminds the Parties of its order of 31 August 2006 that Witness OYO testifies as from 11 September 2006.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL

GRANTS the Prosecution Motion in part and,

I. ORDERS the Defence of Nsabimana to provide detailed information, regarding the areas where Witness DEDE expects to contradict the testimony of Prosecution Witness SJ, in particular, the location he alleges Prosecution Witness SJ was hiding;

II. ORDERS the Defence of Nsabimana to give details regarding the 'aid' Nsabimana allegedly gave to Prosecution Witness SJ and where it was given;

III. ORDERS the Defence of Nsabimana to specifically mention by name or by position held, the 'MRND dignitaries' mentioned in the supplementary will-say and if those 'MRND dignitaries' include Accused person/s before the Chamber, the Defence is ordered to name the said Accused person/s;

IV. ORDERS the Defence to make the required disclosures regarding the proposed testimony of Witness DEDE as soon as possible and in any case before the close of business on Friday, 8 September 2006;

DENIES the Motion in all other respects.

Arusha, 5 September 2006.

[21] In the correspondence, the Defence listed its order of calling witnesses so that Witness DEDE was expected to give testimony during the week beginning on 11 September 2006, immediately after Charles Karemano (formerly Witness BURU) and before OYO, AGWA and the Accused Nsabimana.

[22] T. 31 August 2006 pp. 64: "So, in the circumstances, in order to avoid problems and that we do not - the Trial Chamber - we do not have a witness to testify, maybe OYO, who was scheduled for 11th, should be - everything else should be done to make sure he is available on the 11th of September so that he can continue with the evidence, in the light of the fact that there is a pending motion which we are not going to - we cannot sure, we cannot be certain, and we cannot tell which way it will go.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") in particular Article 19 of the Statute and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), specifically Rule 89 (C) of the Rules;

NOW DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties pursuant to Rule 73 (A).

Defence for Ntahobali

1. The Defence for Ntahobali requests the admission under Rule 89 (C) of the custodial statements allegedly made by Kanyabashi to Belgian authorities, upon his arrest in Belgium on 28 June 1995. Recalling Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute and Rule 89 of the Rules, the Defence submits that to exercise his right to a full defence, the Accused must have the necessary facilities and be able to use and file all exculpatory material, in particular Kanyabashi's custodial statements. The Defence argues that it cannot wait for Kanyabashi's possible testimony before tendering these documents, because there is no guarantee that he will testify.

2. The Defence claims that, in his custodial statements, Kanyabashi stated that Hutu extremists from Kigali committed the massacres at Butare, and that, apart from Captain Nizeyimana, he did not know anybody else from Butare who participated in the massacres; and those who did not like "our" prefecture came to set it alight, mentioning militiamen and soldiers coming from Butare.[1] Finally, Kanyabashi stressed that as far as he knew, nobody disobeyed his orders.[2]

3. The Defence recalls that Kanyabashi's strategy, as highlighted in his Pre-Defence Brief, is to implicate Ntahobali.[3]

4. The Defence argues that under Rule 89 (C), evidence need only be relevant and have probative value, and that ICTY jurisprudence clearly allows indirect evidence so long as that evidence consists of prior statements.[4]

Prosecutor's Response

5. The Prosecution submits that the Motion is time-barred given that the Kanyabashi's custodial statements were disclosed in September 2001. The Prosecution argues that, if the custodial statements were exculpatory under Rule 68, Ntahobali should have used them prior or during the presentation of his evidence, but in any case before the close of his case.

Stakic, Ordonnance relative aux normes régissant l'admission d'éléments de preuve, 16 April 2002.

6. Should the Chamber rule that the Motion is not time-barred, the Prosecution objects to it. Although it agrees with the Defence that it is not necessary to admit documents through a witness giving viva voce evidence, the Prosecution nonetheless argues that there are several other indicia which should inform the discretion of the Chamber as to whether to admit any document or otherwise.

7. The Prosecution argues that Kanyabashi's custodial statements are not relevant to Ntahobali's case because nowhere in the statements is Ntahobali's name mentioned to suggest either wrongdoing or innocence. Further, it is farfetched to rely on a sentence suggesting that the killings in Butare were perpetrated by people from Kigali as proof that the entirety of Kanyabashi's custodial statements isexculpatory.

8. The Prosecution submits that Ntahobali has been given every 'practicable facility' in the preparation and presentation of his defence and that therefore the non-admission of Kanyabashi's custodial statements does not in any way affect Ntahobali's rights under Articles 19 and 20. In any case, since the Chamber has given each Party an opportunity to cross-examine witnesses brought before it, Ntahobali will have ample opportunity and time to cross-examine the defence witnesses for Kanyabashi, when the time comes.

Kanyabashi's Response

9. The Defence for Kanyabashi notes that the admission of Kanyabashi's custodial statements is requested not to attack his credibility but to show the veracity of the statements made by Kanyabashi in 1995.

10. The Defence recalls that it intends to contest the admissibility of Kanyabashi's custodial statements through its expert Professor G. Stessens[5] who will explain that when Kanyabashi was interrogated by the Belgian authorities, said interrogation was conducted contrary to the requirements of Rules 42 and 43.

11. The Defence, relying on the jurisprudence from the Tribunal, the ICTY and the House of Lords, thus submits that the custodial statements cannot be admitted pursuant to Rule 89 (C), because the interrogations were conducted in contravention of Articles 17 and 20 of the Statute and Rules 42 and 43 of the Rules.[6]

Ntahobali's Reply to Kanyabashi and to the Prosecutor's Responses

12. As a preliminary matter, Ntahobali submits that it filed its Reply on 10 July 2006 as the deadline for filing its reply expired on Sunday 9 July 2006.

13. In Reply to Kanyabashi's Response, Ntahobali submits that when Kanyabashi was arrested in Belgium on 28 June 1995, the Rules of Procedure and Evidence had not been adopted. The Rules were adopted on 29 June 1995, a day after Kanyabashi's arrest. Consequently, when Kanyabashi was interrogated by the Belgian authorities, adherence to Rules 42 and 43, 63, 89 (C) and (D), 92 and 95 could not have been envisaged.

[5] The Defence notes that only the Prosecution filed a notice on 20 January 2003 pursuant to Rule 94 bis (B) (ii) , indicating that it will cross-examine the proposed expert and that none of the co-Accused filed a notice in this regard.

Bagosora et al.*, Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for the Admission of Certain materials under Rule 89 (C), (TC) of 14 October 2004; Prosecutor v. Halilovic, Decision on Motion for Exclusion of Statements of Accused, (TC) of 8 July 2005; Decision on Interlocutory Appeal Concerning Admission of Record of Interview of the Accused from the Bar Table, (AC) of 19 August 2005; Prosecutor v. Mucic, Decision on Zdravko Mucic's Motion for the Exclusion of Evidence, (TC) of 2 September 1997 (the "Mucic Decision"); Regina Respondent v. Myers Appellants, House of Lords, [1997] 3 W.L.R. 552; [1998] A.C. 124.

14. In addition, the Defence argues that the Report of Professor Stessens cannot be relied upon to demonstrate the manner in which the interviews were conducted, because said Report is not in evidence and notice of it under Rule 94 bis has not been filed. The Mucic Decision[7] cited by Kanyabashi is distinguishable from the case at bar because at the time when Mucic was interviewed, the ICTY Rules of Procedure and Evidence had already been adopted.

15. In Reply to the Prosecution Response, Ntahobali submits that it is not sufficient for the Prosecution to read parts of the custodial statements to conclude that they are irrelevant. Rather it is necessary to read them in their entirety because they provide a context which is useful to Ntahobali's defence strategy. The Defence submits that nowhere has it relied on Rule 68 which requires a showing of 'good cause,' rather it has relied on Rule 89 (C) because the custodial statements are exculpatory.

16. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber considers Ntahobali's Reply to be admissible pursuant to Rule 7 ter (B) of the Rules.

17. The Chamber notes that Kanyabashi does not contest that he made the custodial statements but contests the manner in which they were made and objects to the Motion.

18. Despite the provisions of Rule 89 (C) that a Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value, a prior statement of a witness (including that of an Accused person) is not evidence per se. The Tribunal's practice has consistently been to grant the admission into evidence only of those portions of the Accused's prior statement which were used in cross-examination to test his/ her credibility.[8] The Chamber sees no reason why it should depart from its practice in the instant case.

19. The Trial Chamber takes note of the Appeals Chamber Decision that evidence may be deemed inadmissible where it is found to be so lacking in terms of the indicia of reliability, such that it is not probative.[9] In the Chamber's opinion, Kanyabashi's custodial statement as it is, does not have sufficient indicia of reliability and thus may not be admitted.

20. Accordingly, the Chamber denies the Defence Motion to admit Kanyabashi's custodial statements.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL

DENIES Defence Motion to admit Kanyabashi's custodial statements.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), specifically Rule 89 (C) and 92 bis of the Rules;

NOW DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties pursuant to Rule 73 (A).

Defence for Nsabimana

1. The Defence recalls that it started presenting its evidence on 27 June 2006.[1] On the eve of calling Witness JAMI, the said witness, a member of a religious order, indicated his unwillingness to give testimony because his hierarchy refuses that he testifies on the events of 1994.[2] Nonetheless, the Witness has accepted to give his testimony in writing.

2. On the basis of Rules 89 (C) and 92 bis (i) (a) and the jurisprudence of the Tribunal and the ICTY in the Bagosora,[3] Muhimana[4] and Blagojevic and Jokic[5] cases, the Defence requests the admission of Witness JAMI's written statement in lieu of his oral evidence.[6] The Defence argues that Witness JAMI's statement has probative value because it relates the Accused's humanitarian efforts.[7] The Defence argues that Witness JAMI's statement does not talk of any of the acts for which the Accused or any one of his co-Accused in the Butare trial is charged with.[8]

3. The Defence points out that some of the evidence found in Witness JAMI's statement are cumulative to the testimony of its forthcoming Witness UMA[9]

4. The Defence submits that the statement may be admitted because it is attested.[10]

5. The Defence recalls the jurisprudence of the ICTY in the Blagojevic and Jokic Decision and submits that Witness JAMI's statement is sufficiently detailed not to require any cross-examination. In any case, admitting the statement without cross-examination will be in the interests of judicial time because of the absence of excessively long examinations of the witness.[11]

Prosecutor's Response

6. In objection to the Motion, the Prosecution mainly relies on the Bagosora Decision of 9 March 2004[12] and argues that the Defence has not satisfied the requirements of Rule 92 bis (A).

7. The Prosecution submits that contrary to the provisions of Rule 92 bis[13]. Witness JAMI's statement will essentially refute the allegation of Prosecution Witness TQ and also goes to contradict paragraph 6.60 of the Indictment which alleges that the Accused knew of the massacres and yet took no steps to assist the refugees.

8. Referring to the Blagojevic and Jokic Decision, the Prosecution submits that the admission of Witness JAMI's statement would amount to admitting the repetitive evidence of Defence witnesses UMA and OYO.

9. Recalling Witness JAMI's statement that civil leaders lacked authority when faced with the atrocities committed by the Interahamwe,[14] the Prosecution refers to the Bagosora Decision of 9 March 2004 on the meaning of "conduct" under Rule 92 bis and argues that such a statement is reminiscent of the whole defence case and thus contrary to its provisions.

10. The Prosecution alternatively argues that, if the Chamber decides to admit the statement, then the reason given for the witness's refusal to testify – because of his religious community – should not be accepted since other means for procuring the witness' testimony can be had.

11. In any event, the Prosecution submits that Witness JAMI should be cross-examined because the Witness speaks to the pivotal issue of what forms of authority could and were exercised by the Accused.

12. Citing the Serugendo Decision of 1 June 2006,[15] the Prosecution submits that even if a statement is admissible under Rule 92 bis, a consideration should still be made whether it should be admitted or otherwise. Here, the content of the witness testimony is contested and in the interests of justice, at the very least, Witness JAMI should be cross-examined by the other Parties.

13. The Prosecution disagrees with the Defence interpretation of the Blagojevic and Jokic Decision, and submits that there is no general rule that in any case where the statement is detailed, there would be no need for cross-examination. It argues that cross-examination is the only avenue to challenge the credibility of a witness.

Galic*, (AC) Decision on Interlocutory Appeal Concerning Rule 92 bis (C), of 7 June 2002 (the "Galic Appeals Chamber Decision") at para. 31, which was referred to in the *Prosecutor v. 14. The issues to which Witness JAMI speaks, such as the location of roadblocks, the presence of Robert Kajuga, and the presence of Interhamwe in Butare, are important to this case and therefore, such pivotal matters require that Witness JAMI be present in person to give evidence before the Trial Chamber.

Ntahobali Response

15. The Defence of Ntahobali objects to the Defence of Nsabimana's request arguing that parts of Witness JAMI's statement contain facts concerning the co-Accused.[16] The Defence argues that although the statement does not make direct allegations against the Accused Ntahobali, it effectively affects his defence.[17]

16. The Defence submits that, since the Prosecution alleges that the Accused had an association with Robert Kajuga and the Interahamwe,[18] it should be given an opportunity to cross-examine Witness JAMI.[19]

17. In the Defence's opinion, Witness JAMI's statement, contrary to the provisions of Rule 92 bis, goes to prove the positive acts of the Accused Nsabimana during the events of 1994 contrary to his Indictment.[20] This situation goes to establish the negative acts of the co-Accused.[21] It recalls the Bagosora Decision of 9 March 2004, and submits that it respects Nsabimana's rights to bring evidence which exculpates him but it argues that this does not authorise Nsabimana to bring evidence which affects the defence strategy of the Accused Ntahobali particularly when they are prejudicial to him.[22] The Defence agues that the general interests demand that the Witness gives testimony orally before the court.[23]

18. Regarding the reasons why Witness JAMI cannot testify,[24] the Defence argues that the Witness' religious order must adhere to the Rule of Law and the fundamental obligations found within the society that surround it.[25] Furthermore, Rule 54 gives the Trial Chamber the power to issue orders or summonses that may be necessary for the preparation or conduct of the trial.[26] Consequently, if the testimony of the Witness is essential, the Chamber should issue the appropriate orders to ensure his oral testimony.[27]

19. The Defence questions the authority of the person who attested the statement of Witness JAMI.[28]

Nsabimana's Replies to the Prosecution and Ntahobali's Responses

21. Recalling the Prosecution argument that Witness' JAMI's statement goes to prove or refute certain facts for which the Accused is charged within the Indictment, the Defence counters the argument submitting that whereas the Prosecution mission's is to prove the charges against the Accused, the Defence has the mission of proving his innocence.[29] The Defence thus submits that Rule 92 bis has been enacted to protect the interests of the Accused and not those of the Prosecution.[30] For this reason, the Defence requests the admission into evidence of witness statements which talk to the Accused's conduct during the Rwandan events of April to July 1994.[31]

22. In the Defence's opinion, the Bagosora Decision of 9 March 2004, which is erroneous, is the only one in which it was opined that Rule 92 bis excludes all evidence which tends to prove or refute the acts and conduct of the accused.[32] The Defence underscores that it will be bringing evidence of events of April to July 1994 which will always have an impact on the allegations found within the Indictment.[33]

23. The Defence disagrees with the Prosecution submission that Witness JAMI will essentially refute the allegation of Prosecution Witness TQ,[34] and it argues that Witness JAMI's statement goes to prove mitigating circumstances.[35]

24. Regarding paragraph 6.60 of the Indictment, the Defence submits that this paragraph does not support any of the charges in the Indictment.[36]

25. Regarding the Prosecution argument that Witness JAMI's statement essentially encapsulates the whole Defence case, the Defence argues that the Chamber is free to decide to admit in whole or in part the said witness' statement.[37] Accordingly, the Defence requests the Chamber to admit Witness JAMI's statement save for the part objected to by the Prosecution in paragraph 12 of its Response.[38]

26. Regarding the allegations that Witness JAMI's statement is repetitive of the testimony of other witnesses, the Defence argues that the said statement contains supplementary information to that which Witnesses OYO and UMA.[39]

27. Regarding the Prosecution objection to the Defence request that Witness JAMI's statement be admitted without him being cross-examined, the Defence essentially submits that had it been its wish, it would have wanted Witness JAMI to testify orally in Arusha or even by video-conference.[40]

Thus it is stated: "Personellement, j'ai eu l'impression que les autorités civiles n'ont eu rien à dire face à toute pissances des Interahamwe."
[39] Paras. 33 – 36 of the Reply to the Prosecution Response; Witness JAMI's statement has the supplementary information regarding his proposal to the Accused and Bourgmestre Kanyabashi to move the refugees to the Brothers of St. Croix in Rango.

28. Regarding the Defence of Ntahobali's objection to the mention of the leadership of the Interahamwe during the events of April 1994, the Defence points out that nowhere in the statement of Witness JAMI is there mention of the Accused Ntahobali.[41] In any case, the Defence recalls its request at para. 25 above.[42]

29. Regarding the Defence of Ntahobali's submissions on Mr. Dunia's authority, the Defence recalls Rule 92 bis and argues that this Rule is very straightforward.[43]

30. Regarding Witness JAMI's reasons hindering him from giving testimony on the events of 1994, the Defence submits that it is the Chamber's discretion to decide whether the reasons provided for the inability of giving oral testimony are sufficient for it to decide to admit a statement under Rule 92 bis.[44]

Having deliberated

31. The Chamber notes that the Motion is premised under Rules 89 (C) and 92 bis whose relevant provisions state:

> Rule 89: General Provisions
> A Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value.

> Rule 92 bis: Proof of Facts Other Than by Oral Evidence

> (E) […]The Trial Chamber shall decide, after hearing the parties, whether to admit the statement or transcript in whole or in part and whether to require the witness to appear for cross-examination.

Recalling the Galic[45] Decision, the Chamber finds that statements sought to be admitted under Rule 92 bis must also comply with the requirements of relevance and probative value required by Rule 89 (C).

32. The Chamber notes, that the Defence requests it to admit only parts of the written statement of Witness JAMI: the Defence seeks to exclude those parts where the Witness mentions the lack of authority of the civil leaders when they were faced with the atrocities committed by the Interahamwe. Accordingly, the Chamber shall consider only those portions of the statement sought to be admitted.[46]

33. The Chamber recalls that the threshold requirement for evidence to be admitted under Rule 92 bis are those found in sub-Rule (A) – whether that evidence goes to proof of a matter other than the acts and conduct of the accused as charged in the indictment.[47]

34. After a careful perusal of the statement sought to be admitted, the Chamber notes that, not only does it concern the conduct of the Accused Nsabimana when he allegedly assisted in the evacuation of children during the events of 1994 it also includes conduct of other co-Accused persons and specifically mentions the conduct of the Accused Kanyabashi during the same event. This statement also concerns the aid the Accused Nsabimana allegedly gave to the witness and other refugees while they were at the prefectural office. In the Chamber's opinion, the statement goes to prove the acts and conduct of the Accused and thereby to refute allegations laid against him particularly those found at Paragraph 6.60 of the Indictment, which essentially alleges that the Accused knew of the massacres and yet took no steps to assist the refugees.[48] The Chamber thus finds that the portions sought to be admitted fail to meet the threshold requirement of Rule 92 bis (A).

35. Pursuant to Rules 92 bis (A) (ii) (c) and (E), outlined above, the Chamber is of the view that the party seeking to produce a witness' statement in lieu of his oral testimony must satisfy it that there is no other way of admitting the witness' evidence, which is relevant and has probative value, except by way of Rule 92 bis. In the Chamber's opinion, the said party must provide the Chamber with compelling reasons why said witness should not be cross-examined, if that is its request.

36. The Chamber notes that the Defence not only requests that the statement be admitted under Rule 92 bis, it also requests that Witness JAMI not be cross-examined because; (1) his hierarchy does not allow him to give testimony on the events of 1994; and (2) the statement is so complete that it does not require cross-examination.

37. On the basis of the provisions of Rule 90 (A), which provides that witnesses should be heard directly by the Chamber, the Chamber finds that the Defence has not demonstrated the reasons why Witness JAMI's hierarchy, would prevent him from testifying. Furthermore, the Chamber is not convinced that the Defence has considered all the available avenues provided under the Rules and in particular those under Rule 75 which would enable further protection of a witness and thus facilitate the oral testimony of a protected witness, such as Witness JAMI.

38. The Chamber underscores that cross-examination is a fundamental right enshrined under Article 20 (4) (e) of the Statute, whose purpose is to inter alia test the credibility of the witness. On this basis, the Defence's submission that Witness JAMI's statement is complete in and of itself such that it does not require cross-examination would infringe upon the other Parties' fundamental rights to confront the witness in a bid to challenge his credibility or to present their cases, pursuant to Rule 90 (G).

[48] Para. 6.60 of the Indictment states: Knowing that massacres of the civilian population were being committed, political and military authorities, including Sylvain Nsabimana and Alphonse Nteziryayo took no measures to stop them. On the contrary, they refused to intervene to control and appeal to the population as long as a cease-fire had not been declared. This categorical refusal was communicated to the Special Rapporteur via the Chief of Staff of Rwandan Army, Major-General Augustin Bizimungu.

39. Accordingly, the Chamber denies the Defence request to admit any portion of the statement of Witness JAMI and therefore dismisses the Motion in its entirety.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL

DISMISSES the Motion in its entirety.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

NOW DECIDES the matter, pursuant to Rule 73 (A), on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties.

Introduction

In its Decision of 5 September 2006, the Chamber ordered the Defence for Nsabimana to specifically mention by name or by position, the 'MRND dignitaries' mentioned by Witness DEDE in his supplementary will-say of 29 August 2006. Additionally, if those 'MRND dignitaries' include Accused before the Chamber, the Defence is ordered to name the said Accused. Subsequently, the Defence of Nsabimana filed an additional information on 7 September 2006 in which it indicated that the "MRND dignitaries" referred to by Witness DEDE are, among others, Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and President Theodore Sindikubwabo. On 8 September 2006, the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko filed a motion in connection to the additional information mentioned above and which is the subject of the instant Decision.

Submissions of the Parties

Defence for Nyiramasuhuko

1. The Defence moves the Chamber to prohibit Witness DEDE from testifying on facts related to the Accused Pauline Nyiramasuhuko or subsidiarily, to order the Defence for Nsabimana to disclose further information in this regard.

2. The Defence submits that the additional information concerning the fact that Pauline Nyiramasuhuko is among the "MRND dignitaries" lacks precision and prevents it from conducting an effective cross-examination of Witness DEDE. The Defence alleges that the following information is lacking: When and where did Witness DEDE purportedly see Pauline Nyiramasuhuko moving about in Butare town under escort? Who was Pauline Nyiramasuhuko's escort? Was Pauline Nyiramasuhuko accompanied and if so by whom? How was Pauline Nyiramasuhuko moving about? Was she in a vehicle? If so which type?

Prosecution

3. The Prosecution prays the Chamber to deny the Motion given that Nyiramasuhuko will have sufficient time to prepare the cross-examination of Witness DEDE on the basis of existing disclosure. However, the Prosecution asserts that it rests with the Chamber to assess if the additional information complies with its earlier Decision or otherwise.

Defence for Nsabimana

4. The Defence submits that the additional information did comply with the Decision of 5 September 2006 and the further information sought by the Defence for Nyiramasuhuko is a matter for cross-examination. Moreover, the Defence indicates that when the Accused Nyiramasuhuko testified on her own behalf, she indicated that, between April and July 1994, she was present in Butare many times.

Nyiramasuhuko's Reply

5. The Defence submits that Witness DEDE's will-say upon which the Chamber relied to grant the request for addition to Nsabimana's list of witnesses did not refer to "MRND dignitaries" nor to the Accused Nyiramasuhuko herself and any subsequent will-say and/or additional information should not do so, either. According to the Defence, no cross-examining party be allowed to raise those issues during the expected testimony of Witness DEDE.

6. Finally, the Defence stresses that the supplementary will-say and/or additional information regarding Witness DEDE should be in connection with what is set out in the Decision of 17 August 2006 granting his addition as a Defence Witness for Nsabimana.

Having deliberated

7. The Chamber recalls that since the sole purpose of the will-say statement is to enable the other party or the other parties to prepare and to raise issues, it must be clear enough to cover the scope of the proposed testimony of the witness. Accordingly, will-say statements must be full and comprehensive, not in the sense of giving all the details, but at least laying out the scope of what the witness is expected to cover in clear terms.[1]

8. The Chamber sees no reason to depart from this standard and notes that the disclosure made thus far in connection with Witness DEDE's expected testimony meets the requirements as enunciated above, allowing any other party to conduct an effective cross-examination of that witness. The Chamber therefore denies the Motion in its entirety.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL,

DENIES the Motion.

CONSIDERING that pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules, the Motion will be decided on the basis of the written briefs only, as filed by the Parties.

Submissions of the Parties

THE DEFENCE

1. The Defence moves under Rule 73 (B) for certification to appeal the Impugned Decision.

The issues involved significantly affect the fairness of the trial and its expeditiousness

2. Defence submits that a large amount of evidence admitted against the Accused is evidence for which the Accused has not been charged with. If this evidence were to be expunged from the record, the Accused would not need to bring evidence to counter it and this will significantly affect the fairness and expeditiousness of the trial.

3. Defence submits that the expression "Some of the matters raised may be considered at a later stage of the proceedings" used at para. 25 of the Impugned Decision renders the whole Decision vague and ambiguous regarding which of the matters the Defence ought to respond to when preparing its defence.[1] The Defence argues that it is not in the interests of justice for the Chamber to delay its decision to reject evidence which it knows was admitted contrary to the jurisprudence of the Tribunal.[2]

The issues involved significantly affect the conduct of the proceedings

4. The Defence makes reference to the Chamber's Decision of 18 March 2004 and argues that if the Chamber admits so much evidence which is outside of the scope of the indictment, it could unjustly condemn the Accused on the basis of this evidence, and therefore significantly affect the outcome of the trial.[3] For this reason, if the Chamber were to rule this evidence inadmissible at this stage of the proceedings, the Defence case would be simplified.

An immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings

5. The Defence submits that an immediate resolution of the matter will materially advance the proceedings for the following reasons: (1) The Defence will need less preparation and presentation time; (2) The Prosecution's task will also be reduced; and (3) The Chamber will not be required to analyze evidence which is outside of the Indictment.[4]

THE PROSECUTION

6. The Prosecution notes the provisions of Rule 73 (B) and submits that the standard of proof that is required to warrant certification to appeal a Decision is very high,[5] so as to ensure finality of trials.

[2] Para. 17 of the Motion

ICTR-97-21-T, (TC) Decision on Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko's Motions for Certification to Appeal the "Decision on Defence Urgent Motion to Declare Parts of the Evidence of Witnesses RV and QBZ Inadmissible," of 18 March 2004 (the Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko Decision of 18 March 2004") at para. 25
[4] Paras. 23 – 29 of the Motion
[5] The Rule provides that certification may be granted if the decision involve an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial.

7. The Prosecution, making reference to the jurisprudence of the Tribunal,[6] argues that none of the grounds proffered by the Defence are sufficient to move the Chamber to grant certification of the Impugned Decision. It argues that a grant of the Motion would lead to a delay of the proceedings.

8. The Prosecution argues that the Defence merely repeats its arguments made in the motion which gave rise to the Impugned Decision and thus attempts to re-litigate the issues. In any case, the Prosecution objects to the Defence contention that the Impugned Decision is vague and ambiguous and rather argues that the Chamber is consistent in its jurisprudence that admissibility of evidence and the weight to be attached to it are two separate issues. The Prosecution argues that the Chamber's practice cannot raise an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial.

9. Regarding the Defence argument that the evidence admitted is outside the scope of the indictment, the Prosecution recalls the provisions of Rule 93 which allows the admission of evidence of a consistent pattern of conduct relevant to serious violations of international humanitarian law in the interests of justice and the jurisprudence of the Tribunal.

10. The Prosecution recalls the Appeals Chamber Decision of 4 October 2004 in Nyiramasuhuko[7] and argues that the admissibility of evidence is within the sole precinct of the Trial Chamber and that issues of admissibility are not fit for certification. It argues that the Defence is in fact requesting the Appeals Chamber to intervene in a matter which is at the discretion of the Trial Chamber, and thus in the absence of exceptional circumstances and clear reasons indicating that a discretion was wrongly exercised or that the Trial Chamber did not consider a material fact, the Appeals Chamber would not usually determine issues touching upon the exercise of judicial discretion by the Trial Chamber.

THE DEFENCE REPLY

11. The Defence reiterates its submissions and denies the Prosecution's allegations that the Motion is an attempt to re-litigate the Defence's earlier Motion which gave rise to the Impugned Decision.

12. The Defence opposes the Prosecution's reliance on the Appeals Chamber Decision of 4 October 2004 in Nyiramasuhuko[8] arguing that there is a difference between admissibility of witness testimonies and admissibility of other pieces of evidence. The Defence recalls that, in the Nyiramasuhuko Decision of 18 March 2004, certification to appeal the Chamber's Decision on the admissibility of the testimonies of QBZ and RV was granted because the Chamber was of the view that the issue of admissibility of testimonies of Prosecution Witnesses significantly affect the outcome of the trial against the accused.

13. The Chamber recalls Rule 73 (B), which stipulates:

> Decisions rendered on such motions are without interlocutory appeal save with certification by the Trial Chamber, which may grant such certification if the Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and for which, in the opinion of the Trial Chamber, an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings.

14. The Chamber, recalling its jurisprudence[9] notes that decisions rendered under Rule 73 motions are without interlocutory appeal, except on the Chamber's discretion for the very limited circumstances stipulated in Rule 73 (B). The Chamber may grant certification to appeal if both conditions of Rule 73 (B) are satisfied.[10] Both of these conditions require a specific demonstration, and are not met through a general reference to the submissions on which the Impugned Decision was rendered.

15. Having reviewed the submissions of the Parties, the Chamber is of the opinion that in its Motion, the Defence has generally revisited the thrust of its previous arguments which led to the Impugned Decision rather than demonstrating the conditions required for the Chamber to grant certification to appeal the Impugned Decision.

16. Moreover, the Chamber recalls the Appeals Chamber opinion[11] and underscores that matters concerning admissibility of evidence are the responsibility of the Trial Chamber, as triers of facts, and therefore the Appeals Chamber may not assume this responsibility.

17. The Chamber finds therefore that the Defence has failed to satisfy the criteria for the grant of certification under Rule 73 (B) and denies the Motion accordingly

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL,

DENIES the Motion.

Second, the applicant has the burden of convincing the Chamber that an "immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings."

473. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively) is seized of an interlocutory appeal filed by Arsène Shalom Ntahobali on 8 June 2006 ("Interlocutory Appeal").[1] The Defence for Mr. Ntahobali requests that the Appeals Chamber reverse the Trial Chamber's Decision rendered on 15 May 2006 ("Impugned Decision"), which allowed the Defence for the co-accused Mr. Kanyabashi to cross-examine Mr. Ntahobali using previous statements of Mr. Ntahobali made to Prosecution investigators in July 1997 ("Previous Statements").[2] The Defence for Mr. Ntahobali requests that the Appeals Chamber find the Previous Statements inadmissible or alternatively order the Trial Chamber to conduct a voir dire procedure to determine whether they were freely and voluntarily provided to the Prosecution investigators.[3] The Prosecution and the Defence for Mr. Kanyabashi filed their responses to the Interlocutory Appeal on 16 and 19 June 2006 respectively.[4] Contrary to the submissions of the Defence for Mr. Ntahobali,[5] both responses were timely filed pursuant to the Practice Direction on Procedure for the Filing of Written Submissions in Appeal Proceedings Before the Tribunal ("Practice Direction").[6]

Background

474. During the cross-examination of Mr. Ntahobali, the Defence for Mr. Kanyabashi sought to challenge the credibility of Mr. Ntahobali using the Previous Statements.[7] The Defence for Mr. Ntahobali objected to the admissibility of the Previous Statements, arguing that they were not freely and voluntarily given[8] and that a voir dire procedure should be held in order to assess whether the Previous Statements had been obtained in accordance with the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal ("Rules").[9]

475. In the Impugned Decision, the Trial Chamber found the Previous Statements admissible through a "perusal of the transcripts of [the] interviews as well as through the normal procedure of admissibility of evidence provided under Rule 89 (C), and the conditions laid out in Rules 89 (D) and 95" on the basis that they fully complied with the requirements of Articles 18 and 20 of the Statute of the Tribunal ("Statute") and Rules 42, 43 and 63 of the Rules.[10] The Trial Chamber limited the admission of the Previous Statements to "cross-examining Ntahobali on issues relating to his credibility" and ruled that the actual admission of each Previous Statement into evidence would be done after the cross-examination of Mr. Ntahobali by each party.[11] In addition, the Trial Chamber granted "any other co-Accused's Motion as well as the Prosecution's Motion to cross-examine the Accused Ntahobali using his interviews to challenge his credibility".[12] The Trial Chamber denied the request of the Defence for Mr. Ntahobali to hold a voir dire procedure on the basis that it was not the only method by which the Previous Statements could be assessed for their compliance with the Rules and the Statute.[13] The Defence for Mr. Ntahobali sought leave to appeal the Impugned Decision, which the Trial Chamber granted in its Decision on Certification of 1 June 2006.[14]

Arguments of the Parties

476. The Defence for Mr. Ntahobali requests the Appeals Chamber to rule that the Trial Chamber erred in finding the Previous Statements admissible.[15] It argues that the Previous Statements, including signed documents by Mr. Ntahobali stating that he understood his rights under Rules 42 and 43 of the Rules, are contrary to his assertions during trial that the Previous Statements were not free and voluntary.[16] Upon that allegation, the Defence for Mr. Ntahobali submits that the burden was on the Prosecution to prove the free and voluntary nature of the Previous Statements beyond reasonable doubt, and it failed to do so.[17] The Defence for Mr. Ntahobali also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in not considering the alleged inducements or threats to give the Previous Statements on the basis that they occurred "prior to the Accused's 1997 interviews and his arrest".[18] In the alternative, it requests that the Appeals Chamber find the procedure adopted by the Trial Chamber in assessing the admissibility of the Previous Statements erroneous and order the Trial Chamber to conduct a voir dire procedure to properly determine admissibility.[19]

477. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber was correct in concluding that it was not obliged to conduct a voir dire[20] and exercised its discretion reasonably in assessing the admissibility of the Previous Statements.[21] It submits that there is no evidence of coercion or inducements attributable to the Prosecution investigators[22] and argues that it is not relevant for the Trial Chamber to consider any subjective motivations held by Mr. Ntahobali.[23]

478. The Defence for Mr. Kanyabashi responds that the Trial Chamber correctly applied objective criteria in deciding there was nothing to suggest Mr. Ntahobali provided the Previous Statements as a result of inducements.[24] According to the Defence for Mr. Kanyabashi, Mr. Ntahobali voluntarily surrendered himself to representatives of the Tribunal upon his own assumption that this would secure his father's release from detention by national authorities.[25] The Defence for Mr. Kanyabashi also objects to the argument of Mr. Ntahobali that it was necessary for the Trial Chamber to hold a voir dire[26] and argues that the Trial Chamber's "perusal" assessment of the Previous Statements was sufficient.[27]

479. In its reply to the Prosecution, the Defence of Mr. Ntahobali argues that it was not possible for Mr. Ntahobali to give evidence on the veracity of the Previous Statements whilst he was on the stand, as the Previous Statements were only raised during cross-examination and thus it was not open to him to reopen his examination-in-chief to offer evidence on the matter.[28]

480. In its reply to the Defence for Mr. Kanyabashi, the Defence for Mr. Ntahobali further submits that a voir dire procedure was necessary to bring forth further evidence on the veracity of the Previous Statements as a perusal of the transcripts of the relevant interviews would not necessarily provide sufficient indication if threats were indeed made.[29]

Discussion

481. This Interlocutory Appeal involves two issues: (i) whether the Trial Chamber erred in determining the admissibility of the Previous Statements without holding a voir dire procedure; and if the answer to this question is in the negative, (ii) whether the Trial Chamber erred in ruling that the portions of the Previous Statements used in cross-examination to test Mr. Ntahobali's credibility were admissible as evidence. While the Interlocutory Appeal raises these two issues, they will not be addressed separately as they are inextricably linked: the Defence for Mr. Ntahobali argues that a voir dire was necessary because there were sufficient indicia to show that the Previous Statements were made by him upon impermissible inducements and threats, which would also render the Previous Statements inadmissible.

482. Decisions relating to the admissibility of evidence and the general conduct of proceedings largely fall within the discretion of the Trial Chamber.[30] An interlocutory appeal challenging the discretion of the Trial Chamber is not a hearing de novo.[31] The standard of review on interlocutory appeal for such discretionary matters is therefore not whether the Appeals Chamber agrees with the Trial Chamber's conclusion, but whether the Trial Chamber reasonably exercised its discretion in reaching its decision.[32] The Appeals Chamber affirms that:

> a Trial Chamber's exercise of discretion will be overturned if the challenged decision was (1) based on an incorrect interpretation of governing law; (2) based on a patently incorrect conclusion of fact; or (3) so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of the Trial Chamber's discretion. Absent an error of law or a clearly erroneous factual finding, then, the scope of appellate review is quite limited…[33]

483. During cross-examination of Mr. Ntahobali by Defence Counsel for Mr. Kanyabashi, the latter distributed Mr. Ntahobali's Previous Statements to the parties, indicating that he intended to use them in further cross-examination of Mr. Ntahobali.[34] In response to a query raised by Mr. Ntahobali from the witness box,[35] the Trial Chamber gave the parties the opportunity to present submissions on whether there was sufficient basis to the allegation that the Previous Statements were in violation of the Rules such as to require a voir dire procedure.[36]

484. The Defence for Mr. Ntahobali argues that this procedure adopted by the Trial Chamber was impermissibly informal[37] since prior statements of an accused should be subject to an inquiry conducted "in accordance with pre-established rules of law which are known to the parties"[38] and not by merely requiring the parties to indicate their views on whether the Rules were complied with in taking the Previous Statements.[39] The Defence for Mr. Ntahobali has not identified any error in the procedure adopted by the Trial Chamber. The voir dire procedure originates from the common law and does not have a strictly defined process in this Tribunal.[40] There are no provisions in the Rules which direct Trial Chambers to adopt a formal procedure for determining whether they should conduct a voir dire. Instead, Rule 89 (B) of the Rules provides that reference may be made to evidentiary rules "which will best favour a fair determination of the matter". This discretion can extend to the conduct of a voir dire procedure when it is determined appropriate by the Trial Chamber.[41] The procedure conducted by the Trial Chamber permitted the parties to make submissions as to whether the Prosecution and Co-Accused could use the Previous Statements to impeach Mr. Ntahobali. The Trial Chamber considered the submissions of the parties on whether it was necessary to grant the request for a voir dire procedure by the Defence of Mr. Ntahobali, and after finding that it was not necessary, the Trial Chamber determined the admissibility of the Previous Statements on the basis of the submissions made by the parties. At several stages during the hearing[42] the Trial Chamber affirmed that this was the procedure to be followed, in particular when it stated:

> We would like to hear the challenge, the basis of the challenge [to the admissibility of the Previous Statements]. And in the process, certainly, the Trial Chamber will examine the [admissibility] issue, including whether to determine the issue as presently presented, or whether there would be any need for voir – for trial within a trial, voir dire.[43]

13. Therefore, the parties were informed of the procedure the Trial Chamber was adopting and made submissions pursuant to this procedure.[44] Indeed, the procedure adopted by the Trial Chamber, while characterised as one adopted to determine whether a voir dire procedure was necessary, was very similar to a voir dire. The Trial Chamber heard the parties on the circumstances surrounding the taking of the Previous Statements, admitting a written affidavit from Mr. Ntahobali into evidence on that issue, and decided that no further evidence was required to determine whether the Previous Statements were in accordance with the Rules. The Appeals Chamber does not see any abuse of the Trial Chamber's discretion in the way that it chose to proceed.

14. The Defence for Mr. Ntahobali further asserts that if it were not for the initiative of the Defence for Mr. Ntahobali, the Trial Chamber "would have proceeded" without his opinion on the matter.[45] This argument is mere speculation. There was no prejudice to Mr. Ntahobali regarding the [40] As an example of the flexibility with which the voir dire procedure is utilised at trial, voir dire examinations have previously been deferred to the cross-examination stage in determining a Witness's qualification as an Expert Witness: Prosecutor v. Muvunyi, Case N°ICTR-2000-55A-T, Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Admission of Testimony of Expert Witness Rule 92 bis of the Rules, 24 March 2005, para. 27. presentation of his opinion to the Trial Chamber on this matter as he was given an opportunity to present submissions in support of his objection, following which he presented a written affidavit[46] and confirmed in the witness box that he had nothing to add to these submissions.[47]

15. The Defence for Mr. Ntahobali also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law in finding that the conduct of a voir dire is confined to jury trials.[48] The Appeals Chamber does not consider it necessary to address this argument on its merits as the Trial Chamber did not base its decision upon this observation in the Impugned Decision. Rather, it merely acknowledged the common law origins of the procedure in jury trials.[49]

16. The Defence for Mr. Ntahobali further argues that the Trial Chamber erred by distinguishing the Previous Statements (as interviews by the Prosecution investigators) from a confession, in finding that a voir dire procedure is inappropriate in this case.[50] The Appeals Chamber notes that a confession does indeed require additional consideration under the Rules as confessions are specially addressed under Rule 92 of the Rules. However, this provision requires the confession to be conducted in strict compliance with Rule 63 of the Rules. Therefore the distinction between confessions and interviews of the accused is not an appropriate basis for deciding when to conduct a voir dire because both forms of statements require the same consideration under Rule 63. However, contrary to submissions of the Defence for Mr. Ntahobali, the Trial Chamber did not merely rely upon such a distinction in deciding not to conduct a voir dire procedure as the Trial Chamber additionally found that the "circumstances of the case" did not require further investigation.[51]

17. Finally, the Defence for Mr. Ntahobali submits that where there is prima facie proof of inducements or threats made to an accused during an interview by representatives of the Prosecution, it should be mandatory to conduct a voir dire.[52] In support of this argument, the Defence for Mr. Ntahobali refers to Rule 95.[53] Rule 95 provides for the exclusion of evidence which is "obtained by methods which cast substantial doubt on its reliability or if its admission is antithetical to, and would seriously damage, the integrity of the proceedings" (emphasis added). The Defence for Mr. Ntahobali alleges that he received inducements and threats from representatives of the Prosecution before the 1997 interviews were conducted. These claims, if substantiated, could fall within the terms of Rule 95.[54] The Trial Chamber considered these allegations and heard the parties' submissions. It concluded, however, that there was nothing to suggest that the interviews had been conducted in an improper manner and thus there was no need for further evidence on the matter – Mr. Ntahobali was informed of his rights and the proceedings contained no evidence of oppressive questioning by the Prosecution investigators.[55] The trial record confirms that this was a reasonable conclusion[56] and the submissions in this Interlocutory Appeal have not demonstrated how this aspect of the Impugned Decision was based upon an incorrect interpretation of the governing law or resulted in a patently incorrect conclusion of the factual circumstances of the interview.

[56] English translation of the transcripts from Mr. Ntahobali's interviews with representatives of the Prosecution, 24 July 1997, pp. 2-10; 26 July 1997. For example, the Defence for Mr. Ntahobali alleged before the Trial Chamber that Mr. Ntahobali was handcuffed whilst sleeping (Impugned Decision, para. 43) whereas the Previous Statements reveal that this was discussed in the initial interviews, and it was explained that this was the national procedure in Kenya which the Tribunal representatives had no authority over (K0153-3798, Tape 1, Side A). The Trial Chamber concluded that this was not a violation of the rights of the Accused by the Prosecutor, see Prosecutor v. Delalić et al., Case N°IT-96-21-T, Decision on Mucić's Motion for the Exclusion of Evidence, 2 September 1997, para. 40.

18. As the above analysis demonstrates, it has not been shown in this Interlocutory Appeal that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Previous Statements were not obtained in a manner violating any provision of the Rules or of the Statute. Given the broad discretion afforded to Trial Chambers in evidentiary matters, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the procedure employed by the Trial Chamber to determine the admissibility of the Previous Statements and in its decision to admit portions of the Previous Statements into evidence for the purpose of testing Mr. Ntahobali's credibility during cross-examination.

Disposition

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge William H. Sekule, Presiding, Judge Arlette Ramaroson and Judge Solomy B. Bossa (the "Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of the "Prosecutor's Motion to Unseal the Transcripts of Witness WDUSA (the "Motion"); filed on 9 October 2006.

HAVING RECEIVED the "Réponse de Arsène Shalom Ntahobali à la requête du Procureur intitulée 'Prosecutor's motion to unseal the transcripts of Witness WDUSA ("Ntahobali's Response") filed on 12 October 2006;

CONSIDERING the "Prosecutor's Reply to Ntahobali's Response to the Prosecutor's Motion to Unseal Transcripts of Witness WDUSA" ("Prosecution's Reply") filed on 16 October 2006;

NOW DECIDES the Motion, pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the"Rules"), on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties.

Introduction

1. Witness WDUSA is a Defence protected witness. The protection he enjoys was ordered pursuant to the Chamber's decision of 15 February 2000 regarding Ntahobali's witnesses. It entails among others, that his identity be concealed from the press and the public. Witness WDUSA testified on 3 and 4 April 2006. Part of his evidence was given in closed session to avoid the disclosure of his identity.

2. On 26 September 2006, the Prosecution filed an ex-parte Motion seeking leave from the Chamber to disclose to the Danish authorities the transcripts and other relevant documents pertaining to the testimony of Witness WDUSA in open and closed session.[1] On 9 October 2006, the Chamber instructed the Prosecution to refile the Motion inter partes, should it wish to pursue this matter.[2] The same day, the Prosecution refiled the Motion inter partes.[3]

The Prosecution

3. The Prosecution seeks a variance order of the witness protection Decision of 21 April 2001 regarding Ntahobali's witnesses, to be authorised to disclose the open and closed session transcripts of Witness WDUSA's testimony of 3 and 4 April 2006[4] and exhibit D-392, containing the witness's identifying information, to the Danish Special International Crimes Office (Statsadvokaten Forsverlige Internationale Straffesager).[5]

4. The Prosecution submits that under Rules 54, 73, 75 and 66 (C), the Chamber has the authority to vary its own witness protection order and issue the order sought for disclosure. The Prosecution further argues that the sharing of information between the Tribunal and national authorities is consistent with Articles 15 and 28 of the Statute and Security Council Resolution 1503.[6]

5. The Prosecution also submits that Witness WDUSA's written consent annexed to the Motion demonstrates that the disclosure of the witness's own testimony can have no negative repercussions for his protection.[7]

6. Further, the Prosecution submits that the disclosure of the transcripts to the Danish Special International Crimes Office will not prejudice Witness WDUSA or any other witnesses, given the guarantees that exist under Danish law and the assurances of the Danish Prosecutor regarding a previous request that: "[I]f the witness statement (transcript) needs to be produced in court the prosecution will request (under Section 729a) a closed session and the court may… order non-disclosure to the public of any records identifying a witness."[8]

Ntahobali's Response

7. The Defence opposes the Motion, arguing that the consent form allegedly signed by Witness WDUSA is the only element supporting the disclosure, and it is not sufficient, and that, in the present case, it is hazardous to disclose the transcripts of WDUSA's testimony to the Danish authorities, as neither the Statute nor the Rules prescribe the possibility of disclosing testimonies heard in closed session before the Tribunal to parties outside the Tribunal.[9]

8. The Defence requests that the witness' consent a posteriori and while in detention, be subjected to further verification. Moreover, the Defence argues that there is no reference in the Motion to the fundamental rights of a suspect or an accused in Denmark.

9. The Defence also questions the manner in which the Danish authorities would be bound by the protective orders issued by the Chamber.

Prosecution's Reply

10. The Prosecution submits that its Motion also relied on Rules 54 and 73, which the Defence failed to acknowledge, and which both provide a sufficient basis for granting the Motion.[10] The Prosecution further submits that the sharing of information between the Tribunal and national authorities is consistent with the completion strategy envisaged in Security Council Resolutions 1503 and 1534 and, most recently, in the President's report to the General Assembly on 9 October 2006.[11]

11. The Prosecution also submits that the signature on the signed consent form of Witness WDUSA is identical to that of exhibit D-392 signed by the witness. In the absence of any evidence, the Defence assertion that the witness may have been subjected to threats, promises or violations of his rights, is mere speculation.[12]

Deliberations

12. The Chamber recalls that pursuant to Rule 78, "all proceedings before a Trial Chamber, other than deliberations of the Chamber, shall be held in public, unless otherwise provided" and that as such, the transcripts of the testimony of Witness WDUSA heard in open session are accessible to the public without further order by the Chamber.

13. The Chamber also recalls that the Defence had asked for protective measures for Witness WDUSA to safeguard his privacy and safety, and which included the protection of identifying materials from the public's knowledge. Further, parts of the testimony of Witness WDUSA were heard in closed session under Rule 79 (A) (ii) for reasons of safety, security or non-disclosure of identity of a protected witness, pursuant to Rule 75.[13]

14. However, the Chamber notes that the Danish authorities are aware of the identity of Witness WDUSA and of the fact that he has testified before the Tribunal. Moreover, the Chamber notes and accepts that Witness WDUSA has given his written consent for his prior statements to be disclosed to the Danish Special International Crimes Office. In the absence of any cogent element indicating the contrary, the Chamber finds the Defence request for the Chamber to inquire further into the consent of the witness to be speculative.

15. The Chamber recognises the uniqueness of the Motion, as disclosure of the transcripts of the testimony of a witness is requested for by Danish authorities; who are not party to any proceedings before the Tribunal. The Chamber considers that the guiding principles of state cooperation under Article 28 (1) of the Statute also apply to requests for cooperation or judicial assistance from States to the Tribunal, in their investigation or prosecution of persons accused of committing serious violations of international humanitarian law. Moreover, the Chamber notes that the Danish authorities' investigation of Witness WDUSA for crimes committed in Rwanda in 1994 is in line with the principles of state cooperation envisaged by the completion strategy in Security Council Resolutions 1503 and 1534.

16. Accordingly, having considered that there is no prejudice to the witness, the Chamber is of the view that it is in the overall interest of justice to vary its order for protective measures for Witness WDUSA, pursuant to Rule 75 (A). The Chamber directs the Registry to provide copies of the closed session transcripts of the witness and of exhibit D-392 for the purpose of the proceedings before the Danish Special International Crimes Office. The Chamber further orders that the protective measures granted to Witness WDUSA shall continue to have effect mutatis mutandis in any proceedings before the Danish authorities unless and until they are rescinded, varied, or augmented in accordance with the procedure set out in Rule 75.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL

DIRECTS the Registry to provide the Prosecution with the closed session transcripts of Witness WDUSA's testimony of 3 and 4 April 2006, together with exhibit D-392, for the purpose of disclosure of the same to the Danish Special International Crimes Office. (Statsadvokaten forsverlige Internationale straffesager).

With regard to the testimony of Witness WDUSA heard in open session, the Chamber observes that this is accessible to the public without further order of the Chamber.

ORDERS that the protective measures granted to Witness WDUSA shall continue to have effect mutatis mutandis in any proceedings before the Danish authorities.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

NOW DECIDES the Motion, pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules, on the basis of the written submissions of the Parties.

Defence for Ndayambaje

1. On 1 September 2006, the Chamber denied the Defence for Elie Ndayambaje's Motion requesting the exclusion of thirteen prosecution witnesses' testimonies on account of lack of relevance and/or defect in the indictment, stressing that "some of the matters raised may be considered at a later stage of the proceedings".[1] Ndayambaje moved the Chamber for certification to appeal this decision, and the Chamber denied that motion on 5 October 2005, finding that the Defence had "generally revisited the thrust of its previous arguments which led to the Impugned Decision rather than demonstrating the conditions required for the Chamber to grant certification to appeal".[2]

2. The Defence now requests the Chamber to reconsider both earlier decisions in light of an Appeals Chamber decision rendered on 18 September 2006 in the Bagosora et al. case, also regarding the exclusion of evidence.[3] According to the Defence, the Appeals Chamber's ruling is irreconcilable with the Chamber's decisions in the instant proceedings and therefore, constitutes a valid basis for their reconsideration.[4] The Defence submits that the Appeals Chamber, in contrast with the Decision on Exclusion, held that objections regarding the lack of notice may be raised at any time during the trial stage.[5] Further, the Appeals Chamber found that Trial Chamber's decisions on the identification of legal principles applicable to the exercise of its discretion to admit evidence can be overturned, if an error of law has been committed.[6]

3. The Defence also submits that the Decision on Exclusion of evidence is ambiguous, inter alia, with respect to issues that would be considered at a later stage of the proceedings and the allegations pleaded in the Indictment to which the impugned evidence might be relevant.[7] Further, the Defence argues that the Chamber's decision puts the Defence in a difficult situation, given the Scheduling Order of 5 October 2006, which exhorts the Defence to significantly reduce the number of witnesses it intends to call.[8]

Prosecution's Response

4. The Prosecution submits that the Motion should be dismissed because it is inadmissible ab initio[9] and does not meet the threshold to move the Chamber to reconsider its decision, as there are no new facts, change in the law or other intervening circumstances.[10] Rather, the Motion constitutes an attempt to relitigate issues that have already been subject of a denial of certification to appeal.[11]

Deliberations

5. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber notes that on 27 October 2006, Counsel for the Defence seems to have applied by way of an electronic mail to CMS for an extension of time to reply to the Prosecution's Response. The Chamber observes that for a motion for extension of time to be admissible, the Defence should have addressed it to the Chamber not later than 25 October 2006, taking into account that the Prosecution filed its response on 20 October 2006 and that the Defence was allowed five days from the date of said response to file its reply. On the date of the Defence's letter to the Registry, there was therefore no time left to extend. The Chamber is of the opinion that Counsel for Ndayambaje acted without due diligence in this matter and considers that the issue of an extension of time does not arise.

6. With regard to the request for reconsideration, the Chamber notes that it has an inherent power to reconsider its own decisions in "particular circumstances". However, reconsideration is an exceptional measure[12] to be applied if new circumstances have unfolded after the relevant decision, and if unfairness has been caused to a party to the proceedings, due to an error.[13]

7. The Chamber has carefully considered the submissions of the Parties and the Appeals Chamber's Decision the Defence relies on. It is the Chamber's view that the Appeals Chamber's decision contains no new elements with regard to the Chamber's decision, but merely underscores the Appeals Chamber's interpretation of particular legal elements.[14] The Chamber is therefore of the view that the requirements for a reconsideration have not been met and dismisses the Motion.

8. The Chamber underscores that it is not in the interest of judicial economy to relitigate issues the Chamber has already decided on.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL

DENIES the Motion.

Conclusions des parties

La Défense

1. Le témoin à décharge WDUSA qui doit déposer sur l'alibi de l'accusé a été ajouté à la liste de témoins à décharge par une décision du 27 janvier 2006[2]. Suite à l'acceptation de cette adjonction à sa liste, la Défense fait valoir qu'il serait dans l'intérêt de la justice que le témoin WDUSA fasse sa déposition par voie de vidéoconférence depuis La Haye, conformément au paragraphe (D) de l'article 71 du Règlement.

2. S'appuyant sur les décisions du 8 octobre 2004[3] et du 20 décembre 2004[4] rendues en l'affaire Bagosora et consorts, la Défense fait valoir que le témoin WDUSA n'est pas en mesure de venir à Arusha pour faire sa déposition en raison d'une cardiochirurgie pratiquée en 2002. Cette année-là, le témoin WDUSA a été autorisé à faire sa déposition par voie de vidéoconférence depuis La Haye dans le procès dit de Cyangugu[5], et il ne peut toujours pas aujourd'hui faire de longs voyages.

3. La Défense soutient que la déposition du témoin WDUSA, cité à l'appui de l'alibi de l'accusé, est importante parce qu'il est le seul témoin non lié à celui-ci qui est censé déclarer s'être trouvé avec lui à Cyangugu pendant les événements de 1994. De plus, la Défense rappelle à la Chambre sa décision du 27 janvier 2006 dans laquelle l'importance de la déposition du témoin WDUSA a été examinée.

Le Procureur

4. Le Procureur s'oppose à la requête, au motif que les décisions rendues en l'affaire Bagosora et consorts sur lesquelles s'appuie la Défense sont différentes des circonstances de l'espèce : le témoin WDUSA n'est pas d'un âge avancé, aucune déclaration non caviardée du témoin n'a été communiquée au Procureur et il n'y a pas de rapport médical établissant que le témoin n'est pas en mesure de voyager pour des raisons médicales.

Réplique de la Défense

5. En ce qui concerne les allusions du Procureur au fait que le témoin WDUSA n'est pas d'un âge avancé, la Défense se réfère à la Décision du 20 décembre 2004 rendue en l'affaire Bagosora et consorts et à l'ordonnance du TPIY rendue en l'affaire Brdanin[6] et fait valoir que la Chambre n'a pas besoin de prendre l'âge du témoin en considération, mais doit plutôt rechercher si le témoin est matériellement dans l'impossibilité de voyager pour des raisons de santé.

6. En ce qui concerne la production d'un rapport médical à l'appui de sa requête, la Défense soutient qu'elle pensait qu'il ne serait pas nécessaire de fournir un autre certificat en l'espèce puisqu'il en avait déjà été versé un au dossier lorsque le témoin WDUSA avait déposé dans le procès dit de Cyangugu. Néanmoins, la Défense produit un rapport médical daté du 2 février 2006 joint en annexe à sa réplique.

> « [S]i le recueil de dépositions par lien vidéo a été autorisé dans d'autres affaires, il ne l'a été que sous l'empire de la nécessité absolue, le Tribunal ayant fréquemment rappelé sa préférence marquée pour une comparution dans le prétoire »[8].

8. Toutefois, la Chambre rappelle qu'elle a le pouvoir discrétionnaire d'autoriser l'audition d'un témoin par voie de vidéoconférence à la place de sa comparution en personne si c'est dans l'intérêt de la justice, après avoir apprécié (i) l'importance du témoignage, (ii) l'incapacité du témoin à se présenter à l'audience ou sa réticence à le faire, (iii) la validité de la raison invoquée à l'appui de cette incapacité et de cette réticence. La partie qui demande que la déposition d'un témoin soit recueillie par voie de vidéoconférence supporte la charge de la preuve[9].

10. En ce qui concerne les deuxième et troisième critères, la Chambre conclut qu'à la lumière du rapport médical daté du 2 février 2006, la Défense a prouvé que le témoin WDUSA est, pour des raisons médicales, dans l'incapacité de se rendre à Arusha pour faire sa déposition[11].

11. Selon la Chambre, la Défense a démontré l'existence de circonstances exceptionnelles justifiant que le témoin WDUSA dépose par voie de vidéoconférence à La Haye. Par ces motifs et dans l'intérêt de la justice, la Chambre fait droit à la requête de la Défense. Par conséquent, elle autorise le témoin WDUSA à déposer par voie de vidéoconférence à La Haye au lieu de comparaître en personne à Arusha.

12. Pour faciliter l'organisation du recueil d'une déposition par voie de vidéoconférence à La Haye, la Chambre, rappelant les instructions qu'elle a données pour que la présentation des moyens à décharge soit terminée au plus tard le 10 mars 2006, ordonne a la Défense de se mettre immédiatement en rapport avec le Greffe pour faciliter la procédure et la programmation de la déposition du témoin WDUSA.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

FAIT DROIT à la requête et ordonne que le témoin a décharge WDUSA fasse sa déposition par voie de vidéoconférence à La Haye au lieu de comparaître en personne à Arusha ;

ORDONNE au Greffe de prendre toutes les mesures nécessaires pour recueillir la déposition du témoin a décharge WDUSA par voie de vidéoconférence à La Haye ;

CONSTATE qu'il ressort de la lettre du 13 février 2006 adressée par le Procureur à la Défense de Nsabimana que celle-ci a déjà eu recours à l'article 66 (B) du Règlement, et que ce fait n'a pas été contesté.

STATUE sur la requête sur la base des conclusions écrites des parties, en vertu de l'article 73 (A) du Règlement.

Arguments des parties

Arguments de la Défense

1. La Défense demande à la Chambre de l'autoriser à faire appel de la décision contestée. Selon elle, la Chambre s'est trompée en fait et en droit à deux égards : premièrement dans l'évaluation de la charge qui incombait à la Défense[1], deuxièmement dans l'évaluation de la preuve présentée à l'appui de sa requête et celle des conséquences juridiques du statut du témoin NMBMP dans le cadre de la procédure qu'il a engagée devant la Commission d'immigration des Etats-Unis d'Amérique[2].

2. La Défense fait valoir que la déposition de NMBMP pourrait avoir une incidence sur l'issue du procès, puisque ce témoin doit en principe parler de l'alibi invoqué et récuser l'accusation de viol portée contre Ntahobali[3]. Elle ajoute que l'équité du procès serait sensiblement compromise si elle devait retirer NMBMP de sa liste de témoins parce que l'intéressée ne peut pas quitter son pays de résidence[4].

3. La Défense reproche à la Chambre d'avoir conclu à tort qu'elle n'avait pas établi que le témoin NMBMF était dans l'incapacité de quitter les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, alors qu'elle avait produit à l'appui de sa requête des documents supplémentaires qui rapportent la preuve de cette incapacité et n'ont pas été remis en question par la Chambre[5].

4. Selon elle, il ne fait aucun doute que le règlement immédiat de la question par la Chambre d'appel à ce stade du procès ferait concrètement progresser la procédure, puisqu'il permettrait d'éviter un débat fondé sur l'article 115 du Règlement en appel au cas où l'accusé serait condamné pour des faits dont le témoin NMBMP aurait pu contester l'exactitude en première instance[6].

Arguments du Procureur

5. Le Procureur relève qu'au lieu de concentrer son attention sur les conditions prévues par l'article 73 (B) du Règlement qui doivent être remplies pour que la Chambre procède à la certification, la Défense s'appesantit sur des considérations non pertinentes et tente de rouvrir les débats sur des questions que la Chambre a déjà tranchées dans la décision contestée[7]. À son avis, les arguments et les menaces implicites relatifs à l'article 115 du Règlement que contient la requête sont prématurés et n'ont aucune importance dans le cadre d'une requête en certification[8]. Le Procureur allègue que la Défense a essentiellement repris les arguments avancés dans sa requête tendant à faire autoriser le témoin NMBMP à déposer par voie de vidéoconférence, notamment ceux concernant le statut que les services d'immigration lui attribuent, alors que la Chambre avait déjà examiné et dûment pris en considération ces arguments[9]. Il ajoute que la requête traite trop longuement des moyens d'appel au lieu de s'intéresser aux conditions qui doivent être remplies pour que la certification soit accordée[10].

6. Selon lui, la Défense n'a pas établi en quoi la décision contestée touchait une question susceptible de compromettre sensiblement la rapidité du procès[11].

7. Qui plus est, elle n'a pas dûment expliqué pourquoi il y a lieu d'interjeter appel sur une question qui relève strictement du pouvoir souverain d'appréciation de la chambre[12].

8. Le Procureur fait observer que selon la Défense, il existe des procédures permettant aux personnes qui se trouvent dans des situations comparables à celle du témoin NMBMP, de quitter le pays concerné, mais souligne que la Défense n'a pas prouvé les avoir toutes épuisées[13]. De plus, il estime que la Défense fait plutôt des conjectures lorsqu'elle prétend que NMBMP pourrait ne pas être autorisée à retourner dans son pays de résidence si elle sollicitait et obtenait une advance parole (admission conditionnelle)[14].

9. D'après le Procureur, les arguments de la Défense ne suscitent pas de « véritables doutes quant à l'exactitude des principes juridiques en cause »[15]. Les principes invoqués se rapportent à la législation régissant l'immigration aux Etats-Unis d'Amérique que la Chambre n'est pas tenue de prendre en considération[16]. En conséquence, le règlement de la question par la Chambre d'appel pourrait ne pas concrètement faire progresser la procédure[17].

10. Le Procureur relève que loin d'avoir dénié à l'accusé le droit de citer le témoin NMBMP à l'appui de son alibi, la Chambre a tout simplement décidé que le témoin ne déposerait pas par voie de vidéoconférence[18]. Il. précise que la Défense a l'intention d'appeler d'autres témoins à la barre pour établir son alibi, notamment l'accusé lui-même, son épouse et le témoin NMBMP qui a déjà comparu[19].

Réplique de la Défense

11. Dans sa réplique, la Défense dit que la réponse produite par le Procureur le 14 mars 2006 est tardive et doit être rejetée. Selon elle, le délai de cinq jours dont le Procureur disposait pour déposer sa réponse a expiré le 13 mars 2006.

Après en avoir délibéré,

13. La Chambre rappelle les dispositions de l'article 73 (B) du Règlement qui se lisent comme suit:

> Les décisions concernant de telles requêtes ne sont pas susceptibles d'appel interlocutoire, à l'exclusion des cas où la Chambre de première instance a certifié l'appel après avoir vérifié que la décision touche une question susceptible de compromettre sensiblement l'équité et la rapidité du procès, ou son issue, et que son règlement immédiat par la Chambre d'appel pourrait concrètement faire progresser la procédure.

14. Elle relève que les décisions concernant des requêtes formées en vertu de l'article 73 ne sont pas susceptibles d'appel interlocutoire, sous réserve du pouvoir souverain d'appréciation dont elle dispose pour accorder des autorisations d'interjeter appel dans les rares cas prévus à l'article 73 (B). La Chambre peut accorder ces autorisations si les deux conditions fixées par l'article 73 (B) sont réunies. Premièrement, le requérant doit établir en quoi la décision contestée touche une question susceptible de compromettre sensiblement (a) l'équité et la rapidité du procès ou (b) son issue. Deuxièmement, il lui incombe de convaincre la Chambre que le « règlement immédiat [de cette question] par la Chambre d'appel pourrait concrètement faire progresser la procédure ». Pour que ces deux conditions soient jugées remplies, le requérant doit apporter des preuves précises et non pas invoquer vaguement les arguments sur la base desquels la décision contestée a été rendue[20].

15. La Chambre prend acte des arguments de la Défense et rappelle que loin de lui avoir interdit dans la décision contestée de citer le témoin NMBMP, elle a tout simplement estimé que les conditions juridiques requises pour autoriser ce témoin à déposer par voie de vidéoconférence n'étaient pas remplies. De plus, elle considère que les raisons invoquées par la Défense constituent des moyens d'appel non pas des éléments permettant d'étayer une requête en certification. Elle en conclut que la Défense n'a pas rempli les conditions prévues par l'article 73 (B) du Règlement,

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

REJETTE la requête dans son intégralité.

Arusha, le 4 avril 2006.
